HISTORY OF MONTANA

GEN. CHARLES S. WARREN is one of the few survivors of the group of pioneers who made the heroic and constructive period of Montana's early history. For over half a century he has lived on terms of intimacy with miner and prospector, mine operator, capitalist, statesman, has had his share in big constructive movements, and perhaps no one in Montana today is better informed and could describe from his own experience and knowledge the real forces that have shaped and formed the political and industrial fabric of the state.

Charles S. Warren was born in sight of the historic Starved Rock near Utica, LaSalle County, Illinois, November 20, 1846, and is of colonial American stock. His mother, Hannah Brown, was born at Germantown, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and she was a member of the Keyser family of Philadelphia of nearly a hundred years ago, and at that time her ancestor, Charles Keyser, was the president of Girard College. Her ancestors came over with William Penn among the early settlers of Philadelphia. She was member of a prominent Quaker family of Pennsylvania.

General Warren's father was Sylvanus B. Warren, who was born in Philipstown, a suburb of Peekskill, New York, November 27, 1813. The Warrens were well known throughout New England and New York before the Revolution, and took a prominent part in that struggle for independence. General Warren's ancestors built the first house in the vicinity of Cold Springs, opposite West Point, New York, prior to the Revolution.

The Warrens were early settlers in central Illinois, in the Illinois Valley, and Charles S. Warren was reared in practically a pioneer home, but one of substantial New England and Quaker ideals. He was a farmer boy when the Civil war broke out, and served through the war for the Union and had two honorable discharges from the United States army. In 1866 he drove a bull team across the plains to Virginia City, Montana, where he graduated as a bull whacker on August 20, 1866. During the winter of 1867-68 he taught school in Deer Lodge Valley at Hartley's Ranch near the mouth of Dry Cottonwood, about fifteen miles south of Deer Lodge. During the summer he followed placer mining, and for seven years operated in the placer diggings of Alder Gulch, Last Chance, French Gulch, German Gulch, Silver Bow, Butte and elsewhere in Montana. In fact for over half a century he has been more or less closely identified with the mining industry as well as with every other industry that has helped develop the resources and build up the territory and state. General Warren reached Butte November 24, 1866, and spent the following winter at Silver Bow, then the largest town in this part of Montana. In a business way his name has become associated with a number of groups comprising men of power and leadership in the development of the resources of the Northwest. He was one of the incorporators of the Inter Mountain Publishing Company, of the Comanche Mining Company, the Charles S. Warren Realty and Mining Company and numerous other corporations.

General Warren has been a republican since he cast his first vote, and while he has never made politics a profession, few politicians have been more frequently honored with the responsibilities and duties of public office. He served as deputy sheriff, under sheriff and sheriff of Deer Lodge County from 1869 to 1875. That county then comprised everything from the Big Hole River on the south to the British possessions on the north, there being only two counties in Montana west of the Rocky Mountains, Deer Lodge and Missoula. He was the first police magistrate of Butte when the city was organized in 1880, and twenty-six years later was again elected police judge of the city. In territorial days he served for five years as clerk of the United States District Court of Silver Bow County, under Hon. William J. Galbraith, presiding judge. General Warren was elected a member of the State Constitutional Convention which met at Helena July 4, 1889, and framed the constitution of the state. Upon roll call he voted aye for woman suffrage, and has never failed to give his support and influence to the political emancipation of women. He was a member of the National Republican Committee four years when Mathew S. Quay was chairman, resulting in the election of Benjamin Harrison to the presidency in 1888. He served as a member of most of the territorial and state conventions for forty-five years, and as presidential elector was appointed to the duty of carrying the Montana vote to Washington and casting it for William H. Taft in 1908.

With rank from major to brigadier general, he served on the staffs of J. Schuyler Crosby, Samuel T. Hauser, Preston H. Leslie and B. F. White as territorial governors. He was adjutant of the Montana Battalion during the Nez Perce Indian war of 1877, and raised a company and tendered its services to Governor Potts early in July, 1876, upon receiving news of the Custer massacre, this service being declined by the governor. He was also instrumental in organizing the militia of the Territory of Montana.

General Warren helped organize and is past commander of Lincoln Post No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic. The first department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in Montana was Capt. Thomas P. Fuller, who was succeeded in that office in 1886 by General Warren. The death of Captain Fuller leaves General Warren as the ranking department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of Montana. He is also a member of the board of managers of the State Soldiers Home at Columbia Falls.

General Warren served as president of the Society of Montana Pioneers in 1907-08. He helped organize the Silver Bow Club as a charter member and was president of the club in 1888, being succeeded in that office by F. E. Sargent. Some years ago General Warren was made a life member of the club.

He is a past master of Butte Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, a Knight Templar Mason, belongs to the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a charter member of Butte Lodge of Masons, and served as its secretary for the first six years. He was a charter member and first secretary of Fidelity Lodge No. 8, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a charter member of Damon Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias, a charter member of Silverbow Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, but has since severed his active connection with the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Elks.

November 15, 1871, General Warren married Mittie Avery. They were married at what was then known as Silver Valley Station, now known as the "Hump," about six miles below Silver Bow and on the road betwen Butte and Gregson Springs. Mrs. Warren was born at Saco, Maine, September 1, 1854. Their two living children are: Wesley W. Warren, a resident of Sacramento, California; and Mary Warren Murphey, wife of John Milton Murphey, living at 221 North Excelsior Avenue, in Butte.

JOSEPH MOORE DIXON. The present Governor of Montana was elected at the 1920 election to serve for the term beginning January 3, 1921, and ending January 1, 1925.

While his home and interests as a lawyer have been at Missoula for more than a quarter of a century, Joseph Moore Dixon is a really national figure not only on account of his service in the United States House of Representatives and Senate, but more particularly because he was called, on account of his demonstrated qualifications, by Theodore Roosevelt to lead the progressive party in the national campaign of 1912.

Governor Dixon was born at Snow Camp, Alamance County, North Carolina, July 31, 1867, a son of Hugh W. and Flora (Murchison) Dixon. His people were Friends or Quakers. After attending common schools he was sent to the leading Quaker institution of higher learning in the Middle West, Earlham College at Richmond, Indiana. Later he was schooled in Guilford College, North Carolina, where he graduated in 1889, with his A. B. degree.

Mr. Dixon came to Missoula in 1891. During the following year he studied in the law office of Woody & Webster, and was admitted to the bar in 1892. He practiced in partnership with I. G. Denny until 1894, when he was elected county attorney, having previously served as assistant prosecuting attorney. He filled that office from 1895 to 1897. In 1900 he was elected to represent Missoula County in the Legislature and his abilities as a lawyer and legislator and his influence with a great mass of the republican voters soon brought him to leadership in cementing the factions of the republican party in Montana. In 1902 he received a substantial majority in the election for congressman-at-large to the Fifty-eighth Congress, taking his seat in 1903. In 1904 he was reelected by a still larger majority. His leadership at home and his work in the Congress those four years made him the logical candidate to succeed W. A. Clark in the United States Senate. Mr. Dixon's term as United States senator was from 1907 to 1913. In 1912 the late Colonel Roosevelt selected him as chairman of the Progressive National Committee, and he was largely instrumental in organizing and rolling up the immense popular vote credited to the progressive candidates of that year.

In 1900 Mr. Dixon acquired and reorganized the Daily Missoulian, one of the oldest and influential republican daily newspapers of the state. On his retirement from the Senate, in 1913, he assumed editorial control of the newspaper in person and continued as such until he disposed of the same in 1917.

Governor Dixon has always been a stalwart republican with progressive tendencies. He was delegate-at-large to the national conventions of 1904 and 1916.

March 12, 1896, Mr. Dixon married Carrie M. Worden of Missoula, daughter of Frank L. Worden, one of the founders of Missoula. They have an interesting family of six daughters.

MCCORMICK OF MONTANA. This is a variation from the ordinary title at the head of individual articles in this publication, and of itself it is significant, and its significance is one readily recognized all over the state. Business men, farmers and grain growers in particular, know McCormick of Montana as a business man whose success has been a valuable asset to the state, and as proprietor of McCormick of Montana Seed House, the largest concern of the kind in the state. There are many McCormicks in and around Billings, but the postoffice department and citizens generally do not need the initial letters W. H. to identify McCormick of Montana.

Personally he has been identified with business affairs in Montana for over a quarter of a century. He is a nephew of "the grand old man of Montana" Paul McCormick, distinguished as a Montana settler of 1866, a pioneer farmer, freighter, Indian fighter, rancher and one of the notable business builders of Billings.

McCormick of Montana was born at Hancock, Wisconsin, August 2, 1871. The McCormicks have been noted for a high degree of commercial enterprise and likewise for prominence in all walks of life. His grandfather, James McCormick, was born in Cork, Ireland, in 1791, and on coming to America settled in Steuben County, New York. Though a farmer he became very influential in civic affairs and acquired a large amount of property. He died at Rexville in Steuben County in 1886.

Hugh McCormick, father of McCormick of Montana, was born at Greenwood in Steuben County, New York, in 1826. In 1858 he moved to Wisconsin, developed a large farm in that state, and lived there until his death at Hancock on June 16, 1871. He had the reputation of being progressive and energetic, and was one of the wealthiest men of his locality. He was successful in business and equally useful in the promotion of many worthy enterprises in his community. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. Hugh McCormick married Mary Ray, who was born in New York in 1834 and died at Hancock, Wisconsin, in 1889. W. H. McCormick was the sixth and youngest child of his parents and was born after his father's death. The other members of the family were: Charles, who died at Rexville in Steuben County, New York, at the age of twelve years; Fred, who has for many years been a resident of Montana, was formerly a miner, and is now a farmer and stock man at Finch in Rosebud County; Louise, unmarried, is a property owner at Tacoma, Washington; Theresa, wife of John Milne, a farmer and stockman at Rothamay in Fergus County, Montana; Cora, unmarried, owner of considerable property at Billings and principal of the McKinley School in that city.

As a boy McCormick of Montana was sent to New York State, and was educated in the Canisteo Academy at Canisteo, and the Christian Brothers' St. Joseph College at Buffalo. Leaving school at the age of sixteen, he taught one year at Jasper in Steuben County, and in 1890 came to Billings, Montana. For twelve years he was manager of the grocery and hardware firm of Donovan and Spear. In 1902 he organized the McCormick Mercantile Company at Billings, his principal associate being his uncle, Paul McCormick. This partnership was continued for three years and was then superseded by the Donovan-McCormick Company, operating a department store.

The McCormick of Montana Seed House was established in 1907. This business might well be entitled to a lengthy description. The headquarters are at 2500 Minnesota Avenue. It is a business that has been developed to most extensive proportions by Mr. McCormick, and has undisputed claim to the position of being the largest seed house in Montana. The firm handles hay, grain and seeds in carload lots, also poultry supplies, and specializes as bean dealers, jobbers and shippers. In the handling, picking and grading of beans, a separate department by itself, seventy-five people are employed. Fifteen persons work in the seed house and office, and twenty-five make up the staff of the hay baling department. The handling of hay is a big business in itself. Immense quantities are pressed and shipped by this firm to eastern markets. This is the house that has given Montana grown alfalfa seed a justified fame throughout the United States.

As something of an auxiliary to the seed house is operated a 3,000 acre stock farm in Rosebud County. Part of this farm is devoted to the culture of pure seeds as well as pure bred livestock. The trial grounds for the seed house are on this ranch, and all the seeds marketed are submitted to tests to prove their high germination qualities as well as their adaptability to varying conditions of soil and climate.

McCormick of Montana also built and owns the McCormick Hotel at 2500 Montana Avenue, and his own home is the noted old McCormick Log Cabin property, the early residence of his uncle, Paul McCormick, and one of the interesting landmarks of Billings.

His initiative and enterprise are sufficiently displayed in the above brief record. His friends and associates appreciate even more his integrity, and the great persistence that marked his early struggles with fortune. Some of his intimate friends know that when he finished school and took up life as a business man he was $700 in debt. Out of his early earnings he paid off every dollar of his obligations and then undoubtedly thereby established a credit which has remained steadily with him to the present time.

A bit of military history also belongs in the record of McCormick of Montana. He was a member of Troop A of Billings of the Montana National Guard, which volunteered during the Spanish-American war as Troop M of the Third United States Volunteer Cavalry of Rough Riders. This troop was in service seven months and was mustered out in September, 1898, at the close of the war.

Mr. McCormick is a member of the Billings Midland Club, is a republican, is affiliated with the Catholic Church, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, having membership in Billings Council, and is a member of the Billings Lodge of Elks. He also belongs to the Country Club, is treasurer and a director of the Midland Empire Fair Association, and a director and former president of the Rosebud Lake Association.

In 1905, at Missoula, he married Miss Frances J. Murphy. She died at Billings in 1915, the mother of one daughter, Eloise, born March 9, 1913.

WILFORD J. JOHNSON. It is not usual to call a man a veteran while still in his early forties, but if any banker in Montana has claim to a veteran experience it is Wilford J. Johnson of Lewistown, president of the First National Bank. This is due to the fact that he began banking experience when most boys are in school, and has pursued the business uninterruptedly and with steadily advancing influence and responsibility for nearly thirty years.

He was born at Sutton, Nebraska, November 10, 1876, a son of Joseph W. and Mary A. (Bagley) Johnson. His parents are both natives of Iowa and are still living. Joseph W. Johnson, who has lived retired since 1909, was for many years in the newspaper business in Nebraska, and also became prominent in politics and for eight or ten years held the position of state railway commissioner. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Wilford J. Johnson was the oldest of five sons. He attended public schools only to the age of fourteen, and since then has acquired a broad education without resort to the formal training of the schoolroom. In 1890, at the age of fourteen, he went to work for the State Bank of Curtis, Nebraska, as a clerk. Such were his abilities and value that he was promoted to the post of cashier when only seventeen years of age. Doubtless he was the youngest cashier in the country at that time. Mr. Johnson came to Montana in 1897, when only twenty-one years of age, and was associated with the First National Bank of Butte as teller until 1907. In that year he removed to Lewistown, and served the First National Bank as cashier and since 1916 as president. He is vice president of the Montana State Bankers Association. Mr. Johnson is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner. September 21, 1905, he married Elizabeth G. Gaylord. She is a native of Connecticut.

CHARLES O'DONNELL. During an active and energetic career extending over a period of a quarter of a century Charles O'Donnell, of Billings, has forged steadily to the forefront among successful stockmen and ranchers, among whom he now holds pre-eminent position. His career has been one exemplifying self-made manhood, for he started his independent life with a self-gained education and without financial assistant or influential friends, and each step upward has been achieved only after the exercise of his own energy and resource. In addition to being president of the Montana Live Stock and Loan Company, and connected with various other prominent enterprises he is a large landholder.

Mr. O'Donnell was born at Saginaw, Michigan, April 6, 1874, a son of Daniel O'Donnell, who died at Midland, Michigan. His opportunities for attending school were not numerous in his youth, but he made the most of his opportunities, and through self-teaching, keen observation and much reading has become a well-educated man. He began to be self-supporting when he was eighteen years of age. He came to Billings in 1890, and was employed by the Montana-Minnesota Land and Improvement Company for one year in building the irrigation ditch for that concern. Following this he rented a ranch, which started him upon his successful career, for he soon became a ranch owner and stockman and yearly has increased his holdings and extended the scope of his operations. His home ranch is situated fourteen miles east of Billings, and is a tract of 1,250 acres of irrigated land. In addition to this he owns 10,000 acres in Yellowstone County and a half interest in a ranch of 1,700 acres in Custer County. As one of Montana's leading stockmen, in August, 1915, he became the leading factor in the organization of the Montana Live Stock and Loan Company, a concern which buys and sells livestock and loans money thereon in addition to shipping all over the United States. The offices of this company are situ- is also president of the Cold Springs Livestock ated at 2719 First Avenue, and the officials are: Charles O'Donnell, president; Wallace Huidokoper, vice president; Frank O'Donnell, secretary and treasurer; and F. B. Bair, manager. Mr. O'Donnell Corporation at Forsyth, Rosebud County, Montana, a ranch and livestock corporation capitalized at $150,000, in which Mr. O'Donnell owns one-quarter of the stock. This corporation feeds 8,000 sheep every winter, as well as horses and cattle, and has a 3,180-acre ranch, of which 2,000 acres are irrigated.

Mr. O'Donnell's pleasant modern residence is situated at 24 Yellowstone Avenue, Billings. In his political views he is a democrat, with independent inclinations. With his family he belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, and is a third degree knight and member of Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus. He is a life member of Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and holds membership also in the Billings Club and the Billings Golf and Country Club.

In November, 1897, Mr. O'Donnell was married at Billings to Miss Katherine Riordon, who was born at Boston, Massachusetts, and was brought as a babe to Billings, where she received a high school education. Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell are the parents of two children: Charles Everett, born August 10, 1903, who is a senior in the Billings High School; and Lawrence Donald, born December 10, 1909, attending the parochial school.

Leo G. Zeidler. The career of Leo G. Zeidler in Plentywood began with the start of the permanent builders and has continued prominent in its business life throughout its annals.

Mr. Zeidler arrived in the community of Plentywood in 1909, and in August of that year became a clerk for the Johnson-Riba Hardware Company, but a few months later embarked in business for himself as a hardware merchant and erected the first business house of the new town. The Zeidler store was for a short time a lonesome one, being the only one along the main business street, but in a short time it was joined by all of the old town, the parties moving over in the spring of 1910, including the Johnson-Riba Hardware Company, the Riba Bank, the Riba Lumber Yard, Ring & Sommers Restaurant, the J. A. Ford mercantile business, Fishbeck & Jarvis, the State Bank of Plentywood, the Chad. Robinson Livery, the Peter Diedrick feed mill, the Anson Kranzer blacksmith, the C. S. Nelson Herald office, Albert Chapman, land commissioner, Severt Olson Hotel and George E. Bolster, postmaster and hotel proprietor. And by this time several other business enterprises had sprung up, including the Rogers Lumber Company, St. Anthony Lumber Company, Kullass Lumber Company, the Tanna & Best Mercantile Company, and with the coming of the railroad the Farmers Elevator and the Montana-Dakota Elevators were built.

Mr. Zeidler in all these years has continued his hardware business, it having first opened its doors to the public in February, 1910, and he has come to be known as one of the old and reliable business men of the town. He has also taken an active interest in the agricultural development of the locality. In 1907 he filed on a homestead in McClain County, North Dakota, proved it up with the usual temporary improvements and farmed the land while he was acquiring title. In 1913 he became identified with the farming interests of Sheridan County, locating his claim near the county seat, and has become well known as a grain raiser. During the seven years he has planted crops here he has harvested something each year, although in 1919, his poorest year, his yield after cutting and threshing did not quite equal the seed wheat he sowed. He has now under cultivation and improvement 500 acres of the almost 1,000-acre tract which he owns, and the improvements which he has placed on the land include fencing and the granaries.

Mr. Zeidler was born in Jefferson County, Wisconsin, November 3, 1882, and he spent his early life there. His father, John Zeidler, of Lake Mills, Wisconsin, is a shoemaker still at his bench at the advanced age of seventy-two years. He was also born in Jefferson County, and has spent his life there. His father, also named John, a German, was sent into Wisconsin as a pioneer and helped build the first wagon road from the Hill Church to Rock River. He was actively engaged in clearing away the timber and in time developed a farm in the woods, and he now lies buried in the soil of that locality. Four of his children reached years of maturity, namely: John; Charles, who died in 1919, at Mallard, Iowa; Christian, of Rockwell, Iowa; and Mary, who became the wife of George Troeger and died at Jefferson in 1919. John Zeidler, the son, married Christina Troeger, whose father came from his native land of Germany to the United States and was first a farmer and afterward a tanner at Jefferson, Wisconsin. Mrs. Zeidler was born in the City of Jefferson in 1851, and was married February 24, 1870, the following children being born of the union: Edward, who is a resident of Rockford, Illinois; Erney and George, both living at Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin; Leo G., the Plentywood merchant; and Elsa, the wife of Jesse Calvert, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Leo G. Zeidler was nineteen years of age when he left home to begin life on his own account. Going to Rockwell, Iowa, he was employed by an uncle in a hardware store for seven years, there gaining his early knowledge of the business. From Iowa he removed to North Dakota, where he secured his claim, as above noted, and from there came to Montana and cast his lot with the embryo Town of Plentywood. His public service in an official capacity has been as clerk of the Plentywood School District, but his service to the community as a citizen has been of far greater importance. During the country's participation in the World war he served as a member of the Home Guards, took an active part in the drives made for funds for Red Cross and other auxiliary work, and has always been active in the public welfare. His political support has been given to the republican party, and he cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in Iowa in 1904.

At Rockwell, Iowa, June 21, 1909, Mr. Zeidler married Miss Jennie A. Gibson, who was born in that city in October, 1885, a daughter of Robert and Susie (McDowell) Gibson, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania. The father is a Civil war veteran. He served with the Army of the Potomac as a member of the Sixty-second Pennsylvania Infantry, and took part in the heavy fighting of the war in Virginia and other parts of the South. After the war he migrated westward, stopping for a time in Illinois, and finally locating in Rockwell, Iowa, where he was engaged in the poultry, produce and meat business until he retired from a business life. He has been active in Grand Army circles, is a republican in politics and is a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson have five daughters and one son, and Mrs. Zeidler is the only representative of the family in Montana. After graduating from the high school at Rockwell, Iowa, she became a high school teacher there. She is now a member of the School Board of Plentywood, this being one of the first instances where women have acted in a like official capacity. She has served in the position two years, and one other woman and three men are her colleagues on the board. She exercises her right of franchise with the republican party, and her first presidential ballot was cast in 1916. Three sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Zeidler, Gibson, Robert and Barr.

LEWIS O. EVANS, of Butte, has for over twenty years been recognized as one of the ablest corporation lawyers in Montana, and his ability, gained through a wide and varied experience in legal practice, and particularly in connection with questions of corporation and mining law, is well recognized.

Born at Utica, New York, on August 31, 1871, he came to Montana with his parents, Owen and Emily J. (Church) Evans, in 1883, and has since resided in this state. On coming to Montana his father, Owen Evans, engaged in mercantile pursuits, and was prominently identified with the civic and business life of Helena for a number of years. His parents subsequently removed to Anaconda.

He began his education in the public schools of his native city, and graduated from the Helena High School when fifteen years of age. For a short period he attended the Cazenovia Seminary in New York, and later, after his return to Helena, studied law with the firms of Word and Smith and Word, Smith and Word. He was admitted to the bar while employed in their office in 1894, and has recently rounded out a quarter of a century of active practice.

In December, 1895, Mr. Evans removed to Butte and entered the office of John F. Forbis, one of the most eminent practitioners that Montana has produced. A year later the partnership of Forbis and Evans was formed, and was engaged in general practice until the retirement of Mr. Forbis January 1, 1910. This firm was constantly employed in handling important litigation and was prominent in what is known as the "Heinze-Amalgamated" litigation from early in the year 1897 until its settlement in 1906. This was probably the most extensive and bitterly fought litigation recorded in legal history. Most of Mr. Evans' practice has been devoted to the business of many of the large corporations which have their headquarters at Butte, and which in 1910 were merged into the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. In 1912 he became, and has since been, chief counsel for that company. He is also chief counsel for the Montana Power Company and its subsidiary companies, and other corporations of less magnitude.

Mr. Evans has taken an important part in the trials of many causes celebre in Montana, among them the "Michael Devitt," "Pennsylvania," "Drum Lummon," "Larkin" and "Minnie Healy" mining cases. Mr. C. F. Kelley and Mr. Evans handled with entire success for the mining companies the celebrated "Smoke Case" between the farmers of the Deer Lodge Valley and the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and Washoe Copper Company.

Mr. Evans is a member of the Montana State Bar Association and of the Silver Bow Bar Association, and has served as president of the latter organization.

In politics Mr. Evans is and at all times has been an ardent republican. He is a member of Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and other Masonic organizations, the Butte Lodge of Elks, Rocky Mountain Club of New York, the Montana Club, and the Silver Bow Club of Butte, and served three terms as president of the Silver Bow Club. He has at all times taken an active part in civic and other matters of community interest.

In November, 1903, he married at Butte Miss Martha Nichols, daughter of Judge Erastus A. and Sarah Elizabeth (Warren) Nichols. Her father was for many years identified with the business life of Butte and later removed to Missoula. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have three children: Lewis Nichols, born October 12, 1904, Richard Orvis, born August 22, 1907, and Elizabeth Warren, born May 2, 1913.

JAMES EUGENE LANE is a man of exceptional business capacity, possessing a great deal of driving power in business and in everything he undertakes, and for a number of years has held vital and significant relations with the community of Lewistown. He is head of the Montana Lumber Company, which has nineteen places of business in the state. Mr. Lane held the rank of major in the American Red Cross overseas service during the late war.

He was born at Whitehall, Illinois, September 8, 1871, a son of James S. and Nancy J. (Baker) Lane. His father was a native of Wisconsin and his mother of Kentucky. His mother is still living at the age of eighty-one. James S. Lane received his early education in Wisconsin, and as a young man enlisted at the beginning of the Civil war and served in many battles and campaigns until the close. After the war he located at Whitehall, Illinois, and engaged in farming and stock raising until his death in 1872. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and a republican in politics.

James E. Lane was educated in Illinois and Nebraska, and in early life learned the business of carpenter and millwright. He came to Montana in the spring of 1893. His first location was at Billings. Later he was engaged in building the Jaw Bone Railway as superintendent of building and construction under Richard Harlow from 1897 to 1900. They built the road from Summit to Harlowton. Subsequently Mr. Lane resumed the building and contracting business at Martinsdale, Two Dot and Harlowton. He organized and operated the Midlen Coal and Lumber Company until 1903, when he sold out and then established his home at Lewistown. Here he organized the Montana Lumber Company, and remained as its general manager until 1909, since which date he has been president. This is one of the largest retail lumber concerns in the State of Montana. He is also director of the Bank of Fergus County, president of the Montana Home Building Company, and vice president of the Lewistown Brick and Tile Company. In February, 1919, a deal was consummated whereby the Montana Hardware Company was consolidated with the Montana Lumber Company, and Mr. Lane is now the directing head of the newly merged concern. He was elected a member of the State Senate in 1914, and served one term of four years.

In May, 1917, Mr. Lane assumed some heavy responsibilities in the local and state organization of the American Red Cross. He took the post of organizer and chairman of the Fergus County Chapter and as a member of the state executive board. Not content with what he could do for the organization in this country, he enlisted for the overseas work in May, 1918, and in June of the same year was sent to France. His headquarters were at Paris, where he was chief of hospital supplies with the rank of major. On different occasions he visited the front, and saw the great battlegrounds of the Argonne Forest and St. Mihiel and other points under actual war conditions. He was on leave of absence at Paris when the armistice was signed and soon afterward he returned home. All this service was given without a cent of remuneration.

Mr. Lane is a charter member of the Judith Club and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, with the Scottish Rite Consistory and with Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a democrat in politics.

May 17, 1900, Mr. Lane married Rose Wiley. She was born near Peoria, Illinois. They have two daughters: Edith, wife of D. W. Auenbaugh, living in California; and Newell, wife of Capt. F. M. Hawks, stationed at San Antonio, Texas.

HUNTER L. RICHMOND, a resident of Montana since 1893, is vice president of the First Mortgage Loan Company of Great Falls.

He came to Montana when a child, having been born on his father's farm in Macon County, Missouri, June 30, 1888. His father, the late Samuel T. Richmond, was born in Missouri, where he followed farming and stock raising, and in 1893 brought his family to Montana, settling in Cascade County. Here he engaged in ranching on a large scale, owning about 700 acres of land. He specialized in the better grades of livestock, running from 50 to 150 head of cattle and breeding Shire and Percheron horses. In 1911 he retired, and his death occurred in March, 1914, at the age of fifty-two. He was several times honored with township offices and was a democrat, a Presbyterian and a member of the Woodmen of the World. Samuel T. Richmond married Mollie M. Gorham, also a native of Missouri, and who had come to Montana at the age of fourteen with her father, R. T. Gorham, who was a pioneer miner in this state. Mrs. Samuel Richmond is still living at the age of fifty-nine. She was the mother of seven children, Hunter L. being the third, and three daughters and two sons still survive.

Hunter L. Richmond acquired his early education in the schools of Great Falls and at Bird Creek in Cascade County, and lived on his father's farm until he was seventeen. He then clerked for a time in a clothing store at Great Falls, following which he proved up a homestead in Teton County. In 1914 he became associated with the First Mortgage Loan Company of Great Falls, and since 1918 has held the post of vice president in that business. In the fall of 1919 he helped organize the Northern National Bank of Great Falls. Mr. Richmond is a democrat and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus.

February 15, 1912, he married Mary Ellen Ryan. They have three children, Hunter E., Virginia Ann and Helen Marie.

FRANCIS K. ARMSTRONG, for many years an eminent figure in the Montana territorial and state bar, former judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, has been a resident of Bozeman forty years, and since retiring from the bench has given up law practice and concerns himself only with some incidental public duties and the handling of his extensive ranch properties.

Judge Armstrong was born at Rockford in Surry County, North Carolina, March 6, 1849. His father, Francis K. Armstrong, Sr., was born in the same county March 28, 1802, and was prominent as a planter, hotel man and merchant until some financial disasters overtook him. A short time before the outbreak of the Civil war he left North Carolina and removed his family to St. Joseph, Missouri, and also bought land at Iowa Point in Northeastern Kansas. His home was in Doniphan County, Kansas, but he died while on a business trip in Missouri in the fall of 1861. In North Carolina he served as clerk in the District Court, and several terms represented Surry County in the Legislature. In the early days he was a whig. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity and was a colonel of the militia in North Carolina. In Iredell County he married Miss Jerusha Belt, who was born in Iredell County, near Statesville, North Carolina, in 1807, and died in Doniphan County, Kansas, in 1891. They were the parents of seven children: Thomas J., who was a farmer and spent his last years employed in a bank at Highland, Kansas, where he died at the age of seventy-two; Elizabeth, who died near St. Joseph, Missouri, at the age of thirty-five; Eliza, who died at the age of fourteen; Mary, who died at Butte, Montana, aged sixty-nine; Sarah, wife of James E. Martin, president of the National Bank of Gallatin Valley at Bozeman; Rebecca, living at Atchison, Kansas, widow of Junius E. Moore, who was a merchant; and Judge Francis K.

Judge Armstrong received his early training in the rural schools of his native county in North Carolina, also attended school in Doniphan County, Kansas. He was a student in Highland University at Highland, Kansas, until taken ill during his senior year. Some years later, when he received his law degree, Highland University conferred upon him the Master of Arts degree as an appropriate recognition of the work he had all but completed. He began the study of law at Atchison, Kansas, under Gen. W. W. Guthrie and attended the law school of the University of Missouri at Columbia, where he graduated LL. B. in 1875. Judge Armstrong is a Phi Beta Kappa, an honorary college fraternity to which only men and women of exceptional scholarship records are eligible. Judge Armstrong was admitted to the bar at St. Joseph, Missouri, in 1875, remained there six months, and then practiced in Doniphan County, Kansas, at Troy, with Judge Webb until 1879. He first entered politics in 1876 as democratic candidate for the office of county attorney. That was the year of the famous Hayes-Tilden national campaign. Doniphan County, Kansas, was strongly republican, gave Hayes a majority of 800 over Tilden, but on account of his popularity, recognized ability and vigorous election campaign, Judge Armstrong was chosen by a substantial majority.

The following extract from the Troy Bulletin of Doniphan County, is an expression of the esteem in which Judge Armstrong was held on leaving there: "F. K. Armstrong, Esq., has closed his official course with the people of Doniphan County and steps down and out. It is but due him as a man and citizen to say that he has shown by his conduct for the past two years as a public official that he has been worthy the confidence and trust given him by the people. Doniphan County never had a more capable or efficient county attorney and the court records will stand proof of the assertion. He is a young man yet, but he is a thoroughly posted lawyer—was while reading and is yet a close student. Having read with one of the ablest lawyers in the state and graduated at law school with high honors, he has thoroughly prepared himself for the practice of his profession. Added to this he is a young man of strict honesty, excellent moral character, and such genial social qualities that all who know him at once become his friends. Life to him certainly should be encouraging, and now that we are to lose him as a citizen from our midst we have no doubt but the people of the whole county will unite with the Bulletin in tendering him their warmest regards for his future success and welfare, and we trust that the mountain home he seeks in Montana will be fully up to his expectations and that he may soon take that position in his profession and society there that he has so deservedly won here. He expects to leave for Montana the coming week."

Soon after the close of his term as county attorney he came to Bozeman in 1879 and practiced with Col. Ira Pierce until the death of Colonel Pierce, then with Judge L. A. Luce and later with Charles S. Hartman. Montana was a territory when Judge Armstrong located at Bozeman. In the fall of 1880 he was elected district attorney for the First District, which embraced all of Southern Montana from Dillon to Glendive. There were only three districts in the state at this time. In the fall of 1884 he was elected a member of the Territorial Council, representing Gallatin County, and was chosen president of the council. Two years later he was elected a member of the Lower House and was speaker of the House. In 1891 upon the creation of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, Governor Joseph K. Toole appointed Judge Armstrong as the first incumbent of the office of judge, and he was regularly elected to that office in 1904 and again in 1908.

Upon retiring from the bench in 1913 Judge Armstrong made no effort to resume his law practice. He was formerly a member of the County and State and American Bar associations. In 1904 he was one of the organizers of the National Bank of Gallatin Valley, and is still a director and stockholder. He owns a number of ranches in Gallatin County, aggregating about 5,000 acres. He also has six dwelling houses in the city and his own home is at 302 South Central Avenue.

Soon after leaving the bench Governor Norris appointed Judge Armstrong a member of the commission for the purchase of the Warm Springs property in Deer Lodge County, Montana. He was chairman of the commission and handled the negotiations by which that property was transferred to the state. On this ground are now located the buildings of the state insane asylum. The transaction was one involving over $600,000.

Judge Armstrong has always been a stanch democrat in politics. He is a citizen of irreproachable character and is still regarded as one of the strong men upon whom the state can rely when it needs the services of counsellors. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and is a member of Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks.

December 27, 1881, at Bozeman, Judge Armstrong married Miss Lora Lamme, a native of St. Joseph, Missouri, and a daughter of Dr. A. and Elizabeth J. (Oliver) Lamme. Her father came to Montana about the close of the Civil war, was an able physician, but having little to do in a professional capacity he took up merchandising and at the time of his death was one of the chief merchants of Montana. Judge and Mrs. Armstrong have had three daughters. Mabel died at the age of six years. Lena is a graduate of the LaSelle Seminary near Boston, Massachusetts, and is the wife of R. E. Brown, member of the Brown Brothers Lumber Company at Helena, their home being at Bozeman. Edith, who is a graduate of the National Park Seminary at Washington, D. C., is the wife of R. B. Oliver, of Bozeman. Mr. Oliver is associated with Judge Armstrong in managing the latter's ranch properties and was formerly a traveling salesman for the Deer-Weber Company.

Burton Kendall Wheeler, who became United States attorney for the District of Montana on October 30, 1913, began the practice of law in 1906. Throughout the period of the World war he was the official representative of the Federal Department of Justice in Montana.

Mr. Wheeler was born at Hudson, Massachusetts, February 27, 1882, a son of Asa L. and Mary Elizabeth (Tyler) Wheeler. His people have been in Massachusetts for several generations. The Wheelers were Quakers and established their home at Sudbury, Massachusetts, before the Revolutionary war. The Tylers were English people, also early settlers in Massachusetts. The mother of Mary Elizabeth Tyler was a Kendall.

Burton Kendall Wheeler attended the public schools of his native town, graduating from the Hudson High School in 1900, and for some time was employed in office work at Boston. He received his law degree from the University of Michigan with the class of 1905, and soon afterward came to Montana and began practice at Butte on January 15, 1906. His abilities soon procured for him a favorable position in the local bar and he also became interested in politics, being elected and serving as a member of the Twelfth Legislature. He was democratic candidate for attorney general in the convention at Great Falls, and on the seventh ballot was defeated by Daniel M. Kelley by the narrow margin of 1½ votes. His nomination for United States attorney for Montana was among the first sent to the Senate by President Wilson.

Mr. Wheeler is the owner of the Wheeler Block in Butte. He is a director in the Deaconess Hospital, is a member of the Masonic Order and Mystic Shrine, the Silver Bow Club, is a Methodist, and a member of the Montana Bar Association.

At Albany, Illinois, September 7, 1907, he married Miss Lulu M. White, daughter of John and Elizabeth White. Mrs. Wheeler grew up on a farm in Illinois, graduated from the Fulton Normal School of that state, and studied music in Oberlin College Conservatory in Oberlin, Ohio. For several years before her marriage she was a teacher of music in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler have five children: John Leonard, Elizabeth Hale, Edward Kendall, Francis L. and Richard.

James M. Weldon. Now living retired at Lewistown, James M. Weldon is one of the few survivors among those who saw and knew Montana in the early and romantic days of the '60s. His name belongs with that notable list, greatly abbreviated by time and circumstance, of the pioneers of 1862. The following is only a brief sketch of his career, but it suggests many vital points at which his own life has come in touch with Montana.

He was born at Addison, Steuben County, New York, September 4, 1832. At the age of twenty-one, in 1853 he made the first stage of his migrations which eventually brought him nearly across the continent. For about nine years he lived at Mazomanie in Dane County, Wisconsin, some twenty-five miles from the capital of the state at Madison. The date of his eventful first journey to Montana was May 4, 1862, when he joined a party comprising eleven teams for the purpose of crossing the plains to Florence, Idaho. They drove horses, making rapid progress, traveling from twenty to thirty miles, and occasionally forty miles a day. The Missouri River was crossed at Council Bluffs and Omaha, and thence the route followed the North Platte to Fort Laramie, thence to Sweetwater and South Pass, by Fort Bridger and Soda Springs, crossing Snake River at old Fort Hall. From there they went on to Salmon City, Idaho. At Birch Creek some 200 wagons were encamped, further progress being barred by the report that wagons could not get through. Many of the people in this camp were from Pike's Peak and many states. John Jacobs volunteered to lead the party through to the Mullan Trail and to Walla Walla, and the Weldon party went on with Jacobs, striking the Mullan Trail at Deer Lodge. At that time there was no one at Deer Lodge but John Grant, John Powell, for whom the county and mountain have since been named, and some half breeds. John Grant had quite a herd of cattle and horses. He told the party if they wanted fresh meat to kill a beef "in welcome," but as there was plenty of fish and game the invitation was not accepted.

August 1, 1862, the day after their arrival at Deer Lodge, the party went down to Gold Creek, eighteen miles below, reaching there at noon. A trading store was kept there by James and Granville Stuart, historic characters in Montana. On August 2d they prospected in Pioneer Gulch, sinking a hole some three feet in depth; the water came in and they only got some "colors" which a couple of forty-niners from California said was "no good," and advised them to go on to something better. August 3rd the journey was resumed, passing through Hell Gate Canyon. About half the party went by way of the Lolo Trail to Elk City, Idaho, while Mr. Weldon and the rest followed the Mullan Trail to Walla Walla, where they arrived August 25, 1862.

Mr. Weldon spent about two months in the Blue Mountains, most of the time making shingles at $10 a 1,000. He could easily make 1,000 or more per day, and he made the shingles used for the roof of the Wells Fargo & Company Express office. In October, with six or seven others, he started back with saddle and pack horses for Boise. At Auburn, having lost the saddle and pack horses, they purchased two yoke of broncho steers and a wagon. A man soon joined them with a yoke of "broke" steers, which were put on as leaders, and thus equipped they went on to the Payette River and Boise Basin. The road being very rough they dropped the front wheels and made a cart with heavy tongue. Meeting some packers, they asked about the road ahead and were told that "if you are pilgrims you can go clear in, if not, only within ten miles." They "went in" to Boise Basin and to Idaho City. At the latter place Mr. Weldon met the late Clarence M. Goodell and his father. The latter was splitting shingles and the son was piling them. This was about December 16, 1862. Mr. Weldon spent three years around Idaho City, Placerville, Centerville, Pioneer and Hoggem. This latter place received its name from the fact that some of the early miners tried to "hog" all the best claims.

Mr. Weldon did more or less placer mining for three years, coming back to Deer Lodge in 1865. On the trip over he met W. A. Clark. Both men were horseback. Mr. Clark asked the price of tobacco and was told it was one dollar per pound. It is a matter of history that Mr. Clark bought all the tobacco he could get at a dollar a pound and more after the price was raised on him. He freighted it over into Montana and sold it for six or seven dollars per pound.

Then followed a succession of pioneer experiences for Mr. Weldon. The ranch he took up in Deer Lodge Valley he sold, and in 1866 moved to Gallatin Valley, and after being there a while was eaten out by grasshoppers. In 1867 he went to Lemhi, Idaho; in 1868 to Sweetwater, Wyoming; and in 1869 to Green River, being there when the Union Pacific Railroad was built. After some eight or nine years of eventful experience he returned to Wisconsin and Northern Michigan, and for eleven years was identified with the great lumber industry. Mr. Weldon has been a permanent resident of Montana since 1882. His first location was at Fort Maginnis, and he took up a ranch on the East Fork of Spring Creek, about twelve miles from Lewistown, and was busily engaged in ranching until he sold his place in 1912 and made his home in Lewistown.

In 1871 Mr. Weldon married for his first wife Susan Dyke. On October 15, 1878, he married Mrs. Rosetta (Elsworth) Downing. By the latter marriage he has one daughter, Marian E., who is the wife of Ray S. Conger, of Lewistown. Mr. Conger is a son of Judge Everton J. Conger, an early member of the bench and bar of Montana and now a resident of Honolulu.

Mr. Weldon recalls a number of experiences connected with his pioneer journey to the great Northwest. A few of these incidents are repeated. The ferry across Snake River used by the Weldon party had been in operation only a few days. Some 200 wagons had congregated awaiting an opportunity to cross. An effort had been made without success to stretch a hemp cable across the river. One party, under the leadership of Judge M. H. Lott, had contained a man of considerable experience in that line. Judge Lott informed the proprietor of the ferry that he had a man who could fix the cable for them. They seemed reluctant to avail themselves of his services. After repeated failures they hunted up the judge and his man and after some negotiations the latter was asked how much he would charge. That matter, it was decided, should be determined by Mr. Lott. Judge Lott said when the cable was placed right his party was to be taken over first and free of charge. This proposition was accepted, the cable was adjusted and the Lott party inaugurated the successful operation of the ferry.

After passing through Hell Gate, Mr. Weldon recalls the party went on to French Town, composed of Canadian French and half breeds. The firm of Higgins & Worden kept a trading post at Hell Gate, and at Fort Owen, now Stevensville, the principal trader was Maj. John Owen. At French Town one of the wagons broke down, and a delay was occasioned until a new axle tree could be made of green fir. The rest of the party went on, passing several good camping places; finally night coming on they found themselves in heavy timber, and then arose a discussion whether they should advance or turn back. Two going ahead a short distance found a trail turning off to a fine park with grass and water, making an excellent camping place. Next day most of the party went on, but Mr. Weldon and companion stayed to wait the coming of the delayed wagon and also rest their horses and air their blankets. Soon a mounted Indian appeared, who watched them a few moments and disappeared. This alarmed the two men and they decided at once to break camp and follow the advance party. While they were hitching to the wagon the Indian reappeared and tendered them a mess of ripe wild plums. The plums were accepted and in return they gave the visitor some bread, but still they thought it best to move on lest they fall into some trap. After traveling all day they did not catch up with the advance party, so they camped alone. The following day they caught up with those ahead and the party with the repaired wagon also reunited with them.

The journey brought them near the Coeur d'Alene Mission, the principal building there having been erected without a nail, nothing but wooden pegs to hold the timbers together. The Indians seemed friendly and wanted the whites to join in friendly sports. First they had a wrestling match. One of the whites, John Bainbridge, finally consented to wrestle with a husky Indian and was thrown by the latter. There was only the one fall. The Indian was ready for other challengers but none cared to enter the list. Then a horse race was arranged. A horse for which Mr. Weldon had "traded" at French Town, and ridden by Mr. Weldon's partner, won the race. The partner, John Argell, was quite full of fun, a good singer, and having won the horse race was considered quite a hero. Later he won a foot race. He was now a great favorite with the Indians, who wanted him to stay with them, offering him a lot of furs and his choice of two comely squaws—offers that were not accepted. While at the Mission about 5,000 bushels of grain were cut with knives and threshed with flails.

Mr. Weldon recalls several instances of the friendly attitude of the northwestern Indians. When their party reached the Spokane River he and a companion thought they would fish along the stream. The trail seemed to follow down the river, and they went along thinking they would come to a ferry. They soon came to where the whites had left the road and taken to the river. The water was quite wide and rather swift. Mr. Weldon cut a stout stick of good length and size he could handle and successfully crossed. His companion, though able to swim, followed him only with great reluctance. Soon as they proceeded towards the camp they met an Indian on horseback. Riding up to Mr. Weldon he turned his horse around and invited him to ride behind. He had probably seen the two men at the ford and singled out Mr. Weldon as the more aggressive of the two. Mr. Weldon accepted the invitation, riding into camp, while his companion walked. There they found that the men with the wagons had met this Indian at the ford and for a present of tobacco he had piloted them over the river, thus saving quite a bill for ferrying a few miles below.

FRANK B. CONNELLY, one of the oldest and solidest business men of Billings, has been a resident of that city over thirty years, coming here after an experience in the wholesale hardware business in Chicago. He has used his early training and his ability to promote and build up one of the largest wholesale establishments in the Northwest, conducted under the title of F. B. Connelly Company, of which he is sole owner.

Mr. Connelly, who is also a member of the Montana State Senate, was born at Middletown, Iowa, September 5, 1862. His great-grandfather Connelly came from the north of Ireland to Pennsylvania in colonial times. His father, Samuel J. Connelly, who was born at Mingo, near Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1831, was reared and married at Mingo, was a graduate of Washington College in Southwestern Pennsylvania, and soon after marriage moved to Middletown, Iowa, and in 1866 settled at Galva, Illinois. He spent two years as a farmer there and then moved to Toulon, Illinois, where he was in the livestock and butchering business. He died at Galva in 1904. During the Civil war he served as a member of the State Guards, was a republican always and an active member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Samuel J. Connelly married Mary Johnson, who was born near Pittsburg in 1833 and died at Middletown, Iowa, in 1865. She was the mother of five children, Frank B. being the youngest. The oldest, Alice Anna, lives at Galesburg, Illinois, widow of George P. Flint, who was a farmer and stock shipper. Thomas J. died in September, 1915, at his farm twelve miles west of Billings. F. L. Connelly was in the insurance business and died at Lewis, Iowa, in 1913. William, the other child, died in infancy. Samuel J. Connelly married for his second wife Eliza J. Kennedy, who was born in Pennsylvania and died near Pittsburg. She was the mother of two children, one of whom died in infancy. Her surviving daughter is Mrs. Nannie M. Flannigan, wife of a carpenter and building contractor at San Diego, California.

Frank B. Connelly acquired his education at Toulon, Illinois, leaving high school at the age of eighteen. In the meantime he had learned the trade of cheese maker. When nineteen years old he went to Chicago and for four years was connected with one of the large wholesale hardware firms of that city and acquired a thorough knowledge of the business in every detail.

On coming to Montana in 188= Mr. Connelly became connected with the hardware and implement house of Babcock & Miles at Billings. In 1894 the business was changed to the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company and Mr. Connelly was one of the active officials of the concern until August 1, 1904. He served as secretary and manager. During 1904 he was cashier of the Yellowstone National Bank, but in August of that year started his independent enterprise as a wholesale implement dealer. The business has since been known as the F. B. Connelly Company. This company is the distributing agency for some of the best known automobile and machinery houses in America. They handle the Holt Caterpillar engines and Combined Harvester for Montana and Wyoming, the Austin and Western lines of contractors and road building machinery the Marion Steam Shovel Company wares, the Garford motor trucks and Troy trailers, the Ford cars and trucks for Billings and vicinity, and the Fordson tractor. The plant and offices of the F. B. Connelly Company are at 423 North Broadway.

It is a familiar truth that the business man is often the most useful citizen of any community. Mr. Connelly was twice elected an alderman in Billings. He was elected to serve as a member of the House of Representatives during the eleventh session in 1909, and during that session was a member of the ways and means, banks and banking, towns and counties committees, and he introduced a bill requiring the railroads to maintain a bulletin at the depots for the reporting of the arrivals and departures of trains. He was also instrumental in amending the drainage law of that session. Mr. Connelly was elected a member of the State Senate in November, 1918, and during the 1919 session was chairman of the compensation committee in the Senate, chairman of the joint compensation committee, and a member of the finance and claims, insurance and highways committees. The bill providing for the location of a State Normal School at Billings was one that received his active and special support. Mr. Connelly, at his own expense, circulated the petition among the members of the House and the Senate to the governor to call an extra session to devise ways and means to use Montana stone instead of Indiana limestone in public building construction in Montana. The session was called and Mr. Connelly was successful in carrying the measure through. He was a member of the Republican National Convention that nominated William H. Taft for president.

Mr. Connelly is a republican in politics. He is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge of Masons, Billings Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Billings Commandery, Knights Templar, Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte. He is a charter member of Billings Lodge of Elks and was the third exalted ruler of the lodge. He has been prominent in the Billings Midland Club, which incorporates the Chamber of Commerce, serving as president of the latter body in 1918, and as president of the Midland Club in 1919. In every way possible Mr. Connelly has exerted his influence in behalf of war auxiliary movements, and is president of the War Chest Fund of Billings. One of his sons was in the war as an officer.

Mr. Connelly married at Burke, Wisconsin, December 1, 1885, Miss Flora E. Hart, a daughter of Rev. J. C. and Faithful (Holmes) Hart, both now deceased. Her father was a Baptist minister. The living children of Mr. and Mrs. Connelly are noted briefly as follows: Frank G., who received a high school education at Billings and is associated with his father in business; Lieutenant Kenneth A., who attended high school and was a student in Beaver Dam Academy at Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, when the war came on, and went with the National Army to France, serving with the rank of lieutenant until mustered out in February, 1919, and is now connected with his father's business; Lenora D., a graduate of the Polytechnic Institute at Billings and wife of Homer L. Guiler, connected with the F. B. Connelly Company; Glenn Hart, a student in the Billings High School; and Dean, a grammar school pupil.

George W. Eastman. It is not from hearsay evidence but from actual experience that George W. Eastman, now living retired at Lewistown, can speak of the life and affairs of Montana over forty years ago. He was a freighter, stockman, buffalo hunter, miner, and prospector and public official in the early days of the state, and was almost in daily contact with men good and bad, conditions favorable and adverse.

Mr. Eastman has lived much of his life on the western frontier. He was born at Calais, Maine, April 19, 1855, a son of John and Mary A. (Hanson) Eastman. His father was a native of Eastport, Maine, and his mother of St. Andrews, New Brunswick. About the close of the Civil war the Eastman family came west to Minneapolis, Minnesota. John Eastman was a lumberman, an industry to which he was trained in Maine. He was employed as a timber cruiser and a contractor in getting out logs, and followed that industry both in Minnesota and Wisconsin. He died in Minneapolis at the age of sixty-four, and his wife passed away at the same age. George W. Eastman was the sixth of twelve children, eight of whom are still living. His father was a whig and republican and a member of the Methodist Church.

George W. Eastman received his early education in Maine, later attended school in Minnesota, and acquired a practical knowledge of the lumber business in the great woods of the Northwest, at first under his father and then as an employe of the saw milling firm of Eastman, Bovee & DeLait. For several years he was employed as an edger in a sawmill.

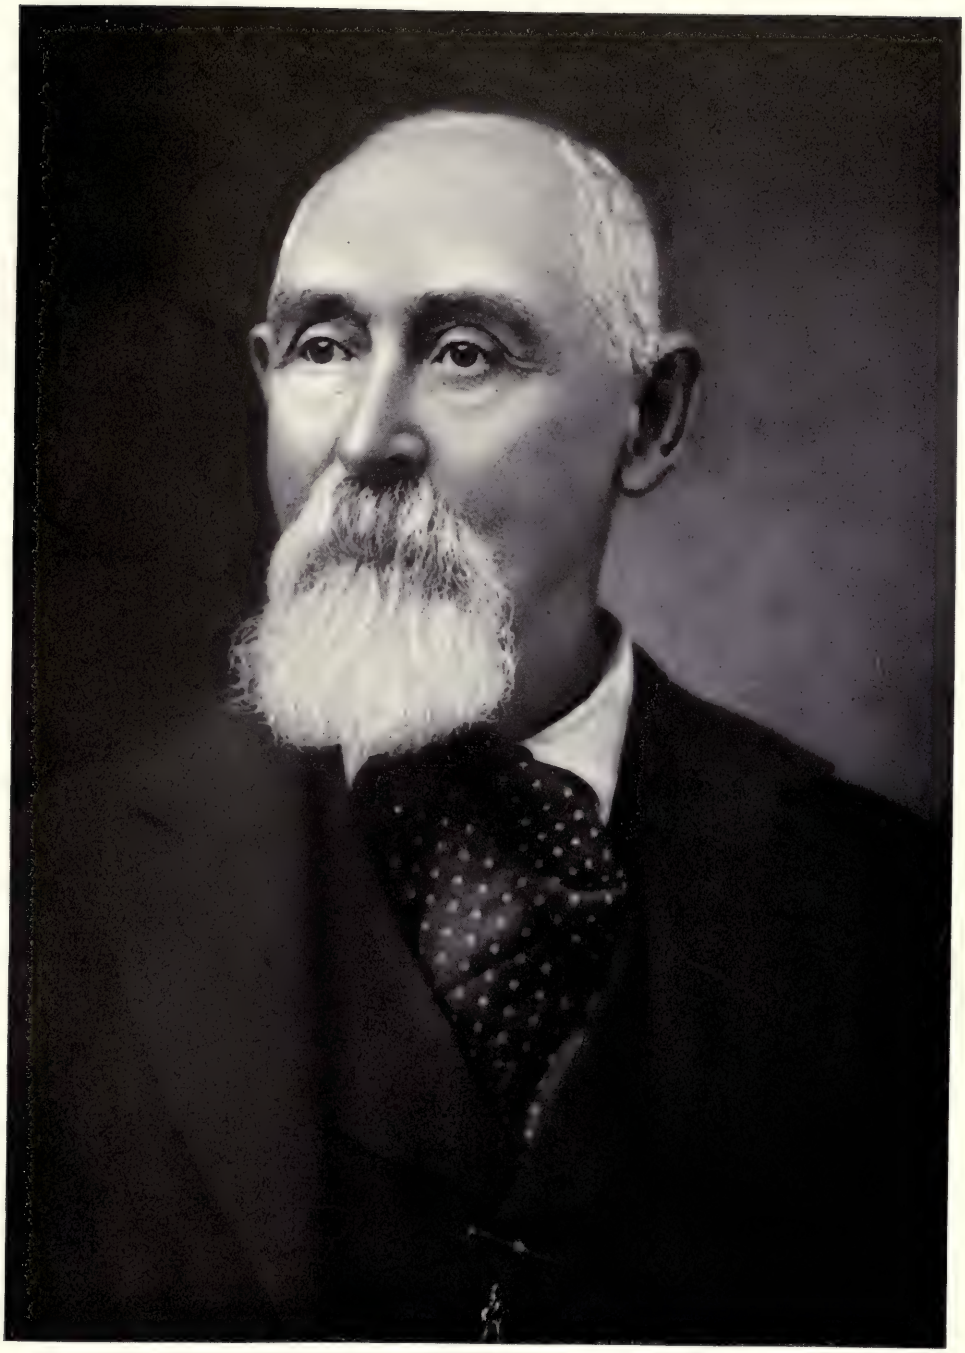
He and his brother formed a partnership and on April 18, 1877, left Minneapolis by rail for Bismarck, Dakota, and thence by the steamer Batchelor came up the Missouri River to Fort Benton and thence proceeded up the Yellowstone twenty miles. There they took a contract cutting cordwood for the Government. August 2, 1877, they reached Miles City, Montana, where they contracted with Smith & O'Toole in getting out timber to build the Post Sutler Building for the Government. The trees were cut and hewed from eight to sixteen miles above Miles City and then floated down the river to that point. Some 8,000 or 9,000 logs were handled by the Eastman brothers. In the fall of 1877 Mr. Eastman began freighting between Bismarck and Miles City. The summer of the following year he helped put up hay for the Government and in the fall of that year began hunting buffalo. These buffalo hunts were conducted chiefly for the hides. During the fall he also prospected as a miner and in the winter of 1879 engaged in the stampede to the Panther Mountains. During the seasons he continued hunting buffalo until November 9, 1882, when he returned to Miles City and the following spring came overland to that portion of Meagher County that is now Fergus County. He was thus one of the pioneers of Fergus County, He contracted with the Collar Mining Company at Maiden to get out 600 cords of wood, and also did teaming for that company. During the summer of 1885 Mr. Eastman was placer mining in the Little Rockies for Davis & Hamilton. Along about that time he pre-empted land on Warm Spring Creek and took up a homestead and desert claim, and that brought him to the business which he followed successfully for over twenty years, stock raising and farming. Mr. Eastman sold his ranch in 1912 and then located near Lewistown, where he was in the grocery business until 1916, at which time he formally retired from business responsibilities.

Mr. Eastman was brought into contact with the public affairs of this city by his appointment as deputy sheriff of Miles City in 1882. He served a short time and then resigned. He and his brother had much experience with the criminal element of lost over $18,000 in stock, buffalo hides and other material, taken from them by the Indians and white outlaws. One time he made a trip to the head of Powder River and over it into the Black Hills, returning by way of Fort Custer and at Sheridan had a brush with the Indians, but failed to regain any of his lost stock. It is the testimony of Mr. Eastman that the bad white men were much more dangerous than the Indians, and most of the trouble was caused by white outlaws, who frequently incited the Indians to mischief, knowing that the blame could be easily shifted to the Red Men. Mr. Eastman has been through much hard and dangerous experience, but has retained his kindness of heart through all, and enjoys a host of friends in many parts of the state. In politics he has affiliated with the republican party.

On April 19, 1902, Mr. Eastman married Minnie A. Maciles. She died November 4, 1902. On March 24, 1908, he married Mary A. Dye.

William Berkin. Recently a Montana paper published an interesting sketch of one of the oldest living pioneers of the state, William Berkin, who is now in the shadow of his ninetieth year and has spent nearly sixty years in Montana Territory and State. A great deal of Montana history is briefly sketched in the newspaper article and portions of it are properly quoted.

William Berkin was the pioneer transportation magnate of Montana. He came up the Missouri



William Berkin

River nearly sixty years ago, and from a modest start of pack horses built up the Diamond R transportation organization which took first rank in the territory and served a wide stretch of country. He figured in many adventures, fought Indians, partnered with Senator W. A. Clark, employed Col. Charles A. Broadwater and Sam Pepin as bull-whackers, shipped the first ore out of Butte by bull team to Corinne, Utah, by rail to San Francisco and then to Swansea, Wales, made and lost fortunes, passed up opportunities to make millions, and now in the ninetieth-odd year old winter of his life is peacefully passing his declining years on a stock ranch in Meagher County.

The broad highways that now traverse the state and make automobile riding comfortable were buffalo trails when Berkin came to Montana. He brought with him a stock of goods and herd of pack animals, shipping his outfit from St. Louis to Fort Benton by steamboat. He built his own roads from Fort Benton to Bannack and Virginia City and other mining camps, blazing his way across the trackless prairie land and through mountain fastnesses, and founded the little Town of Boulder, capital of Jefferson County, just because the grass of the Boulder Valley was succulent and sweet, the place afforded sustenance and shelter for his live stock and it was on the road from Fort Benton to the placer mines.

But he did not keep his pack train long. Gold on the bed rock of many Montana streams was bringing thousands of argonauts into Montana, and he could not pack goods into the camps fast enough, so he effected the transportation organization which afterward became the famous Diamond R freighting outfit. This concern grew with the country, and in a short time Berkin found himself at the head of sixty bull teams. Each team consisted of twelve yoke, or twenty-four head, of oxen, with three wagons to the team.

Charles A. Broadwater, who afterward became a famous empire builder and famed all over the West, found his first employment as one of Berkin's bull-whackers, and Sam Pepin, who was later to be associated with Broadwater in enterprises of magnitude in Northern Montana, was employed by Berkin in a similar capacity. Each of these men had charge of one of Berkin's bull teams. In all he had about 2,000 head of work cattle, and employed about 100 men, bull-whackers and station tenders.

He and his men had many battles with the Indians, the country in the 400 miles that his teams traversed from Fort Benton to the gold camps being infested with hostile red skins. Every time a man started from Fort Benton in charge of one of Berkin's bull teams he took his life in his hands, but such was the spirit of the men of those days that he could always find plenty of men willing to go with him on the venture.

The business grew and prospered with the development of the country, the population of which was increasing by leaps and bounds. Berkin, in an effort to maintain his supremacy in transportation, decided to establish what became known later as the "Diamond R Fast Freight," operating between the gold camps and Salt Lake City. This consisted of units of ten mule teams, each team hauling three wagons. He organized his equipments so that one of these teams left Salt Lake City on one end of the line and Helena on the other, every day, with stations for relays and change of animals all along the several hundred miles that stretch between the two points. The undertaking was very successful from the start. It necessitated the maintenance of an immense equipment of horses, mules, and a small army of drivers, but it speeded up the delivery of freight in a manner that was very satisfactory to the mercantile establishments in the mining camps, which depended on the Diamond R to keep their stocks replenished. Freight rates were high, but everyone was making money, and there was no haggling as to prices. The man who was taking out $100 in gold dust every day was not inclined to be stingy, and bought luxuries at fabulous prices.

Berkin continued in the freighting business until the '70s. In the meantime he had brought his family to Boulder, where he made his home, and had become interested in mining. He had acquired some placer property near Boulder, and in 1868 put in a ditch, at considerable cost, to bring water to these placers. The venture proved fairly successful. About the same time he became interested in the quartz possibilities of Butte. With W. A. Clark and Captain M. Wall, president of the Diamond R, he owned the Mountain Chief Mine on the Butte Hill. Ore from this property he hauled by bull team to Corinne and shipped it to San Francisco by rail, and from San Francisco by boat around the Horn to Swansea, Wales, for treatment. Even with the enormous cost of shipping the ore it proved profitable, but he considered it too slow, and sold his interest in the property for $3,700. It is now worth $25,000,000 or more. If he had held on to his Butte realty it would have made him fabulously wealthy. He bought the lot at the corner of Park and Main Street, on which the Rialto Theater stands, now worth perhaps $2,500 a front foot, for twenty dollars.

He was very much interested in the Vigilante movement, which rid the territory of Henry Plummer and his band of cutthroats. He had had enough experience with these men on the road and in the lonesome places to appreciate the good that would come to the territory by their elimination, and made a special trip to Virginia City to be initiated into the Vigilantes. Once in he became one of the right hand men of X. Beidler and Neil Howie, executives of the Vigilantes. His courage and fighting prowess were such that when Montana was admitted to statehood he was named as the first United States marshal of the district, an office that it took a brave man to fill.

William Berkin was born in England in 1830 and learned the machinist's trade there. In 1856 he married Sarah Jane Hall, also a native of England. Their first three children were born in the old country, one of whom died. Fannie and John came with them to America. William Berkin came to this country in 1860, and followed his trade at various cities and while at St. Louis was an employe of the American Fur Company. In 1862 he came up the Missouri River to Montana, landing at Fort Benton. He brought his wife and children from England, and they arrived in the territory of Montana in June, 1865. Five other children were born to them in Montana: William A., who died at the age of twenty-eight; Thomas A.; Sarah; Elizabeth, deceased; and Hattie.

Thomas A. Berkin, a son of the veteran Montana pioneer and Indian fighter William Berkin, is one of the oldest native sons of this state, and for his part has played a busy career as a stock man and farmer and is also one of the well known public officials of Fergus County.

Mr. Berkin was born at Boulder in Jefferson County, Montana, March 25, 1869, son of William and Sarah Jane (Hall) Berkin. The career of his father is sketched on other pages. Mr. Berkin attended the public schools of Boulder and his first employment was on a cattle ranch and later, in 1882, he located at Lewistown and learned the carpenter's trade. In 1885 he returned to Boulder and became a contractor and builder. For fourteen years he was also engaged in the mining business. His ranch location was on Smith River up to 1907. He had a large tract of land devoted to horses, cattle and sheep. In 1907 he became proprietor of the Day Hotel at Lewistown, and operated that well known hostelry for two years. He then resumed his association with ranching and since 1910 has been engaged in ranching and farming in the eastern part of Fergus County, near Flat Willow, which is his postoffice. He owns one of the most complete farms in the county, having 480 acres thoroughly developed. He cuts three crops of alfalfa every season and also large crops of corn and other grain. He also runs about 100 head of livestock.

Mr. Berkin has for several years been deputy sheriff of Fergus County, and he is also a game warden of the state. His official home is at Lewistown, though he spends much of his time at his farm.

Mr. Berkin is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically he is a democrat. May 8, 1894, he married Mabel L. Coburn, a native of Iowa.

Walter Mansur Bickford came to Montana in 1884, a young lawyer, after several years of practice in the East. He at once became prominent in territorial politics, served as a member of the last Territorial Council, was a member of the State Constitutional Convention and of the State Capitol Commission. At the first state election he was an unsuccessful candidate for justice of the Supreme Court of Montana.

Mr. Bickford, whose home is at Missoula and for many years practiced with offices at Butte, was born at Newburg, Maine, February 25, 1852. He was educated in the Maine Central Institute at Pittsfield and in 1878 was admitted to the Pennsylvania bar. Judge Bickford enjoys high rank as a corporation lawyer and is vice president of the Missoula Light and Water Company, the Missoula Street Railway Company and the Western Lumber Company. He represented Montana as executive commissioner at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893. He is a democrat in politics.

October 16, 1878, he married Emma W. Woodford, of Jamestown, New York. She died June 17, 1915, leaving one daughter, Edith M., now the wife of W. L. Murphy, who is associated with Judge Bickford in practice. On September 25, 1916, Judge Bickford married Zelma M. Nash, of Missoula, who died July 1, 1917.

Carl C. Nissler, city engineer of Lewistown, and a man of wide and varied experience in engineering and other business affairs, was absent from his official position in Lewistown the greater part of 1918 serving in the Engineer Corps of the National army, with the rank of first lieutenant.

Mr. Nissler represents a pioneer family of Montana and was born at Silver Bow, Silver Bow County, August 6, 1884. His father, Christian Nissler, was born in Sindlefingen, Wuertemberg, Germany, in 1836 and spent the first sixteen years of his life in his native country. Coming to America, he soon went to Philadelphia and learned the trade of baker and confectioner. In 1856 he went to San Francisco around the Isthmus, worked at his trade in Sacramento County, and prospected for gold in California, Oregon and Idaho, and finally located in the silver mining district of Virginia City, Nevada, where he learned the brewing trade.

In 1865 he left Nevada bound for Montana. He traveled by trail to Salt Lake City and thence by pack horse, being twenty days on the road and tramping at night with no protection except his blanket. He has some varied experiences in the mining camps of Montana, his most successful claim being in Bear Gulch. He invested the profits of this claim in a brewery at German Gulch and in 1871 moved to Silver Bow. He brought the logs from a building at Butte City to Silver Bow and set it up as his brewery and some years later erected a complete plant. He spent the rest of his life in Silver Bow, where he died in November, 1901. He was a democrat in politics and became a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in California in 1860. In 1878 he married Miss Christiana Konzelman, also a native of Wuertemberg, Germany. She died in 1892. They were the parents of ten children, eight of whom are still living.

Carl C. Nissler was the first son and fifth child in his father's family and received his education in the public schools of Silver Bow, in All Hallows College at Salt Lake, in Notre Dame University at South Bend, Indiana, and in the Bishop Scott Military Academy at Portland, Oregon. He took his engineering work in the University of Michigan, graduating in 1908. On returning to Montana he was in the city engineer's office of Butte, Montana, for two years and then engaged in professional practice for himself at Great Falls and Lewistown. In 1912 Mr. Nissler organized the Lewistown Commission Company, wholesale fruits and produce, but sold his interest in 1916. He then took charge of the Domestic Steam Laundry, and in 1917 began his duties as assistant city engineer of Lewistown and was appointed city engineer in January, 1918.

Mr. Nissler had been in office only a few months when on May 7, 1918, he was commissioned first lieutenant in the Engineers Reserve Corps. He was called to active duty on the 12th of May, being sent to Camp Lee for training. June 13th he was assigned to the 605th Engineers at Camp Forrest, Georgia, and was made camp exchange officer. He organized the engineers sub. depot and was commanding officer of the 474th Engineers Depot Detachment. He was also assigned as officer of camp morale. After nearly nine months of active service for his country he received an honorable discharge February 10, 1919, and at once returned to Lewistown and resumed his responsibilities as city engineer. He is a man of thorough qualifications in his profession, and is a member of the Society of Municipal Engineers. He is also a member of the Rotary Club at Lewistown and is a past master of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in politics is a republican. Mr. Nissler married Miss Lillian Vivian, daughter of Joseph and Clara Bell (Labram) Vivian. Her parents were both born in Michigan and are now living at Butte, Montana. Mrs. Nissler, who is the oldest of four children, has one son, Carl Christian, Jr.

W. P. Smith, M. D., located at Columbus, Montana, in 1910, and took up the work of his profession as a physician and surgeon with well trained abilities and is regarded as one of the most capable medical men in Stillwater County. He has acquired, has developed and owns some extensive ranch properties near Columbus.

Doctor Smith was born at St. Louis, Missouri, June 6, 1881. His father, Andrew P. Smith, was born in Scotland in 1849, and came to the United States about 1869. For many years he was a merchant at St. Louis, Missouri. He was married at London, Ontario, Canada, to Meurissa Baker, who was born in London, Ontario, in 1857. She died at Chicago, Illinois, in 1904 while Andrew P. Smith died while visiting in Billings, Montana, in 1916. He was a republican and a very devout Presbyterian. The children were: John E., who resides at Los Angeles and is Pacific Coast representative of Marshall Field & Company at Chicago; Dr. W. P.; and M. A. Smith, who is also a representative of Marshall Field & Company and lives at Portland, Oregon.

Dr. W. P. Smith attended public school at Chicago, graduating from a high school in that city in 1902. He then spent two years in the preparatory department of the University of Illinois, and in 1909 graduated with the M. D. degree from the Medical Department of that University. He is a member of the Phi Rho Sigma medical fraternity and the Alpha Omega Alpha honorary medical fraternity. From 1908 to 1910 Doctor Smith served as assistant to one of Chicago's most eminent physicians and surgeons, Dr. Alexander Hugh Ferguson. Since 1910 he has been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice at Columbus, his offices being in the Columbus State Bank Building. At least twice a year he keeps in touch with advanced ideas and practices of his profession, attending clinics and lectures in Chicago and Rochester, Minnesota. He specializes as a surgeon. He is a member of the Stillwater County and State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association, and has served as County Health Officer.

Doctor Smith owns 1,500 acres ten miles south of Columbus, a large part of it irrigated land and devoted to crops and livestock. He also has a modern home in Columbus. Doctor Smith is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Chicago Lodge of Masons, Billings Chapter No. 5, Royal Arch Masons, Aldemar Commandery No. 9, Knights Templar, at Billings, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Columbus Lodge of Odd Fellows, and Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

He married Miss Grace Peterson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Peterson, of Helena, at Columbus in May, 1913. They have one son, W. P., Jr., born June 18, 1915.

Rev. Frank Bradley Lewis, A. M. The subject of this review enjoys distinctive prestige among the citizens of Bozeman, where he now lives in honorable retirement after a life of ceaseless industry in the cause of Christ and humanity, and which was crowned with success. As a neighbor and citizen he is highly esteemed by all who know him, for in every relation of life, religious, political or civic, his voice and his influence have been on the side of right as he has seen and understood the right.

The Lewis family from which the subject of this sketch is descended is of rugged old Welsh stock, the family home having been on the border of Wales, whence came Benjamin Lewis to the shores of America in 1635. He first settled in Massachusetts, but soon afterwards located permanently in Connecticut, where the family has been established for many generations. The subject's grandfather, Cyrus Lewis, was born in 1783 in Huntington, Connecticut, where he spent his entire life, his death occurring there in 1864. He was a farmer and because of his extended military service was called captain. He married Alice Hawley, also a native of Huntington. Among their children was the subject's father, George Thomas Lewis, who was born at Huntington, Connecticut, in 1814. He was a carriagemaker by trade, spent his entire life in his native state, and died at Stratford on August 18, 1897. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a member and active supporter of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

George Thomas Lewis was twice married, first to Eleanor Banks, a native of Connecticut, and who died at Fairfield, that state. To them was born one child, Eleanor, who died at Trumbull, Connecticut, in 1918, and who had been the wife of David B. Curtis, a farmer and who also is deceased. After the death of his first wife, George T. Lewis married Mary Bradley, who was born in 1820 in Fairfield, Connecticut, and who died at Stratford, Connecticut, in February, 1903. To them were born three children, namely: Frank B., the immediate subject of this review; Alice, who died at New Haven, Connecticut, and George Fred, who graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, and from the medical department of Yale College, and is now a leading physician and surgeon in Stratford, Connecticut.

Frank Bradley Lewis was born at Fairfield, Connecticut, on July 25, 1844. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Bridgeport, Connecticut, and then attended Fairfield Academy, in Herkimer County, New York, where he prepared for college. He then entered Yale College, where he was graduated with the class of 1868, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1871 he received from his alma mater the degree of Master of Arts. During the following two years he was a senior tutor in St. Mark's School at Southboro, Massachusetts. He then entered the Berkeley Divinity School, at Middletown, Connecticut, from which he was graduated in 1871 and was ordained as a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He was assistant to the rector of St. Andrew's Church, Meriden, Connecticut, for one year, and then for about the same length of time he served as rector of St. Paul's Church at Brookfield, Connecticut, relinquishing this church to become principal of Oxford Academy at Oxford, Chenango County, New York, where he remained for seven years. In 1879 Mr. Lewis came to Bozeman as rector of St. James Church, and thus began a period of service which lasted for more than three decades, the relation of rector to the church being maintained for thirty-two years actively and since 1911 as rector emeritus. He is now practically retired from active labor, though he still maintains general oversight of two missions, at Belgrade and Manhattan. During the period of his active labors here, Mr. Lewis proved a tower of strength for the forces of righteousness and ever stood ready to support and encourage every movement looking to the advancement of the best interests of the city and community. An effective speaker and able sermonizer, his pulpit service was characterized by earnestness and power, and during all the years of his identification with the church life of Bozeman he stood among the spiritual leaders of the people.

Politically Mr. Lewis supports the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Zona Chapter No. 12, Royal Arch Masons; St. John Commandery No. 12, Knights Templar, of which three bodies he is secretary; Butte Consistory of the Scottish Rite (thirty-second degree), and of Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. In 1919 he served as

On June 6, 1871, at Nichols, Connecticut, Frank B. Lewis was married to Georgia Frances Ambler, the daughter of Charles and Mary (Curtiss) Ambler, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Ambler was a maker of saddle trees and prior to the Civil war enjoyed a large business. To the subject and his wife have been born the following children: Arthur Franklin was graduated from the Hopkins Grammar School in New Haven, Connecticut where he took preparatory work for college. He was graduated from the college department of Yale University in 1894, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1898 he was graduated from the General Theological Seminary, New York City, and was ordained a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is now rector of the Episcopal Church at North Haven, Connecticut. Alice Elizabeth became the wife of Iremaeus Kneeland Wisner, who died on his farm near Bozeman in 1911, since which time she has lived at home with her parents. She was graduated from the Bozeman High School, and then attended the State Normal School, at New Haven, Connecticut, after which she taught school in Bozeman for several years. Mary Curtiss graduated from the Bozeman High School, attended the State Normal School at Dillon, Montana, and is now a teacher in the Bozeman schools.

Andrew P. Stephenson. The men of this country are developing vision and initiative and learning to look forward in the establishment and expansion of their business concerns. Those of them who are succeeding upon a broad scale are the ones who recognize that conditions are in a transition period that requires careful planning not only to meet present day demands, but to provide for future possible shortages in raw materials and man power. This is an era of extraordinary conditions far outclassing any other in the history of the world, and to meet them and compete with others in the same line requires sagacity and practical knowledge of no mean order. One of the men who is proving in his everyday conduct of his large business that he is the right man in the right place is Andrew P. Stephenson, proprietor of the Stephenson Lumber Company of Butte, Montana.

Andrew P. Stephenson was born at Dallas, Texas, on February 26, 1875, and belongs to a very old American family, which was founded here during the seventeenth century by his ancestors that came here from England. For some generations the family was well represented in that part of the country now included in West Virginia, and Charles B. Stephenson, father of Andrew P. Stephenson, was born at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, in 1829, and he was there reared and educated and imbued with a love of the South which made him espouse its cause in the conflict between that section and the north, and he served as a brave soldier in the Confederate army. With the end of the war he found conditions in his native region so discouraging that he decided to migrate to the west, and came to Montana in 1866. For a time he was one of the pioneer merchants of Helena, and was also interested in mining and freighting, the same qualities which made him a good soldier aiding him in business life. He was interested in the "Only Chance" Mine at Highland City, Montana, one of the first gold mines to be developed in the state. In 1872 his attention was attracted by the successful experiments in cotton production in Texas, and he removed to Dallas, Texas, where he spent the remainder of his life, although his death occurred at Chicago, Illinois, where he had gone on a visit in 1905. A strong democrat, he never wavered in his support of the principles and candidates of that party. For many years he was a consistent member of the Episcopal Church. His fraternal connections were those he maintained with the Knights of Pythias. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Virginia Mitchell, was born at Richmond, Virginia, in 1840, and there they were married. Her death occurred at Dallas, Texas, in 1890. Of their six children, two were born at Helena, Montana, and the other four at Dallas, Texas. These children were as follows: Ella, who married P. P. Tucker, an insurance broker of Dallas, Texas; Caroline, who married S. W. Wolfe, a clothing merchant of New York City, New York, died in that city, as did her husband; Charles, who is deceased, was in the express business at Dallas, Texas; Elizabeth, who is the widow of Dr. C. C. Fite, a physician and surgeon, is a resident of New York City, New York; Roberta Lee, who is the widow of Dr. W. T. Blythe, a physician and surgeon of Dallas, Texas, where Mrs. Blythe is now residing; and Andrew P., who was the youngest.

After attending the public schools of Dallas, Texas, Andrew P. Stephenson was a student in the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Bryan, Texas, for two years. Leaving college he went to Chicago, Illinois, and was employed in a wholesale shoe house for a number of years. He then went to northern Michigan and worked in the iron mines of that region for quite a long period, and then, still maintaining his connection with the iron interests, he returned to Chicago, Illinois. In 1899 he went to British Columbia and formed connections with a large saw-mill outfit, which developed into a lumber business that he operated in Canada until 1908, and in July of that year he came to Butte. In order to gain a practical working knowledge of the lumber situation in Silver Bow County and its neighborhood he entered the employ of the Largey Lumber Company, and remained with it until the summer of 1915, when he resigned his position as manager, for he had risen to be in charge of its affairs, and founded the Stephenson Lumber Company, with plant and offices at Nos. 90 to 100 East Front Street, Butte. This company is incorporated, the officers being as follows: Eleanor Stephenson, president, and Andrew P. Stephenson, secretary and treasurer. The company owns the plant and offices and the ground on which they stand. This is one of the largest lumber concerns in Butte, and handles lumber, building material and fuel, and does an immense business. In addition to his other interests Mr. Stephenson owns his modern residence at No. 1923 Argyle Street. In politics he is a republican, but has not cared to enter public life, his business absorbing his time and attention. In the teachings of Christian Science Mr. Stephenson finds expression for his religious convictions.

Andrew P. Stephenson was married at McLeod, Alberta, Canada, to Miss Eleanor Patterson, a daughter of J. L. and Eleanor Patterson. Mr. Patterson was a successful pioneer rancher of the Bozeman district in Montana, and is now living in retirement at Bozeman, his wife having died some years ago. Mrs. Stephenson was graduated from the Milwaukee Normal College at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson have two children, namely: Eleanor, who was born August 20, 1904, and Ann, who was born November 9, 1905. Mr. Stephenson has not only attained to a material success, but he has won and holds the confidence of his fellow citizens. As a sound, dependable business man, he has few equals, and his knowledge of the lumber business is intimate and was acquired from personal experience at the source of supply. As a citizen he measures up to high standards, and while he has not desired political preferment, he has always shown an intelligent interest in the development of the community and a proper pride in civic matters.

CLEMENT J. BALDWIN. One of the most distinguished men of his part of the state is Hon. Clement J. Baldwin of Bridger, representative from Carbon County in the State Assembly, and a man whose progressive spirit has animated his associates and section for some years. He is a man who reaches the heart of things, and, understanding the needs of his people, seeks the most effective manner of relieving them and building up new defences against the inside foes every state has to fight. During his long and arduous service as a legislator he has fathered and supported a number of very constructive measures, and the people of Montana owe him a heavy debt for what he has accomplished and for the campaign of education he has started to bring about other changes and reforms.

Clement J. Baldwin comes of one of the old families of this country, representatives of the Baldwin family having emigrated from Scotland to the American Colonies long prior to the Revolution. He was born at Willmar, Minnesota, May 2, 1878, a son of Corydon Josiah Baldwin, born in Farmington, New York, in 1849, who is a resident of Seattle, Washington. After attaining to manhood's estate in his native place C. J. Baldwin became a pioneer of Willmar, Minnesota, and for many years was a railroad engineer on the Great Northern Railroad, but is now retired. The Episcopal Church holds his membership. He is a republican, but not very active in his party. Mr. Baldwin belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen and Woodmen of the World. C. J. Baldwin was married to Anna Johnson, born in Christiania, Norway, in 1853, and she died at Willmar in 1899, having been reared and educated in Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Baldwin had the following children: Albert N., who is a railroad engineer for the Great Northern Railroad, lives at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Edward, who is also a railroad engineer for the Great Northern Railroad, lives at Watertown, South Dakota; Clement J., who is the third in order of birth; Clara Josephine, who married Elmer C. Culp, a farmer residing in the vicinity of Billings, Montana; Anna Evelyn, who married Charles Arthur Gibson, a civil engineer by trade, resides at Seattle, Washington.

Clement J. Baldwin attended the public schools of Willmar, Minnesota, and then took a business course in the Willmar Seminary, which he completed at the age of eighteen years, going to work for the wholesale cigar firm of Winecke & Doerr of Minneapolis, Minnesota, with which he remained for seven years and then, in May, 1902, located at Bridger and established the Baldwin Lumber Company, Incorporated, of which he is president. The main yards are at Bridger, on Main Street, and the company has branches at Fromberg and Belfry, Montana. In addition to his large interests in his lumber company Mr. Baldwin owns his residence at Bridger, the yards and offices occupied by the lumber company, and 665 acres of irrigated land on Dry Creek, Carbon County, Montana.

Mr. Baldwin has been very active in politics, working always as a republican. Elected to the Bridger City Council, his record in that body made him the logical candidate of his party for mayor, and he was elected to that office by a very gratifying majority, and he was returned for a second term. There were so many measures before the public that needed a strong man to push them that Mr. Baldwin was selected for assemblyman, and has been re-elected twice, having served continuously as the representative from Carbon County from 1914. During his service in the Legislature he has been chairman of the committee on banks and banking, and a member of the committees of ways and means, railroads and transportation and trades and commerce, and was vice chairman of the ways and means committee. He introduced and had passed the bill which divided the high school funds equally among all the high schools in the county according to the number of students, which previously had all been given to the county high school; the bill which exempted real estate and chattel mortgages from taxation by the state, and these bills are now on the statute books. Mr. Baldwin has always served the best interests of his constituents, and that they appreciate his abilities and willingness to devote himself to the good of his district is practically demonstrated by his retention in office.

In 1900 Mr. Baldwin was united in marriage at Minneapolis, Minnesota, to Miss Mary Bertha Moore, born at Janesville, Minnesota, who was graduated from the Manning School of Oratory and Dramatic Art at Minneapolis. There are no children. Mr. Baldwin is a Christian Scientist. He belongs to Golden Fleece Lodge No. 66, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana; the Helena Consistory, in which he has been raised to the thirty-second degree; Red Lodge Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of Red Lodge, Montana; Red Lodge Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Montana Council, United Commercial Travelers. He is a director of the American National Bank of Bridger, and is interested in a public-spirited way in the growth of all of the business concerns of Carbon County, for he is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the West and believes in encouraging legitimate expansion and the development of natural resources. Such a man as Mr. Baldwin has a great future before him, and the people he represents are certain of receiving scrupulous and efficient service and a whole-souled appreciation of them in every action.

CHARLES WIPER. Just as there are no rules for building character, so are there no fixed rules for achieving success. The individual who can arise from mediocrity to a position of recognized eminence is he who can recognize and utilize the opportunities that appear before him. The essential conditions of human existence are ever the same; the surroundings of individuals differ but slightly, and when on the highway leading to the goal of prosperity one man passes others who perhaps started out before him, it is because he possesses the power to use advantageously the opportunities which are given to all. Of the men of Lewistown who in their careers have made the most of the chances which have been given them, Charles Wiper, cashier of the Empire Bank and Trust Company, is an excellent example.

Mr. Wiper was born at Forman, the county seat of Sargent County, North Dakota, October 31, 1885, a son of Robert and Mary (Coleman) Wiper. His father, who was born in Scotland and came to the United States in young manhood, was originally a coal miner, but eventually developed into a prosperous wheat raiser and stockman of North Dakota, where both he and his wife, who was a native of Pennsylvania, passed away. Mr. Wiper was a republican and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of the twelve children in the family eleven are living, and Charles was the eleventh in order of birth.

Charles Wiper received good educational advantages in his youth, first attending the little public school at Forman and then being sent to the North Dakota Agricultural College at Fargo. His first position was with the Ransom County State Bank at Sheldon, North Dakota, where he acted as bookkeeper and subsequently held a like position at Bowbells, that state, with the First National Bank. From the latter position he went to the Citizens State Bank of Ryder, of which institution he was for seven years cashier, and then removed to Winnett, Montana, where he became one of the organizers of the Winnett State Bank. Mr. Wiper remained as cashier of the latter bank until January, 1918, when he was called to his present position as cashier of the Empire Bank and Trust Company at Lewistown. Mr. Wiper has impressed his ability not only upon his associates, but on the public in general, and his personal popularity has contributed toward the success of the institution which he represents and which has a high standing among the finanical concerns of Fergus County. Mr. Wiper is a member of Jerusalem Lodge No. 115, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Winnett, having been first past master of this lodge; Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons; Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In politics he is a republican.

Mr. Wiper was married June 19, 1915, to Miss Elsa Baldwin, and they are the parents of one son, Thomas.

Ray A. Lathom is a native son of Montana. He was born in Livingston January 30, 1891. He is one of the progressive young leaders in politics in Stillwater County and he is now in his second term of service as county clerk.

His father, George D. Lathom, is an old timer of Montana, and has lived in the state nearly forty years. He was born at Gallatin, Missouri, in 1860, son of John D. Lathom, a Missouri pioneer and a farmer, who spent his last years in that state. George D. Lathom came to Montana in 1882 and for a dozen years rode the cattle range as a cowboy. Most of his work was done in Yellowstone Valley near Livingston. In 1894 he homesteaded 160 acres in what is now Stillwater County, and that quarter section is part of the present ranch and farm of 230 acres. This farm is in the irrigated section and is highly productive both as a grain and stock ranch. George D. Lathom is a democrat in politics. His home is on Stillwater River, six miles southwest of Columbus. He married Mary L. Denny, who was born in 1869. Ray is the oldest of their children. Myrtle is the wife of Stanley Milan, a farmer, machinist and automobile expert living at Great Falls. Mattie is a teacher in Stillwater County. Earl is on the home farm, while Lemuel and Lyle live with their brother Ray and attend school at Columbus.

Ray Lathom was educated in the rural schools of Stillwater County, in the high school at Columbus, and was in the Abbott Business College at Billings until 1908. The next four years his time was employed chiefly in surveying in what is now Stillwater County and at Lander, Wyoming. During 1912 and until March 24, 1913, he was a driver of automobiles. Upon the organization of the county government of Stillwater County he became deputy county clerk, and in 1916 was elected chief of that office and re-elected in 1918.

Mr. Lathom has had six years of experience in the National Guard. He enlisted in Company K of the Montana National Guard in 1907 and served a full period of three years. In 1911 he enlisted in Company B of the Wyoming National Guards at Lander and again served three years. He went in as first rank and duty sergeant, and was promoted to top sergeant and later to acting second lieutenant.

Mr. Lathom is a republican, is affiliated with Stillwater Lodge No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Columbus, Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Columbus Camp No. 842, Woodmen of the World, and is an active member of the Stillwater Commercial Club.

Mr. Lathom has a modern home at the corner of A Street and Third Avenue, North, in Columbus. He married Miss Birdie F. Hunter, of Missoula, July 6, 1915. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Hunter, reside at Missoula, where her father is foreman in the stockyards of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Harold Frederick Forsyth, chief draughtsman of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, has been advanced to positions of added responsibility and dignity because of his ability and fitness for the discharge of their duties. He was born at Hammond, New Brunswick, Canada, September 25, 1882, a son of R. W. Forsyth, also born at Hammond, in 1845. He died at Port Townsend, Washington, in 1912, to which he went in 1889, and was there engaged in contracting and building. At Hammond he had owned and operated a sawmill, and been successful with it. After coming to the United States and securing his citizen's papers he espoused the principles of the republican party. A member of the Episcopal Church, he actively supported it. A brother of his, David Forsyth, is an archdeacon of the church in New Brunswick, Canada. R. W. Forsyth was a Mason, and well known in his order. The maiden name of his wife was Annie M. Drummond, and she was born in Upham, New Brunswick, Canada, in 1855. She survives him and makes her home at Anaconda. Harold F. Forsyth is the only living child of his parents.

But a child when his father moved to Port Townsend, Washington, Harold F. Forsyth was reared there and attended its public schools, and was graduated from its high school in 1899. For the subsequent two years he worked on the daily paper there, and then for three years was in the employ of the government in the construction work of coast defense fortifications, in the engineering department, as draughtsman and instrument man. Realizing the need of technical training, Mr. Forsyth then entered the State University at Seattle, Washington, and completed the junior year in the engineering course, after which he returned to the government service and remained in it for three and one-half years, being employed on the construction of the Gray's Harbor Jetty at Aberdeen, Washington. Mr. Forsyth then went with the Washington State Highway Department and for two years was occupied with the construction of highway bridges, and for one year was construction engineer for Charles C. Moore & Company of San Francisco, California, during that period being occupied on the construction of a power plant at

W. L. A. Caldwell

Vancouver, British Columbia. In 1912 he was with the American Smelting & Refining Company as designer at their smelter at Tacoma, Washington. His work in these connections brought him to the notice of the Seattle Port Commission and his services were secured as district engineer for the construction of large docks and water terminals on the water front of Seattle. In 1916 Mr. Forsyth came to the American Smelting & Refining Company again, as a designer at their smelter at Salt Lake City, Utah. During February, 1917, Mr. Forsyth formed his connections with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, first being a designer in the general offices, but was soon advanced to be construction superintendent, and then chief draughtsman, which position is commensurate with his ability and varied experience. He has under his supervision twenty-four draughtsmen, with offices in the general office building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Mr. Forsyth is an independent republican. He belongs to the Episcopal Church and is a Mason, a member of Acacia Lodge No. 33, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Anaconda. The Anaconda Club, the Anaconda Country Club, and the Greek letter college fraternity, Phi Gamma Delta, hold his membership and interest. Mr. Forsyth resides at No. 602 Maple Street, Anaconda. He is unmarried.

Herman Carl Pagenkopf, manager of the Stone, Ordean, Wells Company, is one of the enterprising men of Butte who has risen to his present position through business merit and personal aptitude. He was born near Belgard, Pommerania, Germany, on April 7, 1877, a son of Albert H. Pagenkopf, born in 1851 in Pommerania, Germany, where he was reared, educated and married. By trade he was a flour miller, and came to the United States in 1887, locating at Hastings, Nebraska, where he still resides, being now retired, although after coming to this country he was engaged as a general workman. He is a democrat and a member of the Lutheran Church. With all young men in Germany, Albert H. Pagenkopf received a training in the German army during his obligatory military service. His wife bore the maiden name of Augusta Boehlke, and she was born in Germany on October 1, 1854. They became the parents of the following children: Herman Carl, whose name heads this review; Paul E., who is a rancher and lives at Hamilton, Montana, is specializing in the production of White Leghorn chickens, and was for fourteen years an employe of the Butte Street Railway Company as conductor; Emma, who married J. Albert Van Schoik, Jr., a dairyman, proprietor of the White Clover Dairy Farm of Red Bank, New Jersey; Alma, who married Roy Schuffeberger, of Moorfield, Nebraska, a rancher, died at Hastings, Nebraska, on May 10, 1919; Emil who is city salesman for the Capitol Commission Company of Helena, Butte and Great Falls, Montana, is a resident of Butte; Minnie, who married Roy C. Roote, a teamster of Springfield, Massachusetts; Otto, who is a veteran of the World war, resides at Davenport, Iowa, where he is an electrician; William O., who is also a veteran of the World war, was in the Officers Training Camp at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, and is now associated with his brother-in-law, J. A. Van Schoik, Jr., in the dairy business at Red Bank, New Jersey; Fred C., who is now on his homestead near Manville, Wyoming, has recently been mustered out of the United States army after eighteen months overseas during the World war; and Anna, who is living with her parents.

Herman Carl Pagenkopf was educated in the public schools of Hastings, Nebraska, and was graduated from its high school in 1895, and until 1901 was a clerk in a grocery at Hastings, Nebraska, leaving that city for Butte, which he reached on May 3, 1901. For the following four years he clerked for Lutey Brothers, and then became a salesman for the National Biscuit Company, covering Butte and western Montana, and leaving that corporation to occupy the same position for the Bozeman Milling Company, with headquarters at Butte, although his territory included western Montana and southern Idaho, with which he remained until July 1, 1914. He then became manager for the Butte branch of the Stone, Ordean, Wells Company, with offices at the corner of Wyoming and Iron Streets, Butte. Mr. Pagenkopf's territory covers both Helena and Butte and extends from Wolf Creek on the north to the Idaho line on the south, and from Logan, Montana, on the east, to Deer Lodge, Montana, on the west.

In his political affiliations Mr. Pagenkopf is an independent voter, but his business responsibilities have been too onerous for his assumption of a public character. Both by inheritance and conviction he is a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Pagenkopf belongs to Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons; Zabud Council No. 2, Royal and Select Masters; and Butte Council No. 106, United Commercial Travelers. He owns a modern residence at No. 1820 South Gaylord Avenue, Butte, and real estate in Salt Lake City, Utah.

On September 26, 1906, Mr. Pagenkopf was united in marriage at Butte to Miss Mabel Genevieve Davis, a daughter of Charles E. and Eliza Jane (McTucker) Davis. A sound, reliable and dependable business man, Mr. Pagenkopf has proved his value to his company and his community and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. During the period he was on the road he learned the needs of patrons, and so is able to order the affairs of his present concern much more intelligently than if he had not acquired his knowledge by practical experience and first hand contact with those with whom the company is carrying on business. Having made Butte his headquarters for so many years, Mr. Pagenkopf is naturally very much interested in its present and future, and willing and anxious to do everything that lies within his power to bring about a normal and healthy expansion of business. Such men as he are valuable additions to any community, and deserve the consideration they generally command.

W. L. A. Calder, attorney-at-law, is engaged in a civil practice at Laurel. He was born at Ottawa City, Province of Ontario, Canada, April 12, 1875, a son of W. G. Calder, now a resident of Inkster, North Dakota. The Calder family originated in the Highlands of Scotland, but members of it came in an early day to Canada, and W. G. Calder was born in County Glengarry in 1839, but was married in County Stormont, Canada, and thereafter until 1891 lived in the City of Ottawa, Canada, or the near vicinity, where he carried on a business as a carpenter and contractor. In 1891 he came to the United States and spent some years at Forest River, North Dakota, leaving them in 1899 for Inkster, that state, where he is still working actively at his trade. In 1918 he came to Laurel to erect an apartment house and a number of private residences for his son, W. L. A. Calder, and when the contract was completed, returned to Inkster. He is a republican, but while living in Canada was one of the original Orange Men. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow. W. G. Calder was married to Dorothy Logan, born in County Stormont, Canada. Her father, who was born at sea, became a surgeon and served with the British forces in India and Australia, and on board an ocean steamer plying up the St. Lawrence River to Quebec before he settled in the Province of Ontario, Canada, becoming one of the pioneer physicians and surgeons of that region, and oftentimes riding for a radius of 100 miles to see his patients. The children born to W. G. Calder and his wife were as follows: Margaret, who married W. T. Saunders, a ranchman, and resides at Laurel, Montana; Lucy, who married W. E. Chamberlin, a merchant and extensively interested in farm lands in Yellowstone County, Montana, and North Dakota, resides at Laurel; W. L. A., whose name heads this review; Mary, who married Harry Parker, resides at Livingston, Montana; Dorothy, who married L. G. Gemmill, a ranchman, resides near Laurel; and Lilly, who married a Mr. P. E. Sorensen, a banker, resides at Wheaton, Minnesota.

W. L. A. Calder attended the public schools of Eastern Ontario, Canada, and the University of North Dakota, being graduated from the normal department in 1899 and from the law department in 1905. In the latter year he began the practice of his profession at Grand Forks, North Dakota, leaving there in 1909 for Laurel, where he has since remained. His offices are located in the Spencer-McCauley Block. Mr. Calder is an able lawyer and his practice is a large and valuable one. He has demonstrated his faith in the future of Laurel and Yellowstone County by investing quite heavily in its realty, owning a modern residence at the corner of Fifth Street and Fifth Avenue, an apartment house and four bungalows at Laurel and a ranch of 160 acres outside the city. Both by inheritance and conviction he is a republican. Fraternally he belongs to Grand Forks Lodge No. 255, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Grand Forks, North Dakota; Grand Forks Camp, Modern Woodmen of America; Manvel Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen; and the Grand Forks Lodge of United Order of Foresters. He maintains membership professionally with the Yellowstone County Bar Association and the Montana State Bar Association.

In 1900 Mr. Calder was married at Grand Forks, North Dakota, to Miss Louise McDonald, a daughter of James and Catherine (Wickam) McDonald. Mr. McDonald, who is now deceased, was at one time a ranchman of Grand Forks County, North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Calder have two children, Catherine, who was born December 24, 1907, and W. L. A., who was born February 7, 1911.

David Hilger. A life of larger and broader service to his home state of Montana it would be difficult to conceive than that of David Hilger of Lewistown. Mr. Hilger has lived in Montana over fifty years, his father was a distinguished character at Helena, and the son has been even more prominent in the making of history at Lewistown. His has been fundamental activities. They have been concerned with the improvement and development of land, the opening of new resources, the establishment of important industries and institutions, and the working out of an enlightened program of improvement affecting not only Lewistown but the state at large.

Some reference should be made at the beginning to his father, the late Nicholas Hilger. Nicholas Hilger was born in the Duchy of Luxemburg, October 28, 1831, a son of Daniel and Susanna (Evert) Hilger. In 1847 the entire family came to America, first locating at Buffalo, New York. In 1854 Nicholas Hilger went to St. Paul, Minnesota, and soon afterwards settled at Henderson in that territory. He became prominent in the early affairs of Minnesota Territory, serving as justice of the peace, holding a position in the United States Land Office, helped take the census of Minnesota preparatory to statehood and was elected county auditor, an office he held from 1857 to 1864. He also held a commission as captain of a regiment in the state militia.

He first came to Montana in 1864 as a member of the Sully Expedition, which arrived at Helena September 27, 1864. While in Montana he was appointed the first deputy recorder for Edgerton County. On June 1, 1865, he started east to get his family, but was delayed in Minnesota, for some time by his business interests and did not return until 1867. He developed a large farm and ranch on the Missouri River and was active in public affairs as justice of the peace and probate judge. Nicholas Hilger married in 1857 Susanna Moerseh, of Minnesota.

David Hilger was born in Minnesota, January 1, 1858, the oldest of the ten children of his parents. He was old enough to enjoy and appreciate the excitement and the constantly unfolding wonders of the three months' journey overland to Montana. The Hilger family was part of a large colony of sixty families and 300 single men, one of the largest and most important additions to the citizenship of the territory. David Hilger grew up at Helena, finished his education there, and became a cattle and sheep raiser in Lewis and Clarke County. His interests increasing and demanding a larger scope of range, he moved in 1881 to Dog Creek in the northern part of Fergus County, a date that identifies him with the very early pioneer settlement of that part of the state. He began with a small flock of sheep and meager equipment, but in the course of twelve years had become one of the dominant men in the sheep industry of Montana.

Mr. Hilger is properly credited with being one of the men most influential in the upbuilding and promotion of Lewistown as a commercial city. Gradually as his ranch holdings were sold off he concentrated his interests at Lewistown. He and George W. Cook became associated in the real estate business, and in course of time out of this grew the Hilger Loan & Realty Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the state, with Mr. Hilger as president. He and other business men organized the Judith Hardware Company in 1890, a business that has drawn to itself some of the most capable men in that section of the state. Mr. Hilger was long president of the company. For seventeen years he served as vice president and as president of the First National Bank of Lewistown, resigning the latter office on January 9, 1917. He has since been chairman of the board of directors of the bank. In April, 1910, he organized the Flat Willow Ranch Company, owning 3,500 acres of land, and is president of the company. On December 27, 1910, he organized the Fergus County Land and Irrigation Company, of which he is president. These are important projects for the irrigation and reclamation of large bodies of land in Fergus County.

There is hardly a man of more versatile abilities and accomplishments than David Hilger in the State of Montana. For years his has been a distinguished name in the democratic party, but his prominence in politics is due primarily to the disinterested work he has accomplished in behalf of the public welfare. Politics with him is incidental to a genuine and sincere public spirit and public service. In the spring of 1894 he was appointed register of the United States Land Office at Lewistown, and at that time made his home in the city. He served four years. He was selected to preside over the first County Democratic Convention held in Fergus County, and was chairman of the first County Central Committee, and also chairman of the first Democratic Municipal Convention in Lewistown. At considerable sacrifice of his private interests he served as a member of the Eighth Legislature in 1903-04, participating in the two extra sessions of that assembly, one to appropriate money for a Montana exhibit at St. Louis in the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and the other to consider the Fair Trial Bill which was made a law. This recalls a more recent service when by appointment of Governor Stewart he was made chairman of the Montana Commission of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco in 1915. This commission had in charge the expenditure of a sum of $78,000, $50,000 having been appropriated by the Legislature and $28,000 subscribed by the citizens. The record of Montana in the Panama-Pacific Exposition is a notable one and is described in detail in the general history of that exposition.

May 14, 1917, Governor Stewart appointed Mr. Hilger a member of the State Tax and License Commission for a term of two years. On April 21, 1916, he was elected a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in St. Louis. Of the fourteen candidates he received the largest number of votes.

Mr. Hilger was one of the Lewistown citizens who brought about the establishment of a county high school and served as chairman of the board of trustees while the high school building was under construction. He was also a member of the board of trustees of the Carnegie Library when it was built and for a number of years afterward. By appointment of Governor Norris he was a member of the Commission on the Conservation of Our Natural Resources and the drafting of the present laws governing the state lands of Montana.

Mr. Hilger is one of Montana's prominent members of the Order of Elks, his local affiliation being with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, of which he is a past exalted ruler. He was district deputy in 1906 and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge of Denver in 1905, Los Angeles in 1915, Baltimore in 1916, Boston in 1917 and Atlantic City in 1918.

October 20, 1884, Mr. Hilger married Miss Christina H. Fergus, daughter of William Fergus and a niece of James Fergus, the distinguished pioneer for whom Fergus County was named. Mr. and Mrs. Hilger had five children, two daughters dying in infancy. The oldest daughter, Maude H., is the wife of George H. Osborne, a rancher in Fergus County, and they have a daughter, Christine. David J., the only son of Mr. Hilger, is assistant cashier of the Montana State Bank at Geraldine and married Mary Dowd. The youngest daughter, Christina L., is a student in the Fergus County High School.

WILLIAM L. LAWSON. Possessing undoubted executive and business ability and judgment, William L. Lawson, who is prominently associated with the industrial affairs of Billings as assistant to the president of the Great Western Sugar Company, and as general manager of the concern, has been an important factor in advancing the growth and expansion of the company's interests in Montana, and very influential in furthering the success of the vast enterprise.

The Great Western Sugar Company, founded in 1902, was organized in the State of New Jersey, and is now capitalized at $30,000,000. Beginning on a rather modest scale, with its first factory at Loveland, Colorado, its business increased with surprising rapidity, and it now has ten factories in Colorado, three in Nebraska, two in Montana and one in Wyoming. The factory at Billings, situated about six miles south of the city limits, was built in 1905, the plant consisting of five individual brick structures, including the main building, the office building, the warehouse, the lime kiln, and the power house. The officers of the Billings plant are as follows: W. L. Lawson, assistant to the president, and general manager; Joseph Maudru, general superintendent; F. H. Ballou, assistant chief engineer; C. F. Ridley, cashier; C. S. Milhiser, agricultural superintendent; and H. S. Barringer, factory superintendent. This plant has a capacity of 2,000 tons per day. The company's other Montana plant, located at Missoula, has a capacity of 1,000 tons a day. Its four officers are F. A. Wilson, local manager; E. E. Durmin, factory superintendent; R. M. Barr, agricultural superintendent of that district; and H. Towner, cashier, assistant to W. L. Lawson, who has general supervision over the Missoula territory.

A native of Canada, W. L. Lawson was born at Hamilton, Ontario, September 28, 1870, of Scotch parentage. His father, the late William Lawson, was born in 1830, in Fifeshire, Scotland, and was there reared and married. Brought up to seafaring pursuits, he was engaged in the merchant marine service during his earlier life. Emigrating to America, he settled permanently in Canada, living first in Hamilton, but spending his later years in Toronto, where his death occurred in 1912. He married Jessie Kerr, who was born in Edinboro, Scotland, in 1838, and died in Toronto, Canada, in 1917, having survived him five years. Jessie Kerr Lawson became a well known writer of Scottish stories and verses.

Scholarly in his ambitions and attainments, W. L. Lawson was graduated from the University of Toronto in 1893, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and Science, and for four years thereafter remained in that institution as assistant professor of chemistry. Accepting a position then as chemist for the Alvarado Sugar Company, at Alvarado, California, he held it for four years, after which he was technical man for the Idaho-Utah Sugar Company for a year. Becoming associated with the Great Western Sugar Company in 1905, Mr. Lawson was superintendent of the factory at Eaton, Colorado, for a year, and was then transferred to Sterling, Colorado, as manager of the plant there. Making good in that capacity, he was eventually given charge of two other Colorado factories, one at Brush and the other at Fort Morgan. In May, 1915, he was promoted to his present position of assistant to the president of the company, and general manager of the Montana division of the Great Western Sugar Company, an office of great responsibility which he is filling with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the firm.

Politically Mr. Lawson is a republican, but takes no active part in the management of public affairs. He is a member of the Society of Chemical Industry, an international organization in which he takes much interest. Socially he belongs to both the Billings Club and the Billings Midland and Empire Club. Prominently identified with the Masons, Mr. Lawson is a member of Eaton Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of Eaton, Colorado; of Denver Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; of Denver Commandery, Knights Templar; of Denver Consistory, being a thirty-second degree Mason; and of El Jebel Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Denver.

Mr. Lawson is a brother of A. C. Lawson, professor of geology in the University of California, and of A. A. Lawson, professor of botany in the University of Sidney, Australia. He is also a brother of James Kerr Lawson, the artist of London, England, who has been commissioned by the Canadian Government to paint some of the European battlefields where the Canadian armies fought.

James K. Murphy, assistant superintendent of the Washoe Reduction Works of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is one of the alert and energetic young men connected with this corporation who are proving their worth as practical engineers and citizens. He was born at Butte, Montana, July 6, 1889, a son of James W. Murphy, and grandson of Jeremiah J. Murphy, who was born in Ireland in 1815, and died at Butte, Montana, in 1890. Coming to the United States in young manhood, he remained for a time in New Jersey, and then came as far west as Iowa, about the time of the war between the states, there being a pioneer farmer. In 1880 he extended his travels to Salt Lake City, Utah, and in 1885 reached Butte, Montana, where he lived in retirement until his death. His wife was a Miss Kane, born in Ireland, but brought to the United States in girlhood. Her father at one time owned a hunting lodge in Ireland that was patronized by the royalty of England. Mrs. Jeremiah J. Murphy died at Butte, Montana.

James W. Murphy was born in New Jersey in 1859, and was reared in that state and Iowa, and came to Butte, Montana, in 1884, being then unmarried. Interested in real estate transactions, he formed a partnership with a Mr. Cannon under the firm style of Murphy & Cannon, and it was the pioneer one of its kind at Butte. James W. Murphy played an important part in the early development of Butte, both as a realty dealer and citizen, but left that city for Portland, Oregon, in 1912, and has since then been living retired. He is a democrat. Born and reared in the Roman Catholic Church, he is a devout member of that faith. His wife was Miss Jessie Callahan before her marriage, and she was born at Norwood, Ontario, Canada in 1863, and died at Butte, Montana, in 1898. Their children were as follows: Rosalba, who married Frederick Laist, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; James K., whose name heads this review; and Clinton, who died at Seattle, Washington, in 1918, when twenty-eight years of age.

James K. Murphy was graduated from the Butte High School in 1907, following which he entered the School of Mines of Butte, from which he was also graduated in 1911, with the degree of Engineer of Mines. In June, 1911, he came to Anaconda to engage with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as assistant testing engineer, and was promoted to be one of the chemists in the laboratory, and then chief chemist. Still later he was made superintendent of the roasting plants, and subsequently the supervision of the Cottrell treaters was accorded him. Finally he became assistant superintendent of the Washoe Reduction Works of the company, with offices in the Chemical Building, two miles east of Anaconda. Like his father, he is a democrat and Catholic. He belongs to Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, in which he is a Fourth Degree Knight, to the Anaconda Club and to the Anaconda Country Club. He holds membership in the American Institute of Mining Engineers.

In 1910 Mr. Murphy was married to Miss Emma Reeves, a daughter of Mrs. Roy Alley Reeves of Spokane, Washington, but formerly a resident of Butte, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy have the following children: Marion, who was born February 17, 1912, and his twin sister, Frances. The family reside at the Montana Hotel. Both Mr. and Mrs. Murphy are very prominent socially, and are held in the highest esteem by their wide circle of friends.

Henning Russell Boden. Success in life comes to the deserving. It is an axiom demonstrated by all human experience that a man gets out of life what he puts into it, plus a reasonable interest on the investment. The individual who inherits a large estate and adds nothing to his fortune cannot be called a successful man. He who falls heir to a large fortune and increases its value is successful in proportion to the amount he adds to his possession. But the man who starts in the world unaided and by sheer force of will, controlled by correct principles, forges ahead and at length reaches a position of honor among his fellow citizens achieves success such as representatives of the two former classes can neither understand nor appreciate. To a considerable extent, Henning R. Boden, chief clerk to the Superintendent of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, at Missoula, is a creditable representative of the class last named, a class which has furnished much of the bone and sinew of the country and added to the stability of our government and its institutions.

Henning Russell Boden was born at Lake City, Minnesota, on the 2nd day of August, 1883. His father, Anders Boden, was a native of the Scandinavian Peninsula, where he was born in 1835, and his death occurred at St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1911. In 1882 he came to the United States, settling in Lake City, Minnesota, of which locality he was a pioneer. In 1887 he moved to St. Paul, where he lived until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Sophia Saline, and who now resides at North St. Paul, was also born on the Scandinavian Peninsula. To Mr. and Mrs. Boden were born eight children, two daughters and six sons.

Henning R. Boden, the seventh child and the fifth son, was educated in the public schools of St. Paul, Minnesota. In 1897, he entered the employ of a furniture factory at North St. Paul, and literally learned every detail of the mechanical end of its business. He began in the lumber yard, from whence he went into the the wood-working machine department; thence to the finishing machine shop; thence to the cabinet-making department; thence to the paint shop and packing or shipping room. Mr. Boden next entered the employ of an organ and piano factory at North St. Paul, where he fired a battery of stationary boilers; worked in the machine shop and in the "action" making department. Leaving here, he next entered the employ of a street railway as a laborer and then as a carpenter. He then fired a traction boiler in a threshing outfit operating near the Twin Cities, and also had some experience as a locomotive fireman on one of the railroads leading out of St. Paul. Later he was employed by a table company at North St. Paul as a cabinet maker. These incidents of his various employments covered the period from 1897 to 1902. During this period he, through persistent night study, completed a high school course, also a course in shorthand and bookkeeping at one of the leading business colleges in the Twin Cities. He then entered the service of one of the great rail systems operating between St. Paul and Chicago, and later on was connected with one of the transcontinental systems radiating from St. Paul. He was next employed by a road making machine concern as a bookkeeper and stenographer. After recovering from a severe illness Mr. Boden entered the service of the Northern Pacific Railway Company's engineering department, and at the same time took up the study of civil engineering, in which he finished a regular course, including mathematics, geometry, trigonometry, surveying, topography, electricity, dynamo and motor work. Then, finding many knotty legal problems constantly arising in the railroad work, he finished a law course, at the end of which, in June, 1916, he was admitted to the bar of Montana.

Mr. Boden has now served nearly twelve years as the head of the Superintendent's offices at Glendive and Missoula, and has, by his accuracy, expediency and thoroughness, made himself practically indispensable. He possesses a practical and original turn of mind.

Mr. Boden first came to Glendive as head of the Superintendent's office there in June, 1908, and in April, 1915, came to Missoula in the same position and has continued in that capacity since.

Politically Mr. Boden gives his support to the Republican Party, though not in any sense an aspirant for public office.

On January 29, 1907, at Stillwater, Minnesota, Mr. Boden was married to Margaret Anderson, the daughter of Hector and Margaret (Whalen) Anderson, and to them have been born two children, Robert Hector, born November 14, 1910, at Glendive, and Jane Margaret, born May 20, 1915, at Missoula. Hector Anderson was born in 1844 in Inverness, Scotland, where he was reared and educated. He came to the United States in young manhood and located at Stillwater, Minnesota, where he engaged in lumbering. At Stillwater he was married to Margaret Whalen, born in New Brunswick, Canada, coming to Minnesota at the age of five years. She now resides at St. Paul, Minnesota. They became the parents of eight children, of whom Margaret was the youngest.

JOHN O. HIGHAM. For many years it has been claimed by sailors and pleasure travelers that once a person became embued with the spirit of the Orient it was impossible for him to live elsewhere, and this statement appears to be equally true of the West. Time and again have those who traveled toward the setting sun in this great country, purposing to make their stay a temporary one, sought to resume their former life in communities further to the east, but in vain, and they were drawn back to the "land of opportunity," the "places of broad vision" and eventually they have become a part of the wonderful commonwealths which are going ahead by leaps and bounds. John O. Higham, banker and ranchman of Belfry, Montana, is one of these cases in question, and his present prosperity proves that the West has been a good foster mother, while what he has accomplished shows that he is a valuable addition to the family.

John O. Higham was born at Lanesboro, Minnesota, February 22, 1872. His father, Andrew Higham, having also been possessed with the pioneer spirit, which sought adventure and led him to leave his native land of Norway, where he was born in 1828, and come to the United States in 1854, and after a short stay at Rushford, Minnesota, homestead at Lanesboro, Minnesota, where he was one of the first settlers. He resided on this homestead until 1909, when he sold it and retired, dying at Lanesboro in October, 1918. In politics he was a republican. The Lutheran Church of Lanesboro held his membership and he was very active in church work. His wife, Ingeberth Sherdall, was born in Norway in 1827, but she was reared in Minnesota. Her death occurred at Lanesboro in January, 1919. She and her husband had the following children: Caroline, who married Ed Brekke, a farmer of Lanesboro, Minnesota; and John O., whose name heads this review.

John O. Higham attended the public schools of Lanesboro and the high school of Grand Forks, North Dakota, and until he was seventeen years old made himself useful on his father's farm. At that age he went to Grand Forks, North Dakota, and a year later, in 1890, came to Montana, where for two years he was employed in construction work on the Great Northern Railroad at Fort Assiniboine at the time this road was entering Montana. In 1892 Mr. Higham went to Sacramento, California, and for two years was there engaged in farming. Returning to Montana, for two years he was employed as a cow boy and rode the range on the present site of Castle. Going back to his birthplace, for two years he was engaged as a clerk in one of its mercantile establishments, but the call of the West brought him back, and in 1900 he reached Absarokee, Montana, where for three years he was a member of the sales force of one of the general stores of that place, and at the same time he was gaining a practical knowledge of the needs of the people. Seeing the possibilities of sheep farming, he was engaged in that line for eighteen months near Joliet, in Carbon County, and then purchased a store at Joliet and for two years was engaged in a mercantile business. Selling it at a profit, he spent a year in California, and then, in 1906, he established himself at Belfry, Montana, and organized the Bank of Belfry in conjunction with W. F. Meyer, of Red Lodge, and John W. Chapman, also of Red Lodge. From the first Mr. Higham has been cashier, his fellow officials being John W. Chapman, president, and F. H. Alden, vice president, both of these gentlemen being prominent men of Red Lodge, Montana, so that the active management of the bank devolves on Mr. Higham. The capital of the bank is $20,000 and the surplus is $5,000. This stable institution is located on Broadway. This bank is a vender of state-wide credit, and through alliance with great financial institutions of other communities its officials are able to provide customers with exact and confidential information essential to their expansion and the carrying on of ordinary business affairs, while at the same time it transacts the usual functions of a banking house, the men connected with it being a guarantee of its reliability and conservative policies.

Mr. Higham is also a director of the First National Bank of Bridger, a director and vice president of the Gibson Culver Company of Fromberg, Montana. He owns a ranch one-half mile south of Belfry, containing 160 acres of irrigated land, where he maintains his residence, and he also owns 1,200 acres in the Pryor Agency, Big Horn County, Montana. Politically he is a republican. He affiliates with the Presbyterian Church. Very prominent in Masonic circles, he belongs to the Star in the West Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Red Lodge; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana; and to Helena Consistory, in which the thirty-second degree has been conferred upon him. Mr. Higham is also a member of Bear Tooth Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Red Lodge; and Joliet Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1905 Mr. Higham was married at Billings, Montana, to Miss Jennie M. Wight, a daughter of James and Mary (Ettien) Wight, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Wight was a rancher and stockman in the Judith Basin of Montana, arriving there in 1884 and later became a pioneer of Joliet, Montana. Mrs. Higham is a graduate of the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, Montana, and a cultivated lady of considerable attainments. Mr. and Mrs. Higham have four children, namely: Jack W., who was born December 14, 1907; Weldon O., who was born August 20, 1909; Robert X., who was born August 30, 1914; and Elizabeth U., who was born April 30, 1917. Mr. Higham's prosperity has come to him not by the royal road, but through the medium of hard work and intelligent foresight. He has known how to make good investments and his excellent judgment in this respect makes him an ideal banker, his customers feeling that one who had been able to multiply his own belongings so advantageously could add to their material prosperity equally well. Although his various duties have not permitted his entering public life, he takes an intelligent and effective interest in civic matters, and has the welfare of Belfry at heart.

Henry H. Wilson, M. D. A boy soldier in the Union army during the Civil war, Doctor Wilson took up the study of medicine when he returned to civil life and has been actively engaged as a physician and surgeon for over half a century. Doctor Wilson practiced many years in Missouri and for the past twenty years his home has been at Lewistown, where he still looks after an extensive business in his profession.

Doctor Wilson was born at Langdon in Sullivan County, New Hampshire, June 3, 1846, a son of Willard and Mary Ann (Hardy) Wilson, both natives of New York State. His father, who was born in 1812, was a California forty-niner, going to the Pacific Coast around the Horn and returning by way of the Isthmus of Panama. On reaching the Atlantic side of the Isthmus he took passage on a Government warship commanded by Captain, afterward Admiral, Porter. This vessel before reaching the United States put into port at Havana, Cuba. For several years Willard Wilson continued farming in New Hampshire, and in 1856 left the bleak New England hills and moved to Illinois, locating at Astoria in Fulton County. Some years later, during the Civil war, he returned to New Hampshire, and died in that state in 1863. He was a whig in politics.

Doctor Wilson was the second of three children, two of whom are still living. He was only sixteen years old when on September 2, 1862, he volunteered in Company H of the Eighty-Fifth Illinois Infantry. He saw much arduous service with his command, and was in the war until mustered out at Camp Butler, Illinois, June 19, 1865. He began the study of medicine with Drs. W. T. and B. C. Toler, and finished his course in the medical department of the University of Iowa at Keokuk, graduating in 1867. Doctor Wilson first practiced at Lindley in Grundy County, Missouri, and in 1886 moved to Humphreys in the same state, and shortly afterward to Trenton, where he was in practice until May, 1899. Since that date his home has been at Lewistown, and his offices as physician and surgeon are in the First National Bank Building.

Doctor Wilson has devoted the best years of his life to the practice of his profession and has won an enviable esteem in every community he has served. He is an independent in politics.

In April, 1868, he married Miss Esther Green. Five children were born to their marriage: Minnie N., Emma, H. K., Lionel and Ernest. Ernest died at the age of four years. Emma is an accomplished business woman and is at the head of one of the important departments of the Chicago department store of Carson, Pirie & Company. The son, H. K., is a graduate of the Northwestern University Medical Department of Chicago with the class of 1904, and is one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Lewistown. The son Lionel was a railway engineer with the Chicago, Rock Island road at Canton, Missouri, and died at the age of twenty-eight.

George J. Kobelin, a prosperous rancher and business man of Pompey's Pillar, represents the third generation of the family that has played a useful part in American citizenship and industry. The residence of the family for many years has been in the Central West, in Illinois and Indiana.

Mr. George J. Kobelin was born in Kankakee County, Illinois, September 15, 1867. His grandfather, George Kobelin, was born in Germany in 1783, and came to the United States with his family when past middle age. He lived for many years at LaPorte, Indiana, where he died in 1881, when ninety-eight years of age. William Kobelin, father of the Montana rancher, was born in Germany in 1836, and was six years old when he came to the United States with his parents in 1842. The family settled at LaPorte, where he grew up and married. He spent all his life as a farmer, and after his marriage moved to Kankakee County, Illinois, and in 1873 returned to Indiana and settled in Lake County, where he lived until his death in January, 1915, in Lowell. He was prominent in public affairs in Lake County, serving as township trustee four years and county commissioner six years. He was a republican and Mason. William Kobelin, who was of German ancestors, married a French girl, Margaret Paquin, who was born in Paris in 1844. She died at Lowell, Indiana, in September, 1908. They had a large family of children, nine in number, mentioned briefly as follows: Amelia, who is the wife of Frank Stark, a farmer at St. Johns, Indiana; Helen, wife of Albert Maack, a banker at Crown Point, Indiana; George J.; Laura, who married James Robinson, and resides at Hebron, Indiana; Minnie, wife of Arthur Pattee, an attorney-at-law at Denver, Colorado; William, connected with the Standard Oil Company at Crown Point, Indiana; Frank, who has no settled place of residence; John, of Everett, Washington; and Carrie, unmarried.

George J. Kobelin grew up and received his education in Indiana, living on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age. He had to start life without special advantages or capital and was a farm hand in Lake County, Indiana, for a number of years. Seeing the opportunities of the far West he came to Billings in 1903, spending one year with Yegen Brothers, following which he engaged in the stock and merchandise business. In 1915 Mr. Kobelin turned all his resources to ranching, and has been an active factor in Pompey's Pillar. He owns eighty acres of valuable irrigated land, besides 640 acres of dry farm and grazing land, and does an extensive business in raising stock. He is also vice president of the First National Bank of Pompey's Pillar.

Mr. Kobelin is a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. On December 2, 1889, at Crown Point, Indiana, he married Martha L. Smith, a daughter of Levi and Lydia (Hayden) Smith. Her father died in Lake County, Indiana, in 1876. He was a farmer. Her mother is now living at Huntley, Montana. Mrs. Kobelin, who died February 13, 1919, was the mother of seven children. Their names in order of birth are Murray William, Guy, Eileen, Ruby, Jules, Elliott and Alberta. They are still with their father. Ruby and Jules are high school students, while Elliott and Alberta are still in grammar school. Murray is engaged in ranching, and Guy, upon his return from the service, entered the employ of a Billings bank as teller.

CHARLES I. EMERSON, cashier for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and one of the solid, reliable men of this great corporation, was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, July 27, 1871. He is a son of Horace E. Emerson, and grandson of Horace Emory Emerson, a native of Maine, where he spent his entire life, and where for many years he was engaged in work as a millwright. The Emerson family came from England in the days prior to the American Revolution and became substantial citizens of Maine. On his mother's side Charles I. Emerson comes of Irish stock.

Horace E. Emerson was born at Bangor, Maine, in 1839, and died at St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1913. During his boyhood and youth he lived at Bangor, but soon after reaching his majority went to Portage, Wisconsin, and from there enlisted to serve in the Union Army during the war between the states in 1861, as a member of the Second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and among other engagements was at the battle of Antietam. After the close of the war he returned to Portage, Wisconsin, and was engaged in railroading, first with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and later with the Great Northern Railroad, making St. Paul his headquarters. In all of his railroad work he was a locomotive engineer. Always a strong republican, he gave his party his vigorous support. He was a Mason and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Horace E. Emerson was married to Emma C. Kittredge, born at Detroit, Michigan, in 1848. She survives him and makes her home at St. Paul, Minnesota. Their children were as follows: Horace E., Jr., who is a grain buyer for the Thompson Elevator Company of Duluth, Minnesota; George H., who went to Siberia as colonel of 300 railroad men to take charge of the Siberian Railroad during the great war, is a resident of St. Paul, Minnesota; and Charles I., whose name heads this review.

Charles I. Emerson attended the schools of St. Paul, until he was fourteen years old, when he left school and began learning the stereotyper's trade, and followed it for four years and then for four years was with Fairbanks & Morse, scale manufacturers. In 1896 Mr. Emerson came to Anaconda to engage with the Anaconda, Butte & Pacific Railroad as wiper, being soon promoted to master mechanic's clerk, then timekeeper, and finally cashier, with offices in the general office building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Like his father, Mr. Emerson is stanch in his support of the republican party, and has been elected to two terms in the City Council of Anaconda. He is a member of the Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and of the Anaconda Country Club. The modern residence at 105 Pine Street occupied by the Emersons is owned by them.

In 1897 Mr. Emerson was married at Anaconda to Miss Alice B. Penniman, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Penniman of St. Paul, Minnesota, he being foreman in the jobbing department of the Staats Zeitung newspaper. Mr. and Mrs. Emerson became the parents of the following children: Georgia Lucille married C. O. Prest, who lives at Venice, California, and is an aviator, and she is a graduate of the Anaconda High School; Edna Virginia, who is in the training school for nurses connected with the Murray Hospital at Butte, Montana; Emily, who is attending the Anaconda High School, lives at home; and Alice Amelia, who is also attending the same high school as her sister. These daughters are all very intelligent and the younger ones give promise of attaining to the scholarship of their elders. During his association with his present company Mr. Emerson has exhibited such sterling characteristics that those in authority have had no hesitancy in advancing him and will doubtless put additional responsibilities upon him in asking him to assume still higher positions, for he is worthy of their confidence and they appreciate his work. In his civic life Mr. Emerson has proven himself a good citizen, and his work in the council gives him a record as a public official of which he has every reason to be proud. He and his family are very popular socially, and their pleasant home is the scene of many gatherings, their friends enjoying the gracious and hearty hospitality there dispensed.

FRED C. STODDARD, whose name is numbered among the pioneer citizens of Missoula, was born in Jackson County, Michigan, August 18, 1857. His Stoddard ancestors were English and Colonial settlers in Massachusetts. His father, Dr. Samson Stoddard, was born in Vienna, Oneida County, New York, February 6, 1806, was reared there, and when a young man moved to Jackson, Michigan. He was a pioneer physician and surgeon in Jackson County, and one of the first members of his profession in southern Michigan. He returned to Oneida County for his bride in 1831, returning to Jackson, practicing his profession for some years, and later moved to a farm twelve miles west of Jackson City in Concord Township, developing property of 640 acres. This farm he afterward divided among his children, and in 1875 retired to Albion, Michigan, where he died August 26, 1876. He was one of the original republicans in Michigan, in which state the republican party was first organized. He held several township offices. Doctor Stoddard was twice married. His second wife was Mrs. Emily (Thayer) Lathrop, a native of the State of New York, who died at Stevensville, Montana. Fred C. Stoddard is the older of her two children. Mary L. is the wife of William Baggs, connected with a mercantile establishment at Stevensville, Montana.

Fred C. Stoddard attended public schools at Albion, Michigan, graduating from high school in 1875. Soon afterward he became assistant bookkeeper and cashier with the J. K. Armsby Company of Chicago. He came to Montana in 1880. The first two years he was a rancher in the Bitter Root Valley on Skalkaho Creek. Mr. Stoddard has been a resident of Missoula since the fall of 1881. Here for five years he resumed his vocation as bookkeeper for the pioneer establishment of Worden and Higgins, and for five years was bookkeeper and assistant cashier in the Missoula National Bank, now the First National Bank of Missoula, the oldest National Bank in Montana. In 1890, he engaged in the real estate and insurance business, dealing principally in Missoula city property, and built up a business that covered all of Western Montana. In 1911 he sold his insurance business, continuing the real estate line

Mr. Stoddard served one term in the City Council of Missoula. He is a member of the Episcopal Church and is a charter member of the Laurel Lodge No. 11 of the Knights of Pythias and of Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks.

Mr. Stoddard during his long residence at Missoula, has had an active part in forwarding every interest of the State University. He was a member of the local building commission that had charge of the construction of the three original buildings on the university campus, and also the laying out of the grounds, and was later a member of the commission which put up the fourth building. These buildings are the University Hall, Science Hall, Gymnasium and Ladies' Dormitory, and all of them are still used for their original purpose.

F. Thayer Stoddard, present county surveyor of Missoula County, is a highly trained engineer. He was born at Missoula January 28, 1888, was educated in the local public schools, graduating from high school in 1906, and is a graduate of the State University with the class of 1910, with the degree Bachelor of Science in Mineralogy and Geology. In university he was a member of the Sigma Chi and Theta Nu Epsilon fraternities, and is now a stockholder in the Sigma Chi Alumni Building Association. After graduating until the spring of 1911 he was on the engineering staff of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway. Following that he was assistant to Robert Sibley, a well known Missoula engineer. In 1912, and for two years afterward he was with C. W. Swearinger, a municipal and civil engineer in Western Montana. Mr. Stoddard was elected county surveyor in 1914, and is now in his third consecutive term. Mr. Stoddard is unmarried. He owns a modern home at 336 South Fifth Street, East.

JOHN M. HOWLAND is president of the Howland & Maser Security Company at Lewistown. This is one of the leading firms of investment agents in the state, and recently they negotiated with eastern capital for the largest loan on record in Montana, involving about $150,000 made on the noted Dengle brothers ranch properties near Grass Range, the securities being in the form of a bond issue. This is only one of many successful transactions carried out by Mr. Howland, who is an unusually keen financier and during a comparatively brief residence in Montana achieved the striking success which earlier experiences in North Dakota and Minnesota seemed to assure for him.

Mr. Howland has come to success after a long road through a youth of poverty and struggle, has educated himself and has made himself what he is. He was born on a farm near Kilkenny, LeSueur County, Minnesota, September 9, 1874, son of Edwin and Mary (Fitzgerald) Howland. His father was a native Irishman, while his mother was a granddaughter of the last Lord Edward Fitzgerald, representing one of the most powerful families of Ireland but originally of Norman stock that settled in England about the time of the Conquest. John M. Howland was twelve years old when his father died. His widowed mother had four small children and struggled along with adverse circumstances several years until her death. The children managed the farm as best they could, and John M. Howland during that period of his life had no advantages beyond a few terms in common school, sufficient to give him a knowledge of reading and writing only.

At the age of sixteen he was requested by a local school board to take the place of his sister, ill with typhoid fever, and do what he could to keep her school running. So satisfactorily did he discharge his duties as an impromptu teacher that he finished out the term for four months, and then received a teacher's certificate. The following winter he taught a five months' term of school in LeSueur County, and for several years taught school in the winter and helped run the farm in the summer. The next important incident of his early life came at the age of twenty, when, after turning over his interest in the homestead to the other children, he opened a store at Mulford Station with another man as partner. The partnership continued about a year. They were doing a fair business, largely on the exchange plan, selling dry goods and groceries and accepting butter, eggs and cordwood in payment. They also bought grain for the James Quirk Milling Company. When the partnership was dissolved the arrangement was that the partner should collect all the bills due and pay all the debts. Meanwhile Mr. Howland was teaching school at Porter in Lincoln County, Minnesota. While there he was notified that the accounts of the firm had been collected but no debts paid. Here was a crisis, which Mr. Howland converted into an opportunity. The measures he took then has been significant and typical of all his subsequent business career. He paid all the accounts he could with funds at hand amounting to about $1,500, and gave his notes to his largest creditors, a grocery house at St. Paul, and at the end of several years had every obligation discharged.

In the meantime he was getting a better education for himself, attending the Winona High School one year, followed by one term of teaching at Redwood Falls, and then two years as student in the Mankato State Normal. He paid his way through the Normal by driving a delivery wagon in the summer and in school months worked in a lawyer's office. All the heavy work he carried in and out of school did not prevent him from making a record for himself as a football player and debater. While he was at Mankato Normal the Spanish-American war broke out and he enlisted in Company M of the Fifiteenth Minnesota Volunteers, serving as corporal until the regiment was mustered out a year later, in the spring of 1899. He contributed a number of articles on army life to newspapers.

After the war he clerked in a large department store at Minneapolis and for the Northwestern Telephone Company and then settled at Kenmare, North Dakota. His first work there was teaching the town school. In August, 1901, he engaged in the land business, and in a few years was at the head of a complete organization handling real estate and farm loans. Mr. Howland also had some time for politics while in North Dakota. He served as deputy sheriff of Ward County, and police magistrate and city justice in Kenmare and clerk of the local school board.

In 1914 Mr. Howland transferred his home and business interests to Montana, locating at Great Falls, where he assisted in organizing the First Mortgage Loan Company of Montana. This company issued $500,000 worth of stock, and Mr. Howland personally sold $200,000 of that stock, most of it in Western Montana. No purchaser ever had reason to regret buying the stock, since it has paid not less than seven per cent dividends. In June, 1915, Mr. Howland came to Lewistown, and opened an office in the Imislund Block. Associated with Alfred Blaisdell, former secretary of the State of North Dakota, he formed the Blaisdell-Howland Agency, acting as investment agents of the Northwestern Trust Company of St. Paul. This is the largest trust company west of Chicago. On May 5, 1917, Mr. Blaisdell entered the Officers Training camp at Calexico, California, and on being rejected for a place in the Regular Army joined the Intelligence department. During his absence Mr. Howland had full charge of the business.

Mr. Howland is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Foresters. Besides handling large sums of money for other individuals and corporations he individually owns much real estate and farm and ranch property in a number of northwestern states.

January 15, 1902, he married Miss Anna R. Wilson, of Kilkenny, Minnesota, his own native town. They are the parents of five children, John Wilson, James Martin, Anna Ruth, Vivian Margaret and Evelyn Agnes.

THE PARISH OF LEWISTOWN. In the fall of 1875 during a visit among the halfbreed Cree, Chippewa and Assiniboine Indians in the Milk River country, Rev. Father Lestan from St. Boniface, Winnipeg, made arrangements for the building of a log church so that religious instruction could be given and the Mass celebrated for the rather large settlement of these halfbreeds. The following winter Rev. Father J. B. Gene came from Canada and the halfbreeds built a log church 20 by 40, at a point five miles below Fort Belknap. A short time later the halfbreeds were induced to send a delegation to the Spring Creek country.

In the spring of 1879 a French Canadian by the name of Janeaux visited this country and finding good land and game in abundance took up a homestead. In August of that year, old man Ouellette, another halfbreed, came with his family to this country as a government scout, and about the same time another half breed by the name of Isaie Berger took up a homestead at the fork of the road leading to Grass Range and Gilt Edge, about five miles east of Lewistown. In the fall of the same year Father Damiani visited this part of the country from St. Peter's Mission to administer the last sacraments to a dying halfbreed, who was camped at the foot of the Judith Mountains, and found about twenty-eight Catholic families living in that immediate vicinity. All these people had originally come from St. Joseph and Walla Halla, North Dakota, and had drifted west and north to the Missouri River hunting the buffalo. For several years thereafter Father Damiani and Father Schuler visited these halfbreeds, spending several weeks with them at the time, and when the present Lewistown began to grow said Mass occasionally in the house of F. A. Janeaux, at the northwest corner of Main and High Streets. On several other occasions Mass was also celebrated in the school building which was at that time located on the south side of Main Street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

On Sunday, October 10, 1886, a meeting of the Catholic citizens of Lewistown and vicinity was held at the schoolhouse to take steps toward raising money to erect a church. Mr. Brereton called the meeting to order. Mr. H. P. Brooks was elected chairman and Doctor Lapalme, secretary. Mr. D. Brereton was elected treasurer. On motion of D. M. Crowley a committee of five, consisting of the following named persons, was appointed to collect subscriptions: L. Belanger, C. J. McNamara, Michael Brass, D. M. Crowley and H. P. Brooks. Thomas Morgan and Michael Gurnett were appointed as solicitors. F. A. Janeaux, D. M. Crowley, and Oliver Pichette were elected directors by acclamation. It was resolved that in soliciting subscriptions cash or notes at ten per cent interest be accepted.

A whole city block known as Block No. 2 of Janeaux Addition No. 1 was donated by Mr. Janeaux, and in 1887 a frame church, 24 by 60, was erected and blessed by Bishop Brondel on September 23, 1888. Lewistown being then the principal center of the county became the seat of the new county called Fergus in 1885. At that time the nearest priest was living at St. Peter's Mission, a distance of more than 140 miles. At intervals the priest stationed at Fort Benton would visit the place and later also the priest stationed at Great Falls. The first record to be found in the archives of the church is signed by the Rev. J. van den Heuvel recording the baptism on July 10, 1893, of George Ouellette, who was born on January 14 of the same year. In September of the same year Father Dols, stationed at Great Falls, visited this place for several days. Father van den Heuvel remained in Lewistown as resident pastor until some time in October, 1895, and during his pastorate the records of the church show that 124 people were baptized, three buried and twelve couples married. In April, 1895, lot 3 block 3, Janeaux Addition No. 1, on which a little house was standing, was secured as a residence for the priest. From that time up to March, 1896, the place was attended by Rev. C. G. Follett, then stationed at Fort Benton, and some time in March, 1896, Rev. Father E. Demanez was appointed as second resident pastor of St. Leo's Church, and continued in that capacity until he was killed in a railroad wreck between Great Falls and Fort Benton in December, 1898. From November, 1895, to December 9, 1898, a few days before Father Demanez' death, 160 baptisms are recorded, twelve funerals and fifteen marriages. In the month of August, 1897, Rev. Father H. Schuler, S. J., visited the halfbreeds living around Fort Maginnis, a military post located about twenty miles from Lewistown. In January, 1899, Rev. Joseph C. Pudenz, assistant to Rev. Father Dols, of Great Falls, paid Lewistown a short visit. On March 22, 1899, about two acres of land were donated by the scout Ouellette to be used as a Catholic cemetery, together with a sixty-foot roadway leading to it from the city limits.

In June, 1899, the parish was again placed in charge of a resident priest by the name of Father J. Vermaat. Another priest, however, had been appointed to the place, but died on his way to Lewistown. His name was Rev. Father Werner. By this time Lewistown had grown to such an extent that an addition had to be erected to increase the seating capacity of the church, thereby making room for about 200 people. From January 19, 1899, until October 28, 1904, 246 baptisms are on record, 16 funerals and 38 marriages.

In the fall of 1904 Rev. Father Vermaat was transferred to Red Lodge, and in December, 1904, Rev. Father Van Clarenbeek succeeded him, and in February, 1906, was given an assistant in the person of Rev. J. J. O'Carroll, an evidence of the growth of the church in this part of the state. In November, 1906, Father Van Clarenbeek left for Oregon and was succeeded by Rev. Father V. J. van den Broeck. During Father Van Clarenbeek's administration 117 baptisms are recorded, 33 funerals and 15 marriages. Besides the Rev. J. J. O'Carroll at different periods Rev. Fathers Rocque, Leahy, Molyneux and Mueller acted as assistants in St. Leo's Church.

With the coming of the new transcontinental line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul in the year 1907 remarkable developments took place in Fergus County and new towns were springing up in all directions along its lines, as also along the new line of the Burlington, which made its appearance shortly afterward. In accordance with this wide development of territory a number of parcels of property were secured by Rev. Father van den Broeck, including lots at Moore, Roundup, Philbrook, now known as Hobson, Hilger, Winifred, Brooks, Stanford, Grass Range, Danvers and Kolin.

April 3, 1913, approximately nine lots were secured in Lewistown between Broadway and Washington streets on Second Avenue, right in the heart of the city, with a large frontage on Washington Street, and other frontage on Second Avenue and Broadway. On this location building operations were started in the last week of July, 1915, and the building completed by the 1st of October, 1916, at a total cost of about $50,000. The first services were held on October 15th, and the church dedicated by the Rt. Rev. M. C. Lenihan on Sunday, November 12th. A five class room school was established in the large basement, with an average attendance of 140 pupils under the able direction of the Daughters of Jesus. These sisters, who are French exiles, arrived in Lewistown on August 27, 1903, and shortly after their arrival opened a school located on lot 2, block 3, Janeaux Addition No. 1, next door to the priest's residence, where they continued to teach until moving to the new location. For about four years they also conducted a small hospital at the corner of Miller and Watson streets, and in 1907 they erected what was eventually destined to be the best and largest hospital in Central Montana. In the summer of 1907 Father van den Broeck, having secured some property in Moore, erected thereon a church at a cost of $2,500, which by the 2nd of February, 1908, was ready for public worship and the first Mass was said by Rev. A. Mueller. The church was dedicated on October 27th by the Rt. Rev. M. C. Lenihan, of Great Falls. In 1914 a church was built at Hobson at a cost of about $3,000, and one at Stanford at the same cost. In 1916 one was built in Danvers and in 1917 one was built in Hilger at a cost of $5,000.

In August, 1908 the Catholic population had grown sufficiently large to justify Bishop Lenihan in making a division and appointing a resident pastor at Roundup, with charge over all the territory on the Milwaukee line east of Meagher County and west of Rosebud and as far north as the Snowy Mountains. In September, 1916, another division was made with a resident priest at Moore, having charge of all the places on the Milwaukee south of Glengarry, and all the places on the main line of the Burlington in Fergus County. Before the completion of the church in Danvers, in the fall of 1916, a third division of the parish was made, and a priest appointed to Denton with charge over all the places along the Milwaukee line between Ware and Great Falls. Other parishes which must eventually be established include Hilger, to serve a large Catholic population in the territory north and northeast of Lewistown, and another at Grass Range in the center of a good farming district. With these various divisions and extensions St. Leo's Church at Lewistown may truly be called the mother church of Fergus County, being entirely surrounded with churches which have been built during the past twelve years.

Rev. Victor J. van den Broeck, who has zealously labored in the interest of the Catholic Church in Montana for more than thirty-two years, has since 1906 been pastor of St. Leo's at Lewistown. As told in the history of that parish on other pages, his administration has been a thoroughly constructive and progressive one, and has made St. Leo's the mother church of Fergus County.

He was born in Belgium, October 16, 1863, son of John and Adeline (Crame) van den Broeck. His father died in Belgium, April 21, 1902, at the age of seventy-two, and his mother on September 7, 1912, at the age of seventy-six. Of their eight children five are still living, four daughters and one son.

Father van den Broeck attended the common schools to the age of thirteen, then the College of Mechlin in Belgium, and was a student of philosophy under the famous Cardinal Mercier. He graduated in 1887 from the University of Louvain and was ordained a priest, June 24, 1887. On the 27th of August of that year he sailed for New York City and on the 15th of September arrived in Helena, Montana, where he remained until September, 1888, as assistant priest at the Cathedral. He was then assistant priest of St. Patrick's in Butte until September, 1891, when he was appoined pastor at Miles City in charge of the Sacred Heart Church. In September, 1898, he was transferred to St. Rose de Lima Church at Dillon. He was engaged in the heavy labors incident to these charges for five consecutive years. In September, 1903, on account of ill health, he removed to St. Peter's Mission, and on December 31, 1905, left for Europe, visiting Rome. He returned to Great Falls in March, 1906, but after about one month secured a leave of absence and returned to Europe, where he remained until October, 1906. Soon afer his return to Montana he was appointed resident pastor of St. Leo's Church at Lewistown and began his duties there November 2, 1906. From the date of the beginning of his pastorate until 1918 the records of the parish show 1,067 persons baptized, 273 persons buried, 290 couples married, and 308 persons confirmed.

Ralph E. Bodley, supervisor of the Gallatin Forest at Bozeman, has made a splendid record in the forestry service of the government. He prepared himself for this great work and profession while in university, and was advanced more rapidly from the first grade of the work to the post of supervisor than any other man in the history of the service.

Mr. Bodley was born in Wahoo, Nebraska, November 26, 1887. His father, Eli Bodley, is now living at Los Angeles. Eli Bodley was born in Bedfordshire, England, in 1854, was reared and married in England, and is a graduate of Oxford University and a man of very cultured mind and came of a family of good social standing in England. He had some training in military duty while in his native country. In 1884 he brought his family to the United States and became a farmer and stock rancher at Wahoo, Nebraska. He acquired a large amount of land and was a successful business man in that vicinity for many years. In 1911 he left his ranch and moved to Wahoo and since 1917 has been a resident of Los Angeles. Most of his ranch holdings have been sold, but he still retains a place of 200 acres a mile north of Wahoo. Mr. Eli Bodley is independent in politics, a very active member of the Methodist Church and one of the leaders in that denomination at Wahoo. His wife was Mary Hobbs, who was born in Bedfordshire, England, in 1857, and died at Wahoo, Nebraska, in 1896. She was the mother of five children, Ralph E. being the youngest. Annie M., the oldest, is the wife of O. M. Templeton, a farmer at Malmo, Nebraska; Herbert J. is a farmer at Colon, Nebraska; while Rupert H. and George B. are both on the old homestead at Wahoo.

Ralph E. Bodley attended the rural schools of Saunders County, Nebraska, and graduated from the high school at Wahoo in 1908, following which he spent four months traveling in Europe, and during this time he visited England, Scotland, Switzerland, France and Germany. In the fall of 1908 he entered the University of Nebraska at Lincoln and received his Bachelor of Science degree in 1912. He is a Phi Beta Kappa honor graduate of the University of Nebraska. The following year he spent in post graduate work, giving all his time to forestry, and received his Master's degree in that subject in 1913. He is also a member of the Alpha Zeta agricultural honorary fraternity.

On July 1, 1913, he reported for duty as forest assistant at Sheridan, Montana. For nine months he was on the Madison Forest in Madison County, Montana, and three months as deputy forest supervisor at Missoula. July 16, 1914, a year and two weeks after he entered the forestry service, he was made supervisor of the Gallatin Forest and began his work at Bozeman on that date, with offices in the Federal Building.

Mr. Bodley is an independent in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Lincoln, Nebraska. His home is a modern residence at 601 South Sixth Avenue. At Kearny, Nebraska, December 27, 1915, he married Miss Bernice A. Birch. Her mother, Mrs. Clara Birch, lives at Lincoln. Mrs. Bodley is a graduate of the Lincoln High School and spent two years in the University of Nebraska. They have two sons, Russell Ralph, born November 15, 1916, and Donald Claire, born August 17, 1919.

Tom Hirst has had a veteran's experience and service with the Montana State Penitentiary at Deer Lodge. He is deputy warden, a position he has filled for the past ten years.

Mr. Hirst was born at Sheffield, Yorkshire, England, February 7, 1866, and has been a resident of Montana for over thirty years. His father, George Henry Hirst, was born in 1837 and died in 1899, spending all his life in Yorkshire, being a mechanic and machinist in some of the famous factories of Sheffield. He was liberal in politics and a member of the Established Church in England. George H. Hirst married Mary Lodge, who was born in Yorkshire in 1837 and died at Sheffield in 1900. Tom is the oldest of their three children. His sister Harriet is unmarried and living at Sheffield, being a seamstress by occupation; Mabel, the other sister, is the wife of William Hollus, proprietor of a millinery store at Sheffield.

Tom Hirst attended public school in Sheffield up to the age of thirteen. He then served a five years' apprenticeship at the machinists' trade. He left England and came to America when he was about nineteen years of age. At that time a well known firm of ranchers just east of Deer Lodge was Lodge & Beaumont, the senior partner, Joseph Lodge, being an uncle of Tom Hirst. The latter came to Montana to join his uncle, reaching Deer Lodge on May 12, 1885, and was a ranch hand for the firm of Lodge & Beaumont until September, 1893. That was the date of his first service at the State Penitentiary. Then and for some years later Conley & McTague were the contract wardens who had charge of the penitentiary. Mr. Hirst began as a guard, and in 1909, while away from Montana visiting in New York City, he was appointed deputy warden, the office he fills today. He is a member of the International Society for Identification, and is the official in charge of the finger prints and Bertillon measurements of the State Penitentiary.

Mr. Hirst served two terms representing the First Ward in the City Council of Deer Lodge. He is a republican, has served as vestryman in the Episcopal Church, and is very prominent in the Knights of Pythias, being past chancellor commander of Valley Lodge No. 6, for the past twenty-one years has been keeper of records and seals, and has the Veteran's Jewel for a continuous membership of twenty-five years in good standing. He is also a member of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias in Montana.

Mr. Hirst, who with his family resides at 706 Fourth Street, married at Deer Lodge in 1896 Miss Emma Larsen. They have two sons: Edward Lodge, born June 12, 1897, is in the junior class of the Montana State University at Missoula, and during the summer of 1919 was with a surveying party under the government on the Blackfeet National Forest Reserve; George Niel, the younger son, was born October 29, 1900, was in the Powell County High School into his senior year, and in 1918 joined the Students' Army Training Corps at Missoula. He is now employed by the O'Neill Garage at Deer Lodge.

Mr. Hirst's paternal grandfather was a native of Holland, moving from that country to Yorkshire, England. For a number of years he was employed in woolen mills and was also an English soldier in the Crimean war.

Mrs. Hirst is a daughter of Niel Larsen, a native of Denmark, one of the earliest settlers in Montana, coming to the territory in the early sixties. He was a pioneer at Deer Lodge, buying a farm a mile and a half east of that town. He died soon after settling there. The old homestead is now owned by his heirs, and his daughter Miss Mary lives on the farm and manages it. Mrs. Hirst is a member of the Sons and Daughters of Pioneers of Montana. Her two sisters, Mary and Annie, both came to Montana prior to 1866 and are therefore members of the Pioneers of Montana Society. Mrs. Hirst was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, while her parents were visiting in the east, and only for that incident does not possess the same qualifications as a pioneer as her sisters. Her sister Annie lives at Deer Lodge, widow of M. J. Padden, who was a conductor for the Milwaukee Railroad.

James Craig, M. D. Doctor Craig had practiced medicine and surgery nearly forty years before he retired from active service in 1911. He was the third physician to locate at Columbus, came to Montana nearly thirty years ago, and has been one of the men who has conferred dignity upon the medical profession in Montana.

He comes of an old family of the State of Maine and was born at Dixmont in Penobscot County April 28, 1850. His great-grandfather emigrated from Scotland and was a colonial settler on the Kennebec River in Maine. His father, James S. Craig, was born in Maine in 1806, spent his life there as a farmer, and died at Dixmont in 1854. His wife was Margaret L. Tasker, who was born in Maine in 1811 and died at Dixmont in the spring of 1861. Doctor Craig was therefore a small boy when his parents died. He was the youngest of their children, those older than himself being: Sanford, a farmer, who died at Dixmont; Mary, who died at Dixmont; Benjamin, who spent his life as a farmer at Dixmont; Wilford, who was also a lifelong Dixmont in 1916, the wife of Nathan White, a farmer still living at Dixmont. Albert, who served the last year of the Civil war and then reenlisted in the regular army and died in 1867 at Brownsville, Texas; Margaret, who died at Doctor Craig attended public school at Dixmont, also the Dummer Preparatory School in the parish of Byfield, Massachusetts, and in 1872 entered the Maine Medical School at Brunswick, the medical department of Bowdoin College. He received his degree Doctor of Medicine in 1876, and during the next fifteen years was busily engaged in a general practice at Unity in Waldo County in his native state.

Doctor Craig came to Montana in April, 1891. The following eight years he lived at White Sulphur Springs, and in December, 1898, located at Columbus as the third physician in the town. He has served as health officer of Stillwater County and the City of Columbus, and while at White Sulphur Springs was county physician of Meagher County. He has been mayor of Columbus one term, during 1910-1911, and though retired from his profession he employed his professional services as a patriotic duty during the World war, serving as examining physician of the local exemption board.

Doctor Craig owns a modern home in Columbus, a ranch of 280 acres, operated by a tenant, located a mile north of Columbus, and is secretary of the Columbus Irrigation District. He is an independent republican in politics. He is past master of Stillwater Lodge No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, a member of Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, of Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knight Templars, at Billings, and of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also past grand of Castle Mountain Lodge No. 16, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at White Sulphur Springs and a present member of Yellowstone Lodge No. 85, at Columbus, and a former member of the encampment.

To the enviable position he enjoys Mrs. Craig has contributed through her various activities and benevolent character. Doctor Craig married at China, Maine, in 1885, Lizzie S. Gould. Her father was related to the same Gould family that produced the great financier Jay Gould. She is also directly descended from one of three Chase brothers who came from England and were colonial settlers in the State of Maine. Her father, John Gould, was born at Sandwich, New Hampshire, in 1815 and spent many years of his active career as a farmer at China, Maine, where he died in 1889. He was a republican and was a very influential member of the Friends Church. He married Mary T. Jones, who was born at Unity, Maine, in 1829, and spent her last years in Montana, passing away at Columbus in 1912. Mrs. Craig was the third of three children. Her brother, Charles E., died at China, Maine, at the age of twenty-two months, and her sister, Ella M., died at China at the age of twenty-one. Mrs. Craig was educated in the public schools of China, Maine, attended an academy there, and a boarding school at Vassalboro, Maine, also the Preparatory School of Colby College at Waterville, Maine. Before her marriage she taught eleven years in her home state, and four years after her marriage was identified with the schools of White Sulphur Springs, Montana. She is an active member of the Friends Church. She is also past matron of Martha Chapter No. 11 of the Eastern Star at White Sulphur Springs, and a member of Treasure State Lodge No. 85 of the Rebekahs.

Edgar W. Mettler. In a conspicuous place on the roll of Fergus County's successful members of the legal profession is found the name of Edgar W. Mettler, an excellent type of the alert, progressive and public-spirited citizen whose record is an indication that success is ambition's answer. During the period of his prominent connection with cases of important legal jurisprudence he has become more or less a familiar figure in the courts of the county, and especially in his home community of Lewistown, and no lawyer of the city has a better record for high and straightforward professional conduct or for success earned with honor and without animosity.

Mr. Mettler was born on his father's farm in Ogle County, Illinois, April 15, 1876, a son of William J. and Selina H. (Roberts) Mettler. His father, born in New York State, died when seventy-nine years of age; and his mother, a native of Connecticut, reached the age of seventy-seven years. They were the parents of two children: Minnie B., the wife of O. N. Phelps, and Edgar W. The Mettler family were pioneers of Illinois, and William J. Mettler was a mere child when he accompanied his parents from New York State to Winnebago County, in that community the family settling on United States Government land near what is now the thriving City of Rockford. There William J. Mettler grew to manhood, working on the homestead and securing his education in the public schools and subsequently moved to Ogle County, Illinois, where he passed the remainder of his life as a farmer and stockraiser. He took a prominent part in democratic politics during his day, and for several terms was a member of the board of commissioners of Ogle County.

Edgar W. Mettler attended the public schools of Ogle County and in his youth assisted his father in the work of the home farm. It was not his intention, however, to lead an agricultural life, for he had become imbued with a desire for a career in the law, and, as he had not the means wherewith to pursue his studies, at the age of eighteen years he left the parental roof and secured employment in the Chicago general offices of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. Later he was employed by the First National Bank of Englewood at Chicago, and with the money earned in these positions paid his way through a course in Power & Orr's Business College and the Valparaiso (Indiana) University. Continuing to work at whatever employment of an honorable character presented itself, he managed to put himself through the law department of the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated with his cherished degree in 1903. At this time Mr. Mettler's funds were exhausted completely. Nearly every young lawyer must go through a probationary period while he is awaiting the business that will give his start in professional life, but Mr. Mettler was compelled to do something to pay for his living. Making his way to Chicago, after much anxious searching he came to an agreement with a firm to look after some of its legal business at Houston, Texas, to which city the young lawyer accordingly made his way. He had been admitted to the Michigan bar in March, 1903 and in the same year received permission to practice in Texas, where he remained for about two years. His business there satisfactorily concluded, January 3, 1905, he came to Helena, Montana, where he passed the examination for entrance to practice and was accepted. Subsequently he came to Lewistown, where he soon became associated in practice with H. Leonard DeKalb, under the firm name of DeKalb & Mettler, an association which continued until August, 1911. Mr. Mettler then practiced alone until 1915, when he formed a partnership with Jack Briscoe, as Mettler & Briscoe, but this was terminated in November, 1918, and Mr. Mettler has since practiced alone. He maintains offices in the Empire Bank Building, and his practice is large and important and constantly growing. He is a member of the county and state associations of his profession, in the ranks of which he is regarded as a skilled and thoroughly informed lawyer, and one who respects the ethics of the calling. He has served as police judge of Lewistown for a number of years, an office in which he has ever administered justice in an impartial manner according to the legal status of each case. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Lewistown Lodge No. 3, Knights of Pythias. He exercises his right of franchise as a democrat.

Judge Mettler was married December 31, 1905, to Miss Faith Oldes, the sixth child in a family of six daughters and two sons born to B. C. and Editha (Hoagland) Oldes, the latter of whom died when she was forty years of age. B. C. Oldes, who was a native of Iowa, and died in September, 1917, at the age of seventy-four years, fought as a soldier during the Civil war. He was a member of the Sixteenth Regiment, Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and was under the command of General Sherman when captured by the enemy and confined in the notorious Andersonville Prison, where he was held for nine months. Later, his military career finished, he took up farming in Missouri and then returned to Iowa, but finally settled in Montana as a pioneer farmer of Meagher (now Fergus) County, where he spent the final days of his life. Mr. and Mrs. Mettler are the parents of two children, namely: Frank and Ruth R., both attending school.

Emil Heikkila has had a varied experience along the northern boundary line of the United States since leaving school at Duluth, has been identified with several mercantile corporations in Montana and is now general manager of the Roberts Elevator Company at Roberts.

His people were pioneers in the great mining district of Northern Michigan and Northern Minnesota, and he was born at Calumet in the former state November 16, 1881. His father, Andrew Heikkila, was born in Finland in 1834. He became a miner at Calumet, Michigan, and was later one of the pioneers who opened the great iron range in Northern Minnesota. While opening up that range he had his home chiefly at Tower, Minnesota. In 1899 he moved to Cromwell, Minnesota, where for the past twenty years he has been identified with farming and is now retired with a comfortable competence. He is a republican, a member of the Lutheran Church and a stanch American citizen. He married Lizzie Mattonan, who was born in Finland in 1836, in which country they were married. Their children are four in number, Emil being the youngest. The oldest, Matt, is a farmer at Cromwell, Minnesota; Hannah, living at Spokane, Washington, is the widow of Gust Sundman, who was a diamond driller in the mines; Andrew, whose present residence is in Alaska.

Emil Heikkila attended public school at Tower and Duluth, Minnesota, graduating from the school in the latter city in 1896. The following two years he spent as an employe of the Northern Pacific and the Duluth & Iron Range Railways. The next ten years he engaged in merchandising in Black Hills, South Dakota. Mr. Heikkila located at Red Lodge, Montana, in 1912, and the following six years he was manager of the Kaleva Cooperative Mercantile Association. In January, 1918, he bought an interest in the Roberts Elevator Company at Roberts, and has since been its general manager and a director of the company. In the meantime he has also acquired some extensive and valuable ranching interests, owning a property of 160 acres in Butte County, South Dakota, and a ranch of 420 acres in Carleton County, Minnesota. His home in Roberts is a modern and complete residence.

Mr. Heikkila is a republican, is affiliated with Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Carbon Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534 of the Elks, all at Red Lodge, and Gold Run Camp No. 1217 of the Modern Woodmen of America at Lead, South Dakota.

He married at Lead, South Dakota, in 1905, Miss Ellen Silfven, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Seppanen) Silfven. Her parents live at Sturgis, South Dakota, her father being a retired farmer and was one of the pioneers of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Heikkila have two children, Alfred, born February 27, 1906, and Ercel Dean, born January 7, 1911.

Laverne K. Pence when a young man familiarized himself with all details of the automobile, both from the business and the technical and mechanical standpoint. Some years ago he located at Bozeman, and in a comparatively short time has built up the leading garage and one of the chief automobile sales agencies in Southern Montana. The business is known as L. K. Pence & Co.

Mr. Pence was born at Fairfield, Washington, September 14, 1892. His father, Charles F. Pence, was born in Illinois in 1869, was reared in his native state, and when a young man joined an emigrant train going overland to California. From California he moved to Washington, where he married, and he spent some time as a prospector in the Coeur D'Alene country. He also lived at Fairfield, and is now a resident of Spokane, where for several years he was an attorney and a real estate broker, but is now retired. He is a democrat in politics. Charles F. Pence married Mary Beatrice Koontz, who was born in Missouri in 1872. Laverne K. is the oldest of their children. Grace is the wife of Leslie Francis, a wholesale produce merchant at Spokane; Irlene Winifred is a student in the University of Washington at Seattle. Roy is in the Spokane High School and Carl is a pupil in the grade schools of Spokane.

Laverne K. Pence received his early education at Spokane, attended high school there, and at the age of eighteen left his studies to become a mechanic for F. A. Williams, the Ford agent at Spokane. For several years he had no other enthusiasm than the automobile, and he was soon pronounced an expert in the business. In August, 1916, he was appointed traveling representative for the Ford Motor Company, and until October of the same year traveled over the States of Montana, Idaho and Washington. In October, 1917, he established his present business at Bozeman, his partner being his former employer, F. A. Williams, of Spokane, until 1920. The firm of L. K. Pence & Company is now owned entirely by Mr. Pence. The garage and offices are at the corner of Babcock Street and Black Avenue. Mr. Pence handles automobile accessories, and is local agent at Bozeman and Gallatin County for the Ford cars, tractors and farm implements. He does business all over Gallatin County and as far as Willow Creek, Harrison and Pony.

Mr. Pence is still interested in mining in Alaska, Montana and Idaho. He is independent in politics and a member of Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks. Mrs. Ingham's father is Otto Vogl, who was born in New York State in 1855, a son of Franz Vogl, who was a native of Bavaria, Germany, and after coming to the United States established his permanent home in Wisconsin, where he was in business and died at Columbus in that state in 1896. Otto Vogl was reared in Wisconsin, came to Minnesota when a young man, and conducted a clothing store at Faribault, where he married, and at other places in Minnesota. Since 1893 he has made his home at Mimeapolis. At present he is a salesman with the Finch, Van Slyke, McConville wholesale dry goods house of St. Paul. He is a republican and an Odd Fellow. Otto Vogl married Laura McKune, who was born at Morristown, Minnesota, a daughter of Lewis McKune. The McKunes came to Massachusetts about 1630 from England. Mrs. Ingham is descended through her mother's ancestors from a Revolutionary soldier named Lewis. Her maternal grandfather, Lewis McKune, was captain of Company G of the First Minnesota Infantry, enlisting in 1861, and was killed at the Second Battle of Bull Run. He was a native of Pennsylvania and a pioneer farmer and merchant at Morristown, Minnesota. He was also one of the first members of the State Senate of Minnesota. Captain McKune married Laura Corse, a native of Pennsylvania, who died at Morristown, Minnesota. The children of Otto Vogl and wife are three in number: Frances, wife of M. J. Cullem, a resident of Leeds, North Dakota, and a grain buyer; Harry, a traveling salesman living at Minneapolis, who married Marguerite Close; and Mrs. Ingham.

C. C. JAMESON is a Montana merchant, well known both at Livingston and Bozeman, and has been a factor in the management and development of the noted Golden Rule Syndicate of stores, represented in eleven stores in Montana towns and cities. Mr. Jameson is now a partner in the McCracken & Jameson Company, Incorporated, owning the McCracken-Jameson store at Bozeman.

He was born at Marshfield, Webster County, Missouri, April 25, 1882. His ancestors came from Scotland, and were colonial settlers in Georgia. His grandfather, Milton Jameson, was born in 1819, served as a Confederate soldier, and spent his active life in Southern Missouri. He died in Webster County, that state, in 1895. B. C. Jameson, father of the Bozeman merchant, was born in Georgia in 1862, and when he was five years of age his parents moved to Webster County, Missouri, where he spent the rest of his active life as a merchant. Since 1917 he has lived retired at Springfield, Missouri. B. C. Jameson is a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. He married Mary E. Britton, who was born in Missouri in 1861. W. R. Jameson, their oldest child, is connected with the Springfield Creamery Company at Springfield, Missouri, being general road man for this corporation, a $200,000 company. J. E. Jameson is connected with the Upham-Gordon wholesale shoe house in Springfield. The next is C. C. Jameson. Mary is the wife of Charles W. Dyer, a farmer of Springfield, Missouri, while Mabel and Bessie, the youngest of the family, are still at home, the former being employed in a wholesale silk and millinery house and the latter a stenographer.

C. C. Jameson attended rural schools in Webster County, Missouri, and spent two years in the high school at Marshfield. Since leaving school his experience has been entirely in commercial lines. For three years he worked in a dry goods store, and in 1902 completed a business course in the Draughan Business College at Springfield. The next two years he covered an extensive territory in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, representing the Martin Manufacturing Company, makers of work clothing. He then took charge of the clothing store of W. W. Moore at Bolivar, Missouri, for a year and a half, and on severing his Missouri connections he joined the Golden Rule Syndicate at Livingston. For three months he was assistant manager of one of the stores at Bozeman, and then for two years was manager of A. Braton's women's ready to wear store. After that he was general manager and buyer for the Golden Rule department store at Livingston until June 1, 1919. He returned to Bozeman as manager and one-third owner of the Bozeman department store.

Mr. Jameson is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and still retains his fraternal affiliations with Bolivar Lodge No. 56, Knights of Pythias, in Missouri.

January 3, 1917, at Billings, Mr. Jameson married Miss Lois Skinker, daughter of Judge C. H. and Minnie (Gravely) Skinker of Bolivar, Missouri. Her father is a distinguished Missouri jurist who for the past fifteen years has served as judge of the Eighteenth Judicial District, being first appointed by Governor Hadley of Missouri. Two of the most noted criminal trials in the Middle West in recent years came before him. One was the Stanley Ketchel murder case and the other the Keet baby kidnapping case. Mrs. Jameson attended the Missouri State University at Columbia two years and another year at Drury College, Springfield, Missouri.

J. RALPH SCOVIL. The name of Scovil is one of the best known ones in industrial circles not only at Butte, but throughout Western Montana, this prominence having been given it by the united activities of J. Ralph Scovil and his father, John Scovil, both of whom are excellent and very successful business men. J. Ralph Scovil is proprietor of the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company, and his father is connected with a number of large concerns at Butte and other cities, and is recognized as the leading laundryman of Montana.

J. Ralph Scovil was born at Anaconda, Montana, on November 15, 1892, a son of John Scovil, and grandson of L. N. Scovil, the latter a native of Middletown, Connecticut, where he was born in 1809. He died at Springville, Utah, in 1890. The Scovil family was founded in the American colonies prior to the Revolution, coming here from England, and becoming prominent in the New England settlements.

L. N. Scovil went first to Ohio and later to Provo, Utah, and during the war between the states he returned to the land of his forefathers, and for a time was connected with the London "Times." He became a republican, and until his death voted the ticket of that party. In the creed of the Mormons he found expression for his religious faith, and was one of the leading members of the Mormon colony at Springville, where he made his home in later years. The grandmother of J. Ralph Scovil bore the maiden name of Hannah Marsden, and she was born near Liverpool, England, in 1839, and died at Springville, Utah, in July, 1907. Her father was William Marsden, also a native of England, and he died at Parawan, Utah, in 1887, to which place he came from Burlington, Iowa, and he was both a farmer and merchant and a very successful man. The following children were born to L. N. Scovil and his wife, Hannah (Marsden) Scovil: John, who became the father of J. Ralph Scovil; S. S., of Salt Lake City, Utah; Sylvia, who is the widow of John Roylance, lives at Springville, Utah; Mina, who is Mrs. E. J. Wignal, of Salt Lake City, Utah; Clara, who is Mrs. Eugene W. Raymond, of Salt Lake City, Utah; and Jennie, who is Mrs. Walter R. Dusenberry, of Salt Lake City, Utah.

John Scovil, father of J. Ralph Scovil, was born at Provo, Utah, on January 30, 1863, and until he was thirteen years old attended the public schools of Springville, Utah, but then began to be self-supporting, working first as a teamster. In 1884 he came to Anaconda, Montana, and for a time was connected with the Upper Works as watchman and later timekeeper, and still later became manager of the milk ranch in the vicinity of Anaconda. All this time he was looking for work suited to his capabilities, and entered upon what was to be a remarkably successful business career when he became a driver for the Anaconda Laundry Company. After gaining some knowledge of the laundry business through this connection he established a laundry of his own under the name of the Montana Laundry at Anaconda, and conducted it so successfully that in 1899 he sold it at a good profit and came to Butte. From the time he became a resident of Butte to the present day Mr. Scovil's operations have been so remarkably successful as to challenge admiration and stimulate emulation. Beginning with the purchase of the pioneer Union Laundry, Mr. Scovil forged ahead, acquiring possession in part or as sole owner of the C. O. D. Laundry, the Troy Laundry, the Palace Laundry and the Taylor Laundry, in time so consolidating them that he is now operating them under the names of the C. O. D. Laundry, capitalized at $200,000, and giving employment to 100 persons, and the Taylor Laundry, capitalized at $150,000, and giving employment to seventy-five persons, the former being the largest laundry in Montana. In addition to his immense laundry interests John Scovil is president of the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company of Butte; president of the Scovil Realty Company, Incorporated, of Butte; and president of the Wardrobe Cleaning and Tailoring Company of Great Falls, Montana. He owns his own residence at Butte, an apartment house, the Lennox Hotel, two brick blocks, the building occupied by the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company, the site of the Speedway Stables, twelve dwellings and a farm, all at Butte; the building occupied by the Wardrobe Cleaning and Tailoring Company at Great Falls, Montana; an apartment house of fourteen apartments, a business block and a modern brick dwelling at Salt Lake City, Utah, and a dwelling at Springville, Utah. John Scovil is a republican. He belongs to the Butte Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, the Silver Bow Club and the Country Club, and is a Knight of Pythias.

In 1891 Mr. Scovil was married at Anaconda, Montana, to Miss Mary J. Keith, a daughter of Mrs. Jane Keith, who died at Anaconda in 1901. Mrs. Scovil was born at Corinne, Utah, in 1873, and died at Anaconda on May 30, 1900, leaving one son, J. Ralph, whose name heads this review. On June 12, 1901, Mr. Scovil was married to Miss Lalia G. Walton, a daughter of John and Henrietta (Smith) Walton, of Butte. Mr. Scovil has no children by his second marriage.

After completing the eighth grade of the Butte Public Schools, J. Ralph Scovil entered Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, where he completed the junior year, and he completed his collegiate work at the Princeton Preparatory School in 1912. Following this he entered the University of Pennsylvania, and left it in 1913. Mr. Scovil then took a business course at the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, and was graduated therefrom in 1914. He belongs to the Greek Letter Fraternity Phi Sigma Kappa.

In 1914 Mr. Scovil returned to Butte and took charge of the Unique Cleaning and Tailoring Company, Incorporated, the leading business of its kind in Butte, with premises at No. 128 West Granite Street. This company was incorporated in 1908, and Mr. Scovil's father is its president.

J. Ralph Scovil is a republican like his father and grandfather before him. He affiliates with the Episcopal Church. The American Legion, the Rotary Club, the Good Roads Association, the Rocky Mountain Rifle Club, the Butte Country Club, the Silver Bow Club and the Areo Club of America all have his membership. At present Mr. Scovil lives in the Werner Apartments on South Clark Street, although he did own a modern residence at No. 637 Colorado Street, but sold it when he enlisted for service during the great war.

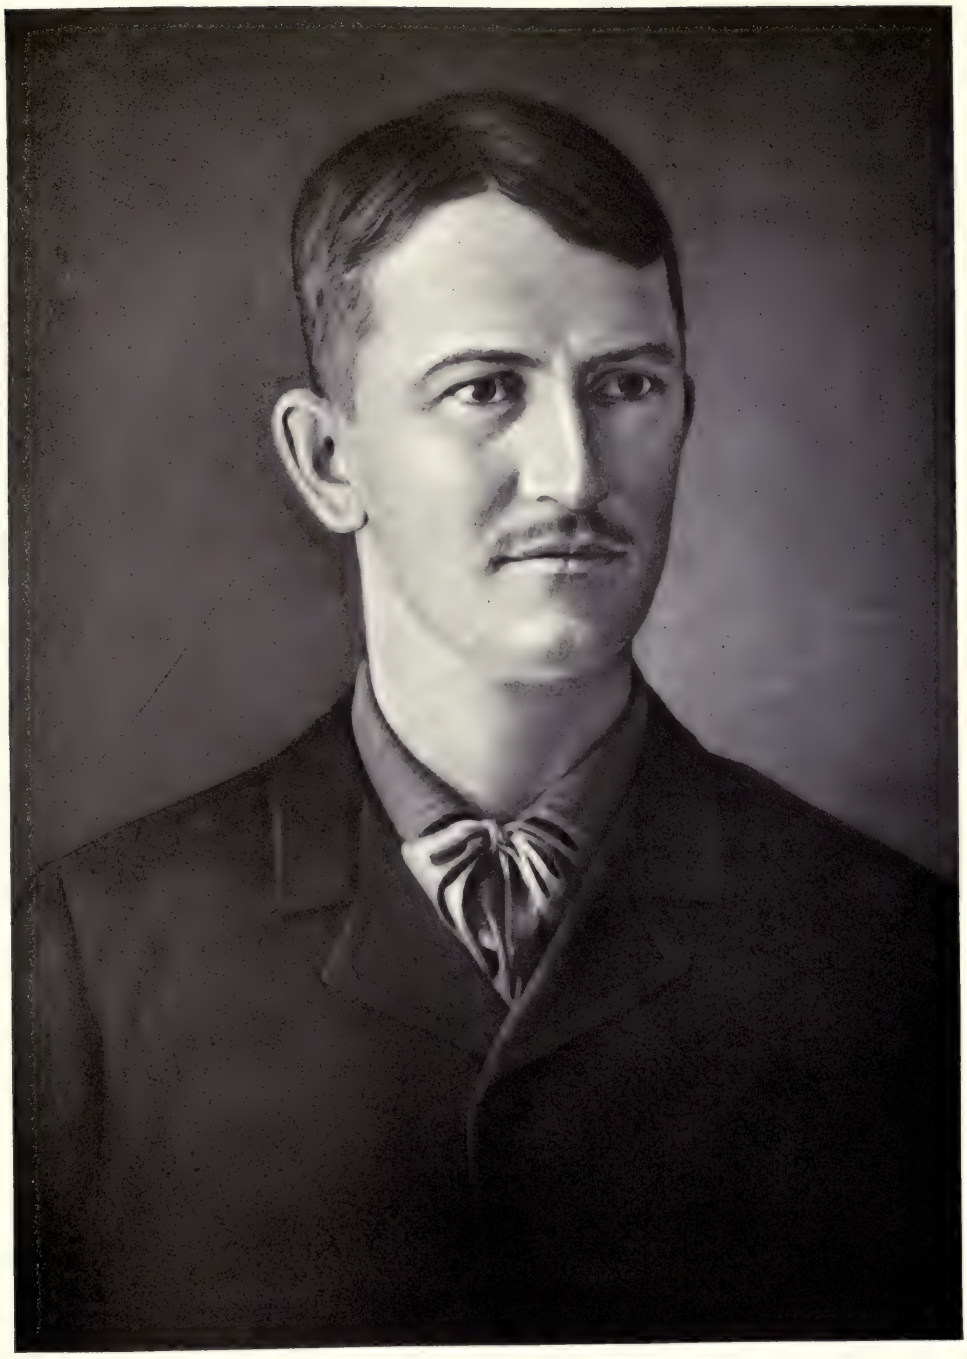
On October 15, 1917, J. Ralph Scovil enlisted and was sent to Berkeley, California, to the government school of aviation, from whence he went to the North Island Flying Field at San Diego, California, and was mustered out as a flying sergeant of the first class and was in line for a commission at the time of the signing of the Armistice, when he would have been transferred to Riverside, California. The date of his discharge papers is March 1, 1919.

On April 7, 1916, Mr. Scovil was married at Butte to Miss Frances McDonald, a daughter of Doctor H. J. and Caroline (Le Mere) McDonald, residents of Butte, where Doctor McDonald is engaged in a successful practice. Mrs. Scovil attended the Havergal School for Girls at Toronto, Canada, for two years.

WILLIAM P. ADAMS, an implement dealer at Columbus, is a Montana pioneer, and thirty years ago was riding the range for various stock outfits in the Yellowstone Valley. He is one of the old timers at Columbus, and has had much to do with that town's progress and upbuilding.

Mr. Adams was born in Meigs County, Ohio, October 3, 1865. He belongs to the old Massachusetts Adams family. His grandfather, John Adams, was born in Pennsylvania in 1782, and was an early settler in Meigs County, Ohio, where he followed the milling business. He died in Meigs County in 1875. John Quincy Adams, father of the Quincy merchant, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1829, and was a young boy when his parents moved to Meigs County, Ohio. He spent all his life in that county, from his father learned the trade of milling and engaged in that industry for many years. He died in Meigs County in 1899. He served as a member of an Ohio Regiment of Infantry during the Civil war, and in politics was a democrat. John Q. Adams married Emeline Peoples, who was born in Ohio in 1833 and died in Meigs County. Their children were: Mark A., who operates the old home flouring mill at Kerr, in Meigs County; Joseph, who was a blacksmith, came to Montana in 1899 and died at Terry in 1914; Addison, who was a structural iron worker and died at Portland, Oregon, in 1914; William P., who is fourth in age; Emeline, wife of Mr. Brown, of Meigs County, Ohio; and Sybil, who is the wife of a Meigs County farmer.

William P. Adams grew up in the rural districts of Meigs County, attending country schools, and at the age of sixteen left home and went to Kansas, where he spent four years on a stock farm in Coffey County. From there in 1888 he came to Montana, and in that year became acquainted with the little hamlet of Stillwater, now the City of Columbus. As a cowboy he rode the range all over this district for twelve years. He then established the first livery and feed stable of any consequence at Columbus, and was active in that business until April, 1918. He still owns the stables, but now gives all his time to the implement business. He has a well equipped store on Pike Avenue, owns the building in which his business is conducted, and has many other property interests, including a modern home, two dwelling houses, and an interest in a ranch of 480 acres seven miles north of Columbus.



W. P. Adams

Mr. Adams is well known in public affairs, having served as sheriff of Yellowstone County during 1906-07. He is a republican, and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

At Columbus in 1896 he married Miss Maggie Lavelle, daughter of that splendid old pioneer of Columbus, Patrick Lavelle, concerning whom special mention is made on other pages of this publication. Mr. and Mrs. Adams have four children: Willie, born July 11, 1899, a graduate of the Columbus High School, and an employee of H. I. Grant's merchandise business at Columbus; Patrick, born November 11, 1900, now engaged on the County Survey; Dorothy, who has completed the first year of the high school; and Harold, a grammar school student.

O. T. Ragland during the past five years has become known as one of the most useful, energetic and public spirited citizens of Livingston, where he is serving as police magistrate and has built up a large and prosperous insurance agency. Mr. Ragland came to Montana following the example of other members of his family, who resorted here as a matter of health and climate.

His business career for many years centered in Southern Illinois and he is a native of Kentucky, born in Ballard County, April 19, 1855.

The paternal branch of his family goes back to England, and included the noted Lord Ragland. The Raglands were colonial settlers in Virginia. Mr. Ragland's grandfather, Robert Ragland, was born in Virginia in 1790 and was a Kentucky pioneer, first living on a farm in Henry County and later in Ballard County, where he died in 1863. Edmond Ragland, father of Judge Ragland, was born in Henry County, Kentucky, in 1814. From Henry County after his marriage he moved to Ballard County and began farming there soon after President Jackson had bought the land from the Indians. He was an able business man and conducted his farm with a high degree of success. He died in Ballard County in 1902. As a democrat he served as deputy county clerk of Ballard County and was also postmaster of Woodville. He was an active supporter and deacon in the Baptist Church, and as a Mason the first Masonic Lodge in Ballard County was organized in his home. Edmond Ragland married Mary Gains, who was born in Boyle County, Kentucky, in 1816 and died in Ballard County in 1882. The fifth in a family of six children, Oscar T. Ragland is the only one to come to Montana and the only one to find a permanent home and occupation outside of Ballard County. The others have all been Ballard County farmers. The two oldest, Sam B. and James W., were farmers and the former died at the age of sixty-seven and the latter at thirty-three. George L., the third in age, is a farmer and tobacco buyer of Ballard County. Bettie is the wife of George F. Reesor, a Ballard County farmer, and Edmond T., the youngest, is also in Ballard County.

Oscar T. Ragland acquired his early education in the rural schools of his home county, walking a distance of three miles between his father's home and the schoolhouse. He lived at home to the age of twenty-five and then went to Southern Illinois and spent two years working in a flour mill at New Columbia in Massac County. For five years he was engaged in the flour milling business at Metropolis, Illinois. Then came his first public honor when elected constable. After serving one year he moved to his farm in Illinois and energetically prosecuted his business as an agriculturist until 1896. That year he engaged in the life insurance business, and for three years his headquarters and home were at Mound City, Pulaski County, Illinois. He returned to Metropolis in 1900 and continued successfully in the insurance business until 1915. In the meantime his daughter Goldie May, now deputy county clerk at Livingston, had come to Montana in 1912. In 1914 she induced her mother to seek the benefits of the wonderful climate of Montana, and Mrs. Ragland with her younger son came to the Northwest in that year. In 1915 Mr. Ragland, having disposed of his Illinois business, joined the family in Livingston and has since been engaged in the insurance business. In 1916 he was elected justice of the peace and was re-elected in 1918. He was chosen police magistrate in April, 1919. His business offices are at 108 East Callender street. He also owns a complete modern home at 314 South Second Street.

Judge Ragland is a republican, a member and deacon of the Baptist Church, is past grand of Park Lodge No. 17, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge at Helena in 1917. He is secretary of his home lodge and is a member of Egyptian Encampment of the Odd Fellows. He also belongs to the Livingston Chamber of Commerce.

In 1879, at New Columbia, Illinois, Mr. Ragland married Miss Alice Nutty, daughter of Gale and Sallie Nutty. Her father was a soldier in both Mexican and Civil wars, was a farmer and is now deceased. Her mother lives at Samoth, Illinois. The oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Ragland is Ophia, wife of E. W. Brady, head bookkeeper for the A. W. Miles Company of Livingston. Richard Frank, the second in age, has made a notable record as a soldier and his present home is at Washington, District of Columbia, where he still holds the rank of captain. He was commissioned second lieutenant in June, 1917, and spent fourteen months in France with the American Expeditionary Forces. He was promoted to first lieutenant of the Twelfth Railroad Engineers Corps. In September, 1918, he was returned to this country, and stationed at Camp Humphreys, Virginia, for the purpose of organizing and training new recruits, for the Engineer Corps. After the armistice he was ordered to Washington and was assigned the interesting task of rewriting the book on Railroad Engineers previously compiled in 1912, and he is now bringing the record to date with particular reference to the services of this famous organization in France. Alfred F. Ragland, the third child, enlisted in June, 1917, was first trained at Camp Lewis, Washington, and afterward transferred to Camp Kearney, California, and most of his time was spent as sergeant in the Base Hospital. The fourth of the family, Goldie May, has already been mentioned. Paul L., the youngest, is in the freshman class of the Park County High School.

Howard P. McPherson is postmaster and publisher and the source of a variety of wholesome influence and enterprise for the new town of Rapelje in Stillwater County.

Mr. McPherson, who has been a printer and newspaper man throughout his active life, was born at Clarinda, Iowa, July 23, 1884. As his name indicates, he is of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, Angus McPherson, was born in Scotland in 1822, and was a ship carpenter for many years. He immigrated to Nova Scotia and in the latter period of his life moved far inland to Marshalltown, Iowa, where he ceased working at his trade and took up farming. He finally settled near Alexandria, South Dakota, where he died in 1889. He married Catherine Vaughn, who was a native of Scotland, where they were married. She also died near Alexandria.

James W. McPherson, father of the Rapelje postmaster, was born in Nova Scotia in 1846, and was reared and educated in that Canadian province. He was a young man when he went to Marshalltown, Iowa, and followed the trade of carpenter and builder for a number of years. In 1880 he moved to Clarinda, Iowa, and in 1884 became a pioneer in Dakota Territory, locating at what is now Alexandria, South Dakota. He homesteaded a claim on the prairie, developed it into a farm, and occupied it until his death. While visiting he died at Lincoln, Nebraska, in September, 1911. He was a democrat and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. At Marshalltown, Iowa, he married Catherine Pershing, who was born in Ohio in 1852 and is a cousin of General Pershing. Since 1914 she has made her home at Irene, South Dakota. She is the mother of seven children: Harry, a general merchant at Irene; Roy, a printer living at Lincoln, Nebraska; Ethel, wife of S. W. Jenkins, who is connected with the Duplex printing press factory of Battle Creek, Michigan; Howard P.; Harold, who died at the age of seventeen; Willard, a baker living at Detroit, Michigan; and Mary, a teacher at Irene, South Dakota.

Howard P. McPherson was educated in the public schools of Alexandria, South Dakota, graduating from high school in 1902. While a school boy he learned to set type and the other intricacies of a printing office, and after leaving high school he went to Battle Creek, Michigan, and was in the job printing business for about ten years. He then returned to Irene, South Dakota, and bought the Tri-County News, which he edited until 1917.

Soon after the founding of the new Town of Rapelje Mr. McPherson arrived on the scene in September, 1917, and established The Advocate. The first issue of this paper was printed January 1, 1918, and it was the first local journal in the new town. It serves as the chief medium of news for that locality and its circulation is over Stillwater and Yellowstone counties. Mr. McPherson erected a new building and installed a modern plant, fully equipped for all the needs of his paper and for general printing. He owns his place of business and also his residence on Main Street. Mr. McPherson and his paper are independent in politics

Mr. McPherson was appointed postmaster in April, 1919. He is also stockholder in the Farmers Elevator at Rapelje, is secretary of the Rapleje Commercial Club and a member of the Methodist Church.

He married at Battle Creek, Michigan, in 1907, Miss Ethel Durkee, daughter of Frank and Mary (Wakeman) Durkee. Her parents are residents of Alexandria, South Dakota, her father being a retired real estate dealer. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson have five children: Glenneda, born in 1911; Donald, born in 1912; Robert, born in 1915; Ethel Mary, born in 1916; and Wilma, born in 1918.

Franklin Leonard Stone, cashier of the Salesville State Bank, is one of the younger men in the financial affairs of his native state and has devoted his time and talents steadily to banking since he left college five years ago.

He bears the name of his grandfather, who was a prominent pioneer in the Gallatin Valley of Montana. The grandfather of Franklin Leonard Stone was born in New England in 1812, lived for many years in Illinois, and in 1865 came to the Gallatin Valley of Montana, where he was a farmer and cattleman. He died near Old Gallatin in 1884. His wife was Sarah Barber, a native of Illinois.

D. P. Stone, father of the Salesville banker, was born at Onarga, Illinois, in 1862, and was three years old when the family made the journey up the Missouri River to Fort Benton in 1865. He grew up in Gallatin County and for many years has lived on his ranch at Central Park. He owns 480 acres of fine land in that community. He is a democrat, and is a very active member and has served as elder in the Presbyterian Church. He married Susie Smith, who was born in Tyrone County, Pennsylvania, in 1873. Franklin Leonard is the oldest of their children and was born at Central Park in Gallatin County, March 20, 1894. Parker, the second in age, is living on the ranch with his father, attended the Montana State College and in April, 1918, enlisted in the United States navy, was a bugler and was mustered out in January, 1919. Louise is a student in the Montana State College at Bozeman, Lillian is in the Gallatin County High School, and Lula, the youngest, is in grammar school at Bozeman.

Franklin Leonard Stone received his early education at Central Park and completed his junior year in the Montana State College. On leaving college in 1914 he accepted the post of collection clerk in the First National Bank at Bozeman. He looked upon this as an opportunity to learn banking rather than merely as a means of earning money, and was from time to time promoted to larger responsibilities. He was made bookkeeper, later receiving teller, and in December, 1918, he came to Salesville as cashier of the state bank of that town. The Salesville State Bank was established in October, 1911, under a state charter. Charles L. Anceney is president, C. W. Overstreet is vice president, and Mr. Jones, cashier. The bank is capitalized at $25,000, and has surplus and profits of $75,000.

Mr. Stone is an independent voter and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is affiliated with Salesville Lodge No. 69 of the Odd Fellows and with Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks.

Bert S. Hind. One of the largest hydro-electric plants developed in Montana during the last decade is at Thompson Falls, at the western edge of the state. This plant is operated by the Thompson Falls Power Company, the superintendent of which is a prominent young electrical engineer, Bert S. Hind. He has been in charge as superintendent of the plant since November, 1916. This plant, which utilizes the power resources of Clark's Fork of the Columbia River, developes an enormous amount of horse power, which is distributed to the Coeur d'Alene Mines in Idaho, furnishes the electric current for the operation of the Milwaukee Railway over the Rocky Mountain Division, and also current for domestic purposes in Thompson Falls, Plains and other adjoining towns.

Bert S. Hind was born at Austin, Texas, April 30, 1882, but has lived the greater part of his life in Montana. His parents were T. D. and Maggie (Reed) Hind. His father was born in England in 1853 and his mother in Scotland in 1857. They were married in England, and the first of their three children was born in that country. T. D. Hind brought his family to the United States in 1881, and for a short time was a merchant at Austin, Texas. In 1885 he moved to Kansas, and for several years conducted a store at Larned in that state. In 1889 he came to Butte, Montana, and was manager of the Wilson Brothers store at Centerville, a suburb of Butte. In 1892 he established a business of his own at Whitehall, and on selling this in 1908 moved to Vancouver, British Columbia, where he lived on a ranch until his death in January, 1918. He was a member of the Episcopal Church and affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Maccabees and the Masonic fraternity. His wife died in the same year, 1918, at Chicago. The oldest of their children was Ethel, now living on her ranch near Norris, Montana, widow of Peter Carmichael. Bert was the second in age, and the youngest, Clarence, is a farmer at Constantine, Michigan.

Bert S. Hind received his early education in the public schools of Larned, Kansas. He came to Montana in 1894, and completed the studies of the eighth grade at Whitehall. He worked there at different occupations for a year or so, and gained his first experience in the electrical industry in 1900, when he went to work for the Montana Power Company at Norris. He was with that concern until 1904. In the meantime he took two correspondence courses in electrical engineering, and has diplomas from the International Correspondence School at Scranton and the American School of Correspondence at Chicago. Subsequently he attended the Montana State College at Bozeman, and graduated with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1909. After leaving college Mr. Hind resumed his connection with the Montana Power Company at Norris as foreman until November, 1916, when he came to Thompson Falls. His home is at the plant of that company.

Mr. Hind took an active and patriotic part in all war measures in his community. He assisted in getting all campaigns for subscriptions to Liberty Loans and other objects fulfilled, and for the past three years has been chairman of the local Red Cross Chapter. He is also scout master at Thompson Falls, and is a man of wholesome and sincere interests in the welfare of his community. Politically he votes independent.

In April, 1910, at Norris, Montana, he married Miss Gertrude Mitchell, daughter of Charles and Nora (Robins) Mitchell, the latter still a resident of Norris. Her father, deceased, was one of the first hoisting engineers at Butte. Mrs. Hind attended the Academy of the Sacred Heart at Missoula. They had two children: Bert S., who died at the age of seven days; and Charles Herbert, born January 3, 1916.

ALFRED L. THOMAS. This is a name that signifies to old timers in Montana the sheep industry at its highest and on its most magnificent scale. Mr. Thomas is no longer an active factor in the sheep business, but he made his fortune through the industry, and at one time his flocks grazed over literally "a thousand hills." In any list of men who through their individual and co-operative efforts have done most to develop the natural resources of Montana the name of Alfred L. Thomas would properly appear.

He comes of a sturdy race of farmers and seafaring people and was born at Bear River, Nova Scotia, May 18, 1863. His great-grandfather was an English sea captain and helped colonize Nova Scotia. Joseph Thomas, grandfather of Alfred L., spent all his life in Nova Scotia and was a farmer. He married a Miss Marr, of Scotch descent. They both died at Bloomfield, Nova Scotia. J. V. Thomas, father of Alfred, was born at Bear River, Nova Scotia, in 1835 and died there in 1910. The efforts of his active lifetime were spent partly in farming and partly in the lumber industry. For many years he was president of the Agricultural Society of his county. He was also a great temperance worker and was a liberal in Canadian politics. His wife was a Miss Trevoi, who was born in 1837 and died in 1873, spending her life at Bear River. Their children were: Sarah Emret, who died in 1907, the wife of Rupert Harris, who is a farmer and lumber man at Bear River, Nova Scotia; Anna Delle Maretta, who died at Bear River at the age of twelve years; Welcome Curtiss, who occupies the old homestead in Nova Scotia; Alfred L.; Mrs. Arthur P. Dunn, whose husband is a shoe manufacturer at Boston, Massachusetts; and Aletha Corlina, wife of Fred Hoyt, who is in the automobile business at Seattle, Washington. A. L. Thomas has a brother at Egar, Montana, in the mercantile business.

Alfred L. Thomas spent his boyhood in his native town, and at the age of seventeen left school and began to satisfy his tastes and ambitions for a practical business career. After five years in partnership with Balcom Brothers in Nova Scotia he came out to the western states. He visited in Seattle during the winter of 1886 and in the following spring arrived in Montana. From Big Timber he soon removed to Martinsdale and spent two years on a sheep ranch. That was his introduction to the sheep business, and he then started a sheep ranch of his own, and gradually increasing his operations he had at different times some of the largest flocks and some of the largest holdings devoted to the business in Montana. He owned 73,000 acres of land in one block in the Lake Basin country. Frequently his flocks reached the imposing total of 50,000 head. Altogether Mr. Thomas was a sheep man for thirty years, and in spite of many vicissitudes he shared with other sheep men he made a fortune.

Mr. Thomas removed to Columbus in 1912, improving some property he had previously acquired. In 1917 Mr. Thomas traded some of his Montana lands for an apartment house in Chicago, covering a whole block on Forty-second Street and Grand Boulevard. This is one of the modern high-class apartment houses of that city and the investment represents a fortune in itself. Mr. Thomas, however, still has extensive interests at Columbus, including the State Bank Building, a large garage, the courthouse, a laundry, three dwellings, a modern office building on Pike Avenue, but has disposed of all his ranch lands. He is president of the Old Faithful Oil Company of Wyoming, and for years was president of the Stillwater Irrigation Company and was the man responsible for the maintenance of the large ditch that supplies Columbus and surrounding country with irrigation. He was also president and owner for ten years of the Columbus State Bank and he is now interested in a large sugar plantation of 2,700 acres in Cuba. His interests and his business associations are truly those of a cosmopolitan variety and such as only a man of wealth and great enterprise could handle.

Mr. Thomas is a republican, is identified with the Commercial Club at Columbus, and is a thoroughly loyal and public spirited citizen of his adopted state.

In 1918, at Livingston, Montana, he married Miss Marian Otto, daughter of F. W. and Minerva (Dermont) Otto. Her father is engaged in the real estate business at Columbus. Her mother was accidentally killed in an automobile accident at Billings in 1918. Mrs. Thomas had two years of special training as a nurse. She and Mr. Thomas have one child, Bernard Alfred, born November 1, 1918.

WILLIAM STRYKER, D. O. Doctor Stryker is one of the leading representatives of osteopathy in Montana, has practiced within the borders of the state since 1910, and has a splendid clientage in his present home City of Livingston.

He was born at Washington, Iowa, June 5, 1888. The Stryker family is Scotch-Irish in ancestry and were early settlers in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, W. A. Stryker, was born in Indiana in 1824 and was a physician and surgeon and also a Methodist minister. He settled in Muscatine County, Iowa, in 1855, and died at Victor in that state in 1900. W. R. Stryker, father of Doctor Stryker, was born in Sullivan County, Indiana, in 1851 and was reared in Iowa and for many years preached as a member of the Iowa Conference in the southeastern corner of the state. Since 1904 he has been superannuated and is now living retired at Washington, Iowa. He is a republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. At Pella, Iowa, he married Metta Shaw, who was born at Alleghany, New York, in 1858. Veda, the oldest of their children, is a teacher at Washington, Iowa, Doctor William is second. Charles N., whose home is at Iowa City, is an osteopathic graduate but is not practicing. He is general sales manager for the Freezeout Fire Extinguishing Company of Chicago and travels over the territory between Chicago and Des Moines. Paul J., who is traveling representative for the Freezeout Company, enlisted in November, 1917, at Billings, Montana, with the regular army, was sent overseas in January, 1918, in the Big Gun Corps, and spent seven months with the American artillery forces around Verdun. He was severely gassed in August, 1918, and was mustered out in March, 1919.

William Stryker received his early education in the public schools of Iowa, including the high school at Washington, and until 1905 attended the Washington Academy. In 1907 he entered the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, and was graduated D. O., in 1910. The same year he began practice at Missoula, remained there two years, and then practiced at other points in the state until he removed to Livingston in April, 1917. He has many of the leading families of Livingston among his patients. His offices are in the Veit Building.

Doctor Stryker has also identified himself with community affairs, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, is secretary of the Rotary Club, and a director in the Livingston Club. He has served as city health officer. He is independent in politics. He is a member of the Methodist Church and is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 599, Loyal Order of Moose.

May 20, 1917, at Butte, he married Miss Mabel Garrington, daughter of J. J. and Ellen Garrington. Her mother resides with Doctor and Mrs. Stryker. Her father, deceased, was a railroad contractor, did some early work in that line in Oregon, and settled at Missoula in 1899. Mrs. Stryker is a graduate of the high school at Missoula and of the Montana State University. They have a son, born September 12, 1918, named William G.

L. G. BRADBROOK. Later generations will always have a pardonable interest in the founders and makers and builders of new communities and towns. A town of Montana whose history is comprised within the last two years is Rapelje, and the main actors in its upbuilding are still on the scene. One of them is L. G. Bradbrook, who is a partner in the chief hardware and lumber business there and is connected with other business enterprises.

Mr. Bradbrook is a young man and most of his mature years have been spent in the lumber and hardware business. He was born at Red Cloud, Nebraska, July 28, 1887. His grandfather was an Englishman who immigrated to America and became a farmer near Sandusky, Ohio, where he died. Fred Bradbrook, father of L. G. Bradbrook, was born in Ohio in 1853, and when a young man went out to the western frontier of Nebraska, settling at Red Cloud. He was a photographer and opened the first regular studio to furnish photographs to the people of the Red Cloud community. He afterward lived retired and died at Red Cloud in 1905. He was a republican and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. Fred Bradbrook married Theressa Akhofer, who is still living at Red Cloud. She was born in Germany in 1856, but was reared in Nebraska. L. G. Bradbrook is the older of two sons. His brother, G. L. Bradbrook, is also a partner in the lumber business, being located at the Hysham plant of the Bradbrook-Saunders Lumber and Hardware Company.

L. G. Bradbrook acquired his education at Red Cloud, graduating from the high school in 1905. Soon after leaving school he entered the lumber business at Bruning, Nebraska, where the Bradbrook-Saunders Lumber and Hardware Company first started. The present headquarters of this flourishing business are at Hysham, Montana, and branches are in Rapelje, Wheat Basin and Myers. The largest individual plant is at Rapelje. A fine new brick building was erected in 1918 to house the hardware store, and in the rear is the lumber yard, both departments being equipped with every staple commodity needed for a new and growing town and vicinity. The officers of this business are: D. E. Saunders, of Billings, president; W. B. Saunders, of Billings, vice president; and L. G. Bradbrook, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Bradbrook is president of the Rapelje Commercial Club, a director of the First National Bank, is president of the Rapelje Telephone Company, and owns some extensive ranch lands at Hysham. Mr. Bradbrook is unmarried, is independent in politics and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

J. A. SHADOAN. Deeds are thoughts crystallized, and according to their brilliancy do we judge the worth of a man to the country which produced him, and in his works we expect to find the true index to his character. The study of the life of the representative American never fails to offer much of pleasing interest and valuable instruction, developing a mastering of expedients which has brought about most wonderful results. The subject of this review is a worthy representative of that type of American character and of that progressive spirit which promotes public good in advancing individual prosperity and conserving popular interests.

J. A. Shadoan, president and general manager of the Salesville Mercantile Company, one of the most important enterprises in the Gallatin Valley, was born in Somerset, Pulaski County, Kentucky, on November 25, 1881. He is the son of J. T. and Bethada (Bales) Shadoan, who are still living in their old Kentucky home. J. T. Shadoan was born in Somerset, Kentucky, in 1859, and his entire life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits. He is a republican in politics, and his religious affiliation is with the Christian Church. His wife, Bethada, was also born in Pulaski County, Kentucky, in 1859, and she bore her husband the following children: John, who is a railroad conductor, residing at Mart, Texas; Joseph, who died in Pulaski County, Kentucky, at the age of twenty-five years; the subject of this sketch is the next in order of birth; Stella, who is the wife of William Gover, a ranchman at Manhattan, Montana; Clarence lives in Manhattan, Montana, where he is employed in a garage; L. D., who also lives in Manhattan, operates a ranch near there; Frank is his father's assistant on the home farm in Kentucky; Hobart is a rancher at Manhattan; May is the wife of a Mr. Burns, an electrician by trade and foreman in the railroad shops at Somerset, Kentucky.

J. A. Shadoan received his educational training in the rural schools of his native community, where he lived until seventeen years of age. In 1898, ambitions for a larger field of labor and opportunities for advancement, Mr. Shadoan came to Manhattan, Montana, and entered the employ of Thomas Gibson as a farm hand, with whom he remained for two years. He then rented a ranch, which he operated on his own account for three years. In 1909 he bought 240 acres of fine irrigated land situated two miles west of Salesville, and to the improvement and cultivation of that place he devoted himself for a year. He still owns this place, though now residing in Salesville. In 1910 Mr. Shadoan bought the controlling interest in the Salesville Mercantile Company, of Salesville, which he incorporated and to which he has since indefatigably devoted himself. The company has been incorporated and the present official personnel of the corporation is as follows: President and general manager, J. A. Shadoan; secretary, F. C. Roberts; treasurer, W. H. Bradley. The company operates a fully organized department store, the departments including farm implements, hardware, groceries, dry goods and other lines demanded by the local trade. The policy of the company has always been to so select their stock as to meet the needs of their patrons, and this fact, coupled with courteous treatment and prompt service, has gained for them a well deserved popularity throughout the Gallatin Valley. Mr. Shadoan devotes himself unremittingly to the management of the business, and to his good business judgment is due the splendid success which the company enjoys.

Politically Mr. Shadoan is a stanch republican, though not an aspirant for public office. He is a member of the Christian Church and also belongs to Salesville Lodge No. 69, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1904, at Bozeman, Montana, Mr. Shadoan was married to Alma Wright, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wright. Her father, who is deceased, was county judge of Wayne County, Kentucky; his widow now resides in Los Angeles, California. To Mr. and Mrs. Shadoan have been born two children, namely: Raymond, born August 12, 1905, and Lawrence, born April 18, 1908. In every phase of life's activities Mr. Shadoan has been true to his duties and his opportunities and has so ordered his actions as to merit the high regard in which he is today held by those who know him.

Edwin Leonard Johnson came to Plains, Montana, in 1906, and has been continuously associated with the First National Bank of Plains, and as its cashier has helped promote its prosperity and its strength as one of the leading banking institutions of Sanders County.

Mr. Johnson was born at Center City, Minnesota, January 24, 1885. His people were pioneers in Minnesota, where his grandfather, Jonas Johnson, homesteaded a farm more than half a century ago. Jonas Johnson was born at Smoland, Sweden, in 1827, and after his marriage brought his family to this country and settled in Center City, Minnesota. He was an industrious and successful farmer in that locality until his death in 1917. C. J. Johnson, father of the Plains banker, was born at Center City, Minnesota, in 1862, and is still living there. He has spent his active career as a dairy farmer. He is a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. C. J. Johnson married Mary Moline, who was also born at Center City, in 1863. They have a large family of children, and several of the sons were soldiers and officers in the World War. Henry A., the oldest, is cashier of the Scandia State Bank at Scandia, Minnesota. Edwin L. is the second in age. William, the third, died at the age of four years. J. Arthur, at home with his parents, entered the first officers' training camp, was commissioned second lieutenant at Fort Snelling, and afterward promoted to first lieutenant, and was in service at Houston, Texas, and in New Mexico until mustered out in the spring of 1919. Oscar R., an electrician living at Minneapolis, also enlisted at the outbreak of the war, was in an officers' training camp and commissioned a second lieutenant, and served until discharged in May, 1919. Theodore, at home, attended a training school at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and was mustered out in January, 1919. Paul, the seventh child, helps on his father's farm. Esther T. is the wife of a farmer at Marine on the St. Croix River in Minnesota. The two younger children are Oliver and Elmer, twins, both at home.

Edwin Leonard Johnson was educated in the public schools of Center City, including the high school, and for two years was a student in the famous Gustavus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minnesota. Leaving college in 1905, he spent the following year before coming to Montana in the employ of Wyman, Partridge & Company, wholesale dry goods of Minneapolis. He entered the First National Bank of Plains in 1906 as bookkeeper and stenographer, was promoted to assistant cashier in 1908, and since 1910 has been cashier.

The First National Bank of Plains was established in 1904 under a national charter. It operates on a capital of $25,000, surplus and profits of $12,000, and enjoys aggregate deposits of $300,000. J. M. Keith, of Missoula, is president of the bank, C. H. Rittenour, of Plains, is vice president, with Mr. Johnson, cashier.

Mr. Johnson has identified himself with Plains as a citizen and home owner and has a modern residence here. He has served as mayor, is a republican voter, a member of the Community Church and is a past master of Ponemah Lodge No. 63, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is also a member of the Montana and the American Bankers Association.

In 1910, at Plains, he married Miss Louise Jackson, a daughter of P. B. and Mamie (Glenn) Jackson, residents of Gate, Washington. Her father is now a retired minister of the Congregational Church. He first came to Montana in 1892, and for five years was pastor of the Congregational Church at Billings, later had pastorates at Sprague, Washington, Little Rock, Arkansas, North Yakima, Washington, and from 1901 to 1909 was pastor at Plains. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have two children: Charles Glenn, born November 17, 1911; and Robert Brooks, born March 8, 1913.

John Rowley. A number of Montana and western pioneers have their home at Lewistown, including John Rowley, whose experiences in the West cover more than forty years, though practically all his life has been spent in a western environment.

He was born at Salt Lake City, February 18, 1858. His parents, John and Isabel (Slater) Rowley, were only temporarily residents at Salt Lake. They were natives of England, and came to this country with six of their children in 1849. They were eight weeks in crossing the ocean on a sailing vessel and from New York City went out to the then extreme frontier, Nebraska City, Nebraska. From that point John Rowley, Sr., engaged in freighting over the plains with ox teams. His family made several trips with him, and for one winter, 1858, the family home was at Salt Lake City. John Rowley, Sr., continued in the freighting business until his death. He was the father of nine children, five sons and four daughters, and four are still living, including John Rowley, the youngest child.

The latter spent most of his boyhood at Nebraska City and attended the public schools. At the age of thirteen he became a cowboy with Crawford, Thompson & Company, and not long afterward reached Deer Lodge, Montana, where he was connected with a prominent cattle outfit. Later he was with the Horse Shoe ——— Outfit, and for about twenty-five years was associated with N. J. Dovenspeck. He then engaged in the sheep and cattle business for himself, and at the present time owns a fine ranch fifty miles east of Lewiston. He is a republican, but has never had any aspirations to hold office.

His life has been one long and eventful experience in the western country. He made seven successful trips between Montana and Cheyenne, Wyoming, the latter being the shipping point for many years. The first trip was made with a bunch of cattle in 1876. In crossing Green River one of the young men of the party was drowned. His companions recovered the body, rolled it in a blanket and gave him as decent a burial as possible. At another time Mr. Rowley and his companions were crossing Wind River where Lander, Wyoming, now stands. Indians appeared, stole their horses, but the cowboys gave chase and overhauled the Indians about seventy miles distant. There ensued a skirmish in which the stolen stock was recovered. One man was left to guard the stock while the others, bent upon vengeance, followed the Indians. Going about fifteen miles they came up and had a skirmish. One of the men, named John McCullum, was wounded in the fight, and the white men decided they had sufficient Indian encounter for the time. They started back, but on reaching the spot where the horses had been left discovered they had again been driven away by the Indians, and they then made their way back as best they could, carrying the wounded man to Lander.

Mr. Rowley recalls an amusing incident in 1879 that happened at Pine Bluff, Wyoming, showing how the West was looked upon by a certain class of eastern people. There were seventeen different herds waiting shipment at the point with the full complement of cowboy attendants. About 100 yards from the station was a saloon crowded with cowboys when the westbound train pulled in for a stop of about ten minutes. It was a cold winter day and blowing hard; and a passenger dressed in eastern style and holding on to a derby hat jumped off the train and ran over to the saloon. He pushed his head in the door and said, "I don't want to buy anything but just want to see the interior of a Western saloon." One of the cowboys for a joke pulled out his gun and shouted "Kill the son of a gun." Immediately they all pulled their guns and began shooting through the roof. The passenger yelled with terror and made a wild break for the train, breaking all speed limits and records in getting there, and no doubt since has told the tale many times of how he escaped death from a crowd of bloodthirsty ruffians chasing him over the country. Such incidents were common in the old days, and the old timers have had many hearty laughs since that time about them.

At Lewistown October 6, 1889, Mr. Rowley married Miss Martha Josephine Skaggs. She is a daughter of Cyrus and Anna Caroline (Moser) Skaggs. Her father was born in Missouri and died at the age of seventy-eight and her mother was a native of North Carolina and died at the age of fifty-eight. Mrs. Rowley was the oldest of seven children, four sons and three daughters, six of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Rowley have three children: John Harvey, the oldest, enlisted December 7, 1917, in the Aviation Corps and was in service at Kelley Field, later at Camp McArthur, Texas, subsequently at Newport News, and received a commission. Lancelot Charles, the second son, is a civil engineer with home at Philadelphia. Hyacinth, the only daughter, is completing her education in the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Frank Bender came to Montana more than thirty-eight years ago, has had a varied experience as a rancher, printer, merchant and public official, and is now at the head of one of the leading real estate businesses in Southern Montana, at Livingston.

Mr. Bender was born in New York City March 9, 1860. His father, John Adam Bender, was born in 1824 and died in 1869, spending all his life in New York City, a shoe merchant, manufacturer and leather dealer. After the formation of that party he became an ardent republican. He was a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife, Rosie Bender, was born in 1826 and died in 1866. Of their children the oldest, Charles, enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-Ninth New York Infantry, was wounded in battle and died from the effects of the wounds after the close of the war. Philip, the second son, was a farmer and died at Sparta, Wisconsin. Emil E., died in Dakota Territory. Frank is the fourth in age, while John A., the youngest, is a miner now at Anchorage, Alaska.

Frank Bender graduated from high school in New York City in 1876. For two years he worked with the Hatch Lithograph Company in his native city and spent one year in the Jones Foundry Company at Brooklyn. On leaving the East he went to a farm near Sparta, Wisconsin, and afterward spent two and a half years with the job printing firm of Johnson, Smith & Harrison at Minneapolis.

Mr. Bender came to Montana in 1881, first locating at Glendive, soon afterward going to Miles City, and for about six months was employed as purchasing agent for the contractors who were working down the Cheyenne Bluffs along the river between Miles City and Rosebud. Mr. Bender then had some business relations speculating in ranch properties around Bozeman and in March, 1883, came to Livingston and was associated with his brother John A., as a farmer and stockman. In 1884, leaving their stock on the range, they moved to Cook City and during the winter of 1885-86 Mr. Bender was at Fridley, now known as Emigrant. March 1, 1886, he started on a visit to California, but returned in May and resumed his activities as a stock raiser. In 1898 he sold out his ranching interests and returning to Livingston spent two years as a merchant. Then followed a long period of official service, including four years as constable of Livingston Township, and since then continuously as a justice of the peace. He also served a term as alderman, and twelve years as police judge. Since 1909 Mr. Bender has been in the real estate business, and has developed a complete organization with a service covering city and ranch properties all over Southern Montana. His offices are in the Thompson Block.

Mr. Bender is one of the prominent Odd Fellows of Montana. He is affiliated with all branches of Odd Fellowship, being a past grand of Park Lodge No. 17, past chief patriarch of Columbian Encampment 204, past captain of Garfield Canton, and was major of the Second Battalion of the Patriarchs Militant for a number of years and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge, representing all the branches on a number of occasions. He is also past venerable consul of Silver Tip Camp No. 5675, Modern Woodmen of America and past exalted ruler of Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks and was a representative to the Grand Lodge in 1906 at Denver Colorado. For a number of years Mr. Bender has served as secretary of the Livingston Fire Department which was organized in 1886 and of which he is one of the oldest living members. He is also secretary of the Park County Pioneers, an association which was organized in 1918. He is a democrat in politics.

His home is at 320 South Third Street. He married at Livingston in 1892 Miss Ollie V. Cole, daughter of Alfred and Mary Ann (Freeman) Cole. Her parents are deceased, her father having been a pioneer Montana farmer at Glendive.

Will J. Soderlind, who was prominently identified with the establishment of the pioneer banking institution of Rapelje, is a banker by profession, since he has been connected with banks during the greater part of his active lifetime and all his experience has been in commercial lines. Mr. Soderlind has a wide acquaintance with the northwestern country, not only Montana but several adjoining states and in Canada.

He was born at Ludington, Michigan, May 23, 1885. His father, Alfred Soderlind, was born in Sweden in 1857, was reared in that country to the age of eighteen, and on coming to the United States located at Ludington, Michigan. In 1886 he moved to Lake Benton, Minnesota, where he bought a farm. From farming he formed connections with the financial community and established the Farmers State Bank of Lake Benton and since 1906 has been its cashier. He is still living at Lake Benton. He also served as register of deeds of Lincoln County, Minnesota. He is an independent democrat and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Alfred Soderlind married Emily Johnson. She was born in Sweden in 1861 and was reared from childhood in Michigan; Will J. is the oldest of their children. Charles is assistant cashier in the Farmers State Bank at Lake Benton, Minnesota; Alma is the wife of Hans Lyngaard, a farmer in Lincoln County, Minnesota; Alice is still at home; Grace is the wife of Roy Martie, who has a lieutenant's commission in the National army; and Walter, the youngest, is with the home circle.

Will J. Soderlind acquired his early education in the public schools of Lake Benton, to which community he was taken when about a year old. He finished his sophomore year in the high school, and in 1903 attended the Minneapolis School of Business. His banking experience began as bookkeeper with the National Citizens Bank of Lake Benton. He was 1½ years in that work, then spent two years as assistant cashier, and two years as cashier, of the Securities State Bank of Seaforth, Minnesota. On leaving that position he acquired a somewhat different experience in banking. As an employe of the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company he was in their Minneapolis office for 1½ years and then for one year represented the company at Winnipeg, Canada, and in 1911 the same company sent him to their Billings headquarters, where he remained as bookkeeper and cashier for two years, and then for two years was assistant collector and another two years were spent as general collector covering Montana and Wyoming.

Mr. Soderlind left the Case Company in 1917 to identify himself with the new Town of Rapelje at the time the First National Bank was established. This bank has a capital of $25,000, and its surplus is $2,500. The officers are: Roy J. Covert, of Billings, president; Albert E. Platz, of Billings, vice president; Will J. Soderlind, cashier; and J. Herbert Jones, assistant cashier.

Mr. Soderlind is also secretary and treasurer of the Rapelje Telephone Company and is agent for the Rapelje Townsite Company. He owns his home in the town and a farm north of Rapelje. Mr. Soderlind is an independent in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church, belongs to the Commercial Club of Rapelje and is affiliated with Rapelje Lodge No. 122, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In 1910, at Seaforth, Minnesota, he married Miss Florence Longbottom, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Johnston) Longbottom, resident of Seaforth, her father being a retired merchant, farmer and banker. Mr. and Mrs. Soderlind have two children: Jay, born August 24, 1912, and Shirley, born July 7, 1916.

Prof. J. H. Holst since 1913 has been principal of secondary education and director of the summer season of the Montana State College at Bozeman. A notable achievement as a teacher and school leader preceded his coming to Bozeman, where during the past half dozen years he has been able to influence for the better the large number of young men and women preparing for work in the educational profession.

Professor Holst was born at Gravois Mills, Missouri, March 2, 1873. His father was N. J. Holst and his grandfather was Nicholas Holst, and both were natives of the Province of Schleswig Holstein, when that province was part of the Kingdom of Denmark. The family are of Danish ancestry. Nicholas Holst was born in 1815, had served his time in the Danish army and in 1859 brought his family to America and settled in Morgan County, Missouri. He was one of the early farmers in that section and lived there the rest of his life. He died at Gravois Mills in 1898, at the advanced age of eighty-three. N. J. Holst, his son, is still living at Eldon, Missouri. He was born in Schleswig Holstein in 1849, and was ten years of age when brought to the United States. He grew up in Morgan County, Missouri, and has spent his active life as a farmer. Since 1911 he has lived retired at Eldon, but still owns a small farm, his original place being owned by his sons. He is a democrat, an active worker in the Christian Church and is affiliated with the Masonic Order. His wife, Rachel Jane James, was born at Gravois Mills, Missouri, in 1850. Professor Holst is the oldest of their six children. Letreciam, the second in age, is the wife of C. F. Rastorfer, a farmer at Barnetts, Missouri; Thomas R. lives on a farm at Marvin, Missouri; J. D. is a farmer at Eldon; Hiram operates a grain elevator in Colorado; and Ola, the youngest, is unmarried and living with her parents.

Receiving his first advantages in the rural schools of Morgan County, J. H. Holst afterwards attended an academy at Versailles in his native state, and in 1898 graduated from the Hooper Institute at Clarksburg, Missouri. In the meantime for two years he had practical experience as a newspaper man, one year of which was with the St. Louis Chronicle. For two years he was associate president, but as a matter of fact was the actual head of the Hooper Institute. Professor Holst began his career as a Montana educator in 1900, when he located at Dillon and worked a year with the Dillon Tribune. He then became principal of schools at Gibbonsville, Idaho, held that post three years and for three years was also interested in mining operations in Idaho.

In 1908 Professor Holst returned to Montana and organized at Victor the first consolidated school in the state. He was its superintendent six years. What he did there is best reviewed in the words of the leading editorial contained in the Journal of Education of Boston in the issue of October 25, 1917. "Professor J. H. Holst," says the editorial, "now of the State College of Agriculture at Bozeman, Montana, is one of the best demonstrations we know of a man's giving himself more than state-wide recognition by intensified service in a small community. Victor is a little place in the Bitter Root Valley of Montana. It has never had more than a hundred fifty population. Mr. Holst went there nine years ago this September. The school enrollment was one hundred thirty-seven, or nearly equal to the entire population of the village. Of course the district lines were much larger than the village boundaries." The editorial then enumerates a long list of progressive achievements undertaken through and as a result of Mr. Holst, including the increase in number of teachers, better salary schedule for their services, the teaching of agriculture on scientific principles, the organization of a Parents-Teachers Association and a District Teachers Association, the establishment of a school savings bank, the first in the state, the organization of the first County Interscholastic League, and the making of the periodic events of debating and literary contests, athletic meets, the principal gala occasions for the entire community. In 1912 Mr. Holst, after having added a high school course and greatly increased the facilities of the Victor school and the building of a splendid schoolhouse for the district, secured the consolidation of five school districts, thus bringing about the first consolidated school in Montana.

The editorial in the Journal of Education closes with the following sentences: "When the Agricultural College elected him to a position in the faculty in 1913 the school district voted to make his salary equal to any that the state would pay. The banquet to Mr. and Mrs. Holst with the gifts of a gold watch for him and of a silver service for Mrs. Holst was an event never to be forgotten in the Bitter Root country. More than four hundred were seated at the tables. Professor J. H. Holst not only made Victor famous for Victor, but famous for more first things in progressive education than any other city in the state."

While Professor Holst has been able to broaden the effectiveness of his influence and educational ideals through his present work at Montana State College, he doubtless regards his experience at Victor as one of the most stimulating and happy of his entire career. In 1918 the degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him by Montana University. Professor Holst owns a farm in the Bitter Root country in Ravalli County, and therefore has a direct personal interest in Montana agriculture. He and his family reside at the Barracks. He is independent in politics, is a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, served two years as master of his Masonic lodge at Victor and is a member of Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is affiliated with the Lily of the Valley Chapter No. 6 of the Eastern Star. He is a member of the National Education Association.

In 1910, at Polson, Montana, he married Miss Laura C. Maynard. Her father, Judge A. D. Maynard, is a large property owner at Polson, where he resides, and is also engaged in the lumber business at Pablo in Flathead County. Mrs. Holst is a graduate of Montana State Normal College at Dillon and before her marriage was a teacher in the schools at Victor for three years. Mr. and Mrs. Holst have two children, Rachel Edith, born January 31, 1912; and Jane Maynard, born February 11, 1914.

C. C. Mills is a lawyer by profession, but since coming to Montana has given his chief time and abilities to newspaper work. He is now manager and editor of the Sanders County Ledger at Thompson Falls.

Mr. Mills was born at Redfield, Iowa, September 28, 1872. His paternal ancestors came from England, and the family lived for many years in the southern states. Grandfather Milton Mills was born in Tennessee in 1816. He became one of the pioneer farmers in the vicinity of Redfield, Iowa. Later he took up merchandising, and he died at Redfield in 1890. His wife was Matilda Locke, also a native of Tennessee. She died at Redfield, Iowa. John H. Mills, father of the Montana editor, was born in Indiana in 1846, and was a small child when his parents moved to the State of Iowa. He was reared and married near Redfield, and for many years was a farmer and later engaged in the newspaper business. He is still living at Redfield and is now connected with the oil inspection department of the state government. He is a veteran Union soldier, having enlisted in 1863, when only seventeen years of age. He was a private in Company H of the Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry, and served until the close of the war. He participated in the march to the sea under Sherman. He has long been an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic and in 1918 was department commander of the Iowa State Grand Army of the Republic. He is a republican and is affiliated with the Masons and Knights of Pythias. John H. Mills married Sarah A. Duck, who was born in Indiana in 1846. They had four children: R. R., a farmer at Redfield, Iowa; C. C. Mills; Milton L., of Lowerville, Iowa; and R. C., a veterinarian at Redfield.

C. C. Mills secured his early advantages in the rural schools of Dallas County, Iowa, graduated from the high school at Redfield in 1893, and in 1896 received his Bachelor of Science degree from Iowa State College at Ames. He taught a number of terms to defray the expenses of his college education. Mr. Mills prepared for the legal profession in the law school of the University of Wisconsin, where he graduated LL. B. in 1904. For one year he practiced at Westfield, Wisconsin, and for eight or nine years had a law office and published a newspaper at Scranton, North Dakota. From 1913 to the spring of 1919 Mr. Mills published the Montana Idea at Dodson. After some weeks of travel he located at Thompson Falls, where he is editor and manager of the Sanders County Ledger. The Ledger is one of the oldest papers in western Montana, having been established in 1884. It enjoys a substantial circulation and influence throughout Sanders and surrounding counties, and is republican in politics.

Mr. Mills is himself a republican voter. He is affiliated with Liberty Lodge No. 99, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Dodson, being past senior warden. He is also a member of Helena Consistory of the Scottish Rite. In 1896, at Redfield, Iowa, he married Miss Sabra Welker, daughter of A. J. and Anna B. (Park) Welker, now residents of Great Falls, Montana, where her father is a retired farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Mills have three children: Clarence L., born October 20, 1897; Donovan, born December 7, 1901; and Sabra Helen, born June 27, 1910. The son Clarence enlisted December 7, 1917, and was sent overseas March 27, 1918. Eleven months of overseas service is credited to the young soldier. He participated in several of the chief offensives in which the American forces had a part, including the St. Mihiel, Argonne and Verdun. He was mustered out in March, 1919.

Frederick F. Attix, M. D., who is one of the two Fellows of the American College of Surgeons represented in Lewistown, came to this state as surgeon for a mining company, and for the past eighteen years has been busily engaged in the work of his profession at Lewistown, where he founded and has developed one of the finest private hospitals in the Northwest.

Doctor Attix was born at Buffalo Prairie, near Detroit, Minnesota, August 8, 1878, a son of Henry S. and Mary H. (Knowles) Attix. His father was born in Illinois in 1854 and his mother in Michigan in 1858. Doctor Attix is the oldest of six children, four sons and two daughters, all still living. His father was a farmer until 1890, when he removed to Colorado and engaged in gold and silver mining. He was appointed postmaster at Mentor, Minnesota, in 1886, and in politics has been a sturdy democrat for many years. Both the father and mother are now residents of Oakland, California.

Doctor Attix acquired his early high school education at Glenwood Springs, Colorado, attended St. John's College at Denver in 1891 and 1892, and took his medical work in the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia. He finished his four years' course in 1900. Returning to Denver, he was employed for eight months as company surgeon for the Colorado Southern Railway. In January, 1901, he came by stage coach into the Judith Basin of Montana, and for about eight months served the Gilt Edge Mining Company as its surgeon. In August, 1901, he opened his offices at Lewistown, and has kept his work pretty exclusively confined to general surgery. During 1916-17 he built what is known as the Attix Clinic Building, which is in every way representative of the most advanced ideas in hospital construction. He has fitted it with every appliance for diagnostic clinical work. There is a large operating room, X-Ray apparatus, electric sterilizing outfit of his own design, and every other facility that can be found in modern hospitals. Doctor Attix is a member of the Fergus County Medical Society, the Silver Bow County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He was elected a member of the American College of Surgeons in 1914, and has since been chosen to a Fellowship in that body. Politically he is a republican.

Doctor Attix married, March 24, 1903, Ruth Cresap. She was born near Kansas City, Missouri. Mrs. Attix is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. They have two daughters, Zelda and Julia.

Clark W. Allen. With no important interruptions Clark W. Allen has been engaged in the lumber or grain business ever since he arrived at years of discretion and manhood. His interests and home have been at Big Timber for a number of years, where he is manager of the Thompson Yards, Incorporated.

He was born at Aylmer in the Province of Ontario, Canada, June 21, 1882. His paternal ancestors originally came from Holland and were colonial settlers in New York. Mr. Allen's great-great-grandfather was probably what is described as a United Empire Loyalist, since he removed his family to Canada at the time of the Revolutionary war. The grandfather of Mr. Allen was Clark Allen, a native of New York State, but spent most of his life on a farm at Aylmer, Ontario, where he died in 1888. Robert Allen, father of Clark W., was born at Aylmer in 1850, was reared and married and followed farming there for several years, and in 1883 went as a pioneer to Watertown, South Dakota, where he homesteaded a 160 acres and also took a timber claim. He proved and operated his farm until 1903, at which date he retired to Minneapolis, where he died in 1917. He was a republican after coming to the United States, was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His wife was Sarah E. Warnock, who was born at Aylmer, Canada, in 1854, and died at Minneapolis, in 1917. Clark W., is the third of their four children. Ethel L., the oldest, is a teacher in the public schools of Minneapolis. Jessie I., is the wife of George E. Davis, secretary of a grain company at Warren, Minnesota, while Jennie is the wife of John A. Shaw, engineer for a construction company at Fargo, North Dakota.

Clark W. Allen was graduated from the high school at Watertown, South Dakota, in 1900. He has no memories of his birthplace in Ontario, since the family left there when he was about a year old. All his life has been spent in the northwestern country. He had his first experience in the lumber business at Watertown as bookkeeper with the S. H. Bowman Lumber Company, later in 1903, was promoted to manager of the yard of the same company at Revillo, South Dakota, and was there two years. The following year he interrupted his business career to improve his educational advantages, attending the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis. When he resumed his business it was in the general office of the Imperial Elevator Company at Minneapolis for about a year. He then supervised the establishment of a lumber yard at Plaza, North Dakota, for the Bovey Shute Lumber Company and remained as its manager until 1910.

Mr. Allen on coming to Big Timber in 1910 became the manager for the H. M. Allen & Company. Eight years later the local business and other yards were purchased by the Thompson Yards, Inc., and Mr. Allen has continued as manager at the old stand.

He regards himself as a fixture in the citizenship of Big Timber and owns a modern home on Seventh Avenue. He served as city councilman four years and was president of the council throughout that term. He is a republican, a trustee of the Congregational Church, and is affiliated with Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, Big Timber Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and Livingston Camp, Woodmen of the World.

On October 25, 1910, at Plaza, North Dakota, he married Miss Stella Hagen. Her mother is deceased. Her father, S. H. Hagen, is a merchant at Plaza. Mrs. Allen is a graduate of the Northwood

High School in North Dakota, and for two years was a student in the University of North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have three children: Ethelynn, born December 31, 1911; Clark Warnock, born December 30, 1912; and Jerome, born June 5, 1914.

AXEL M. PETERSON, the manager of the Farmers Co-operative Elevator Company at Joliet, is a citizen and business man whose career deserves special consideration. He had many handicaps to overcome, acquired a thorough education though a poor boy, and has realized every successive advancement through the medium of hard work and sound ability.

He was born in Southern Sweden, November 2, 1873. His father was Peter Nelson, who spent all his life in Sweden, served in the Swedish army several years and was a shoemaker by trade. The mother was Ingred Johanson, who was born in Southern Sweden in 1842. About 1890, after the death of her husband, she came to the United States and located at Osage, Iowa, where she lived until her death in 1907. Her two children were Ingred and Axel. Ingred lives at Osage, Iowa, widow of Alfred Swanson, who was a blacksmith in that town.

Axel M. Peterson attended the Lutheran parochial schools in Sweden until he was confirmed at the age of thirteen. Then, in 1887, he accompanied his sister to the United States and for several winters attended school at Osage, Iowa. Every summer he worked in the fields for neighboring farmers, and his ambition to secure a good education led him to deny himself many normal pleasures and he worked to the limit of his strength. He attended the Cedar Valley Seminary and finished his junior year, and his subsequent education has been well rounded out by reading and observation. As a young man he worked in a nursery at Osage, also clerked in a clothing store, and in 1902 came out to Montana and took up a homestead of 160 acres at Absarokee in Stillwater County. He commuted his homestead rights by the payment of a $1.25 an acre and lived there two years. He was then back in Iowa for two years working in a clothing store, and then resumed his place on his homestead in Absarokee for two years. Having sold his farm he rented a ranch on Red Lodge Creek in Carbon County for two years, and in the spring of 1913 moved to the Joilet community and bought a 160-acre ranch. To that property he gave five years of close and uninterrupted management, selling out in 1918, and in that year moving into the town of Joilet, where he became the well qualified manager of the Farmers' Cooperative Elevator Company. He is also secretary and treasurer and a director of this corporation.

Mr. Peterson is a republican, member and deacon of the Christian Church, is affiliated with Carbon Lodge No. 65, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, being worshipful master of the lodge, and has taken the degrees in the Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite.

He married at Carpenter, Iowa, in 1901, Miss Ella Eddy, daughter of Thomas and Louise (Allanson) Eddy. Her father was a farmer in Iowa and in 1900 came to Carbon County, Montana. Both her parents are deceased. Mrs. Peterson is president of the Board of Education at Joliet. They have two young sons, Arnold K., born August 10, 1902, and Stanley H., born July 25, 1904.

EDWARD O'BRIEN. The life of a successful man is always an interesting study, and all the more so when results have been won by personal effort in the face of difficulties. Attention may thus be called to Edward O'Brien, who is superintendent of the smelter department at Anaconda for the great A. C. M. Company, a position of vast responsibility only properly comprehended by those who understand the potent forces in constant operation in the mighty furnaces connected with this modern industry.

Edward O'Brien was born in County Limerick, Ireland, May 7, 1867, and is a son of Daniel and Ellen (Redfern) O'Brien, both of whom were born in County Limerick, the father in 1824 and the mother in 1839. Daniel O'Brien came with his family to the United States in 1865 and was one of the pioneer settlers in Walworth County, Wisconsin. He acquired and improved a farm there, and lived usefully and peacefully until his death, which occured at Geneva Lake, in Walworth County, in 1884. He was married to Ellen Redfern in Ireland, and their three children were born there, namely: William, who died in the City of Chicago in 1917, was a foreman in railroad shops at Cleveland, Ohio, for many years; Thomas, who is a cement contractor at Anaconda, Montana; and Edward, who is one of Anaconda's prominent and substantial citizens aside from his connection with the A. C. M. Company. Both parents were faithful members of the Roman Catholic Church.

Edward O'Brien attended the country schools near his father's farm in Walworth County as opportunity offered, but in early youth found farm tasks somewhat distasteful and determined to eventually seek employment for his energies in a direction that was more congenial. Starting out for himself practically without capital, he went to Chicago, Illinois, easily made friends there and secured employment that occupied him for two years. In 1884, on his way westward, he reached Pueblo, Colorado, and spent one year working there. In 1885 he came to Anaconda, and was immediately given employment as furnaceman's helper with the A. C. M. Company, and has been identified with this great business enterprise ever since. It has been a characteristic of Mr. O'Brien that he has never stood still, and the humble helper soon became shift boss, then was promoted to be foreman, and subsequently was made superintendent of the entire smelter department. The offices where he transacts business are in the Smelter Building, at the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda.

Not only in business life has Mr. O'Brien been successful because of fidelity and dependability, but his sterling character has been so universally recognized at Anaconda that his fellow citizens have twice elected him mayor of the city and have profited under his firm, judicious administration.

At Helena, Montana, in 1904, Mr. O'Brien was united in marriage to Miss Mary O'Neil, whose parents, John and Mary O'Neil, are deceased. John O'Neil came to Butte, Montana, in 1881 and worked in a smelter there, but later moved to Anaconda and operated a boarding house. Mrs. O'Brien was educated in a college in Canada. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien are members of the Roman Catholic Church. He belongs to Anaconda Council No. 882, and is a third degree Knight of Columbus, is a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters, and belongs also to the Anaconda Club. Like his father before him, Mr. O'Brien has always been a strong supporter of the principles of the democratic party. He owns a valuable piece of real estate here, his handsome, modern residence that stands on Maple Street, Anaconda.

GRIFFITH ALEXANDER WILLIAMS was busily engaged as a teacher and school superintendent for several years before coming to Montana, but left the teaching profession to engage in journalism. He is now publisher of two newspapers in Sanders County, and is one of the most widely known residents of Plains.

Mr. Williams was born at Kirkland in Cumberland County, England, May 22, 1882. His branch of the Williams family has lived in Wales for many generations, and through his mother is of old English stock. Grandfather Griffith Williams was born in 1817 and died in 1910, having spent all his life as a farmer in Carnarvonshire, Wales. Hugh Williams, father of the Montana newspaper man, was born in Carnarvonshire, Wales, May 28, 1849, and is still living at the age of seventy-one, a resident of Cleator Moor in Cumberland County, England. At the age of twenty-one he left his native district in Wales and moved to Kirkland, England, where he was married and where he worked in the iron ore mines. In 1891 he transferred his residence to Cleator Moor, where he was engaged in the insurance business and mining until he retired. For many years he was a lay preacher of the Methodist Church. He is a Liberal in politics. His wife was Sarah Twiname, who was born in Cumberland County, England, in 1862. Griffith A. is the oldest of their children. Margaret Jane is the wife of Arthur Hunt, who for four years was a British soldier in the World war, and is now a warden in the Wormwood Scrubbs Prison at London, England. Gaunor is the wife of Richard Hughes, also a warden in the Wormwood Scrubbs Prison. Agnes Mary is the wife of H. S. Armitage, a rancher at Briston, Montana. Sarah Elizabeth, unmarried, lives at Lancashire, England, and took an active part in war work. Elsie May is married and lives at Lancashire, while the youngest children, still at home, are Winifred, Arthur, Arnold and Robert.

Griffith Alexander Williams was educated in the public schools of Cleator Moor, graduating from high school in 1900. He then served as an apprentice school teacher in Cumberland County and later as assistant principal in Derbyshire until 1905. Mr. Williams came to Butte, Montana, in October, 1905, and for a short time was a teacher in the high school department of the Butte Business College, for one year was principal of schools at Ennis and one year superintendent of schools at Wisdom, Montana. He first entered the newspaper business associated with John N. Armstrong, proprietor of the Big Hole Breezes. He bought out the paper after Mr. Armstrong's death and continued to edit it until 1915. He next became publisher and editor of the Dixon Herald in Sanders County, and still directs the policy and management of the Herald, which was established in 1911. It is independent in politics. In February, 1918, Mr. Williams bought the Plainsman at Plains from Guy Stratton. This is one of the older newspapers in what is now Sanders County, having been established in 1899. The Plainsman is also conducted independently as to political affiliation, and is the official paper of Sanders County at the time this is written. The plant and offices are opposite the Northern Pacific Depot, and there is a modern equipment operated by electric power for handling all the work of a standard newspaper. Mr. Williams' papers circulate and have a large influence over Sanders and surrounding counties.

Personally Mr. Williams is a republican and was chairman of the Republican County Central Committee of Sanders County in 1916. He served as a member of the school board at Dixon and is affiliated with Wisdom Lodge No. 61, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is a past grand of Golden Link Lodge No. 27, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, also at Wisdom.

In 1913, at Wisdom, he married Charlotte A. Wold, daughter of P. M. and Marion Wold, residents of Minneapolis. Her father is a retired merchant tailor. Mrs. Williams is a graduate of the Minneapolis High School and is a thoroughly well qualified musician, especially instrumental. She was a teacher of music at both Wisdom and Dixon, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have three children: Marion Elizabeth, born October 19, 1914; Agnes Adelma, born June 20, 1916; and Griffith Hugh, born December 1, 1918.

HARRY L. WILSON, who came to Billings in 1901, is a prominent lawyer, member of the firm Nichols & Wilson, and is also widely known all over the State of Montana, having been the republican candidate for governor in 1912.

His father, Frank J. Wilson, was a resident of Miles City, Montana, for a number of years. He was born in Scranton, Pennsylvania, in 1853, son of E. C. Wilson, also a native of Pennsylvania. E. C. Wilson spent his life in Pennsylvania but died in Nebraska in 1909. Frank J. Wilson when a young man moved to Lanark, Illinois, and married there Miss Cordelia Miller. She was born in Illinois in 1857 and died at Covina, California, January 18, 1917. Frank J. Wilson for a time was in the paint and oil business at Lanark, Illinois, was also a teacher, spent five years as a farmer in Tama County, Iowa, another five years as a farmer in Jewell County, Kansas, and in 1893 moved to Miles City, Montana, where he was a painting contractor. From 1901 he was engaged in the ice business. His death, which occurred October 27, 1903, was the result of an accident when his team ran away. He was a democrat, a member of the City Council, and for many years was affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He was favorably regarded at Miles City, and among other tributes the Yellowstone Journal published an article, one paragraph of which deserves repetition: "Miles City has lost from its citizenship in its brief existence men who have, from one cause or another, been better or more widely known, but never one of greater intrinsic worth as a citizen and a man. He came to us years ago quietly and unostentatiously, and thus he grew into our life until something over three years ago the people of his ward chose him unanimously as their representative in the City Council, and after two years' service he was again unanimously chosen to succeed himself, and had he lived his term of service would only have been ended by his peremptory refusal to accept re-election. In his private business his affairs steadily grew better from the start of some ten years ago, and the full measure of his prosperity was enjoyed by his family, whose sustaining prop is now so rudely plucked away."

The children of Frank J. Wilson and wife were: Harry L.; Guy, who died in infancy; Rena May, wife of Randolph Deivel, a wealthy stockman and formerly a member of the Legislature in Custer County, living at Miles City; Lula, wife of J. E. Campbell, who succeeded her father in the ice business at Miles City; Floyd B., a merchant tailor at Covina, California; and Richard W., who graduated in June, 1918, from the law department of the University of California, and is now practicing law at Covina.

Harry L. Wilson was born at Lanark, Carroll County, Illinois, June 19, 1879, and acquired his education in the public schools of Iowa and Kansas. He graduated from the Miles City High School

June 4, 1897, and on June 1, 1899, received his law degree from the Northern Indiana Normal School and University at Valparaiso. For eighteen months he was stenographer and law student with Hon. C. R. Middleton of Leavenworth, Kansas. Mr. Middleton formerly was prominent as a lawyer in Montana. On account of ill health Mr. Wilson returned to Montana, was employed in several law offices as a stenographer, an art he had learned in college, and on January 15, 1901, he came to Billings, where he went to work for Col. O. F. Goddard and later for Fred H. Hathhorn, attorneys, spending three years with those lawyers. He began private practice in 1904 and in the fall of the same year was elected county attorney of Yellowstone County, an office he filled with exceptional ability for three terms, being reelected in 1906 and 1908. In June, 1910, he formed his partnership with Judge Edmund Nichols, under the name Nichols & Wilson. This firm, with offices in the Electric Building, handles a large general practice, and is regarded as one of the best law firms in Eastern Montana.

Mr. Wilson was temporary chairman of the State Republican Convention in 1912, and without solicitation on his part or any expectation of the honor he was placed on the state ticket as candidate for governor, being brought in as the "dark horse" by his party. Mr. Wilson is a stockholder and director of the Rowe Furniture Company and the Highland Homes Company of Billings. He is prominent fraternally, being affiliated with Ashlar Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is past exalted ruler of Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, has represented the lodge in seven national conventions, and is past district deputy for the State Lodge of Elks.

September 30, 1903, at Dexter, Illinois, Mr. Wilson married Miss Virginia Baker, daughter of A. W. and Olive M. (Rippeteau) Baker, who are still living at Dexter, her father being a retired merchant and the former postmaster. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have two daughters: Winnifred W., born October 31, 1904, and Gladys, born July 26, 1907.

Edmund Nichols, senior member of the law firm of Nichols and Wilson at Billings, was born in St. Lawrence County, New York, June 4, 1860, son of Orson K. and Amanda L. (Jones) Nichols. His first American ancestor, John Nichols, came to America from England and settled in Massachusetts in the seventeenth century. Orson K. Nichols was a member of an artillery regiment during the Civil war and died while a prisoner of war in 1864.

Edmund Nichols, only child of his parents, attended school in New York and graduated from the law department of the University of Iowa in 1883. He practiced at Adel, Iowa, until 1888, then at Perry, Iowa, until 1902, and served a term as prosecuting attorney. He was elected judge of the Fifth Judicial District of Iowa in 1902, and filled that office with distinguished ability for two terms.

Judge Nichols came to Billings in January, 1911, and has since been associated in practice with Harry L. Wilson. He is prominent in Masonic orders, is a republican, and is First Reader in the Christian Science Church of Billings.

June 17, 1885, Judge Nichols married Miss Dorothy I. Stephens, a native of Illinois. They have five children: Lillian, a graduate of St. Mary's Hall at Faribault, Minnesota; Dorothy, connected with the Christian Science Publishing House at Boston and a graduate of the Billings High School; Josephine, wife of Robert Perkins, a farmer; Edmund, a student at the Montclair Academy, Montclair, New Jersey; and Elizabeth, attending the public schools.

William Churchill, though now one of the recognized leading business men and merchants of Big Timber, had a hard struggle to acquire a foothold on the ladder of success, but has always been a willing and cheerful worker and a man ready to accept opportunity and recognize it when he saw it.

He is a native son of Big Timber, born in that pioneer town as it was thirty-five years ago, January 31, 1884. His paternal ancestors came originally from England. His father, O. F. Churchill, was born in Oregon in 1858, was married in Oregon and settled on a homestead of a 160 acres near Big Timber in 1882. He was a republican and a Methodist. William Churchill's mother was Alma Sherrill, who was born in Iowa in 1863, and is now living with her son William at Big Timber. William Churchill has one sister, Reno, and she also lives with her mother. Her mother married for her second husband Dana W. Cross in 1889. He was born in Vermont in 1855, came to Montana about 1883, was a homesteader on Sweetgrass Creek near Melville, later proved up a farm and homestead on Otto Creek, and lived there until 1895. He died at Lewistown in 1917. To that union were born four children. Harry, the oldest, is a tailor at Big Timber. Sarah died at Big Timber in 1912, the wife of John Watt, a merchant at Columbus, Montana, and her only child, Alice Watt, is now being cared for by her grandmother. Carl F. Cross enlisted from Butte, Montana, in September, 1917, and went overseas in 1918, with the Three Hundred and Sixty-Second Ambulance Company, and was a participant in the St. Mihiel drive and in the battle of the Argonne Forest from September 26th to October 4th, and from October 30th to November 11th was in the Lys-Scheldt offensive. He was mustered out May 8, 1919, and has since returned to Big Timber. Fred Cross was accidentally shot and killed at the age of eleven years.

William Churchill acquired his education in the public schols of Big Timber. At the age of fourteen he began working in a printing office, and for two and a half years he also helped his mother run a rooming house. He then resumed work as a printer with the Big Timber Express for three years, worked on the Yellowstone Leader for W. J. Hannah two years, and until the fall of 1906 was with the Big Timber Pioneer. In 1906, as a member of the National Guard, he went to the coast and later attended the State Rifle Tournament of New Jersey. In the fall of 1906 he was back in Montana at Moore in Fergus County, where he was with the Inland Empire for two and a half years. In the meantime he had homesteaded a 160 acres and proved up his claim, which he sold in 1917. He also bought another place of 160 acres near Stamford, and sold this property in 1918. In 1909, after leaving the Inland Empire, Mr. Churchill became a journeyman printer at Miles City on the Yellowstone Journal, a daily paper. In 1910 he returned to Big Timber to look after his cattle, and after rounding them up he sold out and from 1912 to the spring of 1915 he was a printer with the Pioneer at Big Timber. He then abandoned the printing trade and in association with William K. Amery bought a stock of general merchandise, and their partnership has successfully prosecuted the enterprise until it is one of the leading stores in the vicinity. They have discontinued all other lines of merchandise but groceries. Mr. Churchill is the senior partner.

He owns a home in Big Timber. He is unmarried. he is an alderman of Big Timber, elected in April, 1919. He is a past chancellor commander of Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, a member of Sweetgrass Camp No. 10610, Modern Woodmen of America, is a republican, belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, the Sweetgrass County Good Roads Association, the Big Timber Building and Loan Association, and as a matter of fact is identified with every progressive and public spirited movement in his community.

ERNEST L. MARVIN is cashier of the Joliet State Bank, and since identifying himself with that town has been a leader in its community activities and has always shown a willingness to do his part as a public spirited citizen.

Mr. Marvin was born at Bradford, Illinois, September 12, 1888, and apparently has the years of his greatest usefulness and service still ahead of him. His father, E. L. Marvin, was of English ancestry originally settled in Connecticut and was born in 1851, near Ogdensburg, New York, on the Canadian side of the river. He grew up in New York State, and then removed to Illinois and spent his active career at Bradford, where he died in 1904. He was railroad station agent at Bradford for a number of years, and the last two years of his life were spent as a real estate and insurance broker. He is a republican, was closely identified with the Methodist Church of his home town, and was a prominent Odd Fellow. He married in Illinois Cora A. Thomson, who was born in that state in 1860 and is still living at Lafayette, Illinois. She was the mother of four children: Guy E., who is court reporter at Bozeman, Montana; Ernest L., Pauline, wife of G. E. Snyder, a farmer at Lafayette, Illinois, and R. W., cashier of the Nichols Shepard Company at Billings, Montana.

Ernest L. Marvin attended public school at Bradford and Lafayette in his native state graduating from high school in the latter town in 1906. Then after employment in a local store for a few months he came to Montana in 1906, and the next seven years was an employe of W. R. Westbrook, a banker at Laurel. He came to Joliet in 1913, and for the past six years has been cashier of the Joliet State Bank.

Mr. Marvin is active both in politics and fraternal affairs. He is town clerk of Joliet, clerk of the school board and republican precinct committeeman. He is secretary of Carbon Lodge No. 65, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; is past grand and present secretary of Joliet Lodge No. 77 of the Odd Fellows, and for two years was patron of Aloha Chapter No. 41 of the Eastern Star. He is a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Marvin owns his own home in Joliet and some real estate at Laurel, Montana, his former town.

He married at Belfry, Montana, June 19, 1912, Miss Janet McLauchlin, a daughter of Donald and Emma (Harris) McLauchlin. Her parents are farmers at Belfry. They have two children: Alice May, born April 28, 1913, and Janet, born April 20, 1915.

FRANK F. TUCKER. There is a real message of economy in every show window of Tucker Brothers' clothing establishment, and the brand of service rendered by this reliable firm is one which is universally appreciated. Frank F. Tucker, the senior member of the firm, is one of the big factors in the business life of the city and he is a man who knows how to get for his customers what they want, and how to meet their requirements in every particular. He was born at Napanee, Ontario, Canada, June 19, 1879, a son of John R. Tucker. The father was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died at Anaconda, Montana, in 1917. He was reared at Napanee, Ontario, Canada, and there learned the brickmaking trade. In 1883 he came to Anaconda and was for some years engaged in building operations, being one of the pioneer contractors and builders of the city. Politically he was a republican. He married Miss Emma Conger, born in Ontario, Canada, who died at Anaconda. Their children were as follows: Annie, who died at Anaconda, was married; Frank F., who was the second in order of birth; Earl, who is a member of the firm of Tucker Brothers, lives at Anaconda; Elmo, who lives at Anaconda, enlisted for service during the great war in 1917, was sent overseas and was mustered out of the service in May, 1919.

Frank F. Tucker attended the public schools of Anaconda until he was twelve years of age, and then became a clerk in a clothing store of Anaconda and continued to learn this line of business as a member of the selling force of several establishments until he founded one of his own in 1918. Although as yet a new undertaking, this clothing store of Tucker Brothers is one of the leading ones of its kind in this section of Montana, and is conveniently located at No. 207 Main Street. The members of the firm are Frank F. and his brother Earl J. Tucker. They handle a high class of clothing of the latest design and of infinite variety, and careful dressers have learned that not only can they secure fashionable and good-fitting garments of excellent quality here, but also that the prices are extremely reasonable considering the value of the goods.

Frank F. Tucker is a republican, but has not sought to come before the public for office. He belongs to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and to the Anaconda Club and the Anaconda Country Club. His residence is in the Alpine Apartments. In 1911 Frank F. Tucker was united in marriage with Miss Gladys Martin, a daughter of Martin Martin, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have no children.

Earl J. Tucker, junior member of the firm of Tucker Brothers, was born at Napanee, Ontario, Canada, November 14, 1889. The Tucker family migrated from England to America during the colonial epoch. The maternal grandfather of the Tucker Brothers was Belayat Conger, and he was born in Ontario, Canada, and there died in 1888, having spent his entire life in that province. By trade he was a plasterer and stone mason, and later became a contractor. Earl J. Tucker was reared at Anaconda, and was graduated from its high school in 1907, following which he went to Butte, Montana, as timekeeper for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, remaining in the employ of this company for three years. Upon leaving it he was engaged in an insurance business for seven years, being state agent for the Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Company, and retained his office at Butte until September, 1919, when he closed it. In 1918 he assisted his brother to establish the clothing house of Tucker Brothers, which has turned out to be such a successful enterprise. Like his brother he is a republican, and he also belongs to the Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and to the Anaconda Club. He lives at 1002 West Fourth Street.

In 1908 Earl J. Tucker was united in marriage with Miss Florence Jennings, a daughter of W. H. and Minnie (Coddington) Jennings, residents of Anaconda. Mr. Jennings is superintendent of the iron warehouse of the foundry department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Mr. and Mrs. Earl J. Tucker have two children, namely: Jack, who was born January 1, 1909; and Earl J., Jr., who was born June 13, 1913.

ARTHUR J. DAVENPORT. While for a number of years he has enjoyed a national reputation as a musician, a leader of bands and orchestra, Mr. Davenport is a stanch lover of the advantages of Montana and spent several years on a homestead in this state. He has developed a widely known conservatory and school of music at Hamilton, where he resides. This conservatory is attended as a musical finishing school by pupils from all over the western part of the state.

Mr. Davenport was born in Pawnee City, Nebraska, January 4, 1874. His Davenport ancestor came from England, his grandfather being the first of the name in this country. His father, J. S. Davenport, was born in New York State in 1834, was reared there, and was married in Nebraska. He lived for a number of years at Pawnee City, where he conducted an apiary, being in the bee and honey business on a commercial scale. In 1878 he moved to Red Bluff, California, where he engaged in merchandising and where he died in 1910. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served all through the struggle. He was taken prisoner and spent nine months in Andersonville prison. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Masonic fraternity and a republican in politics. J. S. Davenport married Minnie Taylor, who was born in 1843 and is still living at Spokane, Washington. Her children were three in number: Louis M., manager of the Davenport Hotel at Spokane; Arthur J.; and Jessie, wife of Doctor Robbins, a physician and surgeon at Los Angeles, California.

Arthur J. Davenport received his early education in the public schools of Red Bluff, California, where he lived from the age of four years. He graduated in 1893 from the Gans Crofford College at Red Bluff, and spent two years in the further study of music at San Francisco. He enlisted as a musician in the regular army, and served five years. After that for several years, with headquarters at Chicago, he traveled all over the country as a band and orchestra leader, covering all the larger cities in the United States and Canada. For two years he also taught brass instruments in the Illinois School of Music and in the Chicago Seminary, alternating between those institutions. He spent one year in Chautauqua Lyceum work.

Coming to Montana, Mr. Davenport farmed on the Flathead reservation five years. He then removed to the Bitter Root Valley and has since been teaching, with scholars from Darby, Hamilton and Corvallis, and has made his home at Hamilton since 1917. The Davenport Conservatory of Music is a well appointed and equipped institution, furnishing the best of instruction in all branches of music. Mr. Davenport personally has charge of the instruction in brass and string instruments, while his wife, who is a graduate of the Columbia School at Chicago, is teacher of piano and vocal. Their periodical pupil recitals are great events in local musical circles. The Conservatory is at 214 Main Street.

Mr. Davenport is a republican, is affiliated with Ravalli Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias; Ionia Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Hamilton Chaper No. 18, Royal Arch Masons; and Corvallis Lodge of Odd Fellows. He married at Chicago in 1910 Miss Lula Runkel, a native of Oconto, Wisconsin.

W. B. NUTTING, who came to Montana in 1881, is an old time cowboy and rancher, has been a resident of Red Lodge since 1895, and was a charter member of the Red Lodge State Bank, one of the most flourishing and prosperous financial institutions in the state.

This bank was organized in 1902, opening for business on April 2d. Mr. Nutting was its first president, and held that position until 1910. Mr. D. G. O'Shea was president of the bank from 1910 to 1917, when Mr. Nutting resumed the executive direction. E. M. Clark is vice president and A. E. Logan is cashier. The Red Lodge State Bank has a capital of $85,000 and surplus of $21,000, and its deposits in 1919 aggregated more than $1,000,000. During the past fifteen years the bank has been managed by the same board of directors, and none of its stock has changed hands except a small amount distributed to the employes.

Mr. Nutting was born at Highland in Northeastern Kansas September 3, 1861, son of Lucius Nutting and descended from John Nutting, whose name appears as a member of the Massachusetts colony under date of August 28, 1650, when he married Sarah, a daughter of Stephen Eggleson (Eggleston). John Nutting and wife lived at Woburn, Chelmsford, now Westford, Massachusetts, and in 1661 removed to Groton, where two years later he was chosen selectman, and in 1668 constable. He owned a large amount of land and was prominent in civic and religious affairs and was killed during an Indian attack in 1676.

Lucius Nutting, father of W. B. Nutting, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1820, a son of Bryant Nutting. As a young man he went west to Illinois, and became a physician and surgeon. He was attracted to California and went over the plains in 1849, but soon returned to Illinois and resumed practice. Later he built and conducted a saw mill at Crescent City, Iowa, and in 1857 located in Doniphan County, Kansas, where he pursued farming and saw milling until 1878. The following year he removed to Arizona, but afterward returned to Doniphan County and in 1880 came to Montana and in the following year homesteaded at Laurel. He removed to Bozeman in 1895, and lived there until his death in 1903. He was active as a republican and served as a commissioner of Yellowstone County six years, and held all the lay offices in the Presbyterian Church. He married Elizabeth Allison, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1819 and died at Bozeman in 1901. Their children were: Julia, wife of Bryant Cowan, one of the leading authorities in the Shorthorn cattle industry in America; Wilder, a Methodist minister at Three Forks, Montana; Lucius A., a Shorthorn breeder at Laurel, Montana; William B.; Lillie E., unmarried; and Roy H., of Eureka, California.

William B. Nutting attended the public schools of Kansas until he was sixteen years of age and since then has depended upon his own exertions for his advancement and success. For a number of years he was a cowboy both in the Middle West and in Montana, and he also worked in the mines of Colorado for a time. He went out to Colorado in 1877. The first of his cowboy experiences was acquired on the Arkansas River near Fort Las Animas. That was when the Santa Fe Railroad was building its through line to the coast. From there he removed to Georgetown, Colorado, and subsequently was among the first to join in the rush to the Leadville mining district.

On coming to Montana in 1881 he engaged in ranching at Laurel. He rode the ranger over the greater part of Southern Montana and made his home near Laurel until 1890, when he moved across the line into Fremont County, Wyoming, and continued business there as a rancher and stockman. In 1895 he transferred his home to Red Lodge. He owns one of the best homes in that city.

Mr. Nutting served as chairman of the County Commissioners of Carbon County as a republican, and is affiliated with Red Lodge Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Also Mr. and Mrs. Nutting are pioneers of Eastern Montana.

April 18, 1887, near Park City, Montana, he married Miss Eva Cellers, daughter of Samuel Cellers. Her father was a pioneer Montanan, coming in 1881, and was a farmer and stockman until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Nutting have one son, Roy A., who is assistant cashier of the Red Lodge State Bank. He married Miss May B. Grills, of Flint, Michigan, and they have a daughter, Elizabeth G., only grandchild of Mr. and Mrs. Nutting.

CHARLES THOMAS BUSHA has rounded out his full forty years of residence in Montana, and most of those years have been spent at Big Timber, where he was a pioneer business man and still maintains a vigorous hold of business as a commission merchant, rancher and dairyman. Three of Mr. Busha's sons were with the colors in the World war.

He was born at Detroit, Michigan, December 3, 1858, and is of French and English ancestry. His father, Charles Thomas Busha, Sr., was born in France in 1836, left that country when a young man and went to Canada, was married at Detroit, Michigan, and spent all his life as a trader. During the '60s he returned to Canada and died in the Province of Ontario in 1879. He was a Catholic. Before he left France he served the regular time in the army. He married Helen Clark, who was born at Detroit in 1839. They had two children, Hattie and Charles Thomas. The former died in Detroit as the wife of Lewis Barrett. The mother married for her second husband Joseph Lemere, a native of Canada, who died at Westboro, Wisconsin. Mrs. Lemere died at Detroit, Michigan, in 1912. By her second marriage she had four children. The two sons are Alexander, a county official at Detroit, Michigan, and George, in the garage business at Chicago.

Charles Thomas Busha acquired his education in the public schools of Detroit, including high school, but left his books and studies at the age of sixteen and began doing for himself. For several years he was a hotel clerk, and was on duty at hotels in Stevens Point, Milwaukee and Arcadia, Wisconsin, and at Winona, Minnesota.

On coming to Montana in 1879 Mr. Busha spent a brief time at Martinsdale on the Musselshell, from there went to Helena and was employed in the lumber yard of Sanford & Evans for one year, after which he went back to the Musselshell River and engaged in the stock business until 1885. That was the year of his location at Big Timber, where he became one of the early merchants, and continued active in mercantile circles until 1913. Since then he has specialized in the commission business, buying wool and other farm products. His irrigated ranch of 500 acres half a mile east of Big Timber on the Boulder River is widely known for its dairy cattle, and Mr. Busha has his home there, a modern residence, surrounded with a complete equipment of high class barns and other buildings. His business offices are on McLeod Street in Big Timber. Mr. Busha is a republican in politics and is affiliated with Big Timber Lodge of Masons and Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Busha has good reason to be proud of his family, and besides the three sons who were soldiers all his children have fitted themselves for positions of usefulness and honor. He married at Little Elk in Meagher County, Montana, in 1885 Miss Ida L. Pound. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pound, pioneers in Western Wisconsin in 1854, are now deceased, the father having been a pioneer business man of Missoula, a real estate broker. Mrs. Busha taught in the school at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, and was the first teacher in the school at Martinsdale on the Musselshell River. The oldest of their family of ten children is Beulah, who finished her education in a girls' seminary at Petersburg, Virginia, and is the wife of Ernest R. Paterson, a prominent merchant at Big Timber. Thad C. Busha, second of the family, was a student of the Big Timber High School and is receiving teller in the First National Bank at Mason City, Iowa. Lenore, a graduate of the Sweetgrass County High School and a student of the State University at Missoula, lives at home with her parents. Charles Thomas, Jr., is the oldest of the three sons who were in the army. He had completed his junior year in the law department of the State University at Missoula when in 1917 he entered the Officers' Training Camp at the Presidio, California, was commissioned a first lieutenant, and went overseas with Company C of the Three Hundred and Sixty-Fourth Infantry. Later he was promoted to captain of Company D of the same regiment and was with the Expeditionary Forces until he returned to this country on April 6, 1919. Mabel Busha is a graduate of the College of Montana at Deer Lodge, and is the wife of Alfred Johnson, a stock raiser at Hall, Montana. Helen is a graduate of the County High School and is stenographer for the Master Mechanic of the Northern Pacific Railway at Livingston. Beatrice, a graduate of the County High School, is assistant cashier in the Commercial Bank and Trust Company at Big Timber. Willard M., also a high school graduate, is clerking in a store at Big Timber. Homer saw his first military service on the Mexican border, re-enlisted at the beginning of the war with Germany, and went overseas where he won his commission as second lieutenant. He was with the Three Hundred and Fourth Heavy Tank Service and was a machine gun instructor. He returned to the United States March 17, 1919. Theodore C., the youngest of this interesting family, is a graduate of the County High School. He enlisted in February, 1918, was in training for the aerial service at Waco, Texas, and was mustered out in April, 1919, and is now on his father's ranch.

HARRY J. WATERS was on the ground soon after the founding of the now thriving town of Rapelje, entered the general merchandise business, and out of a wealth of long experience in that line has promoted and built up one of the most thriving concerns of its kind in that part of the state.

Mr. Waters was born at Oskaloosa, Iowa, July 20, 1868. His remote ancestors came from Germany, but for several generations lived in Pennsylvania. His father, Matthew Waters, was born in Pennsylvania in 1833, and as a young man went back to Oskaloosa, Iowa, from Ohio, where he was reared. He was one of the early operators in the lumber business at Oskaloosa and continued a resident of that city until his death in 1886. During the Civil war he was a member of an Iowa home guard and was called out for service in Northern Missouri during Price's raid. He was a republican and an Odd Fellow. Matthew Waters married Lucy Shelton, who was born in Kentucky in 1831 and died at Oskaloosa in 1879. A brief record of their family of children is as follows: Henry B., a harness maker who died at Hastings, Nebraska, in 1910; Medly A., a rancher and traveling salesman of Billings, Montana; William Irving, a harness maker by trade, who came to Montana in 1883, followed his business at Miles City, Helena, Great Falls and Missoula, became the pioneer in his line at Great Falls and Missoula, and subsequently moved to Florida, where he owns and occupies a ranch; Charles, the fourth in the family, died in infancy; Cora, who died at Grand Forks, North Dakota, in 1897, was the wife of W. P. Welch, now a real estate and insurance broker at Miles City, Montana, and also a justice of the peace there; Harry J.; and Fred, who died in infancy.

Harry J. Waters acquired his early education in the public schools of Oskaloosa, but his school days were ended at the age of fourteen, and at that period of his youth he entered a printing office. Mr. Waters might qualify as an old time printer. He worked two years at Oskaloosa, spent three years in a printing office at Washington, Kansas, and for another three years was assistant postmaster in that town. In 1892 he went to Belleville, Kansas, and clerked in a general store there four years. That was his initial experience in merchandising. The five following years he spent in a general store at Washington and for four years he traveled over Northwest Kansas selling groceries. For three years he was connected with the dry goods business at Lexington, Missouri, and in these places he acquired a thorough knowledge of general merchandising.

Mr. Waters came to Montana in 1908, first locating in Billings, where he spent four years with the Kelley Mercantile Company, then for two years managed the store of the McDaniel Sheep Company, was for seven months with Hart-Albin Company, next clerked in Carl Friedman's store and with its successor, the Cole-Williams Company, for two years. He came to Rapelje on August 1, 1917, and established and built one of its two leading general stores which marked the pioneer business section of the new town. He was first associated with W. C. Spalding, but Mr. W. C. Cole, of Edgar, Montana, bought out Mr. Spalding's interest on March 1, 1919, and the firm is now the Waters-Cole Company. They have a fine store on Main Street.

Mr. Waters also quickly identified himself with the public affairs of his town, and is chairman of the school board. He is a republican, a member of Billings Council of the United Commercial Travelers, and was first president of the Commercial Club of Rapelje, serving in 1917-18.

He married Miss Grace Cropper, of Washington, Kansas, in 1893. Her parents, W. H. and Helen Cropper, reside at Nora, Illinois, her father being a retired miller and stockman. Mr. and Mrs. Waters have two children: Lucy E. a graduate of the Billings High School and now a teacher in Stillwater County, Montana; and Robert M., who is connected with the Lake Basin State Bank at Rapelje.

HARRY M. JOHNSON, manager of the Public Utilities and Townsite departments of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is a man well qualified for his position and capable of handling the various and important problems which are constantly being presented to him. He was born at Oswego, New York, June 25, 1883, a son of John J. Johnson, also born at Oswego, who lived there all his life and died there in 1884. He married Catherine Brady, who was born and died at Oswego, passing away in 1890. Harry M. Johnson was the only child of his parents. At his mother's death the lad was taken by his aunt, Mrs. Anna J. Hartnett, and reared in her home.

After attending the public schools of Oswego, Harry M. Johnson, at the age of sixteen years, left high school and obtained a position as messenger boy with the New York Central Railroad. From the first he exhibited such ability and willingness to work and learn that he was promoted through the various positions to be chief clerk in the accountant department, with headquarters at Oswego, New York, remaining there until 1906, when, in September of that year, he came to Anaconda, Montana, to engage with the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, holding a clerical position for two years. Mr. Johnson then went with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and until 1911 handled traffic matters in the Washoe Reduction Works, but in that year was transferred to Salt Lake City, where he was associated with the ore purchasing interests of the International Refining & Smelting Company for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, but in June, 1913, was brought back to Anaconda to take charge of his present departments, which cover the electric lighting of Anaconda, the conduct of the waterworks and the street railway. Mr. Johnson has seventy-five men under his supervision, and has offices at No. 101 Main Street. He is a Roman Catholic, and belongs to Oswego Council No. 227, Knights of Columbus, being a Third Degree Knight. Mr. Johnson also belongs to the Rotary Club, Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Anaconda Club and the Anaconda Country Club. He resides at the Alpine Apartments.

During the great war Mr. Johnson enlisted for service, and was commissioned captain in the ordnance department, being mustered into the service on October 22, 1917, and was sent overseas on February 7, 1918, where he was detailed to assist in the orgainzation of ammunition depots and the transportation of ammunition on the lines of communication, with his headquarters at Tours, France. In the discharge of his duties Mr. Johnson traveled all over France, and was on the firing line in March, 1918. For thirty days he was with the British command on observation work, rendering during the period he was in the army a very efficient service. He was returned to the United States on December 29, 1918, and was mustered out of the service on January 4, 1919. Mr. Johnson was cited by General Pershing for exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service while a member of the American Expeditionary Forces.

In 1912 Mr. Johnson was married at Butte, Montana, to Miss Kathryn Evans, a daughter of Owen C. and Emily (Church) Evans, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Evans was one of the pioneer merchants of Helena, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have no children. During his period of activity Mr. Johnson has risen steadily, and entirely through his own efforts, and his present standing with his company and community is all the more creditable on this account.

E. M. Farr, M.D.

Francis McHenry Grafton began his career in Montana in 1896 in the office of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Anaconda. For a number of years he was in the service of that great corporation, with increasing responsibilities and at different posts. He is now manager of the Interstate Lumber Company at Hamilton.

Mr. Grafton was born at Cambridge, Iowa, March 5, 1877. He is of an old English family early settled in Virginia. His great-great-grandfather as an English boy was apprenticed to an employer in Virginia. Later he became an extensive land holder, planter and slave owner in Virginia. His slaves were set free by the grandfather of Francis McHenry Grafton. The latter's father was Dr. William Hill Grafton, for many years a prominent physician and a gentleman of cultivated mind and character. Doctor Grafton was born at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1826, was reared and married in that city, and in 1847 was the honor graduate from the medical department of the University of Maryland. After many years of professional labors he retired and in 1904 moved to Los Angeles, where he died in 1908. He was a democrat, held various local offices, and was a particular friend of schools and education. He was a very ardent Methodist and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He served as a surgeon with the Union army during the Civil war. He was on the battlefields of Bull Run, Antietam and Gettysburg, and remained with the medical department of the army after the war, assisting in closing up the last five hospitals maintained by the army, the final work of this nature being done at Washington. Doctor Grafton married Sarah Livingston, who was born in Ohio in 1849, and is still living at Los Angeles. They had the following children: William D., in the fuel and produce business at Anaheim, California; Francis McHenry; Edward L., a publisher of magazines and books and manager of the Grafton Publishing Company at Los Angeles; Albert Kurtz in the real estate and insurance business at Los Angeles; Eugene Hill, a printer at Los Angeles; and Mary, wife of R. B. Newcomb, an orchard owner and orange grower and also a produce dealer at Santa Ana, California.

Four years later he was assigned similar duties with this corporation at Belt, Montana, where he remained a year and a half. For ten years he was general bookkeeper for the Big Blackfoot Milling Company at Bonner, though in the meantime, in 1907, he spent about a year at Los Angeles. In 1911 Mr. Grafton came to Hamilton, and for five years was with the local plant of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. In 1916 he accepted his present interests as manager of the Interstate Lumber Company, one of the leading corporations of the kind in western Montana. He is also a stockholder and director in the Grafton Publishing Corporation of Los Angeles.

Mr. Grafton is a republican, and at Missoula is affiliated with Ionic Lodge, No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, with Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, and is past commander of St. Omar Commandery No. 9, Knight Templars at Missoula. Her father, living with Mr. and Mrs. Grafton, is a former superintendent of the Hamilton plant of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Mrs. Grafton finished her education in a girls' seminary at Spokane, Washington. To their marriage were born two children: Jean Frances, born in 1908, and Carroll B., born in October, 1911.

Eri M. Farr, M. D. One of the skilled and reliable physicians and surgeons of Billings is Dr. Eri M. Farr, whose reputation is not merely a local one, but extends over a wide territory, and he is oftentimes called into consultation by his brother practitioners. He was born at Muncy, Pennsylvania, January 6, 1884, a son of Smith B. Farr. The birth of Smith B. Farr took place at Moreland, Pennsylvania, in 1838, and his death at Muncy, that state, in 1902, he having never left it. He devoted his life to farming. A stanch republican, he always supported the principles of that party. The Baptist Church held his membership. The maiden name of his wife was Anna M. Warn, who was also born at Moreland, Pennsylvania, in 1847, and survives him, making her home at Muncy, Pennsylvania. Their children were as follows: Doctor Farr, who was the eldest; Mary, who married Morris D. Worthington, resides at Curwensville, Pennsylvania, where he is a stenographer; and Roy, who is an attorney of Los Angeles, California. Smith B. Farr was a son of Richard Barcley Farr, and his father, the great-grandfather of Doctor Farr, was a Revolutionary soldier named William Farr, who served in the Colonial army from Pennsylvania. The Farr family of this country is of English origin, but has been in the New World since an early day in the history of the American Colonies. Richard B. Farr was born in Pennsylvania, and died at Moreland, that state, shortly before the birth of Doctor Farr. He was a lumberman, and never left his native state.

Eri M. Farr attended the grammar and high schools of Muncy, Pennsylvania, being graduated from the latter in 1901. For the subsequent three years he was a student of Bucknell University, and then attended the Medico-Chirurgical College at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, from which he was graduated in 1908, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For the following eighteen months he was an interne at the Robert Packer Hospital at Sayre, Pennsylvania, specializing in surgery, and then engaged in a general practice in that city, remaining there until 1913. In that year he came west to Billings, and has remained here, building up connections which are creditable and profitable as a physician and surgeon. His offices are at 205-207 Electric Building. Doctor Farr built a comfortable modern residence at Billings in 1913, and here he makes his home. Professionally he belongs to the Yellowstone County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, the American Medical Association. Well known as a Thirty-second Degree Mason and Shriner, he belongs to Irem Temple of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania. He is a member of Billings Star Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Canton Encampment of the Odd Fellows; to Billings Lodge, Woodmen of the World; and Billings Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He also maintains very pleasant social relations as a member of the Country Club. Doctor Farr is assistant surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railroad, and is examiner for several life insurance companies, having a very large clientele in this line. He was also a member of the Medical Advisory Board during the war for the Fifth District, comprising five counties.

On January 29, 1912, Doctor Farr was married at Sayre, Pennsylvania, to Mrs. Laura (Reed) Fish, a native of Iowa, and they have one son, Malcolm, who was born January 2, 1913. Mrs. Farr was educated in the public schools of Billings, having come to that city from her birthplace, Manino, Iowa. She is an Episcopalian, and a strong supporter of her church. Her father, William W. Reed, died at Manino, Iowa, when she was still a child, where he was engaged in merchandising and was postmaster. His wife bore the maiden name of Sarah Lyons, and she, too, was born in Iowa. The children in the Reed family were three in number, as follows: Lydia, who is married; Mrs. Farr; and William. In 1896 Mrs. Farr was first married to John W. Fish, clerk and treasurer of Yellowstone County, and a prominent man, who died in 1910, leaving her with two children, namely: Dorothy Fish, who was born June 2, 1908; and George Fish, who was born March 27, 1910. Doctor and Mrs. Farr are very prominent socially and are admirable entertainers, enjoying gathering their many friends about them at their hospitable home. In his profession Doctor Farr stands deservedly high, being recognized as one of the able and experienced practitioners of Yellowstone County. Possessing as he does the characteristics which make for good citizenship, he has always been considered as one of the best types of American manhood, and can be relied upon to take a creditable part in all movements inaugurated to improve civic conditions and bring about moral reforms. Still in the very prime of vigorous young manhood, he retains the enthusiasms of youth, while his experience and knowledge give weight to his judgments, and the influence he wields is not inconsiderable.

Christian T. Swenson has been a banker at Scobey since April, 1914, is a man of wide experience in financial affairs, and since the age of seventeen has been an employe or working official in banking institutions.

Mr. Swenson is an American by nearly thirty years of residence, but was born May 19, 1886, at Frederickshald, one of the larger cities of Norway. For a time his parents, Thorer and Carolina (Hanson) Swenson, lived at Christiania, the capital city, but in 1893 the family sailed for America, landing at New York, their destination being Crary, North Dakota. On reaching there the father engaged in his trade as a painter, and has continued to follow that occupation ever since. He also proved up a homestead, has been identified with farming and land holding, and is now a man of financial independence. He early acquired American citizenship and has voted as a republican. He and his wife were reared Lutherans but are now members of the Congregational Church. They reared three sons: Christian T.; Stanley P., a banker at Michigan, North Dakota; and Lawrence, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Crary, North Dakota. Thus all the sons have chosen banking careers.

Christian T. Swenson was reared at Crary from the age of seven, and acquired a public school education, supplemented later by a commercial college course at Fargo. His first important business training was in the capacity of deputy postmaster at Crary. Then, at the age of seventeen, he went to work and became a student of banking in the First National Bank of Crary. He also homesteaded near Stanley, and lost enough time from his position to prove up and secure a title. From the bank at Crary he went to Williston, North Dakota, and for a year had charge of the local business of the well known farm loan corporation of E. J. Lander & Company.

The First National Bank of Scobey was chartered in April, 1916, succeeding the State Bank of Scobey, which opened its doors at old Scobey in October, 1913, being the second banking house in the town. The state institution was capitalized at $25,000, with G. A. Fadness president, and from April, 1914, Mr. Swenson as vice president, while early cashiers were J. C. Jackson and O. J. Helland. When Mr. Swenson became vice president the institution had moved to the new town and the banking house was located in the street, while its permanent home was being erected, this being occupied in the fall of 1914. When the bank took out a national charter the officers remained the same until L. V. Hanson became cashier and N. L. Nelson, of Plentywood, became president. The financial statement at the close of business in 1919 shows capital stock of $30,000, surplus and undivided profits of $17,321.70 and deposits of $462,415.04.

Mr. Swenson gave his effective personal aid to the work of raising funds during the war, though the cashier of the First National Bank was the official spirit of the drive. Mr. Swenson is president of the Sheridan and Roosevelt County Bankers Association. Fraternally he is a Mason.

At Casselton, North Dakota, February 4, 1914, he married Miss Ingleiv Jesten, who was born near Christiansand, Norway, in March, 1886, and was three years of age when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jesten, came to America. The family lived for a time near Moorhead, Minnesota, and finally settled at Casselton, North Dakota, where Mrs. Swenson grew up and was educated. She is a graduate of the State University of North Dakota and was a teacher before her marriage. Mrs. Swenson is the youngest of three children, the others being Mrs. A. S. Needles, of Scobey, and Torfin Jesten, a railroad engineer at Breckenridge, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Swenson have three young children, Lois, born in 1915, Stanley, born in 1916, and Robert, born in 1917. The Swenson home is a modern six-room residence on Main Street, and one of the centers of hospitality of the town.

Charles James Buzzetti. The senior member of the leading mercantile firm of Carbon County, Charles James Buzzetti, is one of the experienced business men of Fromberg, and since its establishment in 1908 the house of Buzzetti & Emmett has grown until it occupies its present prosperous aspect. Mr. Buzzetti is a native of Genoa, Vernon County, Wisconsin, where he was born December 23, 1872, a son of John and Delphine (Jambois) Buzzetti, and grandson of a Mr. Jambois, who was born in France, but came to the United States at an early day, and after stopping for a time in New Orleans, Louisiana, came up north to Genoa, Wisconsin, where he died, having been a farmer all his life.

John Buzzetti was born near Genoa, Italy, in 1837, and he died at Genoa, Wisconsin, in 1882. In young manhood he left Italy, where he had been reared, and upon coming to the United States located at Genoa, Wisconsin. With the outbreak of the Civil war he espoused the cause of the North, and in 1862 gave practical expression to his preference by enlisting in the Seventy-First Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war, when he returned to Genoa, Wisconsin, and spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. His political sentiments made him a republican. From birth he was a Roman Catholic. John Buzzetti was married at Genoa, Wisconsin, his wife having been born at New Orleans, Louisiana, April 21, 1843. She survives him and lives at Fromberg, Montana. Their children were as follows: Peter, who died at the age of forty years in a boat wreck off the coast of Seattle, Washington, was a barber; John, who was drowned on the Mississippi River when three years old; Jennie, who married Ed Shomers, an architect, lives at La Crosse, Wisconsin; Charles James, who is fourth in order of birth; Tony, who is proprietor of a cafe at Fromberg; Mayme, who married Fred Rahrer, a breeder of thoroughbred horses, resides at Fromberg; Frank J., who is a business man of Fromberg, and Emma, who married M. F. Emmett, the junior member of the firm of Buzzetti & Emmett, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

Charles James Buzzetti attended the public schools of Genoa, Wisconsin, until he was fifteen years old, and then left school and for the succeeding three years was engaged in farming. At the age of eighteen years he began railroading on the Minnesota & International Railroad, holding the position of division operator in Minnesota for eight years, when, in 1897, he came to Montana and was operator at Townsend, this state, for the Northern Pacific Railroad, later being sent to Logan, and still later to Silesia, remaining with that road for five years. He was then made agent and operator at Bridger, and so continued for two years. Mr. Buzzetti then came to Fromberg, and in 1905 organized the Fromberg Co-operative Association for the purpose of conducting a general store, of which he was secretary and treasurer for two years, severing these connections in 1908 to found his present business, which had its initial opening as a small men's furnishing store. The two young men soon found that they were in their right element, and kept on adding to the lines they carried until now they are general merchants and their house is the leading one in this section of the state. Mr. Buzzetti owns the modern store building on Main Street, occupied by his firm, which he bought in 1917, as well as his comfortable modern residence at Fromberg, and a 120-acre ranch of irrigated land at Silesia, Montana. The firm enjoys a very large and expanding trade from a radius of twelve miles outside of Fromberg.

On February 9, 1897, Mr. Buzzetti was married at Brainard, Minnesota, to Miss Elizabeth Collins, a daughter of Dennis Collins, a pioneer blacksmith of Brainard, Minnesota, who, with his wife, is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Buzzetti have one child, Dona, who was born June 30, 1903, is now attending the Fromberg High School, of which she is a bright pupil, popular alike with her teachers and associates. Mr. Buzzetti is one of the enterprising men of Fromberg, and he and his partner are so abreast of the times that they realize the importance of supporting any legitimate measure that will advance their city and locality and bring into it outside capital for investment.

MACKZY F. EMMETT, junior member of the mercantile firm of Buzzetti & Emmett, of Fromberg, Montana, is one of the responsible men and excellent citizens of his locality, and one whose business prosperity is due to his own sagacity and ability. He was born at Hanging Rock, West Virginia, May 24, 1878, a son of Jacob H. Emmett, and grandson of Andrew Emmett. The Emmett family was founded in the New World during colonial days, when four brothers of that name came to what was afterward to be the United States of America, one locating at Emmettsburg, Maryland; one in Kentucky; one at Hanging Rock, West Virginia, and one in North Carolina, and from them have descended all of the Emmetts of this country.

Andrew Emmett, grandfather of Mackzy F. Emmett, was born at Hanging Rock, West Virginia, and died there, his farm in that vicinity being handed down to his son, Jacob Emmett. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Pepper, and she, too, was born, reared and died at Hanging Rock.

Jacob H. Emmett was born at Hanging Rock, West Virginia, in 1840, and he passed away there in 1912, having spent his life in West Virginia, and directed his efforts along agricultural lines. While he was a life-long democrat, he never aspired to political honors. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he was very active in its work, and contributed generously toward its support. With the outbreak of the Civil war he cast his lot with the Confederate States, and fought during the whole conflict under General Lee, and among other important engagements was in the battles of South Mountain and Gettysburg. He married Virginia Heare, who, surviving him, resides on the old homestead at Hanging Rock, West Virginia. She was born in that vicinity in 1848. The children born to her and her husband were as follows: Della Lee, who died at a Texan city in 1915; Wade Gordon, who is a banker of Eastern Shore, Virginia; Evan G., who is a merchant of Hanging Rock; Mackzy F., who is the fourth in order of birth; Jacob D., who is express and freight clerk at Graybull, Wyoming; James S., who is cashier of the Bridger Coal Company, of Bridger, Montana; Walker W., who is operating the Emmett homestead at Hanging Rock; Lucille Virginia, who married H. L. Barlow, a retired lumberman of Fromberg, died at Fromberg in 1909; Clinton Earley, who served in the United States army as a member of the American Expeditionary Forces at Toul, France; Franklin I., who is serving in the marine aviation service at Hampton Roads, Virginia; Blanche, who is unmarried, lives with her mother, and Hill, who is an automobile salesman, resides at Augusta, West Virginia.

Mackzy F. Emmett attended the public schools of Hanging Rock, being graduated from its high school, and from Shenandoah College at Shenandoah, Virginia, in 1902, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. In 1902 he came to Fromberg, Montana, and for two years was engaged in teaching school, leaving Carbon County at the expiration of that period to spend two years in gold mining in Idaho. Returning to Fromberg, he formed a partnership with C. J. Buzzetti and they established their present mercantile business, controlling a very desirable trade and doing a fine business. Mr. Emmett owns his own residence at Fromberg.

In 1908 Mr. Emmett was married at Laurel, Montana, to Miss Emma Buzzetti, a sister of C. J. Buzzetti. Mr. and Mrs. Emmett have the following children: Virginia, who was born June 6, 1909; Robert, who was born December 7, 1911, and Mary, who was born November 15, 1915. Mr. Emmett is one of the alert business men of Fromberg who is thoroughly alive to the opportunities offered the young man in Western cities of recent establishment. He and his partner are typical of the region, and spare no efforts to give to their trade the benefits of their connections, which enable them to secure timely merchandise and offer it at prices as low as is consistent with market quotations on goods of their class. Their service is excellent, and their customers remain with them, for they appreciate the fact that this firm is reliable and trustworthy in every respect, as well as thoroughly up-to-date in stock and equipment.

ALBERT C. ROECHER. The gentleman whose name heads this paragraph is widely known as one of the enterprising merchants of Bozeman, where he has lived for a number of years and has been prominently identified with the commercial interests of that locality. His well-directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his business interests and his sound judgment have brought him large rewards for the labor he has expended, so that today he is numbered among the representative men of his city.

Albert C. Roecher was born in Pomeroy, Meigs County, Ohio, on September 3, 1869, and is a son of J. F. and Magdalena (Rasp) Roecher. J. F. Roecher was born in 1840 in Allegheny City, now a part of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where his parents had settled on their immigration to this country from Germany. He was reared and educated in Allegheny, but in young manhood moved to Pomeroy, Ohio, where he married and where he followed his trade, that of a harness-maker. In 1877 he removed to Chester, Ohio, where he continued his trade and where his death occurred in November, 1918. He was a republican in politics, and served as township clerk at Chester for the long period of thirty-five years. He was active in all the civic and political affairs of his community and was as popular as he was well known throughout that section of the state. He was a member of the Lutheran Church and of the Knights of Pythias.

J. F. Roecher married Magdalena Rasp, who was born in 1841 at Pomeroy, Ohio, and who died at Chester in 1899. To this worthy couple were born the following children, eight in number: Minnie is the wife of Dr. A. E. Ayler, of Greencastle, Indiana; Emma, who remained unmarried, died at the age of thirty years; Albert C. is the next in order of birth; Lucy, now deceased, was the wife of H. Bert Fox, also deceased; Anna is the wife of J. B. Heaton, a farmer at Mutual, Ohio; J. E. is cashier of the Commercial Bank and Trust Company at Big Timber, Montana; Clarence is an automobile dealer at Chester, Ohio; Elsie is a bookkeeper in the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank at Big Timber, Montana.

Albert C. Roecher received his elementary education in the public schools of Chester, Ohio, after which he was a student in the academy there. Leaving school at the age of twenty-one years, he took a course in the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, West Virginia, graduating in 1894. In the meanwhile he had been clerking in a general store at Chester, and it is probably owing to the fact that this store carried a line of drugs that Mr. Roecher's future vocation was determined. In 1897 he came to Bozeman, Montana, and formed a partnership with William Alward. They bought the leading drug store here, giving it the name of the new firm, Roecher & Alward, and under their direction it proved to be a good business move. Mr. Roecher continued his studies in pharmacy and chemistry, and then went to Minneapolis and took a full course in the Minnesota Institute of Pharmacy, receiving, after examination, a license as a pharmacist in 1903. In 1908 Mr. Alward died, and Mr. Roecher took over his interest, having been sole owner since that time. He carries a large and well selected line of drugs, stationery, cut glass, hand-painted china, photographic supplies, etc., and his store is considered the leading drug store of Gallatin County. He also owns the brick building in which the store is located, and which also houses three other stores, and owns a ranch of 160 acres of land, six miles south of Logan, Montana.

Politically, Mr. Roecher is a stanch supporter of the republican party, and at one time served as trustee of school district No. 7, Bozeman. Fraternally he belongs to Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Pythagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias; Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World; Gallatin Castle No. 82, Royal Highlanders; and to the Retail Druggists Association of Montana.

In 1891, in Meigs County, Ohio, Mr. Roecher was married to Nora Story, the daughter of Elias and Lucy (Carper) Story, both of whom are deceased. The father was a pioneer farmer in Meigs County, Ohio, came as a pioneer to Virginia City, Montana, in 1863, and in 1876 returned to Meigs County, where his death occurred. To them were born the following children: Rausie, who is a graduate of the Gallatin County High School, of the Montana State College, and attended the Milwaukee Downer School for Girls, is the wife of Selmer H. Solberg, owner of a gentlemen's furnishing store at Big Timber, Montana; Chester, who is his father's assistant and who is now taking a course in pharmacy, graduated from the Gallatin County High School and was a student in the Montana State University at Missoula.

A western man in the broad sense of the term, although a native of the east, Mr. Roecher realized the wants of the people and, with unerring judgment and keen discrimination, supplied the demand. Affable and popular with all classes, he has long been numbered among the leaders of his community and is eminently entitled to representation in a work of the character of this one.

WILLIAM E. HARRIS. A native of Montana, William E. Harris began his business career immediately on completing his high school course, and his experience has been almost entirely in automobile mechanics and the garage business.

Mr. Harris, who is proprietor of one of the leading garages in southwestern Montana, at Hamilton, was born at Butte February 28, 1885. His father, also William E. Harris, was of Welsh ancestry and was born in Pennsylvania in 1853. He spent his early life in his native state, and in 1881 located at Butte, where he followed mining. He owned a half interest in the St. Lawrence Tunnel at Butte. He died in that city in 1889, when thirty-six years of age. He was a republican in politics. At Butte he married Mary Ann Shearer, who was born in Ohio in 1855, and is now living at Hamilton. She was the mother of two sons, William E. and Claud. Claud enlisted in 1917, trained at Camp Lewis, and in 1918 went overseas. In the late summer of 1919 he was still in service in France with the grade of corporal.

William E. Harris attended the public schools of Butte until 1901, when his mother removed to Hamilton, where he graduated from high school in 1904. The following year he worked as a foreman on the Bitter Root Stock Farm, but in 1905 took up the automobile and garage business, which he learned thoroughly. He has a special inclination for mechanics, and is a master of automobile mechanism. In 1916 he bought the large garage at 352 Main street and has floor space 130x40 feet. His business has grown and prospered until his quarters are far too small. He maintains a general garage, a repair shop, and handles all automobile accessories and operates a service station.

Mr. Harris is a republican voter, and is a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. He owns a modern home on Fourth Street. In 1907, at Missoula, he married Miss Margaret Loretta Morrissey, daughter of Dan and Mary Morrissey. Her mother is now deceased. Her father is a retired resident at Santa Monica, California. Mr. and Mrs. Harris have three children: Anna, born in November, 1909; William, born in 1912; and Doloris, born in 1914.

PETER JOHN VAN LAKEN. Many of the most prosperous and esteemed citizens of our country have come from beyond the seas, and into this land of promise and plenty have brought those habits of industry and thrift that have won for them places of prominence in the various walks of life, making them veritable leaders in the industrial and business world. Conspicuous among this number now living in Montana is Peter John Van Laken, of Billings, president and sole proprietor of the Van Laken Construction Company. A native of Europe, he was born December 14, 1881, in Antwerp, Belgium, where his father, Francis Van Laken, was a lifelong resident. He is descended from an old and honored Dutch family, the Van Lakens having formerly lived in Holland, from whence they emigrated to Belgium many generations ago.

John Francis Van Laken, grandfather of Peter, was born in Antwerp in 1820, and as a mason and builder there spent his years, dying in 1907. His wife, whose maiden name was Melania Van Damme, was born, reared and educated in Antwerp, and there lived until her death.

Francis Van Laken's birth occurred in 1855. Learning the mason's trade when young, he worked at it faithfully, becoming skilled in the art, and during his years of activity was a general contractor as well as a mason. His wife, whose name before marriage was Clemence Jacobs, was born in Antwerp, Belgium, in 1856, and is still a resident of that city. Five children were born of their union, as follows: Arthur, a machinist and now owner of a general machine shop, resides in Antwerp, his birthplace; Melania, who married Joseph Seeldrayers, an Antwerp broker, died of the influenza in 1919; Louis lived but fourteen years; Peter, the special subject of this brief personal sketch; and Adaline, wife of Emil T. Felt, of Antwerp, an officer in the Belgian Army, who participated in five of the larger battles of the World war, and has recently been mustered out.

The boyhood days of Peter John Van Laken were passed in laying the foundation of his future education in the public schools of Antwerp. Possessing artistic talent, and having a natural aptitude for mechanics, he subsequently completed a course of study at the Government Technical School, becoming expert in draughting and architectural work. Later, under the instruction of his father, he learned the mason's trade, which he followed for a time, being quite successful. In 1903, seized with the wanderlust, Mr. Van Laken determined to try life for himself in America, and immigrating to the United States located in Chicago, Illinois, where he followed his trade four years. Going from there still farther westward in 1907, he spent a year in Spokane, Washington, but not entirely pleased with his prospects in that locality he made another move, settling at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, where he carried on a substantial business as contractor and builder for nine years. In June, 1917, Mr. Van Laken, desirous of broadening his scope of action, came to Billings, Montana, and in the selection of a favorable location has found that he made no mistake. Immediately establishing the Van Laken Construction Company, of which he is president and entire owner, he has since been constantly employed in the upbuilding of the city. Some of the most beautiful commercial buildings have been erected under his supervision. Among some of his notable achievements as a contractor and builder is the Hart-Albin Building, a three-story structure with basement, the largest in Billings, and one of the largest office buildings in Montana. He erected the Carlin Building on Broadway, and others of equal importance, the work of his hands and brain being very frequently in evidence. He has a pleasant home at North Thirty-Second Street.

Mr. Van Laken is an adherent of the republican party, and is a member of the Coeur d'Alene Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of the Coeur d'Alene Camp, Modern Woodmen of America; and of the Billings Midland Club.

In 1901, in Antwerp, Belgium, Mr. Van Laken married Miss Marie De Buyser, a daughter of Charles and Frances (Van Eyke) De Buyser. Her father, a mason and contractor, still resides in Antwerp, where the death of her mother occurred a few years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Van Laken have four children, namely: Gabriella, born June 19, 1903, now a senior in the Billings High School, is a gifted musician, having a very sweet voice, and has sung with the Glee Club; Julia, born January 5, 1905, is a freshman in the Billings High School; Arthur Francis who died at the age of ten weeks, in Chicago; and Arthur, born on Friday, June 13, 1913.

WILLIAM C. RYAN, principal of the Sweetgrass High School at Big Timber, is a veteran educator, and has been in the work more or less continuously for thirty years.

Mr. Ryan, whose ancestors came from Ireland, was born at Springfield, Ohio, February 12, 1869. His father, Henry Ryan, was born in Southern Ohio in 1844 and spent his active life on a farm near Springfield, where he died in 1916. In politics he was a democrat, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows from the time he reached his majority until his death. He married Elizabeth Ryman, who was born in Clark County, Ohio, in 1844 and died at Springfield in 1915. William C., is the oldest of their children. The second, Mary, is the wife of Wilbur Trout, a farmer, flour moulder and successful business man of Springfield, Ohio. Oscar, is superintendent of the annealing department of the Springfield Malleable Iron Works, while Charles, the youngest, is also an educator, being superintendent of schools of several townships of Clark County, Ohio, and a resident of Springfield.

As a boy William C. Ryan attended country schools near his father's farm, and in 1888 graduated from the Clark County High School. Mr. Ryan is a man of scholarly tastes and there has hardly been a year since he left high school when he has not attended some institution as a student and accepted every opportunity to advance his abilities and technical training for educational work. For three years he taught school in Clark County and two years in Franklin County, Ohio, utilizing the summer vacations in attending college. He then entered the Northern Indiana Normal School, now Valparaiso University, where he spent four quarters each three years. He graduated with the A. B. degree in 1896 and he also has the degree Master of Science and degree Civil Engineer from Valparaiso. While there he became affiliated with Sigma Pi College fraternity. He has attended summer schools nearly every year of his teaching career. In 1896 he went to Trenton, Missouri, for one year was head of the Mathematics Department in Avalon College, and for two years was principal of the Trenton High School and then another year remained as principal of the Normal Department of Avalon College. During 1899-1900 he was a student in the University of Chicago, where he made chemistry his major study. He then returned to Trenton and was superintendent of city schools three years.

Coming to Montana in the fall of 1903, Mr. Ryan served as principal of the County High School at Big Timber for seven consecutive years. In 1910 he retired from the teaching profession and bought a fruit ranch at Spokane, Washington. A year later he sold that and returned to Montana and became district manager of the Central Life Insurance Company of Des Moines, and for six years represented that company with offices at Billings, and developed a large business and proved himself a thoroughly resourceful insurance man. In 1919 he resumed active connection with educational affairs when he took a three years contract as principal of the Sweetgrass County High School at Big Timber. He has a staff of seven teachers and an enrollment of 125 scholars in the high school.

Contrary to the usual run of educators Mr. Ryan has been successful in business affairs. He owns a ranch of 280 acres seventeen miles northeast of Columbus, Montana, and has it under lease. He also has a modern home at Big Timber and a dwelling house at Billings. Mr. Ryan is an independent republican, and is active in the Christian Church as a member of the State Board of the Church. Early in life he became affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has membership in the Lodge, Encampment and Canton at Bozeman and is a retired captain of the Uniformed Rank. He is also a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias.

In May, 1905, at Livingston, he married Miss Melvetta Jolly. Her mother is Mrs. Mary Jolly, of Trenton, Missouri. Mrs. Ryan is a graduate of the Trenton High School and attended Avalon College through her junior year. She then taught in the Trenton schools and attended the Missouri State University several summer sessions. They have three children: Henry Wallace, born January 8, 1906; Mary, born November 2, 1907; and Helen, born June 15, 1910.

Edward Bigelow. Continuously devoting his time and energies to the varied requirements of his business, and possessing an ability equal to its demands, Edward Bigelow, of Billings, proprietor of Bigelow's Mercantile Agency, has won an honored position among the successful business men of the city. He was born in Columbus, Ohio, October 24, 1875, a son of Charles E. Bigelow, and comes of good old Scotch-Irish stock, his immigrant ancestors on the paternal side having settled in Massachusetts in colonial days.

A native of Massachusetts, Charles E. Bigelow was born in 1851, in Spencer, but his youthful days were spent in Boston, where he acquired his early education. As a young man he went to Ohio, stopping first in Loveland, but after his marriage removing to Columbus, and for a time thereafter serving as a conductor on the Pennsylvania Railroad. In 1882, on the opening of the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad, he accepted the position of baggage master at Bellevue, Ohio, where he remained three years. Going to Buffalo, New York, in 1885, he was yard master for the same road for two years. Retiring from the railway service, he has since been associated with the "Buffalo Express," one of the leading newspapers of that city. He is a republican in politics, and an ex-member of the Royal Arcanum. His wife, whose maiden name was Christian Tigar, was born in Loveland, Ohio, in 1853, and died in Buffalo, New York, in 1894. Three children were born to them, as follows: Frederick T., of Buffalo, New York, is an accountant for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company; Edward, of whom we write, and Burt, of New York City, in the office of the "New York Times."

As a boy Edward Bigelow attended the public schools of Cincinnati and Bellevue, Ohio, and of Buffalo, New York. Then, beginning life as a wage-earner, he worked for five years in a Buffalo lumber yard, and subsequently was employed in the Buffalo Post Office from 1895 until 1906. Accepting then a position with the United States Smelting Company, he held it for eighteen months, being located at Midvale, Utah, near Salt Lake City. Joining an engineering corps, he afterward worked for a short time on the construction of the Consolidated Mining Company's plant at McGill, Nevada.

Desirous of further advancing his education, Mr. Bigelow entered Mount Hermon Academy, widely known as Moody's School, near Northfield, Massachusetts. Leaving that institution in 1909, he came to Montana with an engineering corps, and for six months assisted in the construction of that branch of the Northern Pacific Railway that extends from Livingston to Wilsall. Going then to Salt Lake City, he remained there as statistician for the Utah Copper Company until 1911, when he went to the Pacific Coast, visiting California and Oregon. Coming to Billings, Montana, in September, 1911, Mr. Bigelow was bookkeeper and cashier for a time, first for W. H. Donovan and later for W. H. McCormick. Resuming his duties as a statistician, he was in Butte with the Butte and Superior Copper Company for a time, and then at Great Falls, Montana, with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. In April, 1914, Mr. Bigelow returned to Billings, where he has since resided, his home being at 807 North Thirtieth Street. He is carrying on a substantial business as manager of the Bigelow Mercantile Agency, and is likewise employed as an accountant. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and belongs to Erie Lodge No. 161, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons.

On November 24, 1910, Mr. Bigelow married, in Billings, Miss Mabel Johnson, a daughter of Orange Chapin Johnson. She was born at Rochester, Minnesota, and received her education in Iowa, being graduated from the Lake Mills High School, and later completing a business course at the Capital City Commercial College in Des Moines. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, she takes an active interest in church work, and was general secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association, a position that she also filled while a resident of Salt Lake City. At the present time she is vice president of the Billings Young Women's Christian Association. Mrs. Bigelow is of English descent. Her immigrant ancestor, Lawrence Johnson, who was born in England in 1758, came to America in 1776 with a company of British soldiers, and subsequently surrendered to Washington at Philadelphia, and afterwards fought with him for the independence of the Colonies. William Meslar Johnson, Mrs. Bigelow's grandfather, was born in Ithaca, New York, in 1815, and died January 15, 1871, from pneumonia. Orange Chapin Johnson was born in Whitesville, New York, in 1850. Going to Minnesota in early life, he was engaged in the lumber business at Rochester a number of years, and since coming to Billings in 1907 has been here similarly employed, being with the Thompson Yards, Incorporated. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, whose maiden name was Louise McDaniel, was born and reared in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Bigelow have one child, Donald Edward, born February 16, 1912.

HENRY FRANCIS SEARS learned the printing trade when a boy, worked as a printer when he first came to Bozeman more than thirty years ago, but finally gave up his trade and profession to become a farmer, and while he is very busy as proprietor and manager of the Republican Courier at Bozeman, he is still interested in the practical side of agriculture and has a first class farm in Gallatin County.

Mr. Sears was born in Kent County, England, October 16, 1866. His father, Thomas H. Sears, was born in the same county in 1845, was reared and married there, and was a country gentleman and owner of a valuable estate. He sold his life interest in that estate in 1870 and crossed the ocean and settled at Brantford in the Province of Ontario. After that he lived retired and died in Ontario in 1909. He was educated in the famous Eton Preparatory School of England. Thomas H. Sears married Blanche Knowles, who was born in Kent County, England, and died at Brantford, Ontario, in 1911. They had a large family of children. Thomas H., the oldest, is representative for a type foundry at Toronto, Canada; Blanche Marian is deceased; Charles J. is a real estate broker at Bozeman, and Henry Francis is the next in age. Isabella, Florence and Edith are all deceased. Margaret is the wife of Frank Alderson, a farmer and linotype operator at Bozeman. Mrs. Alice Thomas still lives at Brantford, Ontario, and Edwin, the youngest of the family, is a cigar maker at Elmira, New York.

Henry Francis Sears secured his early education in the public schools of Brantford, Ontario. When thirteen years of age he began working in a printing shop at Brantford, and at fifteen went to Buffalo, New York, and completed his apprenticeship as a printer and followed his trade there as a journeyman one year. He was at Detroit two years, and in 1885 arrived at Bozeman and was soon working in the office of the Bozeman Chronicle and also with the Courier. For six years he was a printer in these establishments, and then left the printing shop altogether for nearly ten years and devoted that time to farming in Gallatin County. In 1900 Mr. Sears and J. H. Dawes established the Gallatin County Republican. They conducted this paper until 1905, when they consolidated with the Avant Courier, thus establishing the present Republican Courier. In 1905 the Republican Courier Company was incorporated, and in succeeding years Mr. Sears bought all the other stock and is sole owner of the publication.

While the Republican Courier is a comparatively new paper the Avant Courier was established fifty years ago, in 1869. It was first published as the Pick and Plow. In 1871 Major Anderson obtained control and gave it the name Avant Courier, and continued its publication until its consolidation in 1905. This is therefore one of the very oldest papers in Montana. Mr. Sears is publishing a column of items each week from the files of thirty-five years ago, and probably no other paper in the state can do this. He has a well equipped plant and offices at 241 West Main Street, and the mechanical facilities are adequate not only for the printing of the paper but for a large commercial and job printing business.

Mr. Sears is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Bridger Camp No. 62 Woodmen of the World at Bozeman, Eureka Homestead No. 415, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, at Bozeman, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and the Bozeman Typographical Union.

Mr. Sears owns a farm of 175 acres seven miles east of Bozeman and has other real estate both in the city and county, including a modern home at 415 Third Avenue, South. Mr. Sears married at Bozeman in 1889 Emma Bradley, daughter of John and Elizabeth Bradley, both now deceased. Her father was a Pennsylvania miner and farmer. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sears: Clyde R., a graduate of the Gallatin County High School, now in the confectionery business at Whitehall, Montana; Frank, also a graduate of the County High School, a linotype operator in his father's office; Edith, a graduate of the County High School, who attended the Montana State College one year, and is the wife of G. C. Davenport, an automobile salesman at Bozeman; Thomas H. who is a graduate of high school and a student in the Montana State College; and Harry, who died April 29, 1919, at the age of twelve years.

CHARLES E. HARTLEY when he came to Montana was a young man with a college education but no special business training beyond his experience as a teacher. He learned the laundry business in this state, and starting with modest capital and small equipment has developed at Hamilton the only steam laundry plant in Ravalli county, and with a wide scope of service beyond the limits of that county. It is the Bitter Root Steam Laundry of which he is proprietor and owner.

Mr. Hartley was born on a farm in Webster County, Missouri, February 25, 1878. He is of English ancestry and his people were colonial settlers in some of the southern states. His grandfather, Jesse Hartley, was born in Tennessee in 1803. In 1840 he took his family to southern Missouri and was one of the first settlers in Webster County, where he homesteaded. In the course of years he developed a fine farm of four hundred acres. Jesse Hartley was remarkable for the substance of his achievements and also for the length of his life. He died January 28, 1908, in Webster County, Missouri, at the age of a hundred and five.

Robert Hartley, his son, father of the Hamilton business man, was born in Tennessee in 1838, and was two years of age when his parents moved to Webster County, Missouri. The old homestead in Webster County is still his home. He has spent his active life as a farmer, and during the Civil war was a soldier on the Union side. He saw much of the border warfare, participating in the campaigns against Price and Quantrill, and was also in the great battle of Wilson Creek. He was a republican and an active member of the Baptist Church. Robert Hartley married Jane Murrell, who was born in North Carolina in 1848. A brief record of their children is as follows: I. A., a farmer and orchard owner at Escandido, California; Minnie M., wife of N. M. Lowder, a banker at Elkland, Missouri; Jesse George, who runs the old home farm of his parents; Charles E.; Floyd O., a hardware merchant at Ozark, Missouri; Hester, wife of Joseph Jackson, a farmer of Webster County, Missouri;

Mabel, wife of Olaf Peterson, a paint, oil and general merchant, and a painter by trade, at Hamilton, Montana; and Ezra, a clerk in a store at Marshfield in Webster County, Missouri.

Charles E. Hartley secured his education in the rural schools of his native county in Missouri. For four years he attended the Southwest Baptist College at Bolivar, Missouri, graduating with the class of 1900. He was a member of the Athenian Society in college. Before graduating he had taught one year in Webster County, and after getting his diploma he went back to the same school as its principal.

Mr. Hartley came to Montana in 1901 and acquired his practical knowledge of the laundry business at Missoula. In the spring of 1905 he removed to Dillon, where he managed a laundry for two years. Then with his experience and modest capital he came to Hamilton and bought a small hand laundry. Since then he has extensively remodeled and re-equipped the plant, has introduced steam and other mechanical appliances and now has a large and modern plant. He owns the building in which the business is conducted at the corner of Main and First streets.

Out of his prosperity he has acquired a modern home at the corner of Fifth and State streets, also another dwelling adjoining his residence, and two other city lots. Mr. Hartley is an independent republican, is treasurer of the Baptist Church, a member of the Hamilton Chamber of Commerce and affiliated with Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, Crusade Commandery No. 17, Knights Templar, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Ravalli Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, and Pine Cone Camp No. 754, Woodmen of the World.

January 14, 1904, at Missoula, Mr. Hartley married Miss Anna Svoboda, daughter of John and Frances (Dolinski) Svoboda. Her parents are residents of Missoula and her father is a retired laundryman. Mr. and Mrs. Hartley have two children: Zelma, born February 25, 1905, and June, born June 8, 1911.

JOHN WILLIAM CHAPMAN, president of the Meyer and Chapman State Bank of Red Lodge, is one of the oldest residents of the northwest, and its fertile valleys and rugged mountain sides constitute almost the breath of life to him. As an old time cowboy and cattle man he was associated with some of the newest country opened to settlement in Wyoming and Montana, and recalls many of the noted names of pioneer characters of that time.

Mr. Chapman, who still retains extended ranching and farming interests, was born at Springfield, Illinois, May 15, 1850, the only son and child of William and Artie Anasa (Riddle) Chapman. The Chapmans are an English family but have been in America since colonial times. William Chapman was born in 1827 and was one of the early farmers of Central Illinois. He died at Springfield, that state, in 1851. His wife was born in the territory of Iowa in 1833, and soon after his death she removed to Oregon in 1851, settling in Douglas County. She became the wife of William Merriman, who died in Jackson County, Oregon. She died at Medford, Oregon, in 1917.

From the facts just related it will be seen that John W. Chapman had his first conscious recollection of his mother's home in Oregon. He grew up there in the country, attended the rural schools of Douglas County to the age of sixteen, and then hired out as a cowboy. He was employed by some of the first cattle outfits ranging stock in the vicinity of Virginia City, Nevada. He made his first acquaintance with Montana in 1878, when he was running cattle on the Tongue River near Miles City. In 1879 he settled on a ranch on Tongue River but a year later went to the vicinity of Cody, Wyoming, and had his ranch headquarters there for twenty-two years. In that time he acquired extensive interests as a cattle man, and had under lease or individual ownership great tracts of land. Mr. Chapman has been a resident of Red Lodge since 1904. He still owns about 2,000 acres of grain and stock land situated in Wyoming and in Carbon County and the Big Horn country of Montana.

Mr. Chapman was associated with the late W. F. Meyer and Paul Britsche in founding the Meyer & Chapman Bank, and became its president upon its reorganization as the Meyer & Chapman State Bank on December 1, 1912. Frank Lyle is vice president and the cashier is Fred Alden. This is one of the largest banks of Carbon County, with a capital of $50,000, surplus and profits of $28,000 and deposits averaging $500,000. The bank owns and occupies part of the most conspicuous business building in Red Lodge, a substantial two-story banking and office structure at Broadway and Eleventh streets. Mr. Chapman is also president of the Hardin State Bank at Hardin and president of the Bank of Belfry. His home is the most commodious and attractive residence in Red Lodge, surrounded with well kept grounds. Politically he acts independently and has never sought any public office. Mr. Chapman married Miss Alpha Chapman at Canyonville in Douglas County, Oregon, in 1882. She was a native of that county.

J. S. SOLBERG made a definite choice of Big Timber as his home thirty years ago. He was the pioneer shoemaker and harness dealer in that town, followed his regular trade for many years, but is now proprietor of the leading men's furnishing goods store in Sweetgrass County.

Mr. Solberg was born at Bergen, Norway, December 29, 1863. His father, S. Solberg, spent all his life as a carpenter and builder. He was born in 1832 and died in 1885. He had served his regular term in the Norwegian army and was an active member of the Lutheran Church. His widow, Martha Solberg, still living at Bergen, was born in 1833. The oldest child, Oli, came to the United States and did farm work at Black Earth, Wisconsin, and died while making a voyage back home to his native country. J. S. Solberg is the second of the family, and his other brother, Martin, is a farmer at Huntsville, Alabama. The two younger children, Annie and Sophia, are both unmarried and live in Norway.

J. S. Solberg received his education and also served his apprenticeship at the shoemaker's trade in his native city. He was twenty years of age when he came to the United States in 1884 and he not only followed his trade but also did farming at Black Earth in Dane County, Wisconsin. In July, 1887, he arrived at Big Timber, Montana, and was soon busily working at his trade as a shoemaker. At the end of three years, his services having come into demand in repairing harness, he established the first harness shop. He has the distinction of having made the first pair of shoes in Big Timber. He continued his shoe and harness business until 1907, when he broadened out his business enterprise by establishing a men's furnishing store. He owns both this store and its large and well selected stock on McLeod Street, and he also has a modern home on the corner of Anderson and Fifth Avenue. Mr. Solberg is a member of the Sons of Norway, is a Lutheran and a republican.

At Melville, Montana, in 1891 he married Miss Hannah Bekken, a native of Wisconsin. Their oldest child is Selmer H., a graduate of the Montana State College at Bozeman, who is now silent partner and active assistant to his father in the business. The second child, Oscar, has a place on the roll of honor of Montana's volunteers in the late war. He went overseas in July, 1918, and was killed in France September 29th. The three younger children are Stella, Louis and Helen. Stella graduated from the State College at Bozeman and is now teaching in the high school at Virginia City; Louis attends the County High School in the sophomore class, while Helen is in the eighth grade of the grammar schools.

REUBEN J. LORD. Since coming to Montana, more than twenty years ago, Reuben J. Lord has been actively identified with the industrial interests of Billings, and as a successful contractor and builder has been an important factor in aiding the development and promoting the growth of this now prosperous city. A son of the late Luther Lord, he was born July 5, 1859, in Surry, Hancock County, Maine. On the paternal side he comes of good old Scotch-Irish stock, being a lineal descendant of one of two brothers, John Lord and James Lord, who migrated from Londonderry, Ireland, to Maine in 1621, landing in Kittery, not far, probably, from the present site of the Portsmouth Navy Yard. His great grandfather settled permanently in Surry, Hancock County, Maine, and there Isaac Lord, the next in line of descent, spent his entire life, his birth occurring in 1741 and his death in 1820, during his years of activity having been engaged in farming and lumbering.

Born on the home farm in Surry, Maine, in 1816, Luther Lord received excellent educational advantages as a youth, and for upwards of forty years taught school in Hancock County. He was likewise engaged to some extent in literary work, having been a book agent, and becoming widely known in his native county as editor of a newspaper. A whig in politics as a young man, he joined the republican party soon after its formation, and from that time until his death in 1883 was one of its stanchest adherents. Active and influential in public affairs, he served as county treasurer of Hancock County for nine consecutive terms, and for many years was town clerk and selectman of Surry, and also filled the office of justice of the peace for a long, long time. Uniting with the Baptist Church at the age of twenty-one years, he became very prominent in its affairs, and served many years as deacon.

Luther Lord married Priscilla Jellison, who was born in Mariaville, Hancock County, Maine, in 1834, and died in Surry, Maine, in 1883. Seven children were born to their union, namely: Edgar, a civil engineer, resides at Bar Harbor, Maine; Reuben J.; Isaac, deceased; Abbie, wife of Stephen H. Leland, of Lamoine, Maine, a retired custodian of the naval station of that place; Martin Luther, who was a contractor and builder at Berkeley, California, and died in April, 1919; Clara, living at Southwest Harbor, Maine, is the widow of Augustus Mayo, who was for many years prosperously engaged in mackerel fishing, and Maurice S., a contractor and builder at Columbus, Montana.

Educated in the public schools of his native town, Reuben J. Lord at the age of nineteen years began his career as a teacher at Ellsworth, Maine, and served as principal of the schools one term. Going then to Bar Harbor, he worked as an apprentice at the carpenter's trade two years, after which he started there in business on his own account, continuing for a period of sixteen years. In the spring of 1899, realizing the great demand for skilled labor in the newer states of the far West, Mr. Lord followed the trail of the ever wide-awake emigrant to Montana, locating in Billings. Embarking in business as a general contractor, he has been busily employed ever since, his work being appreciated. Among the buildings which he has erected in Billings is the substantial structure in which the Billings Industrial School is located and the attractive residences of Frank O'Donnell, Frank Raedemher, Dr. W. A. Allen and others of equal prominence and beauty, including his own residence at 407 South Thirty-first Street.

At Mount Desert, Maine, October 14, 1882, Mr. Lord married Miss Julia M. Mayo, a daughter of the late Thomas Mayo. Her mother, whose maiden name was Lydia Smith, was born in Mount Desert, Maine, in 1834, and is now living in Billings, making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Lord. Mr. Mayo was for many years engaged in sea-faring work as captain of a vessel traversing the ocean. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lord, as follows: Charles R., who died at the age of twenty years; Alice, who died in childhood, and Lida Grace, wife of LeRoy E. Torrence, assistant cashier of the Yegen Bank at Billings.

JAMES E. ELLIOTT, M. D. Former county health officer of Gallatin County, Dr. James E. Elliott is a Bozeman physician and surgeon, and a man of wide and varied experience and of splendid talents in his profession. His father was a doctor, and several other members of the family have earned a worthy place in the same profession.

His paternal ancestors came from England and were colonial settlers in Virginia. However, the family for several generations have lived in Indiana. James E. Elliott was born in Clay County, that state, July 20, 1883. His grandfather was Harrison B. Elliott, a native of Indiana, a pioneer farmer, and a leader in local politics. At one time he served as county commissioner. He died at Greencastle in Putnam County, Indiana, many years ago. The father of Doctor Elliott was T. A. Elliott, who was born in Indiana in 1851, was a graduate of the Medical College of Nashville, Tennessee, and for twenty-five years practiced his profession in Clay County, where he died in 1907. The oldest of her children is Harry Elliott, a graduate of the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis, a physician and surgeon at Brazil, the county seat of Clay County, Indiana, for over a year a captain in the Medical Reserve Corps and up to the spring of 1919 still on duty with the American Expeditionary Forces at Verdun, France. Dr. James E. Elliott is the second of the family. Mrs. Jennie Shaw is the wife of a Kansas City publisher. Frank is a resident of Dallas, Texas, joined the Officers Training Camp in 1908, was commissioned captain and served until mustered out in 1919 and has since become an oil operator in Texas. John, the youngest of the family, is a dentist by profession at Kansas City, and was connected with the Dental Corps of the army during the war.

Dr. James E. Elliott attended rural schools in Clay County, Indiana, graduated from the high school at Poland in 1899 and soon afterward entered the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis, where he graduated M. D. in 1904. He spent one year as an interne in St. Anthony's Hospital at Terre Haute, and has since come in contact with the most advanced ideas and methods of medicine and surgery by post-graduate work and attending clinics in Chicago and with the Mayo Brothers at Rochester, Minnesota. Doctor Elliott practiced medicine at Terre Haute, Indiana, for eleven years. He came to Montana in 1915, and has been permanently located at Bozeman since December, 1917, and has already built up a large and satisfactory general practice as a physician and surgeon. His offices are in the Story Block. His home is in the Evergreen Apartments. He served as county health officer in 1918. He is a member of the County, State and American Medical Associations. Doctor Elliott owns a ranch of 157 acres of irrigated land four miles north of Belgrade. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church and affiliated with the Knights of Pythias at Terre Haute.

In 1906, at Brazil, Indiana, he married Miss Kathryne Dietz, daughter of Emil and Anna Dietz, who now reside at Anaconda, Montana. Her father is a traveling salesman. Mrs. Elliott is a graduate of the high school at Noblesville, Indiana. They have one daughter, Kathryne, born December 8, 1909.

Willis C. Wells grew up in Wisconsin, in the heart of the great dairy district of that state, was a practical dairyman when only a youth and subsequently became a recognized expert as a butter maker and creamery man. For a number of years he was in that business in Wisconsin. He has also been manager of a number of creameries in the northwest, and has put several such establishments on their feet in Montana. Mr. Wells is now proprietor of the Hamilton Creamery, and has done much to make that institution a stimulus to the dairy industry of Ravalli County.

Mr. Wells was born in Dodge County, Wisconsin, November 11, 1868. His people were Wisconsin pioneers. His grandfather, Newton Wells, was born in 1815 and was an early settler in Wisconsin, where he developed a farm. He died at Neosha in that state in 1865. Mathias N. Wells, father of the Hamilton citizen, was born in Vermont in 1844, and began his career as a farmer in Dodge County, Wisconsin. Since 1879 his home has been at Neillsville in that state. He continued farming until he retired. For three years he was a Union soldier, serving with the Seventh Wisconsin Battery. Most of his service was around Memphis, Tennessee, and on the western border. He is a republican in politics. Mathias Wells married Alberta Pettingill, who was born in Vermont in 1846. They were married in Dodge County, Wisconsin. Willis is the oldest of their children. Burton H. is connected with an undertaking establishment at Neillsville. Hattie May is the wife of Ed Lloyd, a farmer near Columbia, Wisconsin.

Willis C. Wells acquired his early education in the rural schools of Clark County, Wisconsin. He lived on his father's farm until 1891, and while there acquired a practical knowledge of farming, dairying and the creamery business. In 1895 he took the butter-making course at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. He then took charge of the creamery, known as the Farmers Co-operative Creamery at Strum, Wisconsin. In the fall of 1896 he was called back to Madison to serve as instructor in butter-making, and gave his services to the University for one term. The following two years he had charge of the Farmers Co-operative Creamery at Edmund, Wisconsin, for three years was creamery manager at Arcadia, Wisconsin, and then left his native state to take charge of the Farmers Co-operative Creamery at Corona, South Dakota. After nine months, on account of rheumatism, he was compelled to give up his work and on December 26, 1900, he reached Kalispell, Montana. He bought a farm in the Flathead district, and operated it for six years. On leaving the farm he spent a year as manager of the creamery at Yakima, Washington, and then for two years followed various lines of employment at Columbia Falls, Montana. He returned to Kalispell to take charge of the Farmers Co-operative Creamery, and after nine months bought the plant and operated it with increasing success and profit for five and a half years. At the end of that time he returned the plant to the farmers and patrons.

Mr. Wells came to Hamilton in March, 1917, leasing the Farmers Co-operative Creamery. At the end of two years he bought it and is now sole proprietor. The plant is located at Sixth and North streets, and it handles a large bulk of the cream produced over a territory fifty miles around.

Mr. Wells is a republican and a member of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He resides on Fifth Street, North. He married near Strum, Wisconsin, in 1896, Miss Theoline H. Soland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Soland. Her father, now deceased, was a Wisconsin farmer, and her mother lives at Blair in that state. Mr. and Mrs. Wells have two children: Mabel, who received a high school education and is at home and Lawrence, who lives at Portland, Oregon.

Mr. Hymer first came to Montana in 1895, spending one summer at Red Lodge. For a number of years he followed the business of stationary fireman and hoisting engineer in mines, and he worked in the Red Lodge mines for two years beginning in 1905. HENRY ELLINGSON, president of the Ellingson Mercantile Company at Big Timber, has been a Montanan for many years and has made his time and energies count for successful achievement as a farmer, rancher and business man, and has enjoyed high standing among his fellow citizens, who have twice elected him to the Legislature.

Mr. Ellingson was born near the famous cathedral city of Trondjen, Norway, September 9, 1846. His father, Elling Gaustad, was born in 1809 and died in 1887, having spent all his life on a farm near Trondjen. He was a Lutheran in religion. He married Gertrude Langorgen, who was born near Trondjen and died there in 1873. They had two sons, Ole the older dying on a farm near Trondjen in 1910.

Henry Ellingson was educated in Norwegian schools, and lived on his father's farm until 1866, when, at the age of twenty years, he came to America, spending a short time in Chicago and then going out to the northwestern frontier and settling in Fillmore County, Minnesota. Both in Chicago and the first year he spent in Minnesota he attended American schools for the purpose of learning the English language. In the spring of 1867 he moved to Stevens Point, Portage County, Wisconsin, and worked in the pineries four years. He then returned to Fillmore County, Minnesota, was a farmer there eleven years, and then established his pioneer home in Montana, at what is now Melville in Sweetgrass County. He located on railroad land and followed farming there for twenty-five years. His next location was in Bear Creek in Carbon County, where he was a pioneer merchant. He sold out his business in the fall of 1913, and then took a rest from business cares, spending about fifteen months on the California coast. On returning from California Mr. Ellingson joined his son Edwin H., at Big Timber, where they established the Motor Inn Garage, one of the first two enterprises of that kind in Big Timber. The business is conducted by the Ellingson Mercantile Company, of which Mr. Ellingson is president. He owns the garage building on McLeod Street and Second Avenue, where they have floor space 60x140 feet. Recently they purchased the building on Second and Anderson streets, including four lots, the building being 50x140 feet. They not only do general garage service but repair and handle automobile accessories and sell the Overland car, the Oil-Pull Rumely tractors, the Monarch Never-Slip tractors and handle a general line of threshing machinery and trucks. Mr. Ellingson also owns his home at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Bamble Street.

He was elected on the republican ticket to the House of Representatives from Carbon County in 1912, serving during the session of 1913. In 1916 he was chosen by Sweetgrass County to the State Senate for a term of four years. In the Senate he has served on the county and towns, public lands, public buildings, public morals, irrigation and water rights and other committees. Mr. Ellingson is a member of the Lutheran Church and is a member of the Big Timber Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

In 1870, in Waupaca County, Wisconsin, he married Miss Gina Becken. She was born in Norway, a daughter of Hans Becken, who brought his family to the United States in 1857, and was a pioneer homesteader in Portage County, Wisconsin, where he died in 1872. Mrs. Ellingson was educated in Portage County. Her mother, Siegred Becken, was born in Norway in 1827 and died at Big Timber, Montana, in 1911.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellingson have had seven children: the oldest is Edwin H., his father's active business partner. Edwin was born in Fillmore County, Minnesota, in 1872, was educated in the common schools there and at Big Timber. Susanna, the second child, is the wife of George Rostad, a rancher at Big Timber. George, the third in age, died in 1889, at the age of thirteen. Emma is the wife of a farmer near Tacoma, Washington, Marks Smaby. Oscar is one of the firm and has charge of the office of the Ellingson Mercantile Company at Big Timber. John G., is in the insurance business at Big Timber, while Hilma, the youngest, is the wife of Oliver O. Bekken, a mechanic at Big Timber.

CHARLES F. KINMONTH. A man of energy and enterprise, possessing good business ability and judgment, Charles F. Kinmonth, of Billings, has for several years been actively identified with the agricultural interests of Yellowstone County, and holds a position of note among the extensive land holders of this section of the state. A native of Iowa, he was born in Lucas County October 22, 1868, a son of the late O. F. Kinmonth. His paternal grandfather, Alexander Kinmonth, was born in Scotland in 1809, and there married a Miss Foote. Soon after that happy event he emigrated with his wife to the United States, settling in Hobart, Delaware County, New York, where both spent their remaining years, his death occurring in 1889. He was a carpenter and cabinet maker by trade, and also became owner of quite a tract of land, on which he carried on general farming to some extent.

O. F. Kinmonth was born in Delaware County, New York, in 1834, and grew to manhood on the home farm. As a young man he migrated to Illinois, and soon after the breaking out of the Civil war enlisted in the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry, and with his comrades saw hard service on the field of battle. Subsequently engaging in agricultural pursuits, he spent a year in Stark County, Illinois, and then removed with his wife to Lucas County, Iowa, where he improved a good farm and became prominent as an agriculturist. He lived to a ripe old age, dying in Russell, Iowa, in 1904.

The maiden name of the wife of O. F. Kinmonth was Esther Ann Atherton. She was born in Stark County, Illinois, in 1849, and is now residing in Russell, Iowa. Seven children were born of their union, as follows: Roderick, a farmer by occupation, died in Russell, Iowa, aged thirty-six years; Charles F., the subject of this brief sketch; Maude, wife of C. A. Currier, who is engaged in farming at Chariton, Iowa; Alexander, a farmer in Ballantine, Montana; Orin, living on the home farm in Russell, Iowa; Mabel, wife of Arthur Pyle, a mail clerk on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, residing in Russell, Iowa, and Belle, wife of Neil Lonychan, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Russell, Iowa.

Having laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the rural schools of Lucas County, Iowa, Charles F. Kinmonth completed a course of study at Elliott's Business College in Burlington, Iowa. Having as a youth become thoroughly acquainted with the various branches of agriculture, he chose the independent calling to which he was reared, and was engaged in farming in his native county until 1904. Migrating then to Western Nebraska, Mr. Kinmonth operated a threshing outfit, and did a good business as an auctioneer for four years. Coming from there to Ballantine, Montana, on April 16, 1908, he took up in Yellowstone County a homestead claim of eighty acres of land, and to this original tract he has since added other valuable tracts, having title now to 1,280 acres of fine Montana land. Leaving his homestead in November, 1916, Mr. Kinmonth assumed possession of his beautiful residence at 114 Avenue B, Billings, and has since devoted his time and attention to auctioneering, a business in which he is an expert.

Mr. Kinmonth married in 1897 at Kearney, Nebraska, Miss Dessa Larimer. Her father, J. R. Larimer, was born in Ohio in 1834, and died in Kearney, Nebraska, April 2, 1918. During his earlier life Mr. Larimer was for many years engaged in the grain and elevator business at Bloomington, Illinois. In 1884 he removed with his family to Kearney, Nebraska, where he continued as a farmer and commission broker until his death. He was a stanch republican in politics and an active and prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the Civil war he served for three years in the Fifty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, doing his duty faithfully as a soldier. Fraternally he was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret E. Jones, was born at Arrowsmith, Illinois, in 1851, and is now a resident of Billings, Montana.

Mr. and Mrs. Kinmonth are the parents of four children, namely: Maurine, a graduate of the Billings High School, is the wife of Preston Trask, of Ballantine, Montana, a well-known and successful ranchman; Clarice, now, in 1919, a junior in the Billings High School; Mildred, an eighth-grade pupil in the public schools, and Eleanor, who is attending school in the first grade. In his political affiliations Mr. Kinmonth is independent, voting for the best men and measures without regard to party prejudice, and fraternally he is a member of Kearney Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Kearney, Nebraska.

JOHN A. HARADER began his career as a teacher. He was connected with schools in four or five different states in the West and Northwest, which was followed by a period of newspaper and convention reporting. But he found the true field for his energies and abilities as an executive in commercial affairs. He is the present manager of the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce, and has made that one of the livest and most influential commercial bodies in Montana.

Mr. Harader was born at Mount Aetna, Iowa, January 12, 1878. His is an uncommon family name, and probably all the Haraders in the United States trace their ancestry back to his great-grandfather, who was one of two brothers coming from Switzerland on the French border and settling in Virginia in 1812. One of the brothers never married. The great-grandfather established his family in Virginia. His son Jacob, grandfather of John A., lived in Virginia for a number of years and after his marriage took his family to Indiana, then to Iowa. He was a farmer and flour miller. He was a stanch Union man, and during the Civil war joined the Union army and was killed in an engagement in Texas. A. Harader, father of John A., was born in Virginia in 1843, and when a boy accompanied his parents to Indiana and then to Iowa. At the age of eighteen, in 1861, he enlisted in the Fourth Iowa Infantry, and served as a gallant and faithful soldier all through the war. He was at Shiloh, Gettysburg, Lookout Mountain, and with Sherman in many of his campaigns. He received a gun shot wound through the chest at Chattanooga. Following the war he returned to Mount Aetna, Iowa, married, and settled down as a merchant in that locality. In 1883 he established the pioneer store at Mount Vernon, South Dakota, then a territory. Later he farmed in South Dakota and about 1898 moved to Cottonwood, Kansas, where he continued farming until he retired. He is now living at Cassoday, Kansas, past seventy-five years of age. He has been prominent in politics in different localities as a republican. At Mount Vernon, South Dakota, he was police judge. He is one of the leading members of the Dunkard Church. A. Harader married Jane Magness, who was born in Ohio in 1851. They had ten children: Ada, wife of M. G. McKenzie, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a member of the Missouri Conference; Jacob, who died in infancy; Jennie, wife of W. A. Bell, a hardware merchant at North Yakima, Washington; Maggie, who died in Texas at the age of thirty-five; William, a merchant at Burns, Kansas; John A., who is the sixth in age among the children; Ward, a teacher in the public schools at Enumclaw, Washington; Mabel, a resident of Seattle, Washington, wife of Wid Vinson, who was with the American Expeditionary Forces and the Army of Occupation in Germany; Blanche, wife of Samuel Vinson, a farmer living at Clements, Kansas; and Benjamin, who received military training at Camp Lewis and was recently mustered out and returned home.

John A. Harader received a public school education. He graduated from the high school at Mount Vernon, South Dakota, in 1897 and spent the following year teaching in Davidson County, that state. He went to Cottonwood, Kansas, with his parents and for a year was principal of the schools at Homestead, Kansas. He is a graduate of the Commercial Department of the Kansas Wesleyan University at Salina, and also attended for one year the State Normal School at Emporia. For four years, beginning in 1902, Mr. Harader was connected with a business college at Superior, Wisconsin. Coming west to Payette, Idaho, he engaged in the real estate business, then traveled through Colorado and on returning to Payette joined the Chamber of Commerce as manager. In 1914 he was called to Yakima, Washington, as manager of the Chamber of Commerce, remaining there two years, when his services were requisitioned by the business men of Bozeman. He has been manager of the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce since 1916, and his business offices are in the Story Block. The organization comprises 300 members, and its membership and effectiveness are in the main a tribute to the organizing and executive abilities of Mr. Harader. Mr. Harader is president of the Montana Association of Commercial Secretaries for the years 1918-19.

For over a year he had all his time and energies enlisted in war work, being chairman of the War Chest at Bozeman, serving as County Food Administrator, working in every Liberty Loan and other campaign, and was also secretary of the Council of Defense. He has been prominent in all movements to develop the state.

Mr. Harader is an independent in politics. He has become affiliated with several fraternal organizations in different towns where he has had his home, including Yakima Lodge of Masons, Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Payette Lodge of Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Harader and family reside at 401 South Eighth Avenue. He married at Payette, Idaho, in 1909, Miss Edith M. Wood, a daughter of A. E. and Elizabeth (Gerould) Wood. Her parents reside at Payette, where her father is a real estate broker. Mrs. Harader is a graduate of the Payette High School. To their marriage were born three children, all members of the home circle, as follows: Gerould, born in August, 1910; Marcus, born in November, 1912; and Frank, born March 17, 1915.

Theodore Reinbold. As a boy in his native city of Newark, Ohio, Theodore Reinbold became interested in automobile mechanics. He tinkered with some of the first practical makes of cars. For a number of years he has been recognized as a past master of everything propelled by a gasoline engine. At Hamilton, Montana, he has developed the largest automobile and garage business in Ravalli County.

Mr. Reinbold is still very young, having been born August 30, 1891. His parents were Christian and Mary Reinbold, both natives of Germany. His father was born in 1859, and as a young man settled in Ohio, where he married, and since his marriage has lived in Newark. He is a stationary engineer and Theodore inherits his mechanical ability. The father is a democrat and a member of the Lutheran Church and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. His wife was killed in a railroad accident at Newark in 1907. They were the parents of five children: Fred, manager of the C. L. Adams lumber yard at Stevensville, Montana; Elizabeth, wife of John Freednour, a glass blower at Newark; Carl August, owner of the Reinbold plumbing and heating establishment at Newark; Theodore; and Otto Christian, an automobile mechanic whose present home is at Spokane, Washington.

Theodore Reinbold acquired a public school education at Newark. He left school at the age of fourteen and went to work in the Ford Garage of that city. He operated cars and did general repair and mechanical work there until 1911. In that year he came to Stevensville, Montana, and for two years had full charge of the cars and trucks owned and operated by the Sunset Orchard Corporation. Another year he spent at the Spokane headquarters of the Holt Manufacturing Company, makers of the celebrated Caterpillar tractor. Mr. Reinbold established a garage and Ford agency at Stevensville, Montana, in 1914. The firm was Stratton & Reinbold, which was continued until May, 1918. At the latter date Mr. Stratton sold out to H. O. Bell of Missoula. The firm is now Bell & Reinbold, and there is a third partner, Harold Holt. Mr. Bell has charge of the H. O. Bell Company, a Ford agency at Missoula, while Mr. Reinbold is in complete charge of the Ford agency and garage at Hamilton. His garage occupies three city blocks, at the corner of Main and Third streets. He handles Ford cars and Fordson tractors and all accessories.

Mr. Reinbold is an independent in politics. He is affiliated with the Lutheran Church and is a member of Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, Crusade Commandery No. 17, Knights Templars, Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte, and is a member of the Hamilton Chamber of Commerce. He owns a modern home on South Fourth Street.

August 12, 1916, at Missoula, he married Miss Vivian Marguerite Stratton, daughter of R. A. and Theressa (Stiern) Stratton, residents of Stevensville. Her father is president of the Montana Farm and Livestock Company. Mrs. Reinbold was educated in the Stevensville High School and in a girls' seminary at Spokane. Mr. and Mrs. Reinbold have one son, Theodore Robert, born February 13, 1918.

Thomas G. Armstrong came to Montana more than thirty years ago. His services have proved valuable to several mercantile organizations and for a number of years past he has been president and director of the Big Timber Supply House and has also acquired and owns some important ranching interests.

Mr. Armstrong was born at Ausable Forks in Clinton County, New York, November 2, 1862, and represents the third generation of the Armstrong family in this country. His grandfather, Thomas Armstrong, was a native of Durham, England, and on coming to America became a farmer in Vermont. He died at Brandon in that state in 1878. George W. Armstrong was born in Vermont in 1842, but spent the greater part of his life in New York State. While at Ausable Forks he managed a large mercantile establishment and was also a superintendent in the J. & J. Rogers Iron Company. In 1899 he removed to Plattsburg, New York, and was bookkeeper for the Davis Provision Company. He died at Plattsburg in 1915. In politics he was a democrat and served a term as clerk of Clinton County. Outside of business and family his chief interest was his church membership as a Methodist. He married Sarah Hodgson, who was born on the Isle of Motte in Lake Champlain in 1837, and is still living at Plattsburg at the advanced age of eighty-two. Thomas G., is the oldest of her six children. Norman, the second in age, is a farmer at Anoka, Minnesota, while Harry, the youngest, is an electrician at Duluth, Minnesota. The other three reside at Plattsburg, New York. Mrs. Nellie Cason is the wife of a bookkeeper, Mrs. Annie Agnew's husband is an attorney, while Ethel is unmarried and lives with her mother.

Thomas G. Armstrong attended rural schools in Clinton County, New York, but at the age of thirteen left his books and studies and began doing for himself. He lived on a farm in Clinton County four years and then went to the mining district of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan at Houghton and for three years was an employe of the Calumet Hecla Mining Company. The next stage of his progress brought him to the Red River Valley of North Dakota, where he was clerk in a store at Hunter two years. Mr. Armstrong arrived on the scene of his permanent career at Big Timber, Montana, in November, 1888. For the next eight years he was employed by the pioneer mercantile firm of Hatch Brothers & Company, then spent two years in the sheep business and ranching, and for eight years was with the H. Bliss Hardware Store. He was a primary factor in establishing the Big Timber Supply House in 1907. This company does an extensive retail and wholesale trade in groceries, hardware, farm implements and other supplies. The offices, plant and warehouses are located on Anderson Street. The business is incorporated with Mr. Armstrong as president, W. S. Widdicomb, vice president, and J. W. Kirkwood, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Armstrong also owns a 320 acre grain ranch in the Gibson district of Sweetgrass County. He has a modern home in Big Timber.

Politically he is identified with the democratic party and is affiliated with Hunter Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Big Timber Camp No. 10610, Modern Woodmen of America.

He married at Livingston, Montana, in 1894, Marie Anderson, a native of Ontario, Canada. They have two children, Nina and Dick. The daughter is a graduate of the Montana State College at Bozeman and the wife of A. D. Burkett, chemist for a cement plant at Trident, Montana. Dick enlisted in June, 1918, and the following August, after completing his training in camp, went overseas with the Expeditionary Forces to France.

Charles H. Draper, publisher of the Picket-Journal of Red Lodge, is a native Montanan, has made his paper the medium of news and history in Carbon County for a number of years, and through a knowledge of the experience of his honored father, Frank W. Draper, probably knows as much of the real history of men and events in Carbon County as any other individual.

Frank W. Draper, his father, was born in Ticonderoga County New York, February 4, 1854, and a few years later his parents, Hiram and Mehitable (Le Crane) Draper, moved west to Illinois and settled at Belvidere. Hiram Draper, also a native of New York State, entered the Union army and lost his life in a battle in 1863. Frank W. Draper grew up in Belvidere, graduated from the high school and at the age of seventeen went with other members of the family to Edgar, Nebraska. He taught there for a year or so and in 1874 went to Sioux City, Iowa, and shortly afterward started for California. From that time forward he had a life of hardship and adventure, and was vitally identified with many of the fundamental activities of the Northwest. About three years after he started for California he was on the way by prairie schooner from Denver to the Black Hills of Dakota, where he became a pioneer furniture merchant in partnership with a Mr. Pepper. Not long afterward he sold his interest and engaged in the drug business for eighteen months. His next experience was as wagon boss for a large freighting company doing business between Bismarck and the Black Hills.

Frank W. Draper drove to Miles City, Montana, in 1880, and took charge of the Diamond R wagon train, which performed a large part of the transportation service out of Miles City in those days. The following winter was one remembered by the oldest inhabitant for the severity of the cold and the excessive snow, when livestock by the thousands perished on the ranges. Traffic and transportation had to be maintained in spite of such conditions and Mr. Draper and his men suffered untold hardships in keeping up the service. Later in that year Mr. Draper moved to Junction City and opened a retail liquor store and a few months later went to Benson's Landing, four miles from where Livingston now stands. Centers of business and industry in those days were seldom permanent, and in order to keep up with rapid changes and fluctuations Mr. Draper built a house in sections, which enabled him to move without loss and inconvenience. When Clark, now Livingston, was started, he was almost immediately on the ground with his section house, and that house is recorded in history as the first building erected there. He continued in business at Clark or Livingston until the fire of 1885 destroyed his property. His next move was to Cooke City, then a lively place, but on November 6, 1886, the smelter shut down and the business and population of the camp dwindled away. The Drapers remained at Cooke City until August, 1887, when he transferred his residence to Nye. This camp had to move when its site was found to be included within the Indian Reservation. The next move proved to be the last one for Mr. Draper. He located at Red Lodge and in partnership with Doctor Macomber opened the first drug store of the town. He sold out his interest in that a year or so later and spent one summer on the ranch, and eventually took up farming and ranching as his regular work. He was living on the ranch when death came to him on July 10, 1901, and removed one of the best loved and most honored citizens of Carbon County.

He was a charter member of the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Livingston and the Woodmen of the World at Red Lodge, was a stanch republican and a factor in local politics, and is remembered as the first school trustee at Red Lodge, hiring the first school teacher in 1888.

September 13, 1882, he married Miss Matilda Martin. In the absence of ministers in the Montana of that day the ceremony was performed by Judge Braden. Mrs. Draper was born in Germany, where her father died, and she came to this country with her mother, two sisters and two brothers in 1874, locating at Sioux City, Iowa, and later going to Miles City, Montana, with friends. She is now living at the home ranch four miles northwest of Red Lodge. She is the mother of six children: Irwin Albert, also on the home ranch; Alvin, his twin brother, who died in infancy; Edwin W., a rancher at the home place; and Charles H.; and twin sisters who died at birth.

Charles H. Draper was born at Nye City, Montana, March 25, 1888. He acquired a limited education in the rural schools of Carbon County, the public schools of Red Lodge, and took the preparatory and the regular collegiate course at the State College at Bozeman, where he graduated in 1912. He is a member of the Sigma Chi College Fraternity.

Since leaving college Mr. Draper has been continuously in journalism. He bought an interest in the Carbon County Journal in 1912, becoming its editor and manager and in 1913 acquired all the property. The Carbon County Journal was established June 26, 1909, at Joliet, and was moved to Red Lodge January 1, 1912. It is a democratic paper and the official organ of Carbon County, going to most of the homes of that county and also having a large circulation in surrounding counties. The offices of the plant are at 211 Broadway. In October, 1918, Mr. Draper also acquired the Red Lodge Picket, consolidating the two under the present name of Picket-Journal. The Picket was established in 1888, one of the early papers of Montana. Mr. Draper now has the best equipped and most conveniently arranged printing and publishing plant in the Montana weekly newspaper field.

He is a democrat, though never an aspirant for public office, and served four years as chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee. He is a vestryman of the Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the exclusive local social club known as the Inquiry Club, and is on the governing board of the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Draper owns his modern home at 511 North Hauser Avenue.

May 14, 1914, at Kalispell, he married Miss Meryl A. Fitch, daughter of John H. C. and Lena J. (Babcock) Fitch. Her parents still live at Kalispell. Her father is a pioneer druggist of that town. Mrs. Draper is a graduate of the Flathead County High School and finished her education in the State College at Bozeman. To their marriage have been born two children: Richard John, born September 2, 1916, and Gayle Adele, born April 15, 1919.

DANIEL MARTIN CROWLEY. The type of business ability and citizenship represented by the late Daniel Martin Crowley is a distinctive contribution to any community. The city of Lewistown was the place honored by his residence for many years, he was one of the earliest settlers there and had the honor of erecting the second frame building on the site.

Mr. Crowley, who died January 19, 1906, was very successful in business and joined his success with traits of kindness and generosity that made him popular wherever known. It is said that one of the largest concourses of people ever witnessed in that community followed his body to its last resting place. Mr. Crowley was born at Brasher Falls, New York, January 17, 1856, being the third of nine children of John and Mary (Hurley) Crowley. His parents were natives of Ireland and came to America on their wedding tour, where John Crowley spent the rest of his life as a farmer.

On his father's farm Daniel Martin Crowley lived to the age of nineteen. He had a common school education. In 1875 he started for the Northwest, and for several years worked in lumber camps and in other occupations in Minnesota. He came to Montana in 1879, and with his brother John was associated in ranching near Townsend. He came to Lewistown about 1881. As one of the original settlers he took up a homestead, and rapidly acquired interests that made him one of the big men financially and otherwise in this section of the state. He was perhaps most widely known because of his success in developing strains of horses for the track. Some of the fastest and best horses ever produced in Montana were bred or trained in his stables. He also owned several ranches, was a stockholder in the Electric Light and Telephone Company at Lewistown, and his investments covered almost the entire state. He served as deputy sheriff of Fergus County, but otherwise took no prominent part in politics except to aid the republican party and his friends.

Since his death his extensive business interests have been capably managed by Mrs. Crowley, who still resides in Lewistown. She shared with her late husband in generous plans and helpfulness toward her community and was very prominent in the various war auxiliary movements in recent years. The Crowleys as a family are active in the Catholic Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Crowley were married at Lewistown August 23, 1898. Her maiden name was Annie E. Glancy. Her father, John Glancy, came to Montana in 1886 and was a successful rancher in the Judith Basin. Mrs. Crowley has two sons, Charles J. and Glancy D.

CLYDE H. LORANCE, president of the Lorance Vulcanizing and Tire Company at Billings, is one of the progressive and enterprising young business citizens of this flourishing center of commercial activity, who has recognized the trend of the times, taken cognizance of his opportunities and established himself in a line of effort in which his inherent abilities have been given full play in the working out of success and the development of a prosperous enterprise. He was born at Beatrice, Nebraska, November 7, 1890, a son of O. P. and May B. (Bradley) Lorance.

William H. Lorance, the grandfather of Clyde H., was born in 1828, in Tennessee, and was there educated and reared to young manhood, when he went to Missouri and was there married. For a time he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in that state, but subsequently pushed on to the frontier of Nebraska, in 1865, and was a pioneer in the vicinity of Brownville, adjoining which town he owned a farm. In addition to developing a productive farming property he carried on extensive operations as a contractor, and was also successful in his activities as a quarryman, being a man of industrious habits and natural abilities. In 1893 he retired from active labor and took up his residence at Auburn, Nebraska, where he served as justice of the peace and rounded out an honorable career, his death occurring in 1912. At that time he was the last surviving Mexican war veteran of Nemaha County, Nebraska. Mr. Lorance was an active and general supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a stanch democrat in his political allegiance. He married Mary Owen, a native of Missouri, who died at Brownville, Nebraska, and they became the parents of the following children: John H., who is connected with a packing company at Kansas City, Missouri, as a machinist; Doctor B. F., a successful practicing physician at Auburn, Nebraska; Thomas Arthur, of Houston, in charge of the buying for the silk department of the largest department store of that city or vicinity, and he lost his wife in the great Galveston flood while a resident of that city; O. P.; Ed, a boilermaker of Omaha, Nebraska; William I., a large ranchman of Alliance, Nebraska; Belle, the wife of Rev. Clyde Metcalf, a Methodist Episcopal minister with a charge at Visalia, California; Ethel, the wife of Tom Reeves, owner of a vast sheep ranch, with 20,000 head of sheep, at Flagstaff, Arizona; and Hope, who married a tonsorialist of Los Angeles, California.

O. P. Lorance was born in Gentry County, Missouri, July 2, 1863, and was reared and married in Nebraska. He was brought up as a farmer's son, but soon made his way to the big cities, and for eighteen years was identified with the big packing firm of Swift & Company at South St. Paul, Minnesota. In the spring of 1914 he came to Montana and settled on a farm in Yellowstone County, purchasing one-half section of land. On this he carried on operations until the year 1917, when he took up his residence at Billings, where he is now secretary and treasurer of the Lorance Vulcanizing and Tire Company. Mr. Lorance belongs to Billings Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and the Billings Midland Club, is independent in politics, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Mary B. Bradley, who was born at Grass Lake, Michigan, in 1871, and of their children, Clyde H. is the only survivor.

Clyde H. Lorance attended the public schools of the Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, in Minnesota, as well as a private high school, but at the age of eighteen years put aside his studies to embark in business affairs. For a time he followed the vocation of surveying and was subsequently employed in the Stock Yards at South St. Paul for one year, following which he spent four years in the employ of the Wells Fargo Express Company at St. Paul. In 1914 he accompanied his parents to Montana and settled with his father on the farm in Yellowstone County, where he remained until 1917, the year of the organization of the Lorance Vulcanizing and Tire Company. Under his capable and energetic management this business has grown to large and important proportions, and the business house, at No. 3012 First Avenue, North, has been the scene of enlargement and additions, both as to building and stock. In addition to doing a large business in the line of vulcanizing tires, the firm sells new automobile tires, solid rubber tires, automobile accessories and gasoline, and its business has shown a consistent, healthy and gratifying increase since its inception. Mr. Lorance has shown himself a business man of marked attainments, and has already established himself in a substantial place among the leaders of the younger generations engaged in commercial pursuits at Billings. Mr. Lorance is independent in his political views, and his only public office has been that of constable, which he filled while a resident of Acton, Montana, he then being engaged in farming with his father. Mr. Lorance has made the most of his opportunities for investment, and is the owner of three handsome and valuable ranches, an irrigated tract of forty acres at Warden, Montana; a dry farming tract of 160 acres at Custer, Montana; and an irrigated farm of 100 acres at Fishtail, Montana. Mr. Lorance belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church and is a member of the Billings Midland Club.

In 1911, at St. Paul, Minnesota, Mr. Lorance was married to Miss Perlie Marie Kimball, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Kimball, the latter of whom resides at Billings. Mr. Kimball, who is deceased, was for a number of years clerk of the Modern Woodmen of America at St. Paul, and later engaged in ranching in Yellowstone County, Montana. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lorance: June, born June 28, 1915; and Jean, born in 1917.

Don C. Taylor, superintendent of schools at Hamilton, is an educator whose work has brought him favorable attention not only in Montana, but in other states of the northwest and southwest. He began teaching in his home state of Michgan, and has made education his life work.

Mr. Taylor was born in Allegan County, Michigan, December 1, 1876. In the paternal line he is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, while his mother's family were English colonial settlers in Massachusetts. The Taylors first settled in New York. The grandfather of the Hamilton educator was John Taylor, who was born near Ogdensburg, New York, lived many years there and afterward became a pioneer in northern Wisconsin. He was a stone mason and farmer, and died at Augusta, Wisconsin, at the age of forty-five.

Joel W. Taylor was born in New York in 1843, and at the age of sixteen moved to Allegan County, Michigan. That district of southern Michigan was then heavily covered with the finest quality of pine timber, and for a number of years he was actively engaged in lumbering, until the center of the milling industry was transferred to other fields. After that he remained as a farmer in Allegan County and died there on July 4, 1895. For ten years he held the office of township supervisor, was a republican in politics, an active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church and affiliated with the Knights of Maccabees. Joel W. Taylor married Emma Crawford, who was born in Barry County, Michigan, in 1845, and died in Allegan County in 1910. Don C. is the oldest of their children. Joel Clare is a train dispatcher with the Michigan Central Railway at Holland, Michigan. Burke W. is an employe of the Dodge Brothers Motor Company at Detroit. Florence is the wife of John Prakken, office manager for the Bush & Lane Piano Company at Seattle, Washington.

Don C. Taylor grew up on his father's farm in the rural schools of Allegan County. He spent three years in the preparatory department of Hope College in Holland, Michigan, and afterward took the regular four years' course in Hope College, graduating with his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1905. In the meantime he had taught four years in the rural schools of his native county. In September, 1905, Mr. Taylor went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where he was principal of the Second Ward School for six years. From the southwest he went to the northwest, and for a year followed commercial occupations in Spokane. In 1912 he became superintendent of schools at Murray, Idaho, remaining there two years, and for five years was superintendent at Mullan in Idaho. Mr. Taylor accepted his present responsibilities as superintendent of schools at Hamilton in July, 1919. The local school system under his supervision comprises three schools, a staff of twenty-five teachers and an enrollment of six hundred scholars.

Mr. Taylor has been a member of the National Education Association since 1908 and also belongs to Montana State Teachers' Association. He is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church and is junior warden of Mullan Lodge No. 50, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. His home is on South Third Street in Hamilton.

In 1900, in Allegan County, Michigan, he married Miss Lucinda Beery, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Pritchard) Beery. Her father was an Allegan County farmer and is now deceased. Her mother, member of one of the most prominent families of Allegan County, resides with Mr. and Mrs. Taylor. Mrs. Taylor is a graduate of the Allegan High School. To Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have been born five children: Marjorie, born May 31, 1901, now in her first year in the State University of Montana; Don Milan, who died at the age of ten and a half years; Joel Wilson, born August 26, 1904, a freshman in the Hamilton High School; Emerson B., born November 4, 1909, a student in the grammar school; and Don C., Jr., born February 21, 1915.

Fred L. Gibson. In no profession is there a career more open to talent than is that of the law, and in no field of endeavor is there demanded a more careful preparation, a more thorough appreciation of the absolute ethics of life or of the underlying principles which form the basis of all human rights and privileges. Possessing all the requisite qualities of the successful lawyer, Fred L. Gibson, of Livingston, stands today among the eminent practitioners of his section of the state.

Fred L. Gibson was born at Dundee, Michigan, on September 20, 1874, the son of Matthew and Ellen (Carney) Gibson, the former of whom died in Madison County, Montana, in 1894, and the latter is now making her home with her son, the immediate subject of this sketch. Matthew Gibson was born in 1828 in Cattaraugus County, New York, but in his early youth the family moved to Southern Michigan, where he was reared. His permanent residence was in Monroe County, that state, where he followed the trade of a plasterer and where also he operated a farm. In 1888 he removed to Clermont County, Ohio, and he followed agricultural pursuits there until April, 1894, when he came to

H. A. Simmons.

Madison County, Montana, where his death occurred shortly afterwards. He was a democrat in his political faith and was a highly esteemed citizen. While living in Michigan Mr. Gibson married Ellen B. Carney, who was born in 1843 in Monroe County, that state, and to them were born two children, Fred L., and Guy, the latter of whom is now a farmer in Madison County, Montana.

Fred L. Gibson received his elementary education in the rural schools of Monroe County, Michigan, and in 1891 graduated from the high school at Owensville, Ohio. In 1894 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Madison County, Montana, and during the following two years was engaged in teaching school. Then for the same length of time he operated a ranch, but these vocations did not satisfy his ambitious spirit, and he entered the law department of the University of Nebraska. At the end of a year he became the publisher of the Alder Gulch Times at Virginia City, which engaged his attention for about a year. In June, 1899, Mr. Gibson was admitted to the bar and entered upon the practice of his profession. In the spring of 1901 he removed to Forsyth, Montana, and helped to organize Rosebud County, of which he was appointed county attorney, a position which he filled for two and a half years. Resigning that position in 1903, he removed to Livingston, where he has since resided and where he has received emphatic recognition as a lawyer of unusual ability and as a citizen of progressive and yet soundly conservative ideas. He has since coming to Livingston commanded a large share of the legal practice in the local courts and has been successful in both criminal and civil practice. On January 1, 1917, Mr. Gibson formed a law partnership with Vard Smith, under the firm name of Gibson & Smith, with offices in the National Park Bank building.

Politically Mr. Gibson is a republican, and ever since reaching his majority has taken a live interest in public affairs. His abilities and public spirit were quickly recognized after he came to his state, and in 1899 he was elected to represent Madison County in the Sixth Legislature. In 1909 he represented Park County in the Eleventh Legislature, in which he rendered effective service as a member of the judiciary and other committees. In 1918 the citizens of Park County again chose him to represent them in the Legislature, where he again was assigned to some of the most important committees of the House, including those on judiciary of which he was chairman, and revenues and taxation. During 1907 and 1908 Mr. Gibson served as city attorney of Livingston and in 1911-12 was county attorney of Park County, his services in both positions being eminently satisfactory. He is deeply interested in educational matters and is now serving as a member of the county High School Board. He is a director of the National Park Bank. He is a member of the Park County Bar Association, the Montana State Bar Association and the American Bar Association.

In 1899, at Meadow Creek, Montana, Mr. Gibson married Winifred Fletcher, the daughter of William A. and Ellen (Gordon) Fletcher, the latter of whom is now residing at Meadow Creek. The father, who is deceased, was a pioneer ranch owner in Madison County. To Mr. and Mrs. Gibson have been born the following children: Kathleen is a senior in the Park County High School at Livingston, Alice is a freshman in the same school, and Fred L., who was born on April 18, 1917.

Years of conscientious work have brought to Mr. Gibson not only increase of practice and reputation, but also that growth of legal knowledge and that wide and accurate judgment the possession of which constitutes marked excellence in the profession. In discussions of the principles of law he is noted for clearness of statement and candor; he seeks faithfully for firm ground and having once found it nothing can drive him from his position. His zeal for a client never leads him to urge an argument which in his judgment is not in harmony with the law, and in all the important litigation with which he has been connected no one has ever charged him with anything calculated to cast a reflection upon him or his profession.

Hubert Alfred Simmons. The history of Hubert Alfred Simmons reads like a story thrown on the screen of life, for it shows how an industrious lad climbed from a lowly position to one of responsibility, and then, having discharged his duty to his mother and younger brothers and sisters, earned the money to educate himself for a learned profession in which he gained so distinguished a reputation that he was selected more than once to represent the people in high public office, at present being county attorney of Carbon County. He was born at Spadra, Arkansas, November 13, 1881, a son of Ferdinand Simmons, who was born in Germany in 1851 and died at Spadra, Arkansas, in 1888. He was reared in Germany, and, according to the custom, gave his country the usual military service, but so convinced did he become of the hardships this entailed that after his marriage he came to the United States so that his children would not be compelled to enter the army, and in 1879 became mine foreman at Oweta, Arkansas, and later held the same position at Spadra in the same state. Prior to this he had bought a farm at Spadra, and there died, firm in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church. Politically he was a republican. He was married to Anna Elizabeth Graff, born in Germany in 1861, who survives him and makes her home at Red Lodge. Their children were as follows: Hugo, who died in infancy; Hubert Alfred, whose name heads this review; Frank, who is a coal miner of Klein, Montana; William, who is the only policeman and constable of Bear Creek, Montana, and also serves as deputy sheriff; Otto J., who owns the only abstract business of Red Lodge. The mother of this family was married second to William Youngholter, now of Red Lodge, who came to the United States from Germany when about twenty years of age. Until 1917 he was a member of the police force of Red Lodge, but is now engaged in mining. Mr. and Mrs. Youngholter became the parents of the following children: John, who died in infancy; Katherine, who married C. R. Northrop, who lives at Red Lodge and is employed by the Chapman State Bank; Anna, who died at the age of eight years; and Mayme, who married Dave Henderson, a mine mechanic of Red Lodge.

Hubert Alfred Simmons attended the public schools of Spadra and Jenny Lind, leaving school to engage in mining and farming, living on the homestead during the time he was so engaged. In 1898 the family came to Belt, Montana, and he was given employment during the summer and fall of that year on a section of the railroad, and in the winter entered the mine. In the spring of 1899 there was a strike at the mine, and he returned to section work for a short time, improving his position by going with an extra gang of workmen to repair bridges at Belt on the Great Northern Railroad, a difficult and dangerous undertaking. Until September, 1899, he remained with this railroad, when he accompanied his mother and her family to Red Lodge, at which time he engaged with a grading outfit building the switches at the mines, but left in December of that year to resume mining. In 1901 Mr. Simmons began clerking in a general store, and at the same time took a commercial course in the International Correspondence School. Always ambitious, he resolved to fit himself for the legal profession. He took a business course at Red Lodge, and then began to read law at nights while working in the day, thriftily saving every penny he could spare from the bare necessities. Having prepared himself as far as lay in his power and saved up $1,000, Mr. Simmons entered the Indiana law school of the University of Indianapolis, from which he was graduated May 23, 1906, with the degree of LL. B. Additional expenses aside from those he had figured upon necessitated the earning of more money than the initial $1,000, and Mr. Simmons for eighteen months eked out his scanty resources by waiting on the table in a hotel as have so many others before him who regarded, as he, no sacrifice too great in order to secure the proper training.

Following his graduation Mr. Simmons returned to Red Lodge and for a short time was in the office of Judge George W. Pierson, and in the fall of 1906 was elected clerk of the court to fill an unexpired term of two years, and re-elected in 1908 and 1912. In 1916 he was placed upon the regular republican ticket for county attorney, to which office he was elected by a gratifying majority, and was re-elected to the same office in 1918. His offices are in the United States National Bank Building. A consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he is active in its good work. Mr. Simmons belongs to Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he was master for two terms; and Carbon Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, of Red Lodge. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Carbon County Bar Association, of which he is vice president. He has been a member of the Republican State Central Committee for Carbon County since 1914. A man of affairs, he is vice president of the Eagle Coal Company of Red Lodge, and secretary of the W. B. Innes & Company, of Billings, Montana. His modern residence at No. 518 North Platt Street, is owned by him.

On June 1, 1907, Mr. Simmons was married to Miss Ellen Freeman, a daughter of William and Mary (Robinson) Freeman, of Red Lodge, where Mr. Freeman is engaged in mining. Mr. and Mrs. Simmons have the following children: Hubert Alfred, Jr., who was born February 10, 1910, and Helen Annie, who was born April 20, 1918, and her twin sister, Margaret Ida.

JOHN W. CLARK. A man of brains and intellect, keen-witted and enterprising, John W. Clark, a well known resident of Billings, has won a brilliant record as a commercial traveler, and as a representative of the Oliver Chilled Plow Company has achieved distinguished success, winning a commanding position in the ranks of his fellow-salesmen. A son of the late George H. Clark, he was born at Stamford, McLean County, Illinois, July 31, 1876. His paternal grandfather, Milton Clark, a tailor by trade, spent his entire life of ninety-seven years in Lancashire, England.

Born in 1853 in Lancashire, England, George H. Clark there spent the days of his boyhood and youth. In 1871, long before attaining his majority, he immigrated to this country, locating at Stamford, Illinois, where he was engaged in general farming for many seasons. Removing to Gibson City, Illinois, he continued his agricultural labors in that vicinity from 1889 until 1900, when he purchased a farm at Indianola, Iowa. To the improvements already inaugurated he added others of much value, making it one of the most desirable pieces of property in the neighborhood. Retiring from active work in 1914, he made his home in the village of Indianola until his death April 18, 1915. A republican of the old school, he was prominent in local affairs, and while in Stamford, Illinois, serving as deputy sheriff and constable. He was a Presbyterian in religion, and a generous contributor toward the support of the church. He married Sarah Bossingham, who was born in Stamford, Illinois, in 1855, and now resides in Indianola, Iowa. The following children were born to them: John W., the special subject of this sketch; Clarence, a rancher at Pompey's Pillar, Montana, died of the influenza in December, 1918; Clara, twin sister of Clarence, married Percy Last, a farmer at Indianola, Iowa; Ada, wife of Bruce Nunemaker, who is engaged in farming at Indianola; Fred, also a farmer, resides in Indianola; Ernest, of Indianola, is a tiller of the soil; Fern, wife of James Blackford, a successful agriculturist of Indianola, and Albert, living with his mother on the home farm.

Leaving the public schools of Stamford, Illinois, at the early age of thirteen years, John W. Clark accompanied the family to Gibson City, and the following year assisted his father on the farm. Having a natural aptitude for mechanics, he secured a position in Peoria, Illinois, and for seven years was there employed in a threshing machine shop, becoming an expert workman. Continuing then with the same firm, the Colean Manufacturing Company, he was transferred to Fargo, North Dakota, and for two years was traveling expert and salesman. Remaining in Fargo, Mr. Clark entered the employ of the Huber Manufacturing Company, which made a specialty of threshing machines, and was with that concern nine months. For two years thereafter he held a similar position in the same city with Reeves & Company. His next venture was with the Minneapolis Threshing Machine Company as traveling salesman, his headquarters being at Fargo.

In 1911 Mr. Clark made his advent into Montana, coming to Billings with the Moline Plow Company as traveling salesman; his territory including all of Montana. In 1912 he took up a homestead of 280 acres lying seven miles south of Billings, and he still owns the ranch on which he lived for four years, making extensive improvements upon it during that time. Returning to Billings, he was engaged in the real estate business a year, and then went back on the road, traveling for the Sandusky Tractor Company for fifteen months. Accepting then his present position as expert traveling salesman for the Oliver Chilled Plow Company, he covers a territory embracing the south half of the state, and in his work is meeting with characteristic success, his sales being large and eminently satisfactory to all concerned. He has accumulated valuable property, and in addition to having title to his ranch owns his pleasant residence at 615 South Thirty-fourth Street. He is a stockholder in the Farmers Elevator at Billings and served as its first president, resigning the position on account of being away from home so much of the time.

Mr. Clark is a steadfast republican in politics, and is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of Jamestown Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Jamestown, North Dakota; of Hiawatha Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; of Hiawatha Commandery, Knights Templar, at Jamestown, North Dakota; of Billings Camp, Woodmen of the World; of Jamestown Lodge, Beneveloent and Protective Order of Elks; of Illinois Council, United Commercial Travelers of America, and of Billings Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

Mr. Clark married, July 16, 1916, at Big Timber, Montana, Mrs. Sigred Marie (Malmberg) Gray, a daughter of C. F. Malmberg. Mr. Malmberg was born in 1847, in Sweden, where he grew to man's estate. Coming to the United States in the spring of 1884, he settled in Omaha, Nebraska, where he followed his trade of carpenter and cabinet maker until his death October 28, 1916. He was a republican in politics, a member of the Swedish Mission Church and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His first wife, whose maiden name was Sophia Palm, was born in Sweden in 1852, and died in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1898, leaving five children, as follows: Joe, engaged in the milling business at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Ada, wife of Frank Dudley, who has been connected with the street railway service of Omaha, Nebraska, for the past twenty years, being now an auditor; Sigred Marie, who became Mrs. Clark; Albin Robert, associated with a wholesale shoe firm at Omaha, and Carl Henry, also living in Omaha, Nebraska, occupies a position in one of the banks of that city. After the death of his first wife Mr. Malmberg married a second time, Huldah Carlson becoming his wife, and to them one child was born, Harry, who lives with his brother, Carl Henry, in Omaha, and is attending the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have no children.

William Young Pemberton. Judge Pemberton is probably the only living member of the Montana bar whose memory and experience might be quoted as authoritative on subjects connected with the history of the early territorial bar. He came to Montana, fresh from his law studies, in 1863, and as a lawyer and subsequently as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court he has participated in the development of Montana law, courts and precedence from the very beginning of organized civil conditions in the territory and state.

Judge Pemberton, who is one of the advisory editors of this publication, was born at Nashville, Tennessee, June 1, 1841, a son of William and Martha (Brooks) Pemberton. He is of English and Scotch ancestry and the Pembertons were early settlers in Old Virginia. Judge Pemberton grew up in Missouri, attended public schools, the Masonic College at Lexington, Missouri, and graduated LL. B. from the Cumberland University Law School at Lebanon, Tennessee, in 1861. For about a year he practiced law in Missouri, and in 1863 arrived at Virginia City, Montana. He was one of the few college trained and regularly qualified lawyers in that pioneer mining camp. In the work of bringing about law and order and a system of civil government under the auspices of the Territory of Montana, Judge Pemberton played a notable part. In 1865 he moved to Helena, then only a mining town, and practiced law there for several years. In 1868 he went back to Missouri, and he also practiced as a lawyer in the State of Texas. Judge Pemberton located at Butte in 1880 and since 1909 has again resided at Helena.

He was elected district attorney of the West Side District in 1882, and prosecuted cases arising from most of the counties of Western Montana. He was re-elected in 1884. In 1891 he was appointed District Judge of the Second Judicial District, and about a year later was elected and qualified for the highest position in the State Judiciary, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. He began his duties January 1, 1893, and served until 1899.

After retiring from the Bench Judge Pemberton looked after the interests of a large clientage, including some prominent corporations. Since June, 1909, however, he has given his entire time and attention to his duties as librarian of the State Historical and Miscellaneous Library at Helena. Judge Pemberton has been one of the prominent democrats of Montana from territorial times to the present. He is a Mason and is a former president of the Society of Montana Pioneers.

Judge Pemberton was an infant when his parents died in Tennessee, and he knows little of his ancestry. His grandmother on his mother's side was a Powell, whose father was at Yorktown under Washington at the close of the Revolution. On October 26, 1865, at Helena, Judge Pemberton married Clara May Hutchison, daughter of Major John C. Hutchison. He has four children: Warren T., who married Ollie Minor; Alice M., wife of W. H. Allen; Early P., who is married and lives in Missouri; and Lulu, wife of Harry A. Rheem.

Daniel H. Billmeyer, M. D. Doctor Billmeyer came to Montana about thirty-five years ago, and for a long time was a company physician and surgeon with the Northern Pacific Railway. Since 1905 he has been engaged in a general practice at Plains, and is proprietor of a well equipped hospital, one of the best institutions of its kind in Northwestern Montana.

The Billmeyer family came originally from Alsace-Lorraine and were colonial settlers in Pennsylvania. The grandfather of Dr. Billmeyer was Martin Billmeyer, who spent all his life in Pennsylvania and was a farmer. Peter Billmeyer, father of the doctor, was born at Chilaquisa, Pennsylvania, in 1813, and also lived all his life in that state. For many years he was in the iron business, and was the first sheriff of Columbia County. He was a Democrat and a member of the Lutheran church. He died at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1904. His wife was Mahila Roat, who was born at Chilaquisa in 1824 and died at Bloomsburg in 1913. They had four children: Frank, an attorney at New York City; Emma, who died at Philadelphia in 1917 the wife of A. J. Williams; Daniel Harrison; and Blanche, wife of Howard Brayton, a business man of New York City.

Daniel Harrison Billmeyer was born at Bloomsburg, Columbia County, Pennsylvania, January 28, 1864, was educated in the local schools, including high school, and took special studies in the State Normal College at Bloomsburg. From there he entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, from which he received his M. D. degree in 1884. Dr. Billmeyer began practice in Montana at Thompson Falls, being there a short time. For three years he was assistant surgeon in the Northern Pacific Hospital at Missoula, and was then transferred to Rosslyn, Washington, as chief surgeon for the Northern Pacific Coal Company. He was there during the strike troubles of 1888. Following that for five years he was again assistant surgeon of the Railway Hospital at Missoula, after which he left Montana and practiced medicine at Waupan, Wisconsin, until 1905. On returning to this state he located at Plains, where he has been in general practice. He established his private hospital in 1914. His hospital clientage is drawn from all over Western Montana. He has facilities for accommodating twelve patients. Dr. Billmeyer has served several times as coroner of Sanders County, and is a member of the County, State, and American Medical associations. He is a stockholder in the Helena Building and Loan Association. Politically he is a democrat and is affiliated with the Lutheran church and is a member of Waupun Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Waupun Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and also of the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Waupun, Wisconsin.

In 1892, at Missoula, he married Miss Georgia Holmes, daughter of George and Eliza (Hadden) Holmes. Her mother resides at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, where her father, a traveling salesman, died. Doctor and Mrs. Billmeyer have two children: Harrison, who graduated from the high school at Plains and was a clerk for the Northern Pacific Railway, died in 1918 at the early age of twenty-four; Blanche, born September 1, 1897, is a graduate of the Plains High School and is still at home.

ROBERT D. SHORTHILL has lived in Montana since he was three years of age, and from boyhood has been identified with the commercial affairs of Livingston either as clerk or since 1912 as an independent merchant. He has one of the leading grocery stores in Southern Montana.

Mr. Shorthill was born in Trinidad, Colorado, October 20, 1882. Some of his family have participated in the pioneer development of Montana. His grandfather, David R. Shorthill, is well remembered by some of the old timers in the Yellowstone Valley. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1825, was with a Pennsylvania regiment in the Civil war, and in 1869 made his first trip to the Northwest, spending about two years prospecting in Emigrant Gulch, Montana. He then went back to Pennsylvania and in 1879 finally settled in Park County, Montana, homesteading 160 acres on the Yellowstone River. He lived there until his death in 1900. He was a republican, a Methodist, and a member of the Masonic fraternity.

John R. Shorthill, father of the Livingston merchant, was born in Pennsylvania in 1847, lived in his native state until after his marriage, and spent many years as a railroad man, beginning in Pennsylvania and afterward serving various railroads in Mexico, Arizona and Texas. In 1885 he came to Bozeman, Montana, and on the 17th of March of that year homesteaded 160 acres on Yellowstone River, sixteen miles south of Livingston. He was a prosperous pioneer, developed a fine farm and ranch of 320 acres and lived in that environment until his death in 1914. He was a republican and a Methodist. John R. Shorthill married Alice Divelbliss, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1851 and died on the Montana farm in 1910. May, the oldest of the children, became the wife of Thomas E. Allen and both are now deceased. Charles A. lives on a ranch on the Yellowstone River in Park County, Dave occupies the old homestead. Lizzie is the wife of a railroad engineer and lives in Portland, Oregon.

Robert D. Shorthill, youngest of the family, attended country schools in Park County, and at the age of fourteen left his father's ranch and began his commercial experience at Livingston. He worked for several firms of grocers, being a clerk steadily for sixteen years. In 1912 he entered the grocery business with George D. Allen under the name Allen & Shorthill, establishing their store at 102 North Main Street. Mr. Shorthill is now sole proprietor of this business, one of the largest stocked grocery stores in Livingston and emphasizing the quality of its service.

Mr. Shorthill is a republican, a Methodist, and is affiliated with Park Lodge No. 117, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Livingston, Livingston Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Livingston Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose and Zephyr Camp No. 151, Woodmen of the World. He is also active in the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club and a stockholder and member of the Railway Club of Livingston. His residence is at 223 South Sixth Street.

October 22, 1913, at Livingston, he married Miss Carrie Boyd, a native of New York State. She is a graduate of a shorthand school in Vermont.

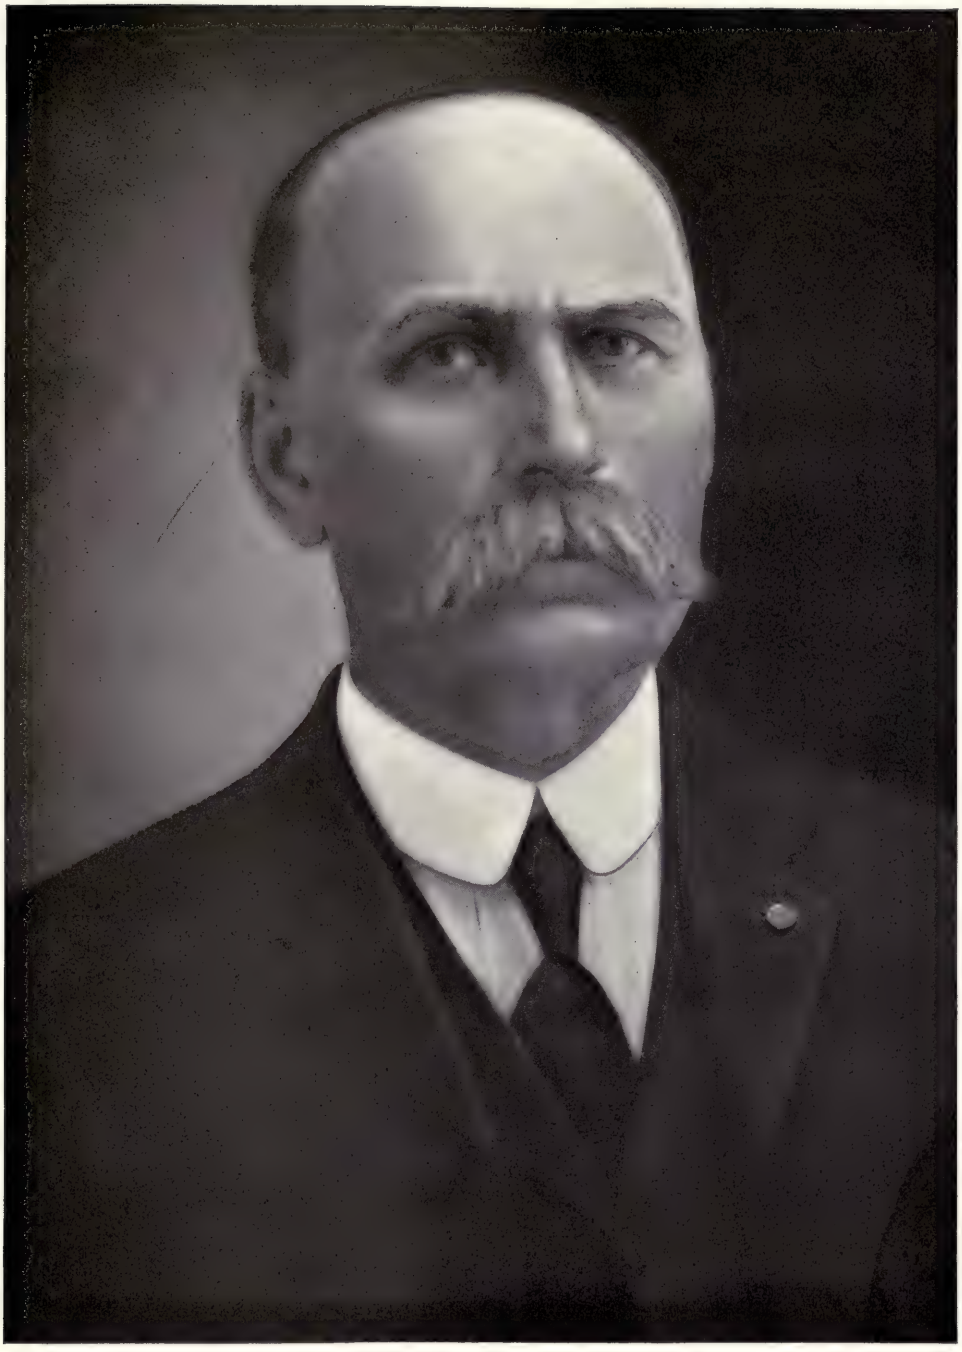
CHARLES WILSON, one of the best known citizens of Carbon County, a retired merchant, well known in fraternal and civic circles, has been a resident of Montana for over thirty years and has had an exceedingly busy life since boyhood.

He was born at Gordon in Berwickshire, Scotland, August 5, 1846. His ancestors were Scotch farmers for generations. His grandfather was Charles Wilson, who spent all his life in Scotland, and his maternal grandfather was Andrew Dobie, who owned a small farm in Scotland. Francis Wilson, father of Charles, was born in Scotland in 1820, followed farming there, for four years was a policeman in Greenlaw, Scotland, and in 1855 brought his family to the United States. He was an Iowa pioneer, settling on a farm at Delhi. He was also a brick and tile maker. He died at Delhi April 2, 1864, at the comparatively early age of forty-four. He was a member of the Established Church of Scotland, the Presbyterian, and was an Odd Fellow. Francis Wilson married Elizabeth Dobie. She was born in Berwickshire, Scotland, July 13, 1820, and at her old home in Delhi, Iowa, she recently celebrated her ninety-ninth birthday. Charles Wilson is the oldest of her children. A. D., the second in age, was last heard of while employed as a foreman for a mining company at Cripple Creek, Colorado, in 1904, and on leaving there went to Arizona. Frank is a farmer at Delhi, Iowa. Christina lives at Manchester, Iowa, widow of J. B. Smith, a farmer. J. D. lives on a farm between Alberta and Chokio, Minnesota. Agnes is the wife of J. T. Brown, a farmer at Milltown, Wisconsin.

Charles Wilson had some education in the schools of Scotland, attended school in Delhi, Iowa, from the age of nine, but in 1863 left school and owing to his father's death the following year, being the oldest son, he had to assume the responsibility of caring for his mother and remained with her until he was twenty-one. Some of his early experiences were working in stone quarries, as a railroad man, and one summer operating an engine in a distillery at Guttenberg, Iowa. After that he farmed in Delaware County, Iowa, until 1877, and for the following ten years was employed by the Fort Dodge Coal Company near Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Mr. Wilson came out to Montana in 1887. He was one of the early residents of Red Lodge and for one summer followed the trade of carpenter. After that he was a stationary engineer until 1896, in which year he established a confectionery store and bottling works. He built that up to prosperous proportions and sold out the plant in 1910 to the firm of Brooks & Powell. He fully intended to retire and did so at that time, but in 1916 he and Neil D. Argo bought back the bottling works. The management devolved on Mr. Argo and in October, 1918, Mr. Wilson sold his interest to Mr. Argo.

Mr. Wilson has always affiliated with the democratic party in politics. He served as police judge of Red Lodge for two years. He is one of the oldest Odd Fellows in the State of Montana and the oldest past grand at Red Lodge. He joined that order January 25, 1873, and has a forty year jewel for continuous membership. He was through all the chairs of his local lodge as long ago as 1875. He is now a past grand of Garfield Lodge No. 36,



Chas Wilson

Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On January 2, 1886, he became a member of the Knights of Pythias, served as chancellor of his lodge in Iowa and at present is affiliated with Park Lodge No. 22. In Masonry his lodge affiliation is with Star in the West Lodge No. 40, of which he was master in 1892-93 and again in 1909-10. He is also affiliated with Carbon Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is past patron of Venus Chapter No. 32 of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Wilson owns two business buildings in Red Lodge and a modern home at 605 North Houser Avenue. At Delhi, Iowa, March 15, 1874, he married Miss Jennie A. MacRunnels. She died at Coleville, Iowa, October 31, 1885. On August 25, 1888, at St. Paul, Minnesota, Mr. Wilson married Miss Olive A. Roberts. She died at Red Lodge April 16, 1910. Mr. Wilson married Mrs. Jennie (Roberts) Argo at Sibley, Iowa, April 20, 1911. Mr. Wilson has no children. His wife's father was J. D. Roberts of New York State, who was an early settler at Burlington, Iowa, and afterward homesteaded in Minnesota, six miles over the line from Little Rock, Iowa. Mrs. Wilson by her first husband has three children: Mamie, wife of Lavette Polley, a dentist at Sibley, Iowa; Winnie, wife of Frank Dunn, a farmer at Beaver Creek, Minnesota; and Neil D. Argo.

Neil D. Argo, one of the prominent younger business men of Red Lodge, was born at Little Rock, Iowa, February 4, 1891. His father, Jerry A. Argo, was born in 1851, and died at Little Rock in 1895. He spent all his business life there, and owned two ranches and also a hotel. He held several local offices as a democrat and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the Civil war he was for two years a private in an Iowa regiment. Jerry A. Argo married Liza Roberts, who was born at Clinton, Iowa, in 1863 and is now Mrs. Charles Wilson of Red Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Argo had three children: Mamie, a resident of Sibley, Iowa, and wife of Doctor Polley, a dentist, who served with the rank of second lieutenant and as a dentist with the American Expeditionary Forces; Winifred, wife of Frank Dunn, a rancher in Minnesota; and Neil D.

Neil D. Argo attended public school at Little Rock, Iowa, also the high school there, and in 1910 finished his education in Palmer's Business College at Cedar Rapids. He was first employed at Red Lodge as timekeeper with the Northwestern Improvement Company, was promoted to bill clerk and collector, then to billing clerk, and spent six years with that corporation. In 1916 he and his stepfather, Mr. Wilson, bought the Red Lodge Bottling Works and confectionery business. The confectionery department was closed out in October, 1918, and at that time Mr. Argo became sole proprietor of the Red Lodge Bottling Works. This is an important local industry, and it supplies soft drink retailers throughout Eastern Montana and Northern Wyoming.

Mr. Argo is independent in politics, is a member of the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce, and a thoroughly public spirited local citizen. On June 16, 1915, he married Miss Kate Torreyson. Her mother is Mrs. Fannie Torreyson, of Red Lodge. Her father, Jack Torreyson, was a prominent pioneer character of Red Lodge, owning the first ranch that was developed adjoining that town. Mr. and Mrs. Argo have one child, Neil, Jr., born June 13, 1917.

Norris F. Burger. A prominent and popular young business man of Billings, Norris F. Burger, is amply qualified for the responsible position he holds as manager of the Purity Bread Company, Incorporated, which supplies a large area of the surrounding country with bakery products. A son of S. F. Burger, he was born at Buffalo, New York, December 31, 1887, of pure Dutch stock, the ancestors from which he traces his descent having emigrated from Holland to Pennsylvania in colonial times. His grandfather, George S. Burger, a life-long resident of Pennsylvania, was born in 1818, and died at his home in Erie in 1890. He was a contractor and builder, and followed his trade in the vicinity of Pittsburg for many years. He married Sarah Franz, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1820, and died in Erie in 1892.

Born in 1860, near Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, S. F. Burger was reared and educated in Erie, and early in life entered the employ of the New York Central Railroad Company, being located at Buffalo, New York, until 1891, and the following eight years serving as conductor on a passenger train, with his home at Erie, Pennsylvania. Becoming associated with the Northern Pacific Railway service, he removed to Tacoma, Washington, in 1899, and is there still employed as conductor of a passenger train. He is a republican in his political affiliations, a member of the Baptist Church, and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Annie M. Weeks, who was born in Oswego, New York, in 1869, and to them three children have been born, as follows: Flora, wife of C. F. Elder, an accountant at Tacoma, Washington; Norris F., the subject of this brief personal history, and Edith, living with her parents.

Having acquired the rudiments of his education in the public schools of Erie, Pennsylvania, Norris F. Burger continued his studies in Washington, being graduated from the Tacoma High School with the class of 1904, and later attending the University of Washington at Seattle for two years. Then, after spending one year at the drug business in Tacoma, he was for four years deputy county engineer of Pierce County, Washington. In 1911 Mr. Burger became associated with the baking business at Tacoma, and continued thus employed for six years, in the meantime becoming familiar with every detail of the trade. In March, 1917, he came to Billings, where he has since resided, his home being at 815 North Broadway. Holding a position of importance with the Purity Bread Company, Incorporated, he has proved himself extremely capable and efficient in the management of its business and financial affairs, through his efforts its operations being extensive and constantly increasing in volume and extent. This company, with plant and office at 824 North Twenty-seventh Street, has the following named officers: L. F. Miller, president; Louis Dousman, vice president; E. B. LeClair, secretary, and N. F. Burger, treasurer and general manager. Carrying on a general baking business, it supplies a large territory, including Northern Wyoming and Montana west to Big Timber, east to Beach, North Dakota, and north to Buffalo, Montana. Mr. Burger has management of the entire tract, in his work having supervision of a corps of thirty-two employes.

Mr. Burger married, December 15, 1915, at Seattle, Washington, Miss Jessica Cleveland, a daughter of George and Nora (Wilson) Cleveland, neither of whom are now living. Mr. Burger is a republican in politics, and belong to the Rotary Club and to the Billings Midland Empire Club.

FRANK W. MACHEMER. Few can draw rules for their own guidance from the pages of Plutarch, but all are benefited by the delineation of those traits of character which find scope and exercise in the common walks of life. The unostentatious routine of private life, although in the aggregate more important to the welfare of the community than any meteoric public career, cannot, from its very nature, figure in the public annals. However, each locality's history should contain the names of those individuals who contribute to the success of the material affairs of a community and to its public stability; men who lead wholesome and exemplary lives which might be profitably studied by the oncoming generation. In such a class must consistently appear the name of Frank W. Machemer, one of the leading business men and public-spirited citizens of Bozeman.

Frank W. Machemer is descended from sterling old Holland stock, the family having been transplanted to America in the days of the colonies, settling in Pennsylvania. In that state the subject's grandfather, William Machemer, was born in 1813. In 1856 he moved to Constantine, Michigan, being numbered among the pioneers of that locality, and there he engaged in farming and in merchandising until his death, which occurred in 1889. He married Catherine Seaman, a native of Pennsylvania, and also of old colonial stock. Among their children was Levi Machemer, who became the father of the subject of this sketch. He was born in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, in 1841, and was reared there until fifteen years of age, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Mottville, St. Joseph County, Michigan. He was married in Constantine, Michigan, and has made that place his home during the remainder of his ilfe, being now retired from active labor. He was a woodworker by vocation and led a very active life. He is a republican of the conservative type and is a member of the Dutch Reformed Church. He married Eliza Teasdale, who was born in 1848 in Constantine, Michigan, and it is noteworthy that they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in September, 1917, in the very house where she was born, reared and married in Constantine. To this worthy couple were born the following children: Mary L.; Frank W., the immediate subject of this review; and L. J., who is the partner of his brother Frank at Bozeman.

Frank W. Machemer received his education in the public schools of Constantine, Michigan, completing his studies in the high school. At the age of sixteen years he left school and, entering a furniture factory, applied himself to learn the trade of a cabinetmaker, which engaged his attention for four years. He then removed to Sturgis, Michigan, where he worked at his trade, also being employed at different times in Elkhart and Cambridge City, Indiana. In May, 1903, Mr. Machemer came to Bozeman and entered the employ of the Bozeman Manufacturing Company, with whom he remained for eight years. In 1911 he went to work for Eschenbacher & Company, who then operated the plant which he now owns. In January, 1917, he bought the plant in partnership with his brother L. J., and they have since operated the business under the firm name of the Machemer Brothers. The plant, located on South Church Avenue, was erected by John Koch in 1882 and is one of the pioneer industries of Gallatin County. It has become one of the most important enterprises of the kind in Southern Montana. The firm manufacture window frames, sash, inside woodwork, automobile bodies—in brief, practically everything that is made of wood and for which there is any local demand. This plant was destroyed by fire in August, 1919, but will be rebuilt as soon as a suitable new location is secured.

Politically Mr. Machemer is a stanch republican. His fraternal relations are with Western Star Lodge No. 4, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Bozeman, and Constantine Lodge, Knights of the Maccabees, at Constantine, Michigan.

In Constantine, Michigan, Mr. Machemer was married to Jessie E. Roberts, the daughter of William E. and Amanda (Malam) Roberts. The father, who was a farmer, is now deceased, and his widow now resides in Battle Creek, Michigan. To Mr. and Mrs. Machemer have been born the following children: Harold R., born May 5, 1896, is on a ranch near Bozeman; Levi M., born April 25, 1899, is a student in the Montana State College, at Bozeman. Mr. Machemer has consistently given his support to every measure looking to the advancement of the best interests of the community and enjoys to a marked degree the confidence of all who know him.

REV. M. J. DONOHUE has given all his time since his ordination as a priest to various churches in Montana. He is now pastor of St. James Church at Plains, and has a parish including all the area of Sanders County. Besides the church at Plains there are churches at Thompson Falls, at Paradise and at Hot Springs, while missions under the direction of Father Donohue are at Camas Prairie, Lonepine, Perma, Eddy, White Pine, Alger, Trout Creek, Heron and Noxon.

Father Donohue was born at Florence, New York, November 25, 1876, son of Michael and Anna (Meehan) Donohue. His parents were of Irish ancestry. His father was born at Utica, New York, in 1845, and for many years was a merchant and farmer at Florence. He died at Camden, New York, in 1917. He held various town offices and was an influential citizen in local affairs. He was a democrat and a Catholic, and during the Civil war enlisted at Utica, New York, and served in a Union regiment. His wife was born at Florence, New York, in 1849 and is still living at Camden.

Father Donohue attended the public schools at Florence and spent six years with his classical studies at Niagara University at Niagara Falls. He took his theological course in St. Viator's Seminary and College at Bourbonnais, Illinois, spending five years in that institution. He was ordained in 1911 at Buffalo, New York, by Bishop Colton of Buffalo. His first active work was as assistant pastor of St. Joseph's parish at Butte, where he remained a year. For a year and a half he was assistant pastor of St. Peter's Church at Anaconda, and for a short time was assistant pastor of St. Helena Cathedral at Helena. He came to Plains July 24, 1914, and for five years has given a diligent and faithful administration of his many duties in maintaining and building up the Catholic church in Sanders County. The new St. James Church at Plains was dedicated December 14, 1919. There are about two hundred families in the parish. Father Donohue is a member of Anaconda Council, Knights of Columbus, and is a third degree knight.

O. R. DUNCAN was elected public administrator of Sweetgrass County in April, 1919. He has become well known in that county through his business activities, formerly as a creamery manager and now as proprietor of a complete and well patronized garage.

Mr. Duncan was born at Clinton Falls, Minnesota, June 12, 1822. His grandfather established the family in New York State, coming from Scotland. His father, Henry Duncan, was born near Syracuse, New York, in 1847, was reared and married there and had a farm. On this farm was an extensive grove of hard maples, and the manufacture of maple sugar was an important industy with him. During the '70s he moved to Minnesota and was a pioneer homesteader at Clinton Falls. Later he sold his farm there and in 1892 moved to Medford, Minnesota, where he was proprietor of a hotel until his death in 1912. He was an active prohibitionist in politics and a very devout Baptist. Henry Duncan married Sarah Brown, who was born in 1850 and died at Medford, Minnesota, in 1913. Ella, the oldest of their children, is the wife of Richard Cheesman, a miller living at Whistley, Alabama; Eslie is a traveling salesman whose home is at Redford, South Dakota; Marion is the wife of Henry Cheesman, a mechanic in the railroad shops at Edmonton, Canada; while O. R. Duncan is the fourth and youngest of the family.

He acquired his early education in the public schools of Clinton Falls and Medford, Minnesota, and was a student in the Owatonna Business College at Owatonna, Minnesota, until 1900. By practical work he learned the creamery trade in Minnesota, and followed it a year at Ranchester, Wyoming. In 1909 he came to Big Timber, Montana, and for three years managed the local creamery. The following three years he spent at Butte, where he worked for the Henningson Produce Company. Since returning to Big Timber he has been engaged in the automobile business. He built his new garage in September, 1917. He has floor space 36 by 60 feet, and furnishes not only a garage service but handles accessories and has a shop for repairs. His garage is at the corner of McLeod Street and Third Avenue.

Mr. Duncan is a republican in politics and was elected on that ticket to his office as public administrator. He is affiliated with Sweetgrass Camp No. 10610, Modern Woodmen of America, is a member of the Big Timber Chamber of Commerce and Sweetgrass County Good Roads Association.

In 1902, at Medford, Minnesota, he married Miss Nora May Reinhard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Reinhard, farming people who live at Medford. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan have two children, Leona, born in 1904, and Lavern, born in 1905.

CHARLES L. BRYAN. One of the best diversified farms and ranches in Sweetgrass County is at McLeod, owned by Charles L. Bryan. Mr. Bryan is a veteran Montana farmer and rancher. He came to the territory over thirty-five years ago and rode the range as a cowboy for a number of years before homesteading and settling down to the serious business of life.

He was born in Marion County, Missouri, July 13, 1863. His ancestors came originally from Ireland and were pioneers in Kentucky. His father, William Bryan, was born in Missouri in 1829, was a carpenter by trade but spent most of his time at farming. He lived for many years in Marion County, Missouri, and died at the home of his son, Carter Bryan, in Great Falls, Montana, where both he and his wife are buried. He was a democrat and a very interested Presbyterian and a man of the highest morals. It is said that he never drank liquor or used tobacco throughout his life. He married Elizabeth Pender, who was born in Marion County, Missouri, in 1833, and died at Great Falls, Montana, in 1912. Florence the oldest of their children, lives at Livingston, Montana, wife of D. W. McLeod, who in 1883 homesteaded the island on the Yellowstone River at the foot of Main Street in Livingston. Fannie, the second of the family, is the wife of Charles Hansbrough, who came to Great Falls and lived on a farm near there from 1896 to 1901, then moved to California, and is still living in Idaho. Charles L. Bryan is the third in the family. His brother, Carter, above mentioned, is a farmer, came to Livingston during the '90s and afterward lived at Great Falls and is now a resident of Boise City, Idaho. Emma, the fifth of the children, lives in California, while of Benjamin, the youngest, the family has had no word since he was last heard from on a ranch in Oregon.

Charles L. Bryan attended rural schools in Marion County, Missouri, also the Palmyra Seminary at Palmyra, Missouri, and spent the first twenty years of his life on his father's farm. Soon after reaching Livingston in April, 1883, he engaged as a cowboy with a cattle outfit and for ten years rode the range. In the meantime he had married and he and his wife settled on his homestead twenty-five miles south of Big Timber, on the Boulder River. He still owns 160 acres in that homestead, but it is only part of his ranch of 1,080 acres. This ranch and farm have a set of modern buildings and farm equipment that betokens the progressive enterprise of Mr. Bryan. Much of his land produces grain and he specializes in the Poll Angus cattle. Mr. Bryan is a democrat and is affiliated with Livingston Homestead of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

He married at Livingston in 1888 Miss Maggie McLeod, a daughter of William F. and Martha (Sowel) McLeod, both now deceased. William F. McLeod, who died at Big Timber in 1914, was a California forty-niner, afterward lived in Oregon, and in 1881 settled on the Crow Indian Reservation in Montana. He was a pioneer stock raiser and a man of much prominence in Southern Montana. The main street of Big Timber is named in his honor, as is also the Town of McLeod in Sweetgrass County, the postoffice of Mr. Bryan. Mr. and Mrs. Bryan had seven children: Charles L., Jr., a musician and piano tuner at Big Timber; Edna, wife of Harry Cross, a tailor at Big Timber; William F. and Roy, both on the home ranch with their parents; Pat who is employed in the implements and hardware department of the A. W. Miles Company at Livingston; Edith, wife of Charles Campbell, a rancher at Big Timber; and Bessie, a junior in the County High School at Big Timber.

CHARLES WOODWORTH. In the distribution of her personal gifts Nature, however generous, rarely confers upon a single individual superior excellence in more than a single line. The qualities that go to make for success in one field of endeavor are not as a rule the same which would bring prosperity in another. Yet there are some men who seem to have been gifted in a way that forms the exception proving the foregoing rule, and in this class may be mentioned Charles Woodworth, one of the proprietors of the Lewistown Automobile and Truck Company, who during a comparatively short career has invaded numerous fields of activity, in each of which he has come forth a conqueror.

Mr. Woodworth was born at Townsend, Broadwater County, Montana, September 1, 1885, a son of John J. and Mary C. (Shirlock) Woodworth. John J. Woodworth was born in 1852, in California, and was there married, his wife being a native of New Zealand. They became the parents of nine children, all living, of whom Charles is the fourth in order of birth. The father received his education in the public schools of California, and as a young man engaged in the sheep business in his native state, a vocation which he followed for about four years. In 1882 he came to Broadwater County, Montana, and ran bands of sheep in the vicinity of Townsend until 1886, in that year moving to Fergus County. Here he continued in the sheep business for five more years, and then sold his business and retired to Lewistown, where his death occurred in 1906, when he was fifty-four years of age. Mr. Woodworth took an interest in the affairs of his community and served efficiently in the capacity of road supervisor for many years. He was a democrat in his political adherence, and was fraternally affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. Mrs. Woodworth, who survives him, makes her home at Lewistown.

After attending the public schools of Lewistown, Charles Woodworth, at the age of eighteen years, embarked upon his independent career as the proprietor of a small draying business. Subsequently he became the proprietor of a retail liquor establishment, which he conducted until 1919, but in the meantime had entered other lines of industry. In 1911 he had embarked in the real estate business, and since the same year has been raising stock, at this time operating some 4,000 acres of land, in addition to which he has an interest in other ranches. His live stock at this time numbers approximately from 500 to 600 head of cattle. In March, 1919, after disposing of his saloon business, Mr. Woodworth embarked in a new line of endeavor when, with L. S. Butler and W. A. Cooper, he founded the Lewistown Automobile and Truck Company. This business has been another in which he has been successful, a further indication of his possession of fine business abilities. Mr. Woodworth is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and in politics is a democrat. He has formed many acquaintances and won many friendships at Lewistown, and in business circles his reputation is that of a man of integrity and high business principles.

Mr. Woodworth was married February 5, 1910, to Miss Helen M. Crevier, who was born at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and they are the parents of one daughter, Mary Elizabeth.

Ernest A. Boschert. While not one of the old timers of Montana, the career of Ernest A. Boschert is of interest because of the phenomenal enterprise he has directed to the upbuilding of the leading hardware business at Ballantine, beginning there with a stock of goods valued at only a few hundred dollars and making his own business expand even more rapidly than the town itself.

Mr. Boschert was born at Burlington, Wisconsin, January 11, 1883. His grandfather, a native of Germany, came to America, and at a time when Wisconsin was virtually an unbroken wilderness and years before it became a state he located on land at Burlington and spent the rest of his years making a farm. Charles Boschert, father of Ernest A., was born on that farm in 1843 and is still living there, having spent more than three-quarters of a century in one locality. He is a democrat and a Catholic. Charles Boschert married Josephine Prasch, who was born at Burlington in 1855. Ernest A. is the second of their family of children, seven in number. The others are A. A., salesman for the F. B. Connelly Company, of Helena, Montana; Otelia, wife of Clarence Brown, manager of the Detroit, Michigan, branch of the Cudahy Packing Company; Edward, a farmer at Burlington, Wisconsin; Elnora, wife of Charles McCarthy, also of Burlington; Albert, on the home farm at Burlington; Marie, wife of Joseph Bazel, a butter maker at Burlington.

Ernest A. Boschert attended the rural schools of Racine, Wisconsin, and lived at home with his father until he was twenty-two. He then went to Chicago, and during 1904-05 was a student in Bryant & Stratton's Business College. He had some metropolitan training and experience in mercantile business in Chicago, being for six months an assistant bookkeeper in a wholesale dry goods house and for five months working in the neckwear department of the wholesale men's furnishing store of Wilson Brothers. For seven months he was bookkeeper and clerk in a hardware store in Evanston, a Chicago suburb, and with this experience and equipment came to Billings in April, 1907. After eight months with the Sande Hardware Company he bought a small stock of groceries at Ballantine, and when he took charge he was also invested with the duties and responsibilities of postmaster. He held the postoffice and continued his store for ten years. In the meantime his little stock of groceries had expanded into a large general or department store, and in 1911 he closed out everything except hardware and is now proprietor of the leading establishment of that kind in his part of Yellowstone County. He owns the store building, and keeps everything needed on the farms and ranches in the way of hardware.

Mr. Boschert also owns a modern home on Beech and Third streets in Ballantine. He is a republican and Catholic, and is affiliated with Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus, the Royal Highlanders, and the Billings Midland Empire Club. On August 6, 1913, at David City, Nebraska, he married Miss Edena Fenlon, daughter of P. F. and Fannie (Flynn) Fenlon. Her mother lives at Ballantine, while her father, now deceased, was a traveling salesman. Mr. and Mrs. Boschert have one daughter, Margaret Lewine, born July 7, 1918.

William J. Beall. The history of the City of Bozeman would be far from complete without a sketch of William J. Beall, who was one of the founders of the little city that is the county seat of Gallatin County. Mr. Beall was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, May 19, 1834, was educated in the public schools of his native city and studied for his profession as an architect and builder in the office of his father, Benjamin Beall, who then stood high in his profession in Pennsylvania.

William J. Beall moved to Kansas in 1856, from there to Fort Laramie, Wyoming, and in 1862 to Denver and in March, 1863, arrived in Montana. For a few months he engaged in mining at Virginia City, but January, 1864, found him in the Gallatin Valley, where he located a mine, but sold his interest to his partner a few months later and in company with D. E. Rouse came to the present site of Bozeman, where they located adjoining farms in the month of July and built the first two houses.

The division line between the farms was where the old Laclede Hotel building stands on Main Street and Bozeman Avenue, Rouse's quarter section lying east and Beall's west of that line. The government survey afterwards threw Mr. Beall's line farther east, making what is now Rouse Street his east line, with Main Street his south line. Mr. Beall built his house on Bozeman Street, near Main, just back of the site of the Masonic Temple. Mr. Rouse built on the south side of Main Street, east of Bozeman Avenue. After a few years Mr. Beall was in partnership with W. H. Tracy, who took up a claim adjoining Mr. Beall's on the west, and part of these claims were platted into town lots.

In the winter of 1865-66 Mr. Beall did the carpenter work on the large story and a half log residence erected on the Alderson ranch a mile south of Bozeman. While holding his claim and as his time and means would permit he followed his trade as carpenter and builder in Bozeman and in other towns in Montana. In 1868 he built a residence on Bozeman Avenue, four blocks from Main Street. This has long been recognized as one of the picturesque and attractive homes of the city. Here Mr. Beall died September 3, 1903. His wife, still living, has enjoyed the comforts of that home since November, 1868.

Many business blocks and residences in Bozeman are monuments to Mr. Beall's architectural skill. The old Sacred Heart Cathedral Building, built in 1874-75, and the Herald Building, erected in 1875 at Helena, are among the buildings still standing in other parts of the state. Mrs. Beall still cherishes among her records a testimonial from the building committee of the Cathedral in the handwriting of Robert C. Walker, consisting of an extract from the minutes of the building committee of the Roman Catholic Church, Helena, Montana Territory, October 5, 1874, as follows:

"Whereas, it has been deemed necessary on account of the lateness of the season and on account of disappointment in the delivery of the required cut stone, to temporarily suspend work upon the church, and

"Whereas, W. J. Beall, the architect and superintendent of the building, has given the committee great satisfaction by his definite and artistic plans and specifications drawn according to designs originating with himself,

"Therefore, resolved, that the Building Committee of the Roman Catholic Church tender to Mr. Beall their thanks and this expression of their approbation for his energy and skill displayed in behalf of the building and for the faithful performance of the duties reposed in him.

"L. F. LaCroix, chairman,
"Robert C. Walker, secretary."

In the spring of 1875, as the records show, Mr. Beall was sent for by the building committee to superintend the completion of the structure, which he did to the utmost satisfaction of all concerned. The building after completion was called the "Sacred Heart Cathedral" and it was only a few years ago that a larger cathedral was erected. A prominent architect from the east while visiting in Helena a few years ago noticed this Sacred Heart Cathedral and said it was one of the finest specimens of architectural skill he had seen in the West.

Mr. Beall was a quiet and unobtrusive citizen, ever attentive to whatever business he had in hand. He was universally recognized as one of the most honorable and upright business men of the community, a gentleman in every sense of the word. He was made a Mason in Gallatin Lodge No. 6 in 1866, and was interested in all the subsequent growth and advancement of the lodge. He was a charter member of the Pioneers Society of Gallatin County and also a member of the Society of Montana Pioneers. He is survived by his wife, formerly Rosa V. Barker, whom he married in November, 1868.

Mrs. W. J. Beall, whose maiden name was Rosa V. Barker, enjoys the distinction of having been the first white woman to locate at Bozeman, coming here August 1, 1864. Bozeman has been her home ever since, though she has traveled east and west since she could travel by railroad. For more than half a century her home has been a comfortable residence on Bozeman Avenue, North, erected by her husband in 1868. Plans are now under way to secure the block of ground on which the Beall residence stands, originally a part of the Beall homestead, for a recreation park as a memorial to the young men of this community who served in the World war.

Mrs. Beall's father was James Barker, an early pioneer of Montana. She was born in Lewis County, New York, and spent there the early years of her life. She graduated from Fairfield Seminary in New York, making a specialty of music and art, in both of which she was very proficient. She taught music in the seminary for one year and is still identified with the alumni society of the school.

She moved with her parents to Wisconsin and went through many trying experiences in the South during the Civil war, and in crossing the plains with her husband and two little girls in 1864 she had many narrow escapes from being killed by Indians. They had other trying experiences and in crossing the Big Horn River she and the children came near being drowned.

Mrs. Beall has taken an active part in the social and religious life of Bozeman, and is highly esteemed by citizens of the community. Her children were a comfort to her in her pioneer days, and the loss of these little ones brought her much grief. When the first Sunday school was organized in 1866 by W. W. Alderson in Bozeman, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, she was one of the most active members and was a worker in that pioneer church.

Mrs. Beall helped in establishing St. James Episcopal Church in Bozeman and has been the most faithful communicant ever since, much of the time being a worker in the Sunday School and the Guild. She was a charter member and the first conductress in Lily of the Valley Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star, with which she is still identified. In the Pioneers Society of Gallatin County she served as historian for several years, and is now serving her second term as president of this organization. She is also a member of the Society of Montana Pioneers and is identified with the Sons and Daughters of Pioneers of the County and State. For many years she was active in the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Bozeman.

Her husband's career as a Montanan has been sketched on preceding pages. During his lifetime Mrs. Beall assisted him in his business affairs and since his death in 1903 she has looked after her own business with remarkable accuracy. Though past the allotted three score and ten, she is remarkably well and active in body and mind.

Mrs. Beall has lived the life of an earnest Christian, and her strong faith in God through her trials and tribulations has kept her above the sorrows that might have crushed to earth a woman of ordinary character. In the fifty-five years she has lived in Bozeman she has seen the city grow from two log cabins to one with hundreds of beautiful homes and a population of 8,000 people having the best religious and educational advantages possible.

Arad H. Franklin is an old timer in Montana and the Northwest, has been a miner, contractor and in other lines of business, and is at present representative in the Legislature from Mineral County, with home at Superior.

Mr. Franklin was born in Harrison County, Iowa, July 1, 1868. This branch of the Franklin family came originally from England and settled in Massachusetts in colonial times. His father, Jerome B. Franklin, was born in New York State in 1832, was reared and married there, and afterwards became a farmer in Harrison County, Iowa, and was a hotel proprietor at Dunlap in that state. He also did considerable business as a bridge builder. In 1887 he came to Helena, Montana, and was employed as a carpenter by the Montana Central Railway Company. In the fall of 1887 he located at Butte, where he continued business as as carpenter and builder until 1894. The last years of his life were spent on a ranch at Stevensville, Montana, where he died in 1915. He was a republican in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church and affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife was Mariette Baskin who was born in New York State in 1828 and died at Stevensville, Montana, in 1912. They had a family of seven children: Helen who married Steven Corley, a contractor and carpenter and both died at Stevensville, Montana; Mary is the wife of J. J. Moorhead, a farmer and cattle buyer at Dunlap, Iowa; F. S. Franklin is a carpenter in the shipyards at Spanway, near Tacoma, Washington; Kate is the wife of George A. Smith, and they own the old Franklin ranch at Stevensville; Sarah, the fifth child, died in infancy, and the sixth in order of birth is Arad H.; John, the youngest, is an electrician at Seattle, Washington.

Arad H. Franklin received his early education in the public schools of Dunlap, Iowa. He was about eighteen years of age when he came to Montana in 1886. His first experience was at Rosebud, where during the summer he rode the range as a cowboy. In the spring of 1887 he was at Great Falls and shortly afterward at Helena, where he spent a year with Porter Brothers, a well known firm of railroad contractors. For four years he was with the Electric Light Company at Butte. He then formed a partnership with his brother F. S. Franklin, and for two years they did teaming contracting. They also owned mining property near Shoupe, Idaho, and they operated their mine in that locality from 1894 to 1897. From the latter year until 1900 Mr. Franklin engaged in prospecting in both Idaho and Montana. From 1900 to 1905 he conducted his father's ranch, and he and his brother then spent about a year filling a contract for the construction of a water ditch in Ravalli County. Mr. Franklin in 1907 moved to Spokane, where he spent the winter as a barber and from May to August, 1908, had a barber shop at Grand Forks, Idaho. Since 1908 he has conducted a high class barber establishment at Superior. He is also president of the Mask Iron Company, and owns a modern home and other real estate at Superior.

Mr. Franklin has long been interested in politics in various communities, being affiliated with the democratic party. He served as a justice of the peace at Superior and also in Missoula County. He was elected to represent Mineral County in the Sixteenth Session of the Legislature in 1918. He was a member of the fish and game, railroad transportation, mines and mining, journal and other committees. Mr. Franklin is a Catholic, and is affiliated with Missoula Council No. 1021, Knights of Columbus, Missoula Camp No. 5329, Modern Woodmen of America, and Jocko Tribe No. 10, Independent Order of Red Men.

In 1905, at Missoula, he married Mrs. Agnes (Welch) Clark, daughter of Martin and Mary Welch, both deceased. Her father was a Wisconsin farmer and afterwards owned a timber claim at DeBorgia, Montana. Mr. Franklin has no children of his own, but has two step-children, Laura, wife of A. C. Bennett, a carpenter at Butte; and O. J. Pike, who conducts a pool hall at Superior.

J. B. Selters is a lawyer, and soon after graduating from law school and his admission to the bar of Illinois came to Montana and is now in his tenth year of his successful general practice at Big Timber.

Mr. Selters represents a family that has been substantially identified with the agricultural and business and professional interests of Illinois for nearly seventy years. He was born at Topeka, Illinois, May 22, 1884, and is a son of Henry Selters, who was born in Germany in 1826 and came to the United States in 1847, when twenty-one years of age. He was a pioneer in the locality where the Town of Havana, Illinois, now is and developed a homestead and lived as a farmer the rest of his life. He died at Havana in 1905. He became a republican when that party was founded and was a member of the Evangelical Church. His brother, George Selters, was a Union soldier with an Illinois regiment and while a prisoner at Andersonville died May 24, 1864. The State of Illinois is now erecting a monument at Andersonville in honor of the sons of the Prairie state who lost their lives while prisoners of war in that notorious stockade.

Of the eight children of Henry Selters and wife, Barbara Shundlemeyer, who was born in Germany in 1840 and died at Havana, Illinois, in 1914, J. B. is the youngest and the only one to adopt the State of Montana as his home. Mary, the oldest, married a Mr. Deiss and she is a widow and lives at Monte Vista, Colorado; Enoch is a banker and livestock man at Clayton, Illinois; Chris owns a large ranch at Monte Vista, Colorado; Anna is unmarried and lives on the home farm at Havana, Illinois; Henry is also a ranch owner at Monte Vista, Colorado, as is also Joseph, the seventh child; Kathryn, sixth in age, is a graduate nurse, lives at Peoria, Illinois, for several years had charge of the Peoria County Hospital, and is at this writing engaged in special work in her profession in Chicago.

J. B. Selters attended rural schools in Mason County, Illinois, spent three years in the literary department of Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, and after a three years' course in the law department graduated with the LL. B. degree in 1910, and was admitted to the Illinois bar the same year. A few weeks later he arrived at Big Timber, Montana, and after a brief novitiate was accorded a living business as a lawyer and has handled some of the very important civil and criminal cases of the local courts. His offices are in the Lowry Building on McLeod Street. He served as city attorney from 1915 until he resigned in 1918, and during 1917-18 was county attorney. During the World war he was a member of the Legal Advisory Board and was the Government appeal agent for Sweetgrass County. He is also a member of the Eastern Montana Bar Association.

Mr. Selters is a republican, member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he and his wife are well known in social circles of Big Timber. Recently he sold his modern home on Fourth Avenue and has now purchased a home on Sixth Avenue, East. Mr. Selters married at Billings in 1912 Miss Estelle Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Clark, residents of Hobart, Oklahoma. Mrs. Selters is a skilled vocalist and instrumental musician, and completed her musical education in the American Conservatory of Music at Chicago. They have one son, J. B., Jr., born September 14, 1914.

Henry Cheesman, who first came to Montana in pioneer times, over thirty-five years ago, was for ten years prominently identified with the ranching and farming interests of this state and is now living in comfortable retirement at Lewistown.

Mr. Cheesman was born in Racine County, Wisconsin, August 16, 1857, a member of a pioneer family of the Badger State. His parents, Edward and Eliza (Johnson) Cheesman, were both natives of England. Henry Cheesman was the third son and fifth child. Two of the daughters and one son were born in England. They came to America in 1844 by sailing vessel, being six weeks on the ocean. From New York City they traveled by boat to Albany, thence by canal to Buffalo and around by the lake by sailing ship to Kenosha, Wisconsin. Edward Cheesman reached Wisconsin with only $2.50 in money. He located a tract of Government land in Racine County and virtually hewed a home out of the wilderness. His first house was built of logs. He lived there many years and prospered, owning 200 acres of good farming land, devoted to general crops and sheep and cattle. He retired in 1886, and spent his last days in Milwaukee, where he died in 1903, at the age of eighty-nine years. His wife died at the age of sixty-five in 1882. They had six sons and three daughters, six of whom are still living. Edward Cheesman held various township offices and was a whig and republican in politics, and during the Civil war was a strong supporter of the Union.

Henry Cheesman acquired his education in the public schools of Racine County and attended the Rochester Academy in that state for 2½ years. After his first marriage he engaged in the hotel business at Rochester, and then took up farming in Rock County. After selling his interests in Wisconsin he came to Montana in June, 1883, with a herd of sheep. His destination was Dillon, where he sold his flock to some sheep men. He spent several months in the state and then went back to Wisconsin. He afterward returned to Fergus County, Montana, and in 1908 engaged in farming on a large scale, operating about 4,500 acres and acting as superintendent for the Judith Basin Land Company, as stock buyer. Since June, 1918, he has lived retired. In 1915 Mr. Cheesman raised 26,000 bushels of wheat on 600 acres of land. He is affiliated with Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and in politics is a republican.

Mr. Cheesman is an enthusiastic Montanan and shows his pride and confidence in his adopted state not alone by words but by deeds. No measure or project tending to the betterment of either local or state conditions has ever come up that failed to receive his hearty support, both in time and money. He has always worked to the end of a general improvement in all phases of both public and private progress, and has given substantial evidence of his beliefs. Never desiring political preferment, his judgment and opinions have nevertheless had much to do in shaping public matters for their betterment.

In 1880 he married for his first wife Emma A. Gipson. She was born in Racine County, Wisconsin, and died in 1884. In 1886 Mr. Cheesman married Anna B. Emery, who was born in Industry, Maine. They have two children, Wallace Henry, who lives at Clinton, Wisconsin, and married Edna Conley; and Harriet L., who is the wife of Frank J. Hughes, of Lewistown, and the mother of one daughter, Ellen.

CHARLES O. STOUT. For all the magnificence of its variegated sources, Montana is an agricultural state, and its prosperity will rest more securely every year upon its farms and ranches. One of the men who have achieved a practical success in the raising of crops and the operation of land in Yellowstone County is Charles O. Stout, of Ballantine.

Mr. Stout, who has been a resident of Montana for twelve years, was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, January 12, 1881. His grandfather, Michael Stout, was born in Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, spent his life as a farmer and died in Cumberland County of that state before his grandson was born. John A. Stout, father of the Montana rancher, was born in Cumberland County in 1852, also spent his life in Pennsylvania as a farmer, and died at Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, in October, 1907. He was a republican and a very active member of the Baptist Church. His wife was Emma Saltzgiver, who was born in Adams County, Pennsylvania, in 1846, and is now living at Newville, in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania. She was the mother of three children, Alba S., wife of W. S. Meals, owner of a coal mine and farm near Johnstown, Pennsylvania; Charles O., and Mary R., wife of C. R. Killian, ticket agent in the Pennsylvania Depot at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Charles O. Stout attended public school in Cumberland County, for two years was a student in the Blue Ridge College at New Windsor, Maryland, and in 1904 completed a course in the Philadelphia Business College. For a time he worked in a business office in Philadelphia and after taking a civil service examination was appointed to a position in the chief postoffice inspector's office at Washington. He broke away from the routine duties and the life of the East and came out to Billings in June, 1907. The first seven months he was in the state he was employed by the Billings Sugar Company, and then moved to Ballantine, where for over ten years he has been busily engaged in ranching. Mr. Stout owns forty-seven acres of the highly valuable irrigated land between Worden and Ballantine. He has everything in complete order and with facilities in the way of barns and other buildings that make efficient farming possible. He also has a modern home. During 1918, when patriotism demanded the utmost of the farmers, Mr. Stout operated 400 acres. He also has other interests, being vice president of the Ballantine State Bank and is director of the Ballantine Telephone Company.

Mr. Stout is one of the leading republicans of Yellowstone County. He was a candidate for the Legislature in 1912 and for six years was justice of the peace for his precinct. He is a member of the Baptist Church.

In January, 1911, he married Miss Re Bryson, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Asher) Bryson, at Ballantine. Her parents live at Ballantine, her father being a retired farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Stout have five children: Robert John, born October 12, 1912; Mary Elizabeth, born February 13, 1914; William Charles, born September 22, 1915; Edna Aileen, born June 4, 1916, and Ruth, born February 18, 1918.

WILLIAM DUANE TALLMAN. One of the distinctive incidental functions of this publication is to take recognition of those citizens of the great commonwealth of Montana who stand distinctively representative in their chosen spheres of endeavor, and in this connection there is eminent propriety in according consideration to Professor William Duane Tallman, one of the able and popular educators of the state, who holds a professorship in the mathematical department of the State College at Bozeman.

William D. Tallman was born at Sterling, Arkansas, on February 12, 1875, and is a son of Duane Dano and Jennie (Whittemore) Tallman. The father was born in 1851 at Reedsburg, Wisconsin, was reared and educated there, and in young manhood went to Arkansas, where he went into the general mercantile business. He died at Lake Village, Arkansas, in October, 1874. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Jennie Whittemore, who was born in Iowa in 1854 and who died at Lake Village, Arkansas, on April 19, 1875. The subject of this sketch was their only child.

William D. Tallman received his elementary education in the public schools of Sparta, Wisconsin, graduating from the high school there in 1892. He then entered the University of Wisconsin at Madison, where he was graduated in 1896, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, in mathematics. He is a member of the honorary Greek Letter society Phi Beta Kappa. During 1896-7 he taught mathematics in the Madison (Wisconsin) High School, and during the following school year was a fellow in mathematics at the University of Wisconsin. During the next year he taught mathematics in the Eau Claire (Wisconsin) High School, and then, from 1899 to January 1, 1901, he was instructor in mathematics and a graduate student at the University of Wisconsin. On the date last mentioned Professor Tallman came to Bozeman and accepted the chair of mathematics in the Montana State College. He is still the incumbent of that position, and has for many years been one of the most popular and respected members of the faculty of this splendid institution.

Professor Tallman gives his support to the republican party and has taken an active interest in local public affairs, having served four years as a member of the City Council of Bozeman. He is also a member of the Presbyterian Church, while his fraternal relations are as follows: Gallatin Camp No. 5245, Modern Woodmen of America; Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World; Eureka Homestead No. 415, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the American Mathematical Society and the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education.

Professor Tallman has been twice married, first, on June 27, 1900, at Lake Bluff, Illinois, to Anna DeMuth, daughter of Mrs. Susanna DeMuth, of Peru, Indiana. Mrs. Tallman was a graduate of the Chicago Deaconess Training School. Her death occurred on February 4, 1908, at Rochester, Minnesota. The children born to this union are as follows: Mildred, born May 2, 1903; Hazel, born November 10, 1904, and Duane, born December 17, 1907. On September 8, 1909, at Bozeman, Professor Tallman was married to Maude DeMuth, a sister of his former wife and they have one child, William D., born December 12, 1910. Mrs. Tallman is a graduate of the Montana State College.

Professor Tallman realized early in life that there is a purpose in life and that there is no honor not founded on worth and no respect not founded on accomplishment. His life and labors have been eminently worthy because they have contributed to a proper understanding of life and its problems.

Charles C. Willis. In that section of Montana known as Sanders County probably no citizen's personal recollections and experiences go back further and give him more of the authority of a spectator and historian than Charles C. Willis, a well known rancher and real estate dealer at Plains.

Mr. Willis, who has lived in Montana thirty-five years, was born at Columbia, Missouri, August 7, 1854. His paternal ancestors were Englishmen who settled in New Jersey in colonial times, and several of the family were revolutionary soldiers. Mr. Willis' grandfather, John Willis, was born in New Jersey in 1800. For many years he devoted himself to the cause of the Baptist ministry in Missouri. He was a circuit rider and founded and built many churches of his denomination. Besides his eloquence as a preacher he was a skillful carpenter and mechanic, and in building some of the early churches he used his individual skill in constructing the buildings and in making the pews and other articles of furniture. He lived a long and active life and died near Columbia, Missouri, in 1886.

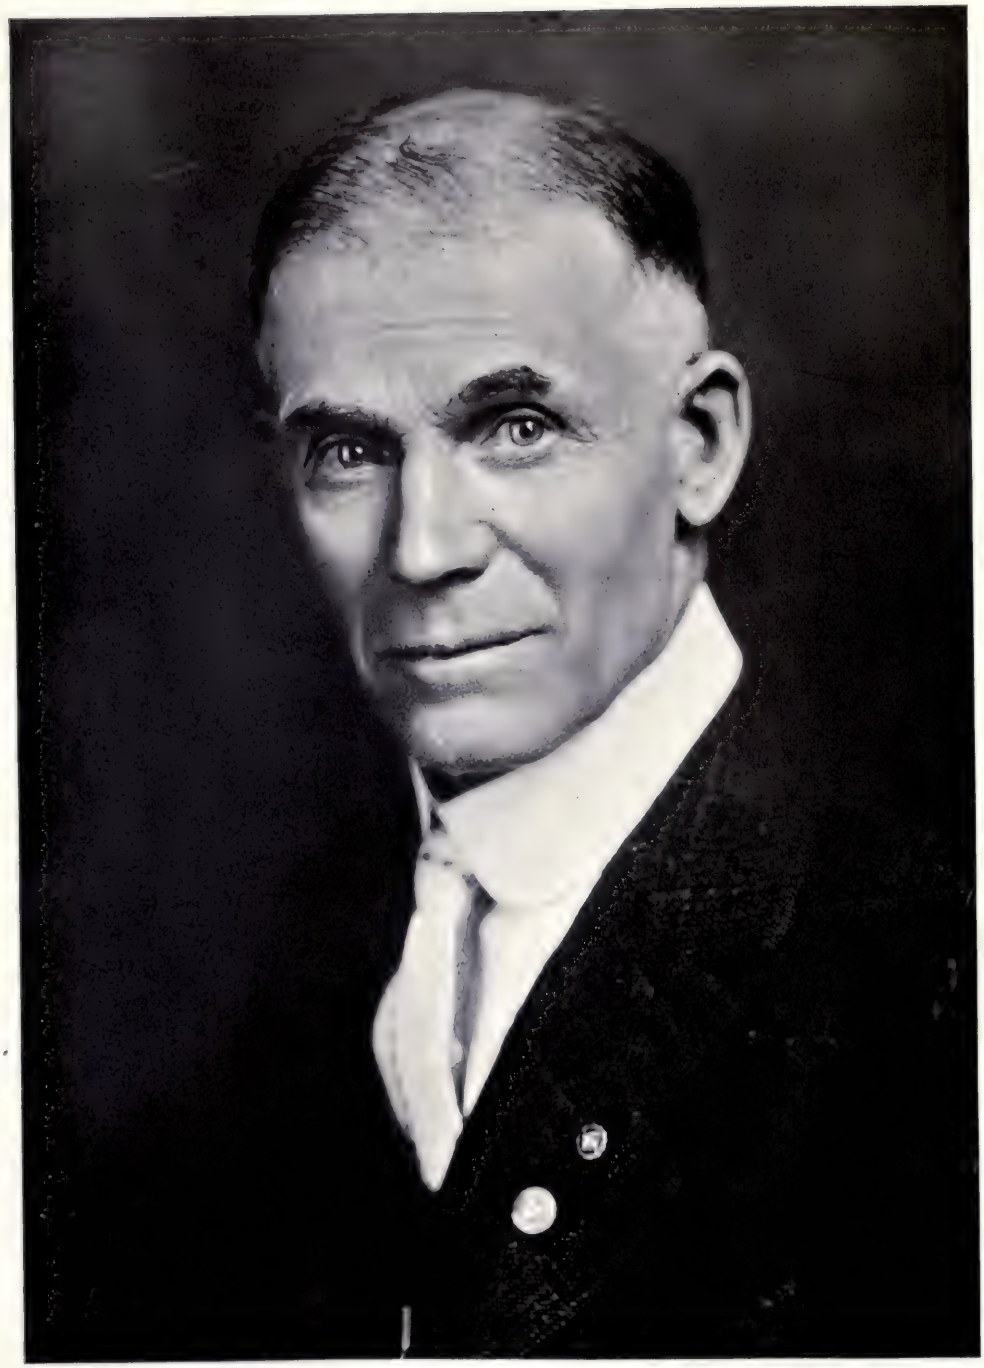
John E. Willis, father of Charles C. Willis, was born in Mississippi in 1828, but was reared and married near Columbia, Missouri, where he followed the business of stock raising. He was a man in advance of his time in that section of Missouri, and was one of the first to establish a herd of pure bred Shorthorn cattle. When the Civil war came on, as a Southerner, he joined the Confederate side, and while serving in the regimental commissary department in Price's army was killed near Springfield, Missouri, in 1863. He was a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. His wife was Sallie A. Cromwell, a direct descendant of the Oliver Cromwell family of England. She was born near Columbia, Missouri, in 1829, and died at Centralia in that state in 1880. Charles C. was the oldest of her children. Elizabeth died at the age of three months. John is in the life insurance business at Glasgow, Montana, while J. R. Willis, a farmer at Plains, was killed in a runaway accident at Plains February 26, 1920.

Charles C. Willis while a boy attended rural schools in Boone County, Missouri. He was only nine years of age when his father died. For two years, in 1872-73, he attended the Missouri State University at Columbia. After leaving college he became a farmer, at first in Boone County, and after 1878 in Audrain County, Missouri.

Mr. Willis arrived at Thompson Falls, Montana, January 18, 1885. He conducted a ranch near that town and was also the pioneer drayman. For eighteen months he had the contract for hauling water for the town. In 1886 he moved to Plains, and developed one of the first farms and ranches in this vicinity. Mr. Willis is now owner of about 1,300 acres of land. For a number of years he did much contracting for the Northern Pacific Railway, and for several years was interested in the lumbering industry. Since 1909 he has handled a large amount of the local real estate transactions and has bought and sold property for others as well as for himself. He still lives on his home ranch of 200 acres a half mile west of the depot. Part of this farm is in the corporation limits of Plains.

Mr. Willis has been a member of the State Board of Horticulture since it was created more than twenty years ago. He was also a justice of the peace in the early days, at a time when the present Sanders, Flathead, Ravalli and Lincoln counties were part of the larger Missoula County, comprising nearly all of Western Montana. Politically he is a democrat.

In 1875, near Columbia, Missouri, Mr. Willis married Miss Mary Shock, daughter of James H. and Susan (Keith) Shock, both deceased. Her father was a pioneer settler in Missouri. Mrs. Willis died at Plains in 1895. She was the mother of seven children: Clarence H., living on the home ranch; Maude, who died at the age of three months; Alvin K., a shipyards worker living at Oakland, California; Mary, died at the age of twenty-four years; John K., a farmer near Avondale in Valley County, Montana; Charles M., whose home is at Hot Springs in Sanders County and who operates a dray line between Hot Springs and Plains and Perma; and Willard P., the present postmaster of Plains.



Wyllys A. Hedges

In 1898, at Plains, Mr. Willis married for his present wife Miss Sadie Cave, daughter of James and Celia (Woody) Cave. Her father was for many years a farmer at Ozark, Missouri. He died in the fall of 1917 at the advanced age of eighty-five, while her mother died in 1919, aged eighty-seven.

Lorin F. Douthett. Of the forty odd years since he left college Lorin F. Douthett has spent nearly thirty in Montana and his name is associated actively with several of the important business institutions of Big Timber. He is regarded as one of the men who have had most to do with the upbuilding of that city.

Mr. Douthett was born in Bloomington, Illinois, June 12, 1854, and is of Scotch ancestry. His paternal ancestors settled at an early date in Pennsylvania. His father, Robert Douthett, was born in Pennsylvania in 1825, grew up there, moved to Illinois when a young man and after his marriage moved to Bloomington, where he followed the business of carpenter and builder a number of years. He was also an Illinois farmer. In 1886 he moved to the new agricultural district around Wessington, South Dakota, and finally went to the Pacific Coast and then to Tacoma and Seattle and was retired at San Francisco when he died in 1911. He was a republican and a member of the Methodist Church. His wife was Eliza Montgomery, who was born in Boone County, Iowa, in 1832, and died at Tacoma, Washington, in September, 1916. Lorin F. was the second of their family of six children. Eugene, the oldest, is a farmer at Covington, Nebraska; Don Clarence, whose home is in Sioux City, Iowa, is connected with the Government river improvement work on the Mississippi; Veleria is the wife of John M. Reynolds, a manufacturer of hardwood floors, parquetry and other products at Mill Valley, California; Alma, whose home is at Tacoma, Washington, is the widow of her second cousin, Heber Douthett, who was a farmer; Minnie Belle is the wife of W. U. White, a farmer at Hope, North Dakota.

Lorin F. Douthett attended public school at Bloomington, Illinois, spent three years in the State Normal University at Normal, and completed his sophomore year in the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington. After leaving college in 1876 he farmed for several years in McLain County, Illinois, and was also in the grocery business at Bloomington. He moved out to Dakota Territory in 1884 locating in Wessington, South Dakota, and was a farmer there until he came to Big Timber in 1891. His first work here was at teaming, and he then established what is now the pioneer wood and coal business at the town. He added a lumber yard in 1911 and since 1914 has been a dealer in automobiles. His offices and yards are on First Avenue near McLeod Street. He leases an automobile garage on First Avenue and handles Ford cars and accessories. He also owns the ice house at the foot of McLeod Street. Mr. Douthett is the president of the Big Timber Building & Loan Association and is secretary and treasurer of the Montana Cold Storage and Fuel Company. His modern home is on Third Avenue.

Mr. Douthett is a democrat in politics. He served one term as alderman of Big Timber and is affiliated with the Congregational Church.

In 1907, at Chicago, Illinois, he married Miss Margaret May Duggan, daughter of William and Isabelle Duggan. Her parents now reside at Minneapolis. Her father is a machinist. Mr. and Mrs. Douthett had eight children: Edward B., born in December, 1908; Doris Evelyn, born in 1909; Mary Audrey, born in 1911; Jane Thais, born in 1912; Carol, born in 1913; Lorin Frank, born in 1915; Lawrence O'Neil, born in 1916; and Alice Marguerite, born in 1918. Carol died March 24, 1914, Lawrence O'Neil died September 2, 1916; and Alice Marguerite died March 28, 1919. Mrs. Douthett died March 23, 1919.

Wyllys A. Hedges, a former receiver of the United States Land Office at Lewistown, where he still resides, has had a career that honorably supplements that of his distinguished father, the late Judge Cornelius Hedges, one of the greatest of Montana's pioneers.

Cornelius Hedges, whose story has probably been told in every published work on Montana and which should be set down here in brief as a matter of appropriate record, was born in Westfield, Massachusetts, October 28, 1831, and died in 1909. He had an ancestor in the Revolutionary war, and his people for many generations were prominent in New England. His parents were Dennis and Alvina (Noble) Hedges. Cornelius Hedges was liberally educated, graduating from Yale College in 1853 and from the law department of Harvard College in 1856. He became a pioneer lawyer at Independence, Buchanan County, Iowa, and practiced there until 1864, part of the time also editing the Buchanan County Bulletin, the first paper in Independence, Buchanan County.

In April of 1864 he started across the plains by team to Virginia City, Montana. There he worked as a practical miner, and on January 15, 1865, arrived at Helena. He was one of the first members of the bar of the territory. In 1867 he brought his family to Montana, coming by steamboat up the Missouri River. He was appointed United States attorney for Montana by President Grant, and in 1872 was appointed superintendent of public instruction of the territory. His service in that office for six years did much to formulate the early educational policy of Montana. He served as probate judge five years and in 1882 was reappointed superintendent of public instruction. He was a member of the State Constitutional Convention and elected a member of the first State Senate in 1889.

One of the publications of the Montana Historical Society's collections is the journal of Cornelius Hedges, recounting the trip headed by General Washburn, of which he was a member, in the exploration of the Upper Yellowstone and the Yellowstone National Park. Cornelius Hedges is said to be responsible for the original suggestion that this be made a national preserve.

For many years he was called "the father of Masonry in Montana." He took his first degrees in that order in Iowa in 1859. He became a charter member of Helena Lodge No. 1 in 1865, and was its first master. He held all the offices in the York Rite and the Scottish Rite. He was also one of the founders of the City Library of Helena, and in the early days was a member of the Vigilante organization. In politics he was a stanch republican. For many years Judge Hedges was one of the prominent sheep men of Montana, running thousands of head on the range along the Mussel Shell River.

In 1856 Judge Hedges married Miss Edna L. Smith, who was born at Southington, Connecticut, in 1836. She died in 1912. Of their eight children, five are living: Wyllys A.; Dennis, who died in childhood; Henry H.; Edna L., wife of H. B. Palmer; Emma, wife of John Woodbridge; Langford; Ellen, who died in childhood; and Cornelius, Jr.

Wyllys A. Hedges was born at Independence, Buchanan County, Iowa, July 3, 1857, and was not yet ten years of age when brought to the Territory of Montana. He was a student in some of the early schools of Helena, and in 1869, at the age of thirteen, was appointed librarian of the Helena Public Library. After finishing high school he entered Yale University, and returned from the East to become the original settler on the townsite of Great Falls in 1878. He lived there until 1880, and then went to California and bought a flock of sheep which he drove overland to Bercail on Careless Creek in Meagher County. He reached his destination November 6, 1881, and, associated with his father, continued in the sheep and cattle business until 1906. He was largely responsible for the development of the sheep industry in the Mussel Shell Valley, and a town in that vicinity is still known as Hedges. In 1906 Mr. Hedges was appointed by the late Colonel Roosevelt receiver of the United States Land Office at Lewistown, and held those responsibilities until October 2, 1913. Since then he has been engaged in the real estate business. As a republican he was elected a member of the Lower House of the State Legislature in the Fourth, Sixth, Seventh and Ninth assemblies, and during his last term was speaker of the house. Like his father, he is active in Masonry, being affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, and he and his wife are members of Marie Chapter No. 36 of the Eastern Star.

September 3, 1884, he married Miss Ida S. Beach. She was born in Southington, Connecticut, where Mr. Hedges' mother spent her girlhood. Mr. and Mrs. Hedges' four children are all deceased.

Willard Hickox, of Billings, is probably the premier authority in Montana on all subjects connected with bee culture and honey production. Like most men who have been successful in that industry he seems to have a natural genius for work, though of course experience and training count largely for his success. He is secretary, treasurer and manager of the Rocky Mountain Bee Company and is secretary and treasurer of the Montana Honey Producers' Association, Incorporated.

Mr. Hickox was born at Fowler, in Trumbull County, Ohio, November 12, 1857. The name Hickox is of English origin and was one of the first names transplanted to the soil of New England. His grandfather, Jesse Hickox, was born in Connecticut in 1782 and in 1818 took his family to the western wilderness and settled in the Ohio Western Reserve in Trumbull County. He had previously served as a soldier of the War of 1812. He died at Fowler in 1867. His wife was a Miss Janes.

Daniel B. Hickox, father of Willard, was born in Connecticut in 1814 and was four years old when his parents moved to Ohio. He spent the rest of his life there as a farmer and died in 1876. He was an old school republican and was active in the Methodist Church. His wife, Laura Tanner, was born in Fowler and died there November 15, 1857.

Willard Hickox, only child of his parents, grew up on his father's farm to the age of nineteen, attended school at Fowler and graduated from the Cleveland High School in 1877. He also took special courses in the Spencerian Business College at Cleveland. For fifteen years Mr. Hickox was employed as a bookkeeper and stenographer in Cleveland, and while working in that city and with his home nearby he acquired his first practical knowledge and experience in bee keeping. In 1900 he moved to Shawnee, Oklahoma, and after one summer there went to Fort Collins, Colorado, and organized the Rocky Mountain Bee Company. Besides his work in handling bees at Cleveland he also spent a year in Michigan in the same line of work. Mr. Hickox has been manager of the Rocky Mountain Bee Company since it was established. In 1911 he moved his headquarters to Rosebud, Montana, and during that year made his home in Cartersville. In 1912 he moved to Forsyth, Montana, and since 1916 has had his home in Billings, his residence being at 508 St. Johns Avenue.

The Rocky Mountain Bee Company in 1919 owned 2,000 stands of bees. These are moved about from point to point to secure the best results of honey productions, the principal location being near Rosebud, Cartersville, Oronoco, Sanders, Myers, Hysham and Laurel. The company has produced and shipped as high as 150,000 pounds or fifty-five tons of honey in a single year, and this honey is distributed all over the United States. All the Montana business is handled through the offices at Montana Avenue and West Fifth Street in Billings. The company is incorporated in Colorado with headquarters at Berthoud.

While he was a resident of Cleveland Mr. Hickox made his home at Rockport, a suburb of that city. He was postmaster of Rockport at one time, also mayor, and a member of the Christadelphian Church of Cleveland. He is a republican, a Mason, Elk and Woodman of the World.

Mr. Hickox married at Rockport, Ohio, in 1879, Miss Dora McBride, daughter of Samuel and Delilah (Holton) McBride. Her father was a farmer in the states of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Nebraska and Oklahoma, keeping well out to the frontier. He is now deceased and her mother is living at Chattanooga, Oklahoma.

Robert Schaefer. Among the citizens and business men of Southern Montana who believe in following twentieth-century methods is Robert Schaefer, the pioneer cheese manufacturer of Montana and proprietor of three successful factories in this state. He comes of a splendid Swiss family, one that has always been strong for right living and industrious habits, for education and morality, and for all that contributes to the welfare of the commonwealth. Such people are welcomed in any community, for they are empire builders and as such have pushed the frontier of civilization ever westward and onward, leaving the green wide-reaching wilderness and the far-stretching plains populous with contented people and beautiful with green fields; they have constituted that sterling horde which caused the great Bishop Whipple to write the memorable line, "Westward the course of empire takes its way."

Robert Schaefer was born in Canton Berne, Switzerland, on February 8, 1878, and is the son of Peter and Margaret (Willener) Schaefer. Peter Schaefer was born in 1842, in Canton Berne, Switzerland, and his death occurred there in 1911. In many respects he was a most remarkable man. He received a good, practical education, as do all the children of Switzerland, and after taking up work on his own account showed himself to be the possessor of more than ordinary mental capacity. He held practically all the state offices of his native country and at the early age of twenty years he became a supreme judge in Canton Berne, an office he held for a number of years. He was well known throughout his country and was held in the highest esteem. He was by trade a carver. He became the inventor of the art of wood carving as practised by the Swiss, and traveled all over the world in that vocation. He was a soldier in the Swiss army, serving along the border in 1870-71, holding the rank of first sergeant. In 1876 he came to the United States, locating at Philadelphia, where he became a noted wood carver and was in the employ of the leading furniture factory there. He became a citizen of the United States, but returned to his native land in 1879. He was a member of the Evangelical Reformed Church and was very active and earnest in his religious life. He married Margaret Willener, who was born in 1853 in Canton Berne, Switzerland, and who now resides in Meiringen, that country. To them were born the following children: Edward, who has been a soldier of the United States Army since 1898, was a soldier in the Spanish-American war, and more recently in the World war, being at the present time in France with the Fifty-Third Division, holding the rank of supply sergeant; Robert, the subject of this sketch, is the next in order of birth; Peter is a laborer and resides in Cleveland, Ohio; Saloma is the wife of Fritz Boesch, who resides at St. Gallen, Switzerland, and is a soldier in the Swiss national army; Werner is a wood carver at Meiringen, Switzerland; Lena, who died at Meiringen, Switzerland, in 1911, at the age of twenty-three years; Katherine is a school teacher at St. Gallen, Switzerland.

Robert Schaefer received a good education in the public and high schools of Berne and then learned the trade of cheese making, a vocation in which the Swiss excell all other nationalities. He then went to Germany and for a short time was engaged in the cheese business there. In July, 1902, Mr. Schaefer came to the United States, landing at New York, where he remained for about three weeks. He then went to Canal Dover, Ohio, where he was engaged in general work until 1911, when he went to Arlington, Wisconsin, and established a cheese factory for Jacob Marty. April 1, 1915, he came to Salesville, Montana, and erected a cheese factory, the first one to be established in the State of Montana. He has equipped his factory with every modern facility for the making of all kinds of cheese, and so successful has he been in his operations that he has established two other similar factories in this state, one at Belgrade and one at Central Park, both of which have proven very successful. The products of these factories have already earned a high reputation for their excellent quality and they are sold all over Montana and other neighboring states. Mr. Schaefer has $30,000 invested in the business, and he is reaping the fruits of his faith and his works.

Politically Mr. Schaefer is an ardent supporter of the republican party, while his fraternal relations are with Salesville Lodge No. 69, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Pythagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias, at Bozeman; and the local lodge of the Daughters of Rebekah.

In 1902, at Nobitz, Saxony, Robert Schaefer was married to Anna Eliza Ruchti, a native of Canton Berne, Switzerland, and to them have been born three children, namely: John Godfrey Peter, who died at the age of six months; Alma Louise, born February 21, 1904, and John William Franklin, born September 11, 1905.

Although a quiet and unassuming man, with no ambition for public position or leadership, Mr. Schaefer has contributed to the material, civil and moral advancement of his community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart and the straightforward, upright course of his daily life has won for him the esteem and confidence of the people with whom he has been associated.

WILLIAM CASTLES has been in Montana fourteen years, and since he came to Superior his business as a merchant has rapidly increased until his firm is now one of the largest individual taxpayers in Mineral County.

Mr. Castles was born at the City of Liverpool, England, February 12, 1878. His father, Wesley Castles, was born at Drumlin, County Armagh, Ireland, in 1855, was reared and married there, and became a farmer and butcher. After his marriage he moved to Liverpool, where he owned a chain of meat markets. He prospered in his business affairs and subsequently retired to Belfast, Ireland, where he died in 1912. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Apprenticed Boys of Derry, was a Methodist and a conservative in politics. His wife was Mary Theressa Bland, who was born at Lancaster, England, in 1854, and died at Belfast in 1915. They had a family of ten children, including: Wesley, who became a miner, went to Australia, and died in that country at the age of forty; Lavinia Augusta, wife of George Ruddell, owner of a meat market at Lurgan, Ireland; Bertha Louise, wife of Robert J. Mulligan, a musketry instructor in the British army living at Belfast; William; Garfield and Eleanor Gertrude, both of whom came from the old country and have lived at Superior, Montana, since December, 1919.

William Castles acquired his early education in the public schools of Liverpool and at Lurgan, Ireland, finishing his work in school at the age of sixteen. He learned the butcher business under his father. Mr. Castles is a veteran English soldier, having spent eighteen months in the Boer war during 1901-02. He was a sergeant of the Sixtieth Company of Imperial Yeomanry. From South Africa he returned to Lurgan, Ireland, and engaged in the butcher business for himself for several years.

Mr. Castles came to the United States in 1906, and going to Missoula, Montana, was employed by the John R. Daily Company and Koopman & Wissbrod, owners of two extensive wholesale and retail meat businesses in that city. In November, 1915, Mr. Castles came to Superior, and in partnership with Koopman & Wissbrod bought the butcher shop of Tom Merkle, who was a pioneer miner and butcher at Superior. Mr. Castles dissolved his partnership with Koopman & Wissbrod in 1916, and acquired the entire business. Soon afterward he formed his present partnership with Paul Westfall, each partner sharing equally. Mr. Castles is a practical meat market man, and Castles and Westfall own and operate a large ranch at Ashmore. On this ranch are raised the cattle, sheep and hogs which constitute practically the entire source of supply for the meat sold at the market in Superior. They specialize in fresh and choice beef, mutton and pork, and as the animals are killed and dressed at the ranch and sold at the market the middleman's profits are eliminated and the business is conducted on the lowest possible scale of prices consistent with high quality and good service.

In November, 1917, Castles & Westfall also bought the general merchandise store of Jesse Daly at Superior. Mr. Castles also is manager of this business, located on Main Street. It carries one of the best selected stocks of general merchandise in Western Montana, and the firm enjoys a trade derived from all over Mineral County and the western portion of Missoula County.

Mr. Castles is an independent voter, is a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church and superintendent of its Sunday school, and is a member of Montana lodge of Superior, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, having been transferred from Acacia Lodge No. 24, Lurgan, Ireland.

In 1912, at Missoula, he married Miss Catherine Louisa Irwin, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Brown) Irwin. Her father is a retired butcher at Lurgan, Ireland, and her mother died there. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Castles are five in number: Mary, born March 22, 1913; William Irwin, born June 12, 1914; James Bland, born September 22, 1915; John Ross, born January 17, 1917, and Wesley, born September 26, 1918.

CHARLES C. WALLIN, M. D., vice president of the Montana Medical Society, has been a resident of this state since 1905 and has achieved special prominence as a physician and surgeon. His home is at Lewistown and he is a former president of the Fergus County Medical Society.

Doctor Wallin was born at Saugatuck, Michigan, January 3, 1876, a son of Franklin B. and Hannah (Chadbourne) Wallin. His parents were both natives of New York State. His grandfather Wallin was a tanner and was in that business nearly seventy years. He built up a large industry in Michigan, conducted for many years as C. C. Wallin & Sons. Franklin B. Wallin learned the trade from his father and after 1874 continued the business as the Wallin Leather Company, with offices both at Chicago and Grand Rapids, Michigan. He was president of this company until his death, which occurred in August, 1908. He was then seventy-seven years of age and had lived in Michigan from early childhood. He was a member of the Michigan Legislature during the Civil war and gave ardent support to all war measures. He was active in the Congregational Church and was widely known at Grand Rapids and vicinity not only because of his business prominence but for his many philanthropies. His wife, Hannah Chadbourne, was born in Otsego County, New York, and died at Grand Rapids in 1910. She was descended from a Revolutionary soldier and through her Doctor Wallin has membership in the Sons of the American Revolution.

Doctor Wallin is the oldest of a family of three children. He grew up from the age of five in Grand Rapids, attended the public schools there and finished his literary education at the University of Michigan, graduating in 1898. In the spring of that year he enlisted in the Thirty-Second Michigan Volunteers for service in the Spanish-American war, and was afterward transferred to the hospital corps of the Third Division of the Fourth Army Corps. While at Tampa, Florida, he was stricken with typhoid and was invalided home.

Doctor Wallin graduated from the medical school of the University of Michigan in 1902, and began practice at Grand Rapids, where he was associated with an eminent Michigan surgeon, Dr. S. C. Graves. While at Grand Rapids, Doctor Wallin was on the staff of three of the city hospitals. He came to Montana in 1905, first locating at White Sulphur Springs and in 1908 moving to Lewistown. His work as a surgeon has been especially noteworthy, and he ranks among the state's best qualified men in that field. He has held a captain's commission in the medical department of the National Guard of Montana. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and is affiliated with all branches of Masonry, including DeWitt Clinton Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Grand Rapids and Saladin Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the same city. Doctor Wallin has served as health officer of Lewistown for half a dozen years. He has done post-graduate work in Chicago and in 1911 went abroad and spent much time in the Vienna Hospital. He is a member of the Judith Club, is a Delta Upsilon college fraternity man and in politics a republican.

September 10, 1902, Doctor Wallin married Miss Florence A. Munro, daughter of Malcolm Munro. Mrs. Wallin was born at Wardville, Ontario, Canada. She and her husband are members of the Episcopal Church. Doctor and Mrs. Wallin have two children, Chadbourne and Frances Marcella.

ISAAC MORRIS HOBENSACK was among the founders and for many years president of one of the greatest hardware businesses in Montana, the Judith Hardware Company of Lewistown. In recent years he has become noted as a Bonanza wheat grower in the Northwest, and his acreage produced a tremendous volume of cereal during the war years. He is still prominent in that industry.

Mr. Hobensack was born on his father's farm in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, February 7, 1858, and has been a resident of Montana for over thirty years. His parents, Isaac Cornell and Mrs. (Hogland) Hobensack, were both natives of Pennsylvania, where they spent their lives, his father as a Pennsylvania farmer. The father died in 1904, at the age of seventy-six and the mother at the same age in 1908. Isaac C. Hobensack was a whig and republican in politics. He and his wife had nine children, five of whom are still living, Isaac Morris being the second in age.

The latter lived in Pennsylvania until he was twenty-seven years old. In that time he received his education in the common schools and worked at home on the farm. His health became increasingly impaired, and he finally sought recuperation and improvement in the northwest country. He arrived at Lewiston, Montana, August 4, 1885, having made the journey by railway and stage. Mr. Hobensack since boyhood has been possessed of much mechanical talent, and while he came to Montana with little or no capital, he found a ready outlet for his energies and one that has brought him rapid advancement along the road of prosperity. His first work in this state was sawing wood. Later he bought a wood sawing outfit. In July, 1889, he had the distinction of opening the first hardware store at Lewistown, his partner being Oliver Jutras. The business was conducted as Jutras & Hobensack until 1892, at which date Mr. Theodore Sloan purchased Mr. Jutras' interests. The firm continued as Hobensack & Sloan until the spring of 1898 when Mr. Arthur Stoddard purchased Mr. Sloan's interest. Mr. Hobensack organized the Judith Hardware Company in 1900, and was its president and manager until 1904. After that he was satisfied with the duties of president, which gave him more time to look after his other interests. He remained president of this prominent hardware house until 1917.

In 1915 Mr. Hobensack first appeared upon the list of prominent Montana wheat growers. In that year from 500 acres of land he harvested 25,000 bushels of wheat. Partly through his interest in the business and under the stimulation of patriotism he accomplished almost a miracle in Montana in 1918, when he harvested twenty-four bushels of spring wheat to the acre on 500 acres. While that much grain has been frequently raised by individuals in Montana in other years, it will be remembered that the year 1918 was marked by an almost total failure of wheat in Montana. Mr. Hobensack has used a unique implement for the northwestern wheat fields, known as the Holt Self Propelled Combination Harvester, a machine which accomplishes a remarkable saving in extensive wheat fields.

I. W. Hobmaack

Mr. Hobensack was one of the organizers of the Winnett Irrigation Company, owning many thousands of acres of land. Mr. Hobensack has turned his interests amounting to a ninth of all the land over to his wife and five children. The company is rapidly developing this tract as one great wheatfield. Mr. Hobensack is interested in local affairs, particularly in educational matters, and served as a member of the Lewistown School Board many years. He is a republican in politics.

For several years past he and his family have spent the winters in California. May 10, 1878, he married Miss Sarah Saurman, a native of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. Anna, the oldest of their five children, is the wife of Paul Taber and has a son and daughter; Elsie is the wife of Harry Eldridge and the mother of two children; the son Horace enlisted June 14, 1918, in the Machine Truck Corps at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, and received his honorable discharge in December of the same year. Ella is the wife of Frank J. Hagan and has a son. Bernice, the youngest child, is still at home with her parents.

PHILIP WESCH, a resident of Billings since 1899, a mason contractor, has done a notable service in the upbuilding of the city, and there are many monuments in the shape of important public and business structures that testify to his personal abilities and the efficiency of the organization of which he is the head.

Mr. Wesch was born at Mannheim, Baden, Germany, June 21, 1859. His father, John Valentine Wesch, was born in 1814 and died in 1862. He spent all his life in Germany, and was also a contractor. In religion he was a Lutheran. His wife was Atelheit Diemer, who was born in 1819 and died in 1870. Of their children Philip alone came to the United States. Henry, Hiop and Julius all died in the old country. Tobias is still living in Baden, a policeman. Rosina is the wife of Henry Steck, a shoemaker. Atelheit is deceased. Valentine is a cabinet maker and city clerk.

Philip, the youngest of eight children, attended the common schools to the age of fourteen and then served a thorough apprenticeship at the mason's trade. He came to the United States in 1883, spending one year in Wisconsin, followed his trade at Mitchell, South Dakota, until 1889, was in the Black Hills region at Hot Springs for ten years, and in 1899 moved to Billings, where he has since been at the head of an organization for mason contracting. Mr. Wesch did the mason work on the City Hall, the Northern Hotel, the Public Library, the Northern Pacific Freight Depot and many other important buildings. Out of his business effort he has achieved property, having a modern home at 522 North Thirtieth Street, an apartment house at 2905 North Twenty-ninth Street and a ranch of 320 acres a mile west of Acton. Until he sold his interest in 1918 he was president of the Billings Artificial Stone Company.

Mr. Wesch votes as a republican, is affiliated with the Congregational Church, and is a member of Billings Star Lodge of Odd Fellows, Hot Springs Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Mystic Toilers, Billings Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and the Billings Club.

In 1885, at Mitchell, South Dakota, Mr. Wesch married Miss Bertha George, daughter of Julius and Amelia (Witsel) George. Mrs. George lives at the home of Mr. Wesch. Julius George was a sailor by life occupation, and his family lived at Hamburg, Germany, while he sailed to all parts of the world. After retiring from the sea he came to the United States. Mrs. Wesch died at Hot Springs, South Dakota, in 1890, the mother of one daughter, Rosa Anna, wife of John W. Barnes, a dentist at Billings. In 1891, at Hot Springs, Mr. Wesch married Hermina George, a sister of his first wife. They have four children: Walter Philip, who lives at Billings and was recently mustered out of the United States service as a lieutenant of the ordnance department; Leo, who is a sergeant with the Army of Occupation in Germany; Florence, a student in Bozeman College at Bozeman, and Elizabeth, in the Billings public schools.

NELSON STORY, JR., started life with the tremendous responsibility of being worthy of the name he bears, one of the oldest and most honored in Montana's commercial history. In the course of twenty years he has fully justified his possession of the name of his honored father. He is a thorough business man, a capable executive, and by his judgment in picking new tenants has been able to carry on and direct many of the large and important enterprises of his section of the state.

While the Story family has been prominent in Montana for over half a century, from this state its wealth and enterprise have radiated into other sections, particularly to Southern California, and much of the individual wealth and enterprise of Los Angeles is associated with the family.

Nelson Story, Sr., still credits Bozeman as his home town. He is past eighty years of age and was born at Bungtown in Meigs County, Ohio, April 1, 1838. His paternal ancestry goes back in New England history to about 1640. He lived on his father's farm in Ohio until fourteen years of age. The death of his father threw him upon his own resources, and from that time forward he had to carve his own destiny. He had a partial college education. He was a participant in the early freighting between the Missouri River and the Rocky Mountains, and as a miner, freighter, cattle and horse dealer and man of varied interests his career belongs to the history of California, Montana and a number of territories. Going to Kansas in territorial times he worked at splitting rails, breaking the tough prairie sod, and at other forms of arduous labor. He first came to Montana in 1863, starting from Fort Leavenworth and crossing to Denver. From Denver he started for Bannock, Montana, with an outfit of two wagons, two yoke of cattle and sixteen packs of jacks. He made his first stop at Alder Gulch and then established a store with the goods he had brought overland at Summit City. Much of the merchandise he sold was brought in by pack train from Nevada. He also bought a mining claim and took out $40,000 worth of gold. Nelson Story, Sr., arrived at the little community of Bozeman in 1865, and no one figure has been longer and more completely identified with that Montana City than Nelson Story. During the Civil war period he drove a wagon team for the government in the vicinity of Fort Laramie. In 1866 he went to Texas, bought a large number of cattle and drove them over the northern trails to Montana. He was very successful in the stock business and for many years continued merchandising. At one time he was one of the leading cattle men and horse men of Montana, and ran his cattle on the Crow Indian Reservation. He disposed of his horses in 1888 and gradually sold out his cattle between 1890 and 1893. He was also in the milling and banking business, establishing the Gallatin Valley National Bank, of which he was president. He is still a large stockholder in the Commercial National Bank. Most of the money derived from his cattle interests he invested in Los Angeles city property. He established the Nelson Story & Company flour mill, afterwards the Bozeman Milling Company, which was owned by his son Nelson and Thomas B. Story. In 1919 they transferred their holdings in this company to the Montana Flour Mills Company for stock in that corporation. Though retired from the heavy responsibilities of business, Nelson Story, Sr., is still a very active man for his years. He is a republican in politics.

Nelson Story, Sr., married Ellen Trent, who was born in Neosho County, Kansas, in 1845. The two oldest of their children died in infancy. Rose is the wife of Dr. G. L. Hogan, a physician and surgeon at Los Angeles. The next in age is Nelson, Jr. Thomas Byron is president of the Bozeman Milling Company, an extensive sheep rancher, stockholder in the Commercial National Bank and owner of a large amount of city property in Bozeman. The sixth child, Alice, died in infancy. Walter P. Story is a prominent figure in the City of Los Angeles, and is distinguished as the builder of the first skyscraper office structure in that city, the Story Building, which was completed in 1910.

Nelson Story, Jr., was born at Bozeman May 12, 1874, and had every opportunity for a thorough business training and liberal education. He attended public school at Bozeman, including high school, spent three years in the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, two years in the Ogden Military Academy at Ogden, Utah, where he graduated in 1893, and during 1893-94 was a student in the Bryant & Stratton Business College. On returning to Bozeman he went to work in his father's flour mill and managed it for several years. He then established a machine shop and foundry, building it up to a successful local enterprise and then selling. Since then his interests have been of a broad and varied nature. He still owns a large amount of real estate, several business buildings and residences; is vice president of the Bozeman Milling Company; owner of the Story Supply Company, automobile accessories, on West Main Street and Grand Street, of which James R. Cochran is manager; and owner of the Story Rock Company, operating a rock crushing plant at Logan, Montana, with a capacity of 500 tons of rock a day during the summer season. This business is managed by O. A. Harris. Mr. Story does a great amount of contracting. At present he has a force of men and equipment, with Ben Hager as foreman, digging ten miles of dyke and drainage for the Madison Dyke & Drain Company. This is a project to keep the ice in the Madison River from overflowing the farms in Gallatin County. For the prosecution of his many varied business affairs Mr. Story maintains a suite of offices in the Story Building on the corner of West Main Street and Black Avenue. This office building, one of the best in Bozeman, is owned by his sister Mrs. G. L. Hogan.

Mr. Story has been sensitive to his obligations to the public welfare. He was elected in 1902 and again in 1910 a member of the Legislature, serving in the eighth and tenth sessions. For one term he was mayor of Bozeman, for four years a member of the City Council, and for two years a county commissioner of Gallatin County. He is a republican in politics, is past master of Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, a member of Zona Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, is past commander of the Knights Templar, and is affiliated with Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He also belongs to Bozeman Lodge No. 463, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Story and family live in a modern home at 722 South Central Avenue. He married at St. Louis, Missouri, June 10, 1895, Miss Etha L. Mayo, daughter of William Henry and Ella (Curley) Mayo. Her father, now deceased, was a thirty-third degree Mason, at one time recorder of the Masonic bodies of the Missouri jurisdiction, filling that office for thirty years before his death. Mrs. Mayo lives with Mr. and Mrs. Story. The latter have two children. Nelson Story III, born January 13, 1900, was educated in the local public schools and in Culver Military Academy in Indiana two years and graduated in 1919 from the Gallatin County High School. Mayo, a daughter, was born October 13, 1902, and is attending one of the best finishing schools for girls in the Middle West, Monticello Seminary at Godfrey, Illinois.

J. C. Conkey for the past fifteen years has been editor of the Ravalli Republican at Hamilton. That accounts for only about half of his experience as a printer and newspaper man. For a number of years before coming to Montana he was a director of one of the leading papers of California.

Mr. Conkey was born at West Union, Iowa, November 7, 1870. He is of Scotch ancestry. In Scotland the name was spelled McConkey. Three of the McConkey brothers came to New York in colonial times. The family to which J. C. Conkey belongs subsequently dropped the "Mc." His grandfather, Jacob Conkey, was born in New York State in 1800, and was an early settler in Iowa. He acquired a large amount of farm land, in the vicinity of West Union, and left a large farm to each of his three sons and much valuable city property to his daughter. He died in 1864. A. B. Conkey, father of the Hamilton editor, was born at Defiance, Ohio, in 1845, and during his youth removed to West Union, Iowa, where he married and where he was successfully engaged in farming until 1881. He then followed the business of contracting and building in West Union, but in 1899 retired from business and has since been a resident of Fresno, California. He is an independent republican in politics. A. B. Conkey married Edith Daniells, who was born in New York State in 1843. J. C. Conkey is the eldest of their children. Maud is married and lives at Fresno, while Laura is the wife of Clyde Wolf, an orchard owner at Lindsay, California.

J. C. Conkey attended the public schools of West Union, Iowa. Already he had acquired some practical knowledge of printing and newspaper work, having begun an apprenticeship with the West Union Gazette in 1886. In 1887 on leaving high school, he went to Alameda, California, and there for thirteen years was connected with the semi-weekly Argus. He was one of the incorporators of the publishing company which issued that paper as a daily, and remained a director in the establishment until 1900. By too close application to his work he found that he needed a change and vacation, and during that interval he visited a friend in Anaconda. While in Anaconda he worked with the Standard and then with the Jefferson County Zephyr at Whitehall. That was a busy time for newspaper men and editors. W. A. Clark was making a campaign for the United States Senate, and journalism was a much cultivated profession.

While visiting the Bitter Root Valley in 1904 Mr. Conkey leased the Ravalli Republican for one year with the privilege of purchasing the plant. About 1909 he bought the paper, having in the meantime edited it. The Ravalli Republican was established in 1887 and is the leading paper in Ravalli County and enjoys a large circulation and influence throughout Western Montana. The plant and offices at 301 Main Street have the best of equipment in the way of a printing plant. The paper is republican in politics.

Mr. Conkey is a republican voter. He is affiliated with Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, Crusade Commandery No. 17, Knights Templar, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is a member of the Hamilton Chamber of Commerce. In 1915, at Watsonville, California, he married Miss Isabel Gilray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gilray. Her parents reside at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, where her father is a Government employe. Mrs. Conkey finished her education in a college in Michigan. They have one daughter, Catherine, born October 21, 1917.

GEORGE D. AUNE. In the present day when competition is keen in all lines of endeavor, the accomplishment of success demands a definite and decided superiority. This is true at the village four-corners, but it is applicable in a much greater degree in those lines of high specialized work where the best brains are devoted to intricate detail, striving to produce absolute efficiency and to secure the advantage from each new trend of circumstance. Whether in the professions, in productive lines, in work of a promotive character, or in the markets of the world, a man finds equally keen strife ahead of him; and when the fight is made with discernment, vigor and aggressiveness, and success is acquired, half the compensation, other than financial independence, is derived from the satisfaction of having come a conqueror over those worthy of his steel. One of the highly-specialized industries of today is that which deals with the sale of insurance. In this field George D. Aune of the firm of Osborne & Aune, at Lewistown is practically a newcomer, but what he has accomplished thus far in his career would make it indicate that he will be able to hold his own in the face of stern competition.

Mr. Aune was born at Delavan, Faribault County, Minnesota, July 19, 1884, a son of Peter and Bargild (Iverson) Aune, natives of Norway, where the former was born in 1860 and the latter in 1861. The Aune family was first founded in the United States by the grandfather of Mr. Aune, who came here during the excitement raised over the discovery of gold in California, in 1849. After spending some time in California he returned to Norway, but this country had made such an impression upon him that he decided to make it his home, and in 1866 again came here, this time with his family. Locating in Faribault County, Minnesota, he passed the remainder of his career in farming. Peter Aune was but six years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States, and his education was secured in the district schools of Faribault County, where he passed his boyhood in assisting his father with the work of the homestead. He inherited this property at his father's death and made numerous improvements there, developing it into one of the most valuable properties in the locality. He continued to be engaged in farming and raising stock for some years in Faribault County, but finally disposed of the homestead at an attractive figure and moved to Cottonwod County, where he bought land and engaged in farming and stockraising until 1913. Since that time his attention has been given largely to business ventures, for Mr. Aune has been a most successful and energetic man and has branched out in his activities in a number of directions. He is now the owner of undertaking establishments at Heron Lake, Jeffers, Lamberton, Windom, Cotton and Highwater, in addition to which he superintends the operation of his farm and has large landed interests in the states of South Dakota and Oregon. Mr. Aune is a member of the Lutheran Church and in politics a republican. He was married in Nicollet County, Minnesota, to Bargild Iverson, and they are the parents of three sons and three daughters, all of whom are living.

The eldest of his parents' children, George D. Aune received his education in the public schools of Faribault County, Minnesota, and Saint Olaf College. His boyhood was passed on his father's farm, and his first money was earned during the threshing season, but he had no desire for an agricultural life, and when the opportunity presented itself accepted the chance to enter the First State Bank of Walnut Grove, of which he was assistant cashier for two years. In 1907 he came to Montana, and, at Moore, became identified with the Judith Commercial Company, in which general store he worked for six months. In the meantime he had entered Government land and eventually proved up on 160 acres. Subsequently he entered the State Bank of Moore, of which he was assistant cashier until 1913, and then removed to Denton, Montana, where he became one of the organizers of the Denton State Bank. Of this institution he remained cashier and manager until May, 1918. That month marked his advent at Lewistown, where he became associated with J. N. Osborne, under the style of Osborne & Aune, general agents for the Montana Life Insurance Company. The firm is doing an excellent business, and Mr. Aune has already established himself in public confidence and that of his business acquaintances as a man of marked ability and energy and of strict integrity and probity. Mr. Aune is a member of the Western Star Lodge No. 104, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a Lutheran in his religious belief, but at Lewistown supports the Methodist Episcopal Church in its benevolent and charitable work. As a voter he favors republican candidates and principles.

On June 15, 1910, Mr. Aune married Miss Chauncie A. Albright, who was born at New Haven, Pennsylvania, a daughter of David J. and Martha K. (Ash) Aune, who were the parents of three sons and three daughters. Mrs. Aune was the third child in order of birth and four are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Albright are farming people of near Stafford, Kansas, and are held in high esteem. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Aune: Arlene M., Judith O. and Margaret L.

FRANK C. CLINE. President of the Billings Laundry and owner of one of the valuable ranches of this section, Frank C. Cline has earned the right to be numbered among the leading business men of Billings. He was born at Bay City, Michigan, March 6, 1876, a son of M. C. Cline. The Cline family was established in the United States by the grandfather of Frank C. Cline, and he died at Simco, Ontario, Canada, before his grandson came into the world. M. C. Cline now resides at Saginaw, Michigan, but he was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1847, and was there reared. After attaining his majority he came to the United States and located at Bay City, Michigan, where he became superintendent of the Industrial Iron Works, this concern being engaged in building large cranes, so that his position was a responsible one. Here he remained until 1901, when he moved to his present location to become foreman of the Jackson-Church Company, but he is now retired. Politically he is a democrat. His religion is that of the Roman Catholic Church. While living in Canada he served in the Dominion Army. M. C. Cline was united in marriage with Margaret Leonard, born at Jersey City, New Jersey, and died at Bay City, Michigan, in 1895. Their children were as follows: Frank C., whose name heads this review; Arthur M., who owns a laundry at Stockton, California; and Mabel, who died at the age of thirty-five years. After the death of his first wife M. C. Cline was married to Kate Moriaraty, born at Montreal, Canada, and their children are as follows: Leo, who is attending the Ann Arbor Training School for the United States Service, and Martin, Jr., a student, who is at home.

Frank C. Cline attended the public schools of Bay City through the eleventh grade, and the Bay City Business College, from which he was graduated in 1896. Too close application to his books brought on a period of ill health, and he decided to enter the business world, his first position being with the Bay City Telephone Company. Mr. Cline then learned the laundry business and established the Valley Laundry at Bay City, selling it in 1897. For the subsequent twelve months he was at Grand Forks, North Dakota, being there connected with railroad work, but then re-entered the laundry business at Delano, Minnesota, selling his establishment seven months later. In 1900 he came to Montana and for two years had charge of the National Laundry at Great Falls, leaving that city for Idaho Falls, Idaho, where he owned and operated a laundry for two years, and then sold it. For a short period thereafter he had charge of the New Laundry at Butte, Montana, and then, in June, 1907, came to Billings and bought the Billings Laundry, having as partners in his venture George H. Casey, T. J. Casey and Frank T. Ryan. This laundry, which was established in 1894, is the largest establishment of its kind in Southeastern Montana, and gives employment to over 100 persons. Work is sent to it from points as far distant as 200 miles in Montana, North Dakota and Wyoming. The building, located opposite the post office, is of brick and is supplied with every modern appliance known to the laundry trade. Mr. Cline today is the majority stockholder and is its president and Mrs. Cline is the treasurer. Mr. Cline is independent in his political views. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church of Billings, and to Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus, and Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Since coming to Billings he has been connected with the Midland Club and the Billings Golf Club. His residence is regarded as one of the finest in the city, and it is located at 729 North Twenty-ninth Street. In addition to his other holdings he owns 640 acres of valuable ranch land nine miles east of Billings, which he devotes to the growing of grain.

In 1907 Mr. Cline was united in marriage with Miss Louise Hayes, a daughter of John and Louise Hayes, the former of whom was a merchant, but is now deceased. The latter, who survives, lives at Escanaba, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Cline are the parents of the following children: Dorothy, who was born April 23, 1908; Arthur, who was born in June, 1911; Francis, who was born February 10, 1915, and John Martin, born March 31, 1919. A sound, reliable and upright business man, Mr. Cline has forged ahead and has firmly established himself in the confidence of the people of Billings. His name stands for good work and honorable methods, and his business shows a healthy and gratifying increase annually.

ERNEST C. BUSCH. A man who can speak with authority on the life and times of Montana going back over forty years is Ernest C. Busch, a retired rancher living at Lewistown. In his early days in the state Mr. Busch worked as a sheep herder, and he has covered a large part of the state in his experiences with sheep, cattle and horses.

Mr. Busch was born in Germany, October 28, 1849, a son of John C. and Elizabeth (Wilah) Busch. His parents spent all their lives in Germany, where his father was a produce dealer. His father died at the age of seventy and his mother at seventy-four, Ernest being the oldest of their eight children, two of whom are now living.

Mr. Busch finding the conditions of Germany oppressive and restrictive of business opportunity came to this country in 1876. His first destination was Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he arrived in the month of March. After working out as a farm hand for about two years he came up the Missouri River to old Fort Benton, Montana, thence to Sun River, working as a cowboy, and later in the vicinity of Fort Maginnis took employment as a sheep herder. In 1883 he located his homestead in section 27, township 14, range 19, and made a start with a small flock of sheep. In 1890 he disposed of his flocks and began raising cattle and horses, and from that time on was connected with general farming until November 1, 1918, when he leased his farm and with ample means retired to enjoy life at Lewistown, where in addition to his own home he owns considerable real estate. Mr. Busch is a republican but has never cared for office, and has done his part as a Montana pioneer by studious attention to his own business and respecting always the rights and privileges of others. January 1, 1898, he married Miss Dena Albers.

LESTER PARK WORK is vice president and manager of the Story-Work Sheep Company, which with related interests comprise one of the most extensive sheep outfits in Montana. Mr. Work is a young business man, well fitted by experience and training for the great responsibilities he bears, a native Montanan and son of a noted pioneer of this country, John F. Work.

John F. Work, who is still living at Bozeman, was born June 30, 1835, not far from the battlefield of Gettysburg in Pennsylvania. He was a son of James and Marie (Black) Work, his father also a native of Pennsylvania. James Work during the early '40s moved to Illinois and later to Missouri, was a broom manufacturer and meat packer in those states, and in 1849 started overland for California with a bull team. In 1853 he returned to Missouri and resumed pork packing, but during 1862-63 was again in California engaged in mining and farming, spent another year in Idaho, and after that lived on a farm in Missouri until his death in 1869.

John F. Work was too young to accompany his father to California. He spent his early life on a Missouri farm and in 1857 took up the business of driving cattle from Missouri to the twin cities of Minnesota. In 1859 he went to the Pike's Peak gold mines. He was a member of the party with his father which started with an outfit of mules and horses to California in 1862. At South Pass he left the party to join an expedition going to the gold mines at Salmon River, and had many varied experiences and adventures in Idaho and Washington. In the latter part of 1865 he arrived at Virginia City, Montana, soon afterward went to Helena, and in succeeding years was identified with several pioneer communities in the Northwest, including Deer Lodge. He was at Bozeman in 1867 and in 1872 he located on a ranch on the Upper Yellowstone River in Park County. He was a rancher and miner for several years and in 1876 accompanied an expedition to the Black Hills. He was superintendent for several large cattle firms in Montana, also continued his business as a freighter, and about 1880 became interested in the sheep business, which he handled on a growing scale in connection with many other activities in transportation, contracting, and other lines of business. He made his permanent home at Bozeman in 1892. He was personally associated with many of the foremost men of Montana in pioneer and later times, and probably no one now living has a better memory of the history of Montana over a period of fifty years than John F. Work.

January 10, 1884, he married Mary Evelyn Stone, who was born in Missouri. Her father, Jeremiah Stone, came to Montana in 1883 and was a rancher near Bozeman for many years. John F. Work and wife had three children: Ward, who died in childhood; Vida M., who is the wife of Ray C. Holloway, a Bozeman merchant; and Lester P.

Lester Park Works was born thirteen miles east of Livingston February 25, 1889. He was educated in the common schools of Bozeman, completed his junior year in the Gallatin County High School and spent two years in the Montana State College. On leaving school in 1909 he entered the sheep business in the Yellowstone River Valley, and for a time was associated with Peter Koch, a Montana pioneer who died at Pasadena, and with John Harvat, the well known business man of Livingston. These men handled sheep on a thousand hills and in many valleys of Montana. They bought out the Briggs Ellis outfit, one of the largest in the state. In 1914 Mr. Work withdrew from this combination and became associated with T. B. Story of Bozeman, organizing the Story-Work Sheep Company and the Clear Range Sheep Company. In the incorporation of the Story-Work Sheep Company T. B. Story is president, Mr. Work, vice president and manager, and W. P. Harmon, secretary and treasurer. In 1918 this firm sheared 65,000 old sheep and raised thousands of lambs. They own 100,000 acres of deeded land in Park, Sweetgrass, Gallatin, Broadwater and Meagher counties. The offices of the corporation are in the Story Block at Bozeman.

Mr. Work is also interested in real estate at Bozeman and has a modern home there at 415 South Central Avenue. He is a republican in politics and is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 463 of the Elks. At White Sulphur Springs, Montana, in November, 1917, he married Miss Olga Black, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Powell Black, both now deceased. Her father was a pioneer lawyer at White Sulphur Springs. Mrs. Work is a graduate of the College for Girls at Lexington, Kentucky.

Jeffrey P. Whyte has lived in the Bitter Root country of Western Montana for the past twenty years, and has developed one of the leading mercantile concerns at the town of Darby in Ravalli County.

His ancestors were English. His grandfather was born in England in 1799, and was an early settler in the province of Quebec, Canada, where he followed farming. He died at Carillon, Quebec, in 1889. Capt. John Whyte, his son, and father of the Montana merchant, was born at Carillon, Canada, in 1847. He was reared and married in his native province, and became a boat captain on the St. Lawrence River. He lived for many years at Grenville, but since 1884 has had his home at North Bay in Ontario and is now retired from his profession. He is a liberal in political thought and a Catholic and Knight of Columbus. He married Bridget Carlon, who was born in Ireland in 1845 and died at North Bay in 1908. A brief record of their children follows: Thomas, a farmer at Wisawasa, Ontario, Canada; Jeffrey P.; Robert, a demonstrator for the Ross Rifle Factory living in the City of Quebec; Rose Ellen, wife of William Traynor, chief mail clerk on the Canadian Pacific Railway, living at North Bay, Ontario.

Jeffrey P. Whyte was born at Grenville, Quebec, Canada, August 19, 1876, and received most of his education in the public schools of Wisawasa. He left school at the age of eighteen, and worked in the lumber woods of Michigan until he came to Montana in 1900. Then for eight years he was connected with the lumber industry of the Bitter Root Valley until 1908 when he opened a cafe at Darby. He conducted that business seven years, and in 1915 opened a toggery store and in 1918 built the substantial structure on Main Street which houses his present mercantile concern, with a full stocked department of groceries and a store for men's and boys' clothing. He also owns a modern home on Main Street.

Mr. Whyte is a member of the Catholic church, is affiliated with Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, of the Elks, and is a democratic voter. In April, 1908, at Hamilton, Montana, he married Miss Josephine Solleder, a daughter of August and Mary (Lyman) Solleder, who reside at Darby, Montana. Her father is a carpenter and builder. Mr. and Mrs. Whyte have two children: Gordon, born in June, 1909, and Maxine, born in September, 1910.

Oscar O. Mueller. From the practice of law to a position of trust in the Government of his community is but a step for an individual to make, one that has been frequently taken to the betterment of the aspirant and his constituency. In his professional practice an attorney must necessarily show his hand, expose his ability, the strength of his personality and the stand he takes on the fundamental principles governing society. Should he, at some future time, desire to enter political life he must rely upon the record of his practice to gain him support. He may be accredited with the requisite knowledge and experience, but unless the footprints he has left behind him are clear and clean and in unshaken places he cannot inspire nor hold public confidence. If, on the other hand, he leaves behind him a succession of imprints all leading unerringly in the proper direction, the public recognizes him as being trustworthy, and the step from legal practice to a representative position in the Government is successfully accomplished. Of the members of the Fergus County legal profession who have impressed themselves upon their communities as worthy of trust and have thereby been honored by election to public office, Oscar O. Mueller, city attorney of Lewistown, is an example.

Mr. Mueller was born on his father's farm in Madison County, Iowa, March 29, 1877, a son of George and Katherine (Schutt) Mueller, the former born at Waldeck-on-the-Rhine, Germany, in 1846, and the latter was born in Germany in 1851. George Mueller was but thirteen years of age when he emigrated to the United States on a sailing vessel which made port at New York after a voyage of three weeks on the Atlantic. After spending some time in New York City he went to Warsaw, Illinois, where he remained for three years, and during that time was married. He and his wife became the parents of seven children, all of whom are living, of whom Oscar O. was the fifth in order of birth. From Warsaw Mr. Mueller removed to Madison County, Iowa, and there worked as a farm hand. He was industrious and frugal, and eventually managed to accumulate sufficient means to purchase a farm of 160 acres, on which he engaged in farming and stock raising operations. As the years passed he continued to add to his holdings until he and his youngest son were the owners of a full section of fine farming land, which is still in their possession. They are also extensive breeders of graded stock and are well known among the agriculturists and stockmen of their part of the State of Iowa. Mr. Mueller is one of the prominent men of his locality and has various interests, one of which is the Farmers Insurance Company, of which he was one of the organizers and of which he has served as president for about ten years. He takes an active and interested part in the promotion of the best interests of his locality, and in his political adherence is a stanch republican.

After attending the public schools of Madison County, Iowa, Oscar O. Mueller took a four-year course in the Iowa State Normal College, being graduated therefrom in the class of 1903. At that time he entered upon a short career as a school teacher, being for two years principal of schools at Stacyville, Iowa, but this was not his chosen vocation, and in 1905 he entered the law department of the University of Iowa, being graduated therefrom with his degree of Bachelor of Law with the class of 1908. He was admitted to the Iowa bar, and September 11, 1908, came to Lewistown, Montana, being admitted to practice in this state in the month following, when he at once settled down to the duties of a professional business, the growth of which has since been as rapid as it has been satisfying in its importance. He maintains offices in the Empire Bank Building and is accounted one of the leaders of the Fergus County bar. His knowledge of the fundamental principles of his calling and his skill in presenting his arguments put him in a position where he was recognized as being of official qualifications, and for two years he served as assistant county attorney. On June 1, 1916, to fill a vacancy, he was appointed city attorney of Lewistown, and May 1, 1917, received the reappointment to that office, which he has since filled with ability and fidelity. He is a republican in politics and his fraternal connections include membership in Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master, and Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, of which he is at present high priest.

On June 9, 1915, Mr. Mueller was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Cook, who was born at White Sulphur Springs, Montana, the elder of the two children of Charles W. and Abbie (Kennecott) Cook, pioneers of Montana, where they are now living, the former a native of Unity, Maine, and the latter of New York State. Mr. and Mrs. Mueller are the parents of one son, Glenn H.

H. Leonard DeKalb. A former judge of the District Court, H. Leonard DeKalb began the practice of law at Lewistown in 1902, and has been identified with many important professional and public interests since that date.

Judge DeKalb was born at Alexandria, Nebraska, May 10, 1879, a son of Thomas J. and Margaret (Raugh) DeKalb, both natives of Pennsylvania. His father was born in Philadelphia April 2, 1845. His mother was born in Luzerne County June 15, 1847. Thomas J. DeKalb was educated in Philadelphia and in 1861, at the age of sixteen, enlisted in the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry and served with the Army of the Potomac until the close of hostilities. He was in the battle of Gettysburg and all the other campaigns of his regiment. At the close of the war he returned home, taught school for several years, and then set out for the western frontier, locating in Jefferson County, Nebraska, where he took up a homestead and where he still lives, owning between 700 and 800 acres of land. He gave his active supervision to general farming and stock raising until 1904, since which year he has lived retired. He has served several terms as county commissioner of Jefferson County, is a democrat and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He and his wife had six children, three sons and three daughters, all living.

H. Leonard DeKalb attended the public schools in Nebraska and finished his law course in the University of Nebraska with the class of 1902. He was admitted to the Nebraska Bar in June of that year and on the 24th of December arrived at Lewistown, Montana, where he was soon admitted to the state bar. Since then he has been busied with a general practice. He was elected city attorney of Lewistown in 1904, and filled that office six years. On March 31, 1917, he was appointed district judge, but resigned from the duties of that office May 18, 1918.

Judge DeKalb served as a member of the County Council of Defense. He is a democrat and a member of the State Bar Association. He is junior partner of the well known law firm of Belden & DeKalb, of Lewistown. Fraternally his affiliations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

May 30, 1905, Judge DeKalb married Vera B. McClean. She is a native of Muscatine, Iowa. They have one daughter, Nellie Mohrine.

Edwin L. Fenton. There are no obstacles so great that they cannot be overcome provided a man brings to bear upon them a sufficient amount of mental effort and persistence. One of the advantages of this country is that opportunities are offered to all alike, and that the poor boy can give rein to his ambition with just as much hope of attaining to the goal he sets for himself as the one who is the son of wealthy parents, and sometimes with more, because in the first instance the economic necessities of the lad without means are sufficiently urgent to compel him to exert himself to the utmost and to develop every faculty. Edwin L. Fenton, one of the alert business men of Laurel, Montana, presents in his remarkable career a case which comes under the above classification. Left an orphan, and reared in an orphan school, he has never ceased to press forward, and each time he has entered a field he has registered the sharp, resonant impressions of the vibrating needle of experiences gained in a former one. His every act has been sharp, clear and illuminating, and yet at the same time he has kept an open mind and heart and quick understanding for the needs of humanity. The result has been that he has not only achieved material prosperity, but he has been elected and re-elected to various offices by his appreciative fellow citizens and stands today as one of the representatives of the highest type of western manhood and American citizenship.

Edwin L. Fenton was born at Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, November 8, 1859, a son of Henry Fenton and grandson of Luman Fenton, who was an early farmer of Pennsylvania, and died on his farm near Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, in 1886. He married Emily Austin, and she also died on the old homestead near Wellsboro. Henry Fenton was born near Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, and was a farmer in his native state.

E. L. Fenton

With the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Company G, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, in 1861, and was killed during the first battle of the Wilderness. With the organization of the republican party he espoused its principles. His wife bore the maiden name of Maria Hard, and she was born in Pennsylvania and died at Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, having borne her husband two children, Ida L., who died in Ohio, and Edwin L., whose name heads this review.

Losing his father at such a tender age, Edwin L. Fenton was reared and educated in the Soldiers' Orphan School at Mansfield, Pennsylvania, and remained in this institution until he was sixteen years old, leaving at that age to begin working in the outside world. Until 1883 he remained in Pennsylvania, working at whatever tasks of an honest nature could be secured, for one year of that period teaching school, but his ardent young spirit could not be content with the narrow confines of the East, and in the spring of that year he struck out for the West, and like our "greatest American," gained experience and health on a ranch, spending one summer near Grand Forks, North Dakota. Marrying in that fall, he went back to Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, and for a year worked in a lumber yard and sawmill. He then moved to Pen Yan, New York, and for four years was engaged in farming, but having once experienced the freer life of the West, he came back to it, arriving in Park City, Montana, in 1889, and after some changes homesteaded, his ranch being located between Park City and Laurel. After proving this property he sold it in 1899, and that same year came to Laurel, was made its postmaster and held that office for fourteen successive years. In 1913 he embarked in his present realty business, and also sells insurance and negotiates loans, doing the largest business of its kind in the county. His office is conveniently located on First Avenue, and he owns the building in which it is located, as well as a modern residence on Third Avenue.

A republican of the stalwart type, Mr. Fenton has been a potent force in his party ever since coming to Laurel, being its first mayor, and he is deputy assessor for Yellowstone County and clerk of the school board of Laurel. In addition to his other interests he is justice of the peace and a notary public, and discharges the duties of police judge. He is secretary and treasurer of the Laurel Realty Company, the Old Mill Ditch Company, and of the Farmers Mutual Telephone Company, to all of these concerns bringing a ripened experience and sound judgment which are of great benefit in the transaction of business and the securing of public confidence.

In fraternal matters Mr. Fenton is deservedly popular and is past grand of Laurel Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; helped to organize Camp Laurel, Modern Woodmen of America, and he is also an aggressive member of the Laurel Commercial Club, exerting himself to add new names to the membership list of all of these organizations. The Laurel Congregational Church has in him one of its most helpful members, and he is one of its deacons.

On December 3, 1883, Mr. Fenton was united in marriage with Miss Anna L. Crans at Grand Forks, North Dakota. She was born at Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, a daughter of O. V. Crans, who also offered up his life on the altar of his country during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Fenton became the parents of the following children: Nina, who married B. H. Clark, lives at Billings, Montana, where Mr. Clark is an inspector for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and they have three children, Anna, Edwin and Frank; George W., who is unmarried, resides at Laurel, and assists his father in business; Helen, who married Frank Jacobs, is a resident of Perma, Sanders County, Montana, where Mr. Jacobs is a stockman and stock inspector; Frances, who resides at home, is one of the teachers of the First Ward School of Laurel; and Harriet, who was graduated from the Laurel High School in the class of 1918, is stenographer for Attorney W. L. A. Calder, of Laurel. The children have all been well educated and are a credit to their parents and the training they have received. Mr. Fenton is admittedly a man who early learned the value of time, the pleasure of working, the influence of example and the virtue of patience, and is now reaping the benefits of this knowledge, and his community is the richer for his presence in it.

WILLIAM MERRIAM COBLEIGH is the scientific authority to whose department are referred many problems involving the pure water supply, sanitation, and matters involving the science of chemistry in relation to industry. Mr. Cobleigh is a chemist, and has been teaching and practicing his profession in Montana for over a quarter of a century. He is state chemist and head of the chemistry department of the Montana State College at Bozeman, where he has his home and headquarters.

He was born at Haverstraw, New York, September 7, 1872, of New England ancestry. His grandfather, John Cobleigh, was a native of New Hampshire, descended from a family that settled there in colonial times from England. John Cobleigh spent his active life as a farmer and died in Northumberland, New Hampshire, about 1874. Professor Cobleigh through his mother is a member of the Merriam family, which was also established in New Hampshire in colonial days, when four brothers came over from England.

William Cobleigh, father of William Merriam, was born in Northumberland, New Hampshire, in 1838. He was a student in Dartmouth College when the war broke out and in 1861 joined the Sixteenth New Hampshire Infantry and was all through the war. He was in the Shenandoah Valley campaign under General Sheridan and at the famous Battle of Winchester. He was mustered out with the rank of captain. After the war he married and engaged in the mercantile business at Stratford, New Hampshire, and about 1869 moved to Haverstraw, New York, where he remained a few years. In the meantime he finished his studies and entered the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. He is well remembered in a number of communities of the Northwest for his missionary labors. He preached at Park River and Grafton, North Dakota, and in the spring of 1887 came to Corvallis, Montana. He was one of the first ministers there and also at Grantsdale. Later he had pastorates in Idaho and Washington, but finally retired to Corvallis in Ravalli County. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Rev. William Cobleigh married Julia A. Merriam, who was born in Northumberland, New Hampshire, in 1840 and is now living at San Diego, California.

William Merriam Cobleigh was the only child of his parents. He was fifteen years old when they came to Montana. He had attended school in Grafton, North Dakota, including the high school there, and after September, 1887, continued his preparatory work in the College of Montana at Deer Lodge and was graduated from that institution with the degree of E. M. in June, 1894. In the meantime he had spent several vacations as assistant chemist for the Anaconda Mining Company at Anaconda. A quarter of a century ago Mr. Cobleigh came to Bozeman as assistant in chemistry at the State College. He is now the oldest professor in continuous service among the state colleges of Montana. As head of the department of chemistry his offices are in the New Chemistry Building. Mr. Cobleigh has been a close student of his profession, and has taken post-graduate courses in Columbia University, Harvard University, the University of Chicago. He received his master's degree in chemistry at Columbia University in 1899.

Besides his work as state chemist of Montana he is chemist for the State Board of Health. He is a member of the American Public Health Association, Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, is a member of the American Waterworks Association and the American Chemical Society. Mr. Cobleigh is a trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Bozeman, is a republican, and is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

He resides in a modern home at 909 South Third Avenue. He married at Sunderland, Massachusetts, in 1901, Miss Esther Rose Cooley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Cooley, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired farmer at Sunderland. Mrs. Cobleigh is a graduate of the Moody Seminary at Northfield, Massachusetts. To their marriage were born three children, Winifred M., born December 16, 1903, now in the Gallatin County High School; Lois E., born December 21, 1910, a pupil in the grammar schools of Bozeman; and Norman B., born June 12, 1919.

H. L. Summers. Soon after his return from France, where he served with the Twentieth Engineers, H. L. Summers, a native son of Montana, engaged in business at Darby, being president and founder of the Darby Mercantile Company.

Mr. Summers was born near Hamilton, Montana, June 9, 1892, and his people were among the pioneers of the territory and state. In the paternal line he is of Welsh ancestry. His father, John A. Summers, was born near Springfield, Missouri, in 1849, grew up there and at the age of nineteen came to Montana in 1868. He was a pioneer blacksmith at Deer Lodge, Blackfoot City, Missoula, and Corvallis, and was married in the latter town. After his marriage he moved to the vicinity of Hamilton, where he engaged in cattle raising. He was successful as a rancher much above the ordinary and at one time owned 800 acres of land and ran between 1,000 and 1,500 head of cattle. He sold his cattle interests in 1899. Not long afterward he bought a ranch of 380 acres near Corvallis, improved it as a diversified farm, and in 1907 harvested the largest crop of oats ever produced by an individual farm in the Bitter Root Valley. His yield that year was 22,000 bushels. Not long afterward he sold his farm and in the spring of 1908 moved to Missoula, where he lived retired, and in 1911 went to Los Angeles, California, where he died January 15, 1915. He was a republican in politics, and for many years served as master of Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

John A Summers married Juda Chaffin. She was born in Kansas in 1860, and when a small girl came to the Bitter Root Valley of Montana, where she grew up. She is now living at Santa Monica, California. Her father, Elijah Chaffin, was a Montana pioneer and a successful farmer and stockman in the western part of the state. He died at Corvallis many years ago. John A. Summers and wife had the following children: Inez, wife of John Ashby, a farmer at Corvallis; Margaret, who lives with her mother; Jeanette, wife of Harry W. Johnson, a rancher at Corvallis; Fred, a contractor of street paving at Los Angeles; H. L. Summers; Leland, a stockholder in the Keyes & Company produce business at Corvallis; and Louise, who lives with her mother in California.

H. L. Summers was educated in the public schools of Hamilton, attended the high school at Corvallis through his junior year, spent eight months in the Garden City Commercial College and for one term was a student in the Los Angeles Business College. Leaving school in 1912, Mr. Summers spent three years as cashier with the Missoula Electric Supply Company, for two years was bookkeeper with the Western Montana Bank at Missoula, and in 1916 he made an extensive travel tour by automobile, leaving Missoula, going to San Francisco, to Tijuana in Lower California, and returned to Missoula in the spring of 1917. Following that he was teller in the Missoula Trust & Savings Bank until March 25, 1918, the date of his enlistment for war service. He was sent to Washington, District of Columbia, with the Forty-Third Engineers, and soon afterwards was transferred to the Twentieth Engineers, with which he went overseas May 22nd, reaching France on the 30th of May, 1918. He was overseas more than a year, and on his return landed at Newport News, Virginia, June 23, 1919, and was mustered out at Fort A. D. Russell July 2, 1919.

After spending three months recuperating Mr. Summers organized the Darby Mercantile Company, and opened the general department store on November 1, 1919. This company now has the leading general mercantile business in Ravalli County outside of Hamilton. Besides Mr. Summers as president of the company Valentine Troop is vice president and E. L. Sargent is secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Summers is also secretary and treasurer of the Majestic Bottling Works at Missoula. He is a republican, and is affiliated with Harmony Lodge No. 49, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Missoula, and Hell Gate Lodge No. 383, of the Elks at Missoula. He is unmarried.

Walter H. Peck. A pioneer of Montana of the year of 1881, Walter H. Peck furnishes in his career an illustration of self-made manhood typical of the lives of many of the men who had the privilege of opening up this state and who, in advancing the general progress of the community, found the opportunity of prospering personally, both in fortune and position. Mr. Peck, who is now practically retired from active affairs, makes his home at Lewistown, but is still a large landholder and is vitally interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the state in which he was given his chance to prove himself.

Walter H. Peck was born in Illinois, August 28, 1853, a son of Rev. John and Sarah (Bremmer) Peck. His father, who was a graduate of the New York State University, was a Presbyterian minister who came west in young manhood and had his first charge in Indiana. He was born at Greenwich, Connecticut (then known as Horse Neck), and for a number of years filled pulpits in Indiana and Illinois, then returning to New York, where he preached in churches in the western part of that state. Subsequently he again came west, locating at Saint Peter, Minnesota, where he was engaged in his ministerial labors at the time of the Indian uprising at Mankato, Minnesota, near Saint Peter, during the '60s, when thirty-six of the belligerents were hanged by the United States Government. Later Reverend Peck went to Paterson, New Jersey, where he passed his last days, and there his death occurred in 1868, when he was fifty-six years of age, his wife, a native of New York City, surviving until 1876 and dying at the age of fifty-four years. Reverend Peck was first a whig and later a republican in his political views. He and his wife were the parents of two sons and one daughter, and Walter H. was the second in order of birth.

Walter H. Peck was educated in the public schools of Paterson, New Jersey, and was but fourteen years of age when he began work in the general offices of the Erie Railway Company. Assigned to the auditor's office, during the next eleven years he applied himself to clerical work and gave his employers the best of satisfaction. The call of the West, however, which he had heard for some years, eventually proved too strong and in the spring of 1881 Mr. Peck settled his affairs in the East and journeyed by train to Bismarck, North Dakota. He arrived in time to catch the first steamboat of the year, the famous old Far West, with Captain Good in command. The boat was crowded to its capacity with early spring arrivals, and fourteen days were consumed in making the trip to Fort Benton, Montana, where Mr. Peck continued his journey by securing passage on a stage. This carried him to what was known as Little Mack's Ranch, the sheep ranch of a Mr. McDonald, for whom Mr. Peck worked for about 2½ months, at $35 per month, this being the first money he had earned in Montana. Returning to Fort Benton, he joined an ox team outfit which he accompanied to another sheep ranch. It was not long thereafter that Mr. Peck purchased his first band of sheep, buying them from Paris Gibson, one of the pioneer sheepmen of the state. Mr. Peck herded this band during the winters of 1881 and 1882, and then located on Government land on Box Elder Creek. There he established the first postoffice in Meagher (now Fergus) County, on his ranch, this being known as Roy postoffice, of which he was the first postmaster. It was a year later before he secured service by the United States mail, the stage coaches running between Fort Meginnis and Rocky Point, stopping tri-weekly at his office.

Mr. Peck continued in the sheep business until 1899, in which year he sold out his bands and located at Garneill, opening a general merchandise store. In the meantime he did not give up his ranching operations, in fact increased them and ran large herds of cattle, and continued in both lines of endeavor until 1916, when he practically retired from active labor. He has since resided at Lewistown, where he has been in the enjoyment of the rewards which are his by reason of his years of faithful and industrious labor. He is still the owner of between 1,300 and 1,400 acres of valuable ranch land, which he rents to tenants, in addition to 320 acres which he himself superintends merely "to keep his hand in." Mr. Peck has always been satisfied with the activity to be found in his ranch and business interests, and has had no desire for the political forum. While public life has not appealed to him, he has been of value to his community in his interpretation of the meaning of citizenship and all good movements have had his unquestioned and unwavering support and cooperation. As a voter he is a republican, and he has several fraternal affiliations.

Mr. Peck was married September 22, 1885, to Miss Zelinda Stuart, who was born in Randolph County, North Carolina, a daughter of Henry and Abigail (Lossiter) Stuart, natives of the Old North state, the latter of whom still survive. Mr. Stuart, who was born July 15, 1828, died December 17, 1906, having been the father of seven children, all of whom are still living, and Mrs. Peck is the eldest. Mr. Stuart left North Carolina and went with his family to Adams County, Illinois, where he was engaged in farming and stock raising for some years, but later sold his property and purchased a farm in Hancock County of the same state, where he spent the last years of his life. He was a republican politically, and in religious faith was reared as a Quaker, but later embraced the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Peck there have been born a daughter and two sons: Helen B. who resides with her parents; Henry Stuart, an electrical engineer, applied for an office in the United States Engineering Department at Vancouver, British Columbia, in September, 1917, and October 1, 1918, received his commission as first lieutenant of United States Engineers, United States army, sailed from New York City, and is now in service in France. In April, 1919 he received his commission as captain. John Walters, a farmer and ranchman of Fergus County, married Margaret Schuster and has three children, John Addison, Walter Hyer and Virginia Stuart.

Fred R. Warren came to Montana in 1883. As a freighter, rancher, banker and business man of large affairs his interests have been identified with the Judith Basin for a third of a century, and his name is well known all over the region around Lewistown.

Mr. Warren was born in Wyoming County, New York, January 1, 1857, a son of Otto and Mary (Jones) Warren. His parents were also natives of New York State. His father spent his active career as a farmer and building mover, and also made a creditable record as a Union soldier. He died at the age of sixty-three. He was a Methodist, a republican, and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife died at the age of fifty-five. Fred is the fourth in a family of two sons and five daughters, all living.

He acquired his education in Livingston County, New York, attending the grammar and high schools there. In 1879, at the age of twenty-two, he came West, his first destination being Fort Collins, Colorado. He spent two years on a sheep ranch, and learned many of the details of that industry. He then engaged in teaming, hauling the output of a brick yard while Fort Collins was in process of construction. On March 12, 1883, he left Fort Collins with a four-horse team bound for Billings, Montana. He reached Billings May 4th, and that may be considered the date of his permanent establishment in Montana. At Billings he made the acquaintance of P. W. McDow, and soon took a load of freight and came on to the Judith Basin, stopping where Utica is now located. For about two years he worked for John D. Waite in the sheep business, and then began handling a flock of his own. He increased his interests and at one time he had 14,000 sheep grazing on his own and leased lands. In 1914 he sold his ranch and sheep and in that year located at Lewistown, where he built the comfortable home in which he still resides.

In 1910, with his son-in-law, Mr. Woodward, he organized the Warren Banking Company at Hobson. Later they established the First National Bank at Hobson, Mr. Warren having served as president from the beginning. He is also president of the Stone Born Ranch Company, president of the Sapphire Oil Company of Kansas and vice president of the Lewistown Oil Company of Montana.

In politics Mr. Warren is a republican. While living at Utica he served as chairman of the school board and while on the board a fine public school building was erected. He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and Lewistown Commandery, Knights Templar. He also belongs to Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is one of the lodge trustees. He is also a trustee of the Judith Club.

March 27, 1887, Mr. Warren married Margaret Tabler, a native of New Albany, Indiana. They have one daughter, Ethel G., wife of Herbert F. Woodward. Mr. Woodward is manager of the First National Bank at Hobson, Montana. The five grandchildren are Margaret, Warren, Ruth, Ethel Louise and Claria Woodward.

J. A. North. During the past fifteen years one of the leading operators in realty at Billings has been J. A. North, a progressive, energetic and well-informed business man who has steadily worked his way to a place of importance. His interests are extensive and varied, centering principally in city properties, farms and loans, and in each line of endeavor he has brought to bear an inherent and developed ability that has carried his activities through to a successful conclusion.

Mr. North was born at Adel, the county seat of Dallas County, Iowa, January 20, 1872, a son of T. R. and Naomi E. (Stewart) North, and a member of a family which originated in England and settled in Ohio at an early day in the history of that state. T. R. North was born in Ohio in 1835, and was reared in Ohio and Indiana, being first married in the latter. A lawyer by profession, he first practiced his calling in Indiana, subsequently went to Adel, Iowa, where he had an office for some years and where he was married a second time, and finally returned to Warsaw, Indiana, in 1909, and retired from active pursuits. He now makes his home there and is in the enjoyment of the rewards that have come to him through the unceasing labors of his active years. Mr. North was a railroad attorney and became well and favorably known in his profession, as he was also as a leader of the democratic party in the various communities in which he resided. On numerous occasions he was a delegate to state, congressional and national conventions, and, while he never sought nor cared for public office, was elected mayor of Adel, Iowa, and gave that city an excellent administration. He was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In 1864 Mr. North enlisted in the Fifty-second Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and, among other engagements, fought at Stony Creek. His only brother, Jack North, was captain of a company of Indiana volunteers, and fought under General Sherman in his notable march from Atlanta to the sea. By his first marriage T. R. North had one daughter, Lillie, who married J. H. Whitman, who is now deceased. She was again married, being united with A. Andrus, a mine owner and timberman of Astoria, Oregon. The second union of T. R. North was with Naomi E. Stewart, who was born in Illinois in 1839 and died at Medford, Oregon, in 1888, and they became the parents of six children: Etta, who is unmarried and a resident of Racine, Wisconsin; Austin, president of the North Real Estate and Investment Company, of Billings; J. A., of this review; Alice, who is the widow of Mr. Milliken, who died shortly after their marriage, and a resident of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Joseph R., president of North Brothers, Incorporated, a real estate firm of Billings; and Otto, secretary and treasurer of the same concern. After the death of his second wife T. R. North was again married, being united with Laura Abbott, of Des Moines, Iowa. They became the parents of one child, Ava, who is married and resides at Warsaw, Indiana.

J. A. North obtained his education in the public schools of Adel, Iowa, and after his graduation from the high school there in 1889 went to Omaha, Nebraska, where he secured a position with the Merchants Dispatch and Transportation Company. One year later he went to Oregon and for eight years was engaged in horticultural work, and in 1898 located at Garfield, Washington, where he was employed in the same capacity, and in buying, packing and shipping fruit for four years. His next location was at Spokane, Washington, where for two years he was identified with the Great Northern Railway, and from that city he came to Billings in 1904 to engage in the real estate business, with offices at No. 13 First National Bank Building. He is the sole proprietor of the business, and is prominent among the handlers of farms, city properties, loans and insurance. Mr. North is an excellent judge of property values, and his wide and varied experience in different localities has served to develop his abilities and equip him particularly for the line which he now follows. His standing in business circles is an excellent one, for his entire career has been characterized by integrity and honorable dealing. His pleasant, modern home is situated in the suburbs, southeast of Billings. Mr. North is independent in his political views, and has not sought the doubtful honors of public life, but has demonstrated his good citizenship by public-spirited actions and through his support of movements calculated to benefit the general weal. He has various connections of a civic, business and social nature, and is a man who naturally makes friendships and retains them indefinitely.

In 1892, at Jacksonville, Oregon, Mr. North was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Johnson, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Johnson was a real estate operator, first at Medford, Oregon, and later at Garfield, Washington, in both of which communities he was held in high esteem by his business associates. To Mr. and Mrs. North there have been born three children: Bessie, the wife of Ralph L. Morris, of Billings, proprietor of the Billings Times: J. LaVerne, who is engaged in ranching west of Billings; and Stewart Wells, who resides with his parents.

Roy Orvis Wilson is registrar of Montana State College and is also head of the department of secretarial studies. Mr. Wilson has spent most of his time since leaving college in some phase of educational administration, and much of the time also as a teacher of commercial arts.

F. M. Lewellen is a prominent merchant and business man in Northwestern Montana, being secretary and treasurer of the McCowan Commercial Company, operating the largest department store in Sanders County.

Mr. Lewellen is a native of Missouri, and received his early commercial training in that state. He was born in the town of Paris November 22, 1880. His paternal ancestors were Welsh and came to the United States in colonial times. His father, Thomas Lewellen, was born at Florida, Missouri, in 1827, and spent his life as a farmer at Florida and Paris. He died in the latter locality in 1901. For a number of years he devoted his farm largely to the typical Missouri industry of raising mules. During the Civil war he was on the Confederate side, and was all through the struggle. He was severely wounded near Richmond and at one time was made a prisoner, being kept at Alton, Illinois, until exchanged. Politically he was a democrat. Thomas Lewellen married Rebecca Woodson, who was born at Stoutsville, Missouri, in 1839 and died at Paris in that state, in 1903. She was the mother of five children: Lena, wife of C. H. Bondurant, a farmer in Madison, Missouri; J. W., in the insurance business at Paris, Missouri; C. T. and O. I., both merchants at Welch, Missouri; and F. M. Lewellen.

Julian A. Sutter. The contribution of Julian A. Sutter to the business prestige and development of the thriving City of Lewistown is a jewelry establishment that is at once a credit to the city and to its founder and proprietor. Conducted as Sutter Brothers, during the fifteen years of its existence it has followed a policy of honorable and straightforward business principles and policy that have served to establish it firmly in the confidence of the people and to place Mr. Sutter among the leading business citizens of the community.

Mr. Sutter was born July 2, 1875, at Le Locle, Canton of Neuchatel, Switzerland, a son of Joseph and Bertha (Montandon) Sutter. His parents were natives of Switzerland, where they were married, and his father is now a resident of Plattsburg, Missouri, where his mother passed away in 1893. Of the two sons and five daughters in the family, Julian A. is the only one to have been born in Switzerland. Joseph Sutter was born in 1853 and was brought up in a family which for many years had followed the trade of watchmaking, one of the principal industries of that country. He, according to family custom, mastered the business, which he followed in Switzerland until 1877, when he immigrated to the United States with his wife and son. The first location of the family in this country was at Wooster, Ohio, where Mr. Sutter followed his trade until 1879, but found this too unremunerative in the face of the opportunities that were presenting themselves, and in the year mentioned went to Kansas, where he engaged in farming. In this, however, he did not prove successful, and in 1881 he went to Plattsburg, Missouri, and engaged in the jewelry business, which is another enterprise for which the Swiss nation is famous and for which its people seem to have a natural penchant. Mr. Sutter has continued in this line ever since and is now one of the prominent business men of Plattsburg.

Julian A. Sutter was only two years of age when he was brought to this country, and was still a small lad when the family located at Plattsburg, where his early education was acquired in the public schools. He subsequently started to learn the trade of jeweler from his father. He mastered this business, as well as watchmaking, and after leaving Plattsburg went to Lincoln, where he worked at his trade for about nine years. In 1905 he established himself in business at Lewistown, and this city has since been the home of Sutter Brothers, the business being thus named after Mr. Sutter and his younger brother, Edouard Sutter, his partner. Their establishment, located at No. 417 West Main Street, is the leading jewelry and watchmaking business in the city, and can boast of as complete a stock, in proportion, as any of the great establishments of Chicago or the other large cities of the country.

Mr. Sutter is a master of his difficult trade and a business man of excellent abilities, as well as a gentleman who adds to his other qualifications courtesy and geniality. His name on commercial paper is highly honored, evidencing his standing in business circles, and it has been his fortune to have formed lasting friendships with many of the leading citizens of the city of his adoption. He is fraternally affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons; Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena; and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His political association is with the republican party, although he is not a politician and has never sought office as a candidate. With other leading business and professional men of Lewistown he is an actively interested member of the Rotary Club.

Mr. Sutter was married February 21, 1900, to Miss Alta Wilson, who was born at Atchison, Kansas, and they are the parents of one son, Claude E.

JAMES I. WERNHAM, M. D. The profession of medicine embraces a vast field of knowledge, and the successful physician must of necessity be a man of varied learning. Never at any time has the healing art demanded more of its practitioners than at the present day and never has the profession given so fair an account of itself. Find the leading physician in a community and this acquaintance will indicate with few exceptions the man of the greatest intellectual attainment, the keenest mind, the most progressive spirit and, in many cases, the greatest public benefactions. In the list of leading physicians of Billings the name of Dr. James I. Wernham occupies a prominent place because of his professional accomplishments, his personal worth and his value to his community.

James I. Wernham was born at Marengo, Illinois, November 25, 1874, a son of Dr. S. C. and Emma (Titus) Wernham. The family is of English origin, and was founded in America by the great-grandfather of Doctor Wernham, who immigrated to New York City, in which metropolis was born in 1804 James Wernham, the grandfather of James I. He was a sailmaker by trade and followed that vocation for many years in New York, but late in life retired from active pursuits and removed to Marengo, Illinois, where he died in 1876, the owner of a valuable property. He married Margaret McKenzie, a native of New Jersey, and among their children was S. C. Wernham, who was born in New York City in 1844. S. C. Wernham was reared in his native community, where he received his preliminary educational training, and, having decided upon entering the medical profession and made some preparations therefor, went to Chicago, Illinois, to complete his training, graduating from the noted Rush Medical College with the class of 1872 and the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He at once located at Marengo, where he has been engaged in practice ever since, for although his years now number more than three-quarters of a century he still retains the confidence, reverence and affection of the poeple who have had his ministrations for so many years and who will allow themselves to be served by no other practitioner. Not alone in his profession has he been prominent, for civic affairs have claimed a large share of his attention, and the pioneer physician has borne a goodly part of the responsibilities of office. He served as alderman and mayor of Marengo and as coroner of McHenry County, Illinois, in addition to which for many years he displayed his friendship for education as an active and helpful member of the school board. He is a faithful member of the Baptist Church, which he joined many years ago, and is a leading Mason of his locality. Doctor Wernham married Emma Titus, who was born at Pennington, New Jersey, in 1849, and they became the parents of four children: Dr. James I.; Spencer, who is a decorator residing at Elgin, Illinois; George, a dry goods merchant of Chippewa Falls, Minnesota; and Emma, the wife of Frank McCarty, a leading attorney of Elgin, Illinois, and at present a member of the Illinois State Legislature.

James I. Wernham attended the public schools of Marengo, Illinois, and early in his career evidenced a predilection for his father's profession. He graduated from the high school at Marengo in 1893 and after one year entered the University of Illinois, where he pursued a four-year course and graduated in the class of 1899, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. This was followed by a course of three years in Rush Medical College, Chicago, Illinois, where he had a brilliant career, and was a member of the Nu Sigma Nu Greek letter medical fraternity and graduated in 1902 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He was a member of the Kappa Sigma Greek letter college fraternity at the University of Illinois. During the year 1902 the young physician served as interne at the Post-Graduate Medical College, Chicago, and in 1903 commenced practice at Marengo with his father. In March, 1904, to further his medical education, he went to Europe, where he remained until April, 1905, taking post-graduate work at Vienna and Berlin, particularly specializing in general and surgical diagnosis, a field in which he has since attained something more than a local reputation and in which he is accounted an authority. On his return to Marengo he rapidly assumed a place of leadership among the younger physicians, and was the recipient of a number of honors, being elected president of the McHenry County Medical Society and vice president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

Doctor Wernham continued to practice at Marengo until 1913, in which year he came to Billings, where he has since carried on a professional business as a general medical and surgical practitioner, and the reputation which he brought with him from Illinois as a learned, skilled and thoroughly capable devotee of his art has been strengthened and fortified by his work since his advent at Billings. He maintains well appoined offices in the Hart-Albin Building, second floor, and continues to be a close and careful student during his leisure hours, as he is also an interested member of the Yellowstone County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a popular member of the Billings and Billings Midland clubs and of Billings Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, is a republican in his political views, and holds membership in the Presbyterian Church. In addition to his modern residence at No. 945 North Thirty-first Street, he is the owner of a 640-acre ranch at Acton, Montana, where he is engaged in raising grain and stock. The Wernham family has a good military record, including the services of John Wernham, an uncle of the doctor, who lost his life while fighting as a soldier of the Union in Kentucky during the Civil war. On September 24, 1918, Doctor Wernham enlisted as a member of the Medical Officers Training Corps, and after one month's training at Fort Riley, Kansas, where he was advanced to the rank of captain, was sent to Debarkation Hospital No. 51, National Soldiers Home. After five months in the service as a surgeon he received his honorable discharge February 24, 1919.

Doctor Wernham was married at Chicago, Illinois, in 1908, to Miss Grace Middleton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Middleton, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Middleton, formerly a well known and successful Chicago merchant, is now retired from active pursuits and a resident of Lake Wales, Florida. Three children have blessed the union of Doctor and Mrs. Wernham: Helen, born in January, 1910; Martha, born August 2, 1911, and Elizabeth, born May 28, 1919. Mrs. Wernham is a descendant of Hon. Arthur Middleton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

JOSEPH POPE. It is doubtful if there are any people of Montana who have not heard of Joseph Pope of Billings, this state, for his name is a household word in this part of the west, and will always be associated with the monumental work he has accomplished in the cause of prohibition, to which he has devoted the best years of his life, leaving the ministry so as to give to this very important moral reform all of his energies. At present he is superintendent of the Montana Anti-Saloon League, with offices at No. 213 Stapleton Building, Billings.

Joseph Pope was born in Cornwall, England, May 14, 1866, a son of Jeremiah Pope, also born in Cornwall, in 1843. He there rounded out his useful life as a farmer, dying in 1913. A man of strong religious convictions, he was a consistent and earnest member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, which he served as a lay preacher, and he gave generously of his means and time toward its support. A conservative, he was very active in politics and held a number of local offices, being one of the most prominent men of his community. The maiden name of his wife was Phillippa Andrewartha, and she was born in Cornwall, England, in 1846, where she still resides, having survived her husband. The children born to them were as follows: Joseph, whose name heads this biography; Elizabeth, who married James Hammill, a farmer of Cornwall, England; Grenfell, who is a farmer of Cornwall; Eugenie, who married Charles Bryant, a contractor and builder of Cornwall; Bampfyld, who is also a farmer of Cornwall; Charles, who died in 1916, was originally a farmer, but at the time of his demise was engaged in gold mining; Mabel, who is married, now resides in England, but resided for a period in South Africa; and Ethel and Annie, both of whom reside in England. The sons were gold miners in young manhood in America and South Africa.

Joseph Pope was carefully educated for the ministry, first in the public schools of his native place and later in the Congregational Theological College at Bristol, England, from which he was graduated in 1890. Immediately thereafter Rev. Mr. Pope came to the United States and for one year supplied the pulpit of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Red Lodge, Montana, leaving there for Big Timber, where until 1894 he served as pastor of its Congregational Church. From there he went to Columbus, Montana, to take charge of its Congregational Church, but in 1900 returned to Big Timber, and remained for three years. His next charge was the Congregational Church at Laurel, Montana, where he remained for two years. After this he spent three years on a ranch he had bought at Park City, Montana, and during this period was engaged in the cattle and sheep business. He also invested in a farm near Howard, Montana, but has now disposed of these interests. In 1908 Mr. Pope's services were enlisted as assistant state superintendent of the Congregational churches of Montana, and he held that position until July 1, 1915, when he was elected state superintendent of the Montana Anti-Saloon League, and is still serving as such. It is almost impossible to give full credit to Mr. Pope for his work along this line, for he has accomplished so much. It was he who is responsible for the preparation and introduction of the resolution providing for the submission of prohibition to the electors of this state. After the question was submitted Mr. Pope conducted a resolute and aggressive campaign and carried the state by a majority of 30,000 votes. He has not given up the work of educating the masses, but is one of the national lecturers of the Anti-Saloon League.

Ever since he came to Montana Mr. Pope has been a prominent figure in public affairs. During the thirteenth session of the State Assembly he was the republican representative from Yellowstone County, and much of the constructive legislation of 1913 is directly or indirectly due to his efforts and influence. A friend of education, he served on the school board at Big Timber and Laurel, and at Big Timber he was also a member of the county high school board. Believing in purifying politics, Mr. Pope has never spared himself in endeavoring to raise the standards of the communities in which he has resided, and has always been a very strong influence for moral uplift outside of his ministerial duties, for he is a man who has always practiced what he preached in the broadest conception of the words. He has held that all reform is not effected by the churches, but that a powerful force is exerted by the concerted action of business and social organizations, and while at Park City and Laurel he was one of the militant members of the Chamber of Commerce, during the period that the Great Western Sugar Company was induced to locate its plant at Billings. Mr. Pope also helped to organize the Sugar Beet Growers Association. A man of broad vision, he saw the necessity of irrigation, and took a leading part in the organization of the North Sanders Irrigation District, he now serving as its secretary. In the selling of the $100,000 worth of bonds for the construction of an irrigation canal to cover 5,000 acres of very fine valley lands Mr. Pope waged an energetic campaign, and was eminently successful in disposing of them. He owns 950 acres of irrigated land at Hysham, Montana, which is now devoted to the raising of grain and alfalfa, and it is in the North Sanders District.

In 1890 Mr. Pope was married at Cornwall, England, to Miss Susannah Coad, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Coad, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Coad was a farmer and auctioneer, and very active in the political and social life of his community, serving as a member of the County Council and as chairman of the County Board of Guardians for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. Pope have three children, namely: Lila Mae, who was born January 28, 1895, is a graduate of the State University at Missoula, Montana, and married Donovan Worden, a farmer of Missoula, Montana; Ethel Mildred, who was born November 27, 1896, attended the Billings High School, from which she was graduated, and the State University for one year, and is now in the office of J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company at Billings, Montana; and Dorothy Coad, who was born in August, 1906.

There was a time when Mr. Pope was called a visionary when he promulgated his prohibition gospel, although his motives were never questioned, and few who listened to him then imagined that before many years had passed his fondest hopes would be realized. Had he and others who worked with him just as earnestly and faithfully permitted themselves to be discouraged and given up their fight against the saloon element the glorious results of the unceasing campaign would never have come about. If he had accomplished nothing more Mr. Pope can feel that he has achieved a revolution in moral conditions which will be everlasting in its effects for good. He has fought long and hard, straining every energy, and has evinced such ability to influence his contemporaries that much of the work has been left to his acute mind and alert vigilance. Each move has been strikingly characteristic of the man, and any reverses have only served to augment his resources. Attacks from the saloon element have not deterred him from pursuing what he deemed was the right course, and day by day converts have been added to his cohorts until now he has all of the better class with him to the end. It is such men as Mr. Pope who understand how to put to practical uses the careful training they receive in preparing for their profession, and teach their fellow citizens that the minister of the gospel knows how to live Christianity as well as how to enunciate its doctrines from his church. While Mr. Pope was a forceful preacher, and a power for good in the ministry, he has those characteristics which make him still more useful as a worker with the masses in securing those reforms which cannot be brought about unless they are taken up by the men who have made them their life study.

ANTRIM E. BARNES. The West is more prompt to acknowledge merit, and many of the more ambitious men of the country are locating in the flourishing towns in the more newly developed states, knowing that there they will find opportunities to advance so that they may secure the positions in their communities to which their abilities entitle them. Antrim E. Barnes, vice president of the First National Bank of Three Forks, and locomotive engineer for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, is one of the men who has achieved an enviable success in a state far removed from his native one of Indiana. He was born at Fort Wayne, Indiana, August 22, 1874, a son of Antrim E. Barnes, born in Ohio in 1841, who died at Fort Wayne in 1876.

Antrim E. Barnes, Sr., was reared in Ohio, but after his marriage located at Fort Wayne, Indiana, where he spent the remainder of his life, being engaged in the lumber business. During the Civil war he gave his country his support as a soldier, and probably his early death was the result of the hardships endured during his military experience. The republican party had in him a hearty supporter. Both as a Mason and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church he lived up to the highest ideals of manhood, and, dying, left behind him an influence for good on his community. His marriage to Justina Holloman occurred in Michigan, but she was born near Raleigh, North Carolina, in 1846, and she survives him and lives at Coesse, Indiana. Her ancestors served in the American Revolution, as did those of her husband, as the Barnes family came to North Carolina from Ireland during the Colonial period in this country's history. Mr. and Mrs. Antrim E. Barnes, Sr., had but one child, who bears his father's name.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Antrim E. Barnes moved to Coesse, Indiana, and there Antrim E. Barnes, Jr., was reared, and was graduated from its high school in 1891. Soon thereafter he came West to McCook, Nebraska, where for 3½ years he was an apprentice to the machinist trade, and then went to Sheridan, Wyoming, to become fireman on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, and was later promoted to be locomotive engineer, leaving that road in 1908 to go with the Wabash Railroad as engineer at Peru, Indiana, where he remained until 1900. Mr. Barnes then returned to the Burlington Road at Sheridan, Wyoming, for two years. Feeling the need of further instruction, in 1902 he matriculated at Perdu University at La Fayette, Indiana, and took a three years' course. In 1905 he came to Livingston, Montana, as engineer for the Northern Pacific Railroad, leaving it in 1907 for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. He left Lewistown for Three Forks in 1911, and since then has become vice president of the First National Bank. He owns his residence at 622 Second Avenue, East, and one ranch of 328 acres of land 3½ miles south of Roundup, Montana, with water rights, and another one of 640 acres of irrigated land sixteen miles northwest of Three Forks. He is a republican and has served on the school board. Not only is he a conscientious member of the Presbyterian Church, but he serves it as an elder. Well known as a Mason, he belongs to Livingston Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Livingston Consistory, which has conferred on him the thirty-second degree; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. He also belongs to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and is chief of Painted Rock Division No. 744, and was a member of its general committee for a number of years.

In 1907 Mr. Barnes was married at Billings, Montana, to Miss Lucy Marshall, a daughter of George W. and Sarah Marshall. Mr. Marshall died at Belgrade, Montana, in 1918, but his widow survives him and continues to reside at Belgrade. One of the pioneers of the Upper Madison River, Mr. Marshall gained the name of "Elk" Marshall because of the fact that he raised elk as well as stock upon an extensive scale. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes became the parents of two children, Lucy M. and Antrim E. By a former marriage with Miss Zella Mossman at Coesse, Indiana, in 1898, Mr. Barnes has a son, Charles, who is a medical student. Mrs. Barnes is a lady well known in the county, and she and Mr. Barnes have gathered about them a pleasant circle of friends to whom they dispense the delightful western hospitality at their home upon many occasions.

JOHN A. MCMILLAN is an old time Montanan, in early life was associated with his father in the building of mills and smelters, but for thirty years has been railroading, and is now joint agent at Butte for the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Short Line and the Great Northern Railways. Mr. McMillan was born at Lancaster, Ontario, Canada, April, 5, 1868, of pure Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, Allan McMillan, was born in Scotland in 1790, and in early life crossed the ocean to Canada and became a pioneer farmer in Glengarry County, Ontario. He lived there until his death in 1880. He married a Miss Campbell, also of Scotland. Their son Hugh A. McMillan, long prominent in the mining industry of the Northwest, was born in Glengarry County, Ontario, 1838, and died at Butte in 1910. He was reared and married in Glengarry County, and took up the business of contractor and builder. In 1876 he located at Mount Pleasant, Michigan, continuing the same business, and in 1882 arrived at Butte, where he had an interesting part in the pioneer development of that city. He was the builder of the original Anaconda smelter. He also remodeled the Alice Mine Mill, built the Bluebird Mill, and as an expert in this class of construction he was subsequently employed and associated with the Fraser & Chalmers Company of Chicago and built many mills and smelters in South Africa and Old Mexico. After coming to the United States he voted as a republican, was a member of the Presbyterian Church and the Masonic fraternity, and in early life served with the Canadian Militia, and was called to active duty during the Fenian rebellion. Hugh A. McMillan married Mary McLeod, who was born in Glengary County, Ontario, in 1844, and is now living at Butte with her son John. John is the oldest of five children. Maude is the widow of W. D. Shamburger and makes her home on the large Shamburger ranch at Payette, Idaho. Donald Andrew is a millwright and contractor living at Johannesburg in South Africa. Margaret is the wife of Robert Raff, secretary of the Big Black Foot Milling Company at Missoula. Harriet is the wife of C. F. Head, chief of police at Loveland, Colorado.

John A. McMillan received his early education in the public schools of Glengarry County, Ontario, and Mount Pleasant, Michigan. From the Michigan home he returned to Glengarry County, and was graduated from high school there in 1885. He arrived at Butte, Montana, in August, 1886, and for a short time was timekeeper at the Bluebird mill. Then for two years he was with his father in building a mill for the Philadelphia and Idaho Smelting Company at Ketchum, Idaho, and left there to go to California.

Since the spring of 1889 Mr. McMillan has been a permanent resident of Butte. He worked in the mines until November of that year and then entered the service of the Montana Union Railway as a clerk. This line of railway was absorbed by the Northern Pacific in 1896, at which date Mr. McMillan was made chief clerk to the auditor and general freight and passenger agent of the larger corporation. His next promotion was to cashier of the Northern Pacific, and in January, 1901, he was made joint agent for the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Short Line roads. He has handled the duties of that position for these roads nearly twenty years, and subsequently was also made agent for the Great Northern. In that capacity he has supervision over four hundred employes of these different lines. His offices are on South Arizona street.

Mr. McMillan is an independent voter, is affiliated with Butte Camp No. 153, Woodmen of the World, and is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters at Toronto. He also belongs to the Butte Country Club and the Butte Curling Club. His home is at 1041 Colorado Street.

In 1894, at Butte, he married Miss Elizabeth M. McGregor, daughter of John and Margaret (Campbell) McGregor, now deceased. Her father is a farmer in Glengarry County, Ontario. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. McMillan is Gregor M., born November 9, 1896, now a student in the Montana State Agricultural College at Bozeman.

LEWIS S. BUTLER. During the last quarter of a century Lewis S. Butler has supplied a large amount of the business enterprise that has been made effective in advancing the commercial, industrial and civic interests of Lewistown and Fergus County. Mr. Butler is an active figure in a number of undertakings, probably most conspicuously as senior partner of the firm of Butler & Woodworth, a firm owning and directing one of the largest ranch and livestock properties in this part of Montana. Something of the extent and operations of the firm is told in connection with a sketch of his partner, Mr. Woodworth.

Mr. Butler was born in Warren County, Illinois, on his father's farm, January 24, 1867, a son of Joseph R. and Rebecca Jane (Stockton) Butler. His father was a native of Ohio and his mother of Illinois. His father when a boy went with his parents to Warren County, Illinois, was educated in Ohio and Illinois and in 1871 moved to DeKalb County, Missouri, where he bought land and engaged in farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. He was one of the pioneer raisers of Percheron horses and also of Shorthorn cattle in Northwestern Missouri. He was a democrat in politics. Joseph R. Butler died in 1878, at the age of forty-nine. His wife passed away in 1871, at the age of thirty-five. Lewis is the youngest and only survivor of six children.

He was eleven years of age when his father died, and a few years later started to make his own way in the world, working out at wages of fifty cents a day. He attended school more or less regularly until seventeen years of age, when he began farming the tract of land inherited from his father. His associations with Montana began in April, 1885, when he arrived at Bozeman and was employed by William Fly, a cattle man, as a cowboy riding the range through to Judith Basin in Meagher County. Later he worked for Charles Lehman at Cottonwood in Lehman's general store and hotel for about a year. His next experience was driving a band of horses to Dakota.

February 11, 1888, at King City, Missouri, Mr. Butler married Miss Ida M. Easterly. For their wedding journey they started at once to Fergus County, Montana, and on reaching here Mr. Butler entered a tract of Government land on Spring Creek, seven miles below Lewistown. He was on the homestead three years and then sold his property and engaged in business with J. M. Powers on a horse ranch. He was there about two years, then returned to Lewistown and was a butcher for a year and a half and in the livery business for some length of time. The next five or six years were spent in traveling in Northern Montana and in Canada, and about that time he became associated with Mr. Woodworth. Mr. Butler was ness at Lewistown until 1916. Since then his chief interests in the wholesale and retail liquor and cigar business have been cattle ranching with the firm of Butler and Woodworth. This firm owns about 6,000 acres of land located nine miles south of Grass Lake, and it is stocked with 600 or 700 head of cattle. They also are extensive breeders of Percheron horses. In January, 1919, Mr. Butler also engaged in business with Charles Woodworth and W. A. Cooper under the title of the Lewistown Automobile and Truck Company, handling the agency for the Studebaker cars and Diamond T trucks and operating a general garage and accessory establishment at Lewistown.

Mr. Butler is a democrat, but has never cared for official position. However, through the personal influence of Tom Stout he consented to serve as sergeant-at-arms in the State Legislature in 1917.

Mrs. Butler was born in Tennessee, a daughter of Philip L. and Alpha (Pinington) Easterly, her parents being also natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Butler is the first in a family of three daughters and three sons. Her father died in 1899 and her mother is still living. Her father was a successful farmer and stockman of Gentry County, Missouri, and in politics a democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Butler have six children, and are also very proud of their nine grandchildren. Alpha E., their oldest child, is the wife of John McQuirk and the mother of three sons; Elsa I. married Charles Thrasher and has two sons and one daughter; Octa is the wife of Joseph Franchoise and has two daughters; Ida married William A. Cooper and has one son. The two youngest children, both at home and in school, are Dorothy and Lewis Stockton.

Charles F. Ridley. An active participation in business matters and civic affairs during a period covering fourteen years has made Charles F. Ridley well and favorably known to the citizens of Billings, where he is cashier of the Great Western Sugar Company. Mr. Ridley entered the employ of this concern in 1906 and has worked his way steadily upward to his present position through hard and conscientious application to his duties, and though his private interests have been exacting and heavy, he has still found time to devote to the welfare of the institutions of his adopted community.

Mr. Ridley was born at London, Ontario, Canada, April 23, 1876, a son of William and Mary Ann (Heath) Ridley. His father was born in 1842, in the City of Birmingham, England, where he was reared, educated and married, and in that city learned the trade of machinist, particularly as applied to the building of locomotives. In this connection he also mastered the principles of the distribution of gas and the manufacture thereof, as well as commercial steam heating and its relation to distribution. Mr. Ridley came to the United States in 1873, and after a short stay at Portland, Maine, went to Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, where for two years he was connected with the Great Western Railway Company. Subsequently he went to London, Ontario, where he had charge of the gas works until 1880, and later went to Denver, Colorado, where he built the Denver City Steam Heating Works and remained until 1913. In that year he retired from active affairs and removed to San Diego, California, where his death occurred in 1915. In Denver Mr. Ridley had the distinction of having charge of the first electric railway ever built anywhere, this being constructed after the patents of Professor Short of Chicago, as an underground electric, i. e., the current being underground. One of the leading and foremost members of his profession, he was a life member of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, from which he drew a pension. In politics Mr. Ridley was a republican. He was an Episcopalian and a strong churchman, and was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Albion and Cambrian Societies of England. Mr. Ridley married Mary Anne Heath, who was born in Birmingham, England, in 1844, and who survives him as a resident of Denver, Colorado. Six children were born to them, as follows: Arnold William, manager of the steam heating department of the Denver Gas and Electric Company of Denver, Colorado; Frances W., the wife of Victor Ryfa, formerly a bank clerk and now in the service of the United States Government at New York City, where his banking experience in handling French exchange has made him valuable as a French interpreter; Charles Frederick, of this notice; Edwin, an engineering valuator of municipal plants for the State of Washington, residing at Seattle, that state; Reuben Thomas, an optician of Denver; and Mary Ann, the wife of Charles H. Hines, an automobile mechanic of Denver.

Charles F. Ridley was educated in the public schools of Denver, Colorado, and at the age of fourteen years gave up his studies to accept a position in the office of the auditor of a railroad company at Denver. In 1906 he became general bookkeeper for the Great Western Sugar Company, with which concern his advancement has been steady and consistent, until today he occupies the responsible post of cashier of the Billings' branch of this important concern. The offices are located one mile south of the city. Mr. Ridley since his arrival at Billings has become widely and favorably known among the business men of this community, and is accounted a shrewd and astute man of affairs, competent, reliable and substantial. He lives in a pleasant home at No. 314 South Thirty-fifth Street, and has established himself permanently as a citizen of Billings, performed the duties of citizenship well and being at present a member of the board of school trustees. He is a republican in his political adherence, and is a member of the Billings Midland Club and a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to Ashlar Lodge No. 29 Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and to Billings Consistory. In 1904 Mr. Ridley was married at Toronto, Canada, to Miss Maude V. Westlake, who died in Denver in 1909, leaving two children: Lola Jean, born October 12, 1905, and Mildred Westlake, born December 31, 1907. The present Mrs. Ridley prior to her marriage, January 29, 1913, at Denver, was Miss Edith Parker, who was born at Lowestoft, England.

W. E. Harmon. One of the men who has stamped the impress of his strong individuality upon the minds of the people of Montana in a manner as to render him one of the conspicuous characters of the state is W. E. Harmon, who had a successful career as an educator for a number of years, but who is now equally successful as a farmer and ranchman. Faithfulness to duty and a strict adherence to a fixed purpose, which always do more to advance a man's interests than wealth or advantageous circumstances, have been dominating factors in his life, which has been replete with honor and success worthily attained.

W. E. Harmon was born in Fulton County, Ohio, on February 7, 1856, and is a son of Arva and Harriet (Benedict) Harmon. The father was born in New York State in 1832, and was there reared and married. In 1854 he removed to Fulton County, Ohio, where he became a pioneer farmer, and lived there until 1876, when he moved to Michigan. Ten years later, in 1886, he came to Livingston, Montana, of which locality he was a pioneer, and there he engaged in contracting for a few years. In 1890 he came to Bozeman and lived with his son, W. E. Harmon, until 1905, when he retired from active life and went to Puyallup, Washington, where his death occurred on June 11, 1918. He was a democrat in his political views and a strong and earnest member of the Baptist Church. He married Harriet Benedict, who was born in 1836 in Connecticut, and who now lives at Puyallup, Washington. To this worthy couple were born the following children: W. E., the subject of this review; Carrie E. is the wife of Wilbur Dodge, a shipyard carpenter at Puyallup, Washington; Herbert is a farmer at Sycamore, Illinois; and Mary is unmarried and resides at Zion, Illinois.

W. E. Harmon received his elementary education in the public schools of Fulton County, Ohio, and Morenci, Michigan. He then took a five year course in Valparaiso University, at Valparaiso, Indiana, where he was graduated in 1884 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The following year he was principal of the Clayton, Michigan, schools, and in 1885 he became principal of the schools of Livingston, Montana, being retained here two years. Then for 17½ years he was superintendent of the schools of Bozeman, and it is stated that to him is largely due the perfection of the educational system of the schools of that city. Mr. Harmon's abilities and success as an educator had attracted favorable notice and he was elected state superintendent of public instruction, entering upon the duties of that office in 1905. He was elected to succeed himself in that position, thus serving eight years. The splendid service rendered by him to the state is a matter of record, but it is specially noteworthy that his incumbency was marked by a tremendous forward stride in the educational methods and standards of this state. Mr. Harmon standardized the teaching certificates of the state; he served on the State Text-book Commission, wrote three courses of study for the state, and succeeded in putting the state course in all schools. In addition to his long and creditable career in one of the most useful and exacting of professions he also proved an honorable member of the body politic, rising in the confidence and esteem of the public, and in every relation of life he has never fallen below the dignity of true manhood nor in any way resorted to unworthy methods.

Upon leaving the office of state superintendent of public instruction Mr. Harmon relinquished his pedagogical career and took over the management of his fine farm of 240 acres of irrigated land located about a mile west of Bozeman. The place is well improved and completely equipped in every way and is considered one of the finest ranches in the Gallatin Valley. Mr. Harmon also owns a modern residence on North Seventh Avenue, Bozeman, and a residence and six lots on Eighth Avenue. Since retiring from the office of state superintendent he has served three times as state representative.

Politically Mr. Harmon gives his support to the republican party, and his religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church, of whch he is an elder. Fraternally he is a member of Eureka Homestead No. 415, Brotherhood of American Yeomen; Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World. He takes a deep interest in every movement or enterprise looking to the advancement of the best interests of the community. He is a director of the National Bank of Gallatin County.

In 1887, in St. Paul, Minnesota, Mr. Harmon was married to Etta Kendall, a native of Minnesota, and whose death occurred in 1892. To them were born the following children. Florence, who died at Lewistown, Montana, May 13, 1919, was the wife of David Bolton, assistant cashier of the Fergus County Bank at Lewistown. She was a graduate of the Helena High School, the State Normal School at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and taught school at Appleton, Wisconsin, one year, and at Lewistown, Montana. Ella May, who is a graduate of the Montana State College, is a home science demonstrator for Ravalli County for the State College. Cora Alice, who died on April 1, 1919, was a graduate of Leland Stanford University, California, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and had been a teacher of English in the schools of Terry, Montana. In 1893 Mr. Harmon was married to Mary Stegmier, a native of Minnesota.

HARRY E. PERKINS, of Billings, is a veteran lumber merchant, and has been in that business for thirty years. He started as a yardman, and is now president of the Perkins Savage Lumber Company.

Mr. Perkins was born at Flora, Illinois, May 2, 1864, and represents old New England ancestors, his people being among the early pioneers of Vermont. His father, Henry P. Perkins, was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1825, grew up there, was married in his native state, and shortly afterward moved to Flora, Illinois, where he was a teacher. In 1866, at the close of the Civil war, he established a home well out on the frontier of Kansas, near Emporia, and was a farmer in that section until 1883. He then moved to Carlisle, Arkansas, where he continued farming and where he died in 1889. He was a staunch republican and a very active member of the Methodist Church. Henry P. Perkins married Martha A. Brainard who was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1835 and is still living in her eighty-fifth year at Carlisle, Arkansas. She was the mother of a large family of thirteen children, the first, a son, dying in infancy, and the second, Mattie, dying at the age of three years. George I., who died at Billings, Montana, at the age of fifty-seven, resided at Springdale, Montana, where he was manager of a lumber yard. David B. is a lumberman, banker and farmer at Carlisle, Arkansas. Harry E. is fifth in age. Maggie is the wife of Henry J. Lewis, a farmer at Daphne, Alabama. John died in infancy. Annie is the wife of C. A. Rosenbaum, a railroad agent at Little Rock, Arkansas. Clara married Alexander McRae, superintendent of an oil mill at Argenta, Arkansas. Robert A. is a farmer at Carlisle, Arkansas. Rosie is the wife of William Branch, a produce commission merchant at Little Rock, Arkansas. Daisy is the wife of Mr. Crips, a farmer in Missouri. Charles C., the youngest, is a farmer and dairyman at Carlisle, Arkansas.

Harry E. Perkins was two years old when the family moved to Lyon County, Kansas, he grew up on his father's farm there, attended rural schools, a commercial college at Little Rock, Arkansas, and at the age of twenty-five left home to make his independent start in the world. He spent one year on a ranch in South Dakota. Mr. Perkins had a brief military experience on the northwestern frontier during the Sitting Bull outbreak of 1890-91. He was in the service of the organized militia for eighteen months during the period of Indian hostilities. Ever since that time he has been connected with some phase of the lumber business. He went to work for C. H. Chase at Willow Lake, South Dakota, as a yard man, and eventually was made manager of the local yards and a co-partner of Mr.

Chase. The business was subsequently incorporated as the C. H. Chase Lumber Company, with Mr. Perkins as secretary and manager. In 1916 the business was sold, and at that time Mr. Perkins and Michael Savage joined forces and in February, 1918, incorporated the Perkins-Savage Lumber Company, with Mr. Perkins as president and Mr. Savage as secretary and manager. This is a Montana corporation, the home offices being in the Babcock Building at Billings. They handle retail lumber and hardware and have a trade in and around Billings, also have a yard at Lovell, Wyoming, and are interested in lumber yards at Acton, Molt, Gray Cliff, Springdale and Belfry, Montana.

Mr. Perkins is also a ranch-owner, having one farm of 160 acres north of Billings, and another of 640 acres at Pompeys Pillar. He owns a modern home at 1240 North Thirtieth Street in Billings. Mr. Perkins is a trustee of the Congregational Church, and is affiliated with the Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rites, Parker Lodge of Knights of Pythias of South Dakota, Billings Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, Billings Chapter of the Eastern Star, and the Royal Neighbors of Parker, South Dakota.

September 19, 1893, at Willow Lake, South Dakota, he married Miss Addie McMullin, daughter of William and Mary (Pettit) McMullin. Her mother lives at Clarkston, Washington, where her father, a veteran of the Civil war and a retired farmer, died March 27, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins have three children: Hazel, who died at Huntley, Montana, aged fourteen years; Bernice F., born April 29, 1896, a graduate of Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio, and a kindergarten teacher at Billings; and Muriel J., born August 9, 1900, who attended Oberlin College and is preparing to finish her education in the University of Minnesota.

Joseph Chauvin, one of the reliable and prosperous brokers of Butte, is recognized as one of the political leaders of this region and a republican of note in the Northwest. He is a son of Leander Joseph Chauvin, born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, in 1826, and died at Shelburn, Vermont, in 1915. In 1837 he came to the United States and located at Shelburn, Vermont. Here he later engaged in farming. His wife bore the maiden name of Harriet Pepin, and she was also born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, in 1829. Her death occurred at Shelburn, Vermont, where all of their children were born, they being as follows: Joseph, whose name heads this review; an unnamed infant son; Leander, who lives at Springfield, Massachusetts, is a carpenter by trade; Louis N., who is engaged in farm work in the vicinity of Hamilton, Montana; Otheleo, who is deceased; Harriet, who married Moses Charbonneau, a shoemaker of Barre, Vermont; Emma, who married Harry Crawford, a contractor and builder of Oak Park, Illinois; Napoleon, who is a carpenter and builder of Massachusetts; Felix, who is doing farm work in the vicinity of Shelburn, Vermont; Alma, who married Napoleon Prunier, who has been coachman and later chauffeur for a prominent family of Burlington, Vermont, for many years; and six others who died young.

Joseph Chauvin, the oldest son, came to Montana on June 1, 1881, and has been engaged in active business in this state ever since. For the first twenty-five years he was occupied very profitably in handling furniture, but then sold in 1906 and engaged in his present undertaking, being a broker in stocks, mines and real estate, with offices at 112 West Granite Street, where he has been located for the past fifteen years. His residence is at 110 West Granite Street. He also owns a number of patented mines at Butte, which he estimates to be worth $60,000.

Upon coming to Butte Mr. Chauvin was favorably impressed with the possibilities of the place and from then on has been one of the most active boosters of the city, and through his efforts much outside capital is brought here, the investment of which has aided in the development of the industrial and commercial interests. A natural political leader, he has been the delegate of his party to numerous county and state conventions, but he has not permitted the use of his name on the ticket for any office, as he prefers to use his influence as a private individual. Enthusiastic in his support of the party, he possesses the power to sway others, and his advocacy of a candidate is accepted as practical proof of his making a fine official, and as a usual thing his election follows.

In his business operations Mr. Chauvin is a shrewd aggressive man, whose reliability is unquestioned. Having spent so many years at Butte he knows all about realty and stocks, and his advice with reference to such matters is accepted as authoritative.

Mr. Chauvin is one of the oldest living members of Butte Lodge, No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, joining that order the year the lodge was established at Butte. The Roman Catholic Church has in him a devout member. Recognizing the good work of the Young Men's Christian Association, he has long been one of its members and whenever a drive is on to secure funds for it, Mr. Chauvin is always one of those making large contributions and soliciting the same from others. He also belongs to the Butte Business Men's Association, in which he is a forceful character, as he is in another commercial organization known as the Aero Club.

The children of Mr. Chauvin are as follows: Charles Frederick, who is a resident of New York City, New York, is secretary of the Hale Desk Company, and he was graduated from the Hopkins Institute of Burlington, Vermont; and Anna, an adopted daughter. She married W. M. Jermain and they live at Deer Lodge, Montana. Mr. Jermain is a concrete contractor. They have one child, Beulah, who married James Donnelly, a printer by trade, and they live at Butte. Mr. and Mrs. Donnelly have a daughter, Dorothy, and on December 25, 1919, Mr. Chauvin had a little family gathering at his home in Butte at which were present Mrs. W. M. Jermain, her daughter, Mrs. James Donnelly and her granddaughter, Dorothy Donnelly, and grandson, Joseph G. Chauvin, four generations thus being represented.

The Canadian element, not only the Scotch and English, but the French, is strongly represented in Montana and Mr. Chauvin at different times has exercised his art and literary expression in the characteristic dialect of old Quebec. The editor takes the privilege of reproducing two examples of his literary product, one entitled "The Wreck of the Jule La Plant" and the other one of a series of "Woodville Letters" which Mr. Chauvin contributed to a local publication and which entertained a large group of readers.

'Twas one dark night on Lac Champlain,
De wind she blow, blow, blow,
When de crew of de skow Jule La Plant
Get scare and run below.

For de wind she's blow like hurricane,
Bimeby she blow some more,
When de skow buss up on Lac Champlain
One half-mile from de shore.

De captain she's walk on de front deck,
She's walk on de hind deck, too;
She's call de crew from up de hole,
She call de cook also.

De cook, his name was Rosa,
He's come from Montreal,
Was chamber-maid on a lumber barge
On dat big Lachine canal.

De wind she blow from nor, eass, wess,
De sou' wind she blow, too,
When Rosa say, 'Oh! captain,
Whatever shall I do?'

De captain she's throw de hank,
But still dat skow she drift,
For de crew he can't pass on dat shore
Because he lose dat skiff.

De night was dark like one black cat,
De waves run high and fass,
When de captain take poor Rosa
And lash her to de mass.

When the captain put on the life preserve
And he jump into de lac,
And say, 'Good-bye, my Rosa dear,
I go drown for your sack.'

Next morning very hearly,
About half-past two, three, four,
De captain, cook and wood skow
Lay corpses on dat shore.

For de wind she's blow like hurricane,
Pretty soon she blow some more,
For dat skow buss upon Lac Champlain,
One-half mile from de shore.

MORAL:

Now all good wood-skow sailor mans,
Take warning by dat storm,
And go and marry one nice French girl,
And live on one good farm.

Den de wind may blow like hurricane,
And 'spose she's blow some more,
You shan't get drowned on Lac Champlain
So long you stay on shore.

BRUCE ANSON CUMMING. In the field of farm loans and real estate, a line of business which demands great ability and a comprehensive knowledge of values, Bruce Anson Cumming has made a decided success of his operations at Lewistown. He has achieved an enviable positon in business circles, not alone because of the brilliant success which he has achieved, but also on account of the honorable, straightforward business policy he has ever followed. He possesses untiring energy, is quick of perception, forms his plans readily and is determined in their execution, and his close application to business and his excellent management have brought to him the high degree of prosperity which is today his. He has demonstrated in his career the truth of the saying that success is not the result of genius, but the outcome of clear judgment and experience.

Mr. Cumming was born on his father's farm in Blue Earth County, Minnesota, September 24, 1879, a son of William and Isabella A (Treanor) Cumming, natives of Canada. William Cumming was born in 1834, and on first coming to the United States as a young married man settled at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, but subsequently moved to Minnesota, where he became a pioneer of Blue Earth County. There he took up wild land, established his home, and in time developed a substantial and productive farm, upon which he died in 1909, at the age of seventy-five years, after having completed a useful and honorable career. He was first a whig and later a republican in politics, but did not desire public office. Mrs. Cumming, who was born in 1840, survives her husband and resides on the old Minnesota homestead. Of the family of four sons and three daughters, six children are living. The parents were God-fearing people and church members, and the children were reared to lives of honesty and industry.

The fifth in order of birth of his parents' children, Bruce Anson Cumming attended the public schools of Blue Earth County, Minnesota, the Dixon Business College and the Illinois Normal School, and in 1901 secured his first employment, as assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Minnesota Lake, Minnesota. After about three and one-half years in that capactiy he removed to Hope, North Dakota, where he was bookkeeper for the First National Bank of Hope, a position in which he also had charge of the bank's general insurance business. After about three years he went to Blabon, North Dakota, and became cashier of the Blabon State Bank. This position he also held for about three years, but in the spring of 1911 came to Lewistown, where he established himself in the farm loans and real estate business, in which he has since continued with much success. His office is situated at No. 305 Montana Building. Mr. Cumming is essentially a product of the growing, progressive Northwest, aggressive, enterprising and energetic, alive to the fast-appearing opportunities and strict in his conception of business ethics and principles. He is a republican in his political adherence, and while residing at Blabon served as school treasurer and township clerk. He first became a member of Occidental Lodge No. 27, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Hope, North Dakota, but after centering his activities at Lewistown demitted and became a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37. He belongs also to Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On February 17, 1915, Mr. Cumming married Miss Edna M. Woodrum, and to this union there have been born two sons and one daughter: Mark Clinton, Donald William and the infant daughter.

WARNER L. HALGREN. To be classed with the dependable business men of a large city is no slight honor, and such classification belongs to Warren L. Halgren, manager for the Gamble Robinson Company branch house at Billings, with which firm he has been continuously identified for twenty-six years. Beginning at the bottom of the ladder when twelve years old, his successive promotions prove the possession of those qualities which arouse respect, esteem and confidence in employers. Mr. Halgren came to Billings in 1913, but has been a resident of Montana since 1909.

Warner L. Halgren was born at Watertown, Minnesota, January 3, 1881, and is a son of Frank L. and Carrie Belle (McKee) Halgren, the latter of whom was born in 1863, at Watertown, Minnesota, and now resides at Los Angeles, California. The father, Frank L. Halgren, was born in 1858, on the Atlantic Ocean while his parents were coming to America from Stockholm, Sweden. They settled at Watertown, Minnesota, where he was reared and educated, and where until 1891 he was a schoolteacher. In that year he removed to Montrose, Minnesota, where he was connected with the postal service on the Great Northern Railway, and died there. He was a republican in politics, and for many years was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity. His three children all survive, namely: Warner L.; Forest G., who resides at Bemidji, Minnesota, is manager for the Gamble-Robinson Company at that point; and Josie, who resides with her mother.

Warner L. Halgren attended the public schools at Montrose and Minneapolis, and later took a business course in the Metropolitan Commercial College at Minneapolis. As early as 1893 he entered the employ of the Gamble Robinson Company, working during vacations while attending school at Minneapolis, starting with the laudable ambition to be successful and has kept that end in view during the succeeding years. Recognition was given of his ability in 1901 when he was made a traveling representative for this house, and for eight years his territory was the State of Michigan. In 1909 he was stationed at Miles City, Montana, as manager of the Miles City branch of the business, and continued there until 1913, when he came to Billings to assume his present duties in a wider field. The company has commodious offices at No. 2707 Minnesota Avenue. The territory under Mr. Halgren's jurisdiction covers Northern Wyoming and Eastern Montana, and he has fourteen employes under his supervision. The company handles fruits and vegetables wholesale, and the Billings branch, under Mr. Halgren, is in a very prosperous condition.

In 1906, at Manistique, Michigan, Mr. Halgren was married to Miss Elsie G. Brown, a daughter of the late E. C. and Ida Brown, the former of whom was a well known lumberman at Manistique. Mrs. Halgren is a graduate of the Manistique High School and the Ypsilanti Normal School. Mr. and Mrs. Halgren have one son, Warner Brown, who was born December 12, 1912. The family resides at No. 335 Clark Avenue, Billings. In his political affiliations Mr. Halgren has always been a republican. He has been active in Masonry for many years, and belongs to Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; and Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar.

W. J. MCMULLEN was reared and educated at Deer Lodge, and since early manhood has been connected with local commercial affairs. He is now one of the active partners in probably the leading drug business at Deer Lodge.

He was born at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, October 23, 1887. The father M. McMullen was born in the same Wisconsin community in 1858, lived there until after his marriage, was a farmer and in 1890 came to Deer Lodge and engaged in the hardware business. However, his most successful efforts were in mining operations. He died at Deer Lodge in 1902. M. McMullen married Mary Bowen, who was born in England in 1860 and died at Deer Lodge June 1, 1918.

H. O. Downing

W. J. McMullen, only child of his parents, finished the junior year of the Powell County High School and at the age of sixteen began doing for himself. He gained a valuable business experience and training as clerk in the Cash grocery store until 1907. For a year he was with the City Mercantile & Drug Company's store, and in 1908 opened a business for himself as a druggist, the firm name being Randall & McMullen. K. H. Wood bought the Randall interests in 1917 and the firm is now McMullen & Wood. It is a growing business and they have a high class clientele and a splendid stock of goods and equipment in their store at 423 Main Street.

Mr. McMullen, who is unmarried is an independent republican in politics, is a member of Lodge No. 14 Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Deer Lodge, Valley Chapter No. 4 Royal Arch Masons, Ivanhoe Commandery No. 16 Knight Templars, Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte, and Anaconda Lodge No. 239 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. McMullen owns a modern home on Fifth Street in Deer Lodge.

WALTER O. DOWNING, at the head of a prominent real estate and insurance business at Lewistown, is a man of interesting Montana experience, having lived in the territory and state over thirty-five years.

He was born in Elizabethtown, Minnesota, March 14, 1875, a son of Christopher and Roseta (Elsworth) Downing. His father, who was born at Monroe, Michigan, in 1839, was a farmer, but left his plow at the call of his country and enlisted in Company A of the Fourth Michigan Infantry on June 5, 1861. He went to the war for a three-year term, but experienced such hardships that he was granted an honorable discharge November 19, 1863, at the General Hospital at Washington, District of Columbia. He returned home with health broken, but lived until 1876, his death being the direct result of his army service. He was a stanch republican in politics. His wife was born May 17, 1853, at St. Clair, Michigan, and came to Montana with her second husband, J. M. Weldon. By her marriage to Christopher Downing she was the mother of two children, Laura and Walter. The former is the wife of Edward M. Nave, of Fergus County.

Walter O. Downing was seven years old when he was brought to Montana by his mother and stepfather in 1882. They made the journey from Harrisonville, Michigan, by railroad as far as Junction City, and thence overland by team and wagon to Fort Maginnis, Montana. They located twelve miles southeast of the present City of Lewistown, then in Meagher County, now Fergus County. In this frontier district Mr. Downing spent his boyhood and youth. His first schooling was at the hands of a school teacher employed in the home of Mr. Weldon. Later, with four other children, he was taught in the home of a neighbor, and then attended a log schoolhouse, the teacher being Miss Anna M. Weidert, now the wife of George J. Wiedeman of Lewistown. When thirteen years old Mr. Downing went to work for a firm of carpenters and contractors to learn the carpenter's trade. He also cooked for the outfit to pay his board. During winters he managed to get in a term or two of school. He also rode the range during the spring and fall roundups, and while attending school he also spent three months working for his board for the late J. I. Corbley, county commissioner. He also had some experience with the pioneer freighting organization carrying goods between Billings, Fort Benton, Great Falls and Lewistown.

It is evident that Mr. Downing even as a boy had an object and an ambition. Though his earnings were meager, he managed to save enough to pay for a three-months term at the Agricultural College at Bozeman. He remained in that college for two years, working for his board at the college during the last eighteen months. On leaving college with an equipment of general and scientific training he returned to the homestead and worked on the home ranch as a farmer and stock man until 1912. In that year he located in Lewistown and engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business, and has since made the name Walter O. Downing Company one of especial prominence in its line.

Mr. Downing is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and in politics is a republican.

September 19, 1904, he married Katherine D. Wood, of Auburn, Illinois. She died January 12, 1912, the mother of one daughter and two sons, named Dorothy, Dell O. and Walter K. On November 22, 1916, Mr. Downing married Antoinette R. Vogt.

MARION E. BUCK, general superintendent of the Montana Power Company, was born at Danvers, Illinois, on November 4, 1877, a son of Benjamin A. Buck. The birth of Benjamin A. Buck took place near Baltimore, Maryland, on November 12, 1844, and he comes of a long line of upright ancestors, all of whom were worthy descendants from the founder of the family in the American colonies, who came to this country from Holland in the seventeenth century.

At the time the original Buck reached Maryland he with other pioneers had his choice of land, and he took a pride in keeping it in the family, making arrangements to have the title to it pass from father to son without interruption until the generation to which Benjamin A. Buck belonged, when changes in conditions made it expedient to dispose of the homestead. When the family was first founded in this country its members were Episcopalians, but about the time of John Wesley's visit to the colonies they embraced Methodism.

Students of biography are struck by the fact that in nearly all old-established families appears the tradition that when immigration was made here from some of the countries of the old world three brothers made the trip together, although oftentimes they separated after their arrival. The Buck family is no exception to this almost universal rule, for in the old family Bible, which bears the date of 1726, and on whose pages, brown with time and soiled by the handlings of many generations, is furnished proof of this tradition. One of these brothers, was John Buck, born in 1693. John Buck was noted in his day as an extensive landed proprietor, and he lived to the age of seventy-seven years. His son was Benjamin Buck, born in Maryland, and his son, John Buck, was the grandfather of Benjamin A. Buck. The birth of John Buck took place in Maryland in 1767, and he died in 1849, having been very prosperous and accumulating a large amount of land, which was divided among three sons, each one receiving sufficient to make him independent, as did the one daughter of the family.

Benjamin M. Buck, father of Benjamin A. Buck, was born in 1794 and died in 1877, both events taking place on the old homestead. All of his life was spent upon this property until the outbreak of the war between the states, when he left it for a brief period. During that conflict he lost some of his holdings, which were never recovered, and the family fortunes, like those of so many others in the South, were impoverished. In 1826 he was married to Miss Sarah H. Hobby and they became the parents of six children, namely: Catherine, John S., W. H., Arabella, Benjamin A. and Sarah. In political opinions he was a whig until the beginning of the war, after which he affiliated with the democratic party. A devout Methodist, he lived up to the highest conceptions of his faith.

Benjamin A. Buck remained on the farm with his father, who had been disabled by an accident, until he was twenty-five years of age, first attending the common schools and later one of the high schools of Baltimore, Maryland. In 1870 he came to the West with his brother-in-law, H. M. Kennedy, who owned a large tract of land in McLean County, Illinois, and remained with him for four years. For a time subsequent to his leaving his brother-in-law Mr. Buck clerked in a general store at Danvers, and then for two years conducted a similar business of his own, also at Danvers.

In 1876 Benjamin A. Buck was married to Libby A. Estes, a daughter of William and Amanda (Goodrich) Estes, and soon thereafter moved to Dwight, Illinois, in 1882, embarking in a hardware business in that city and conducted it until he retired in 1905, after a very successful and reputable business career. Not only did he carry on his business in an energetic and satisfactory manner, but he gave an intelligent and effective support to civic affairs, and was one of the valued members of the Congregational Church. When he died at Dwight in 1908 the whole community mourned his passing, and Livingston County felt that it had lost one of its most representative men. The children of Benjamin A. Buck and his wife were as follows: Marion E., who was the elder, and Agnes B., who married H. B. Johnson, assistant electrical superintendent of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Great Falls, Montana. Mrs. Benjamin A. Buck survives her husband and makes her home with her son.

After passing through the common schools at Dwight, Illinois, Marion E. Buck became a student of its high school and was graduated therefrom in 1892. He then entered the University of Illinois at Urbana, Illinois, and completed the junior year in 1895. In that year he came to Colorado, and entered as an apprentice the employ of the Telluride Power Company at Telluride. For the first eighteen months he and Ralph D. Mershon worked on a special high tension investigation, the latter representing the Westinghouse Electrical Manufacturing Company. The results of these months of investigation established the fundamental principles for high tension transmission and methods of construction in vogue today.

In the fall of 1897, after the completion of this experimental work, Mr. Buck was called to Provo, Utah, and constructed the first 40,000 volt transmission line in the United States, for the Telluride Power Company. Two years later Mr. Buck came to Montana for L. L. Numm then general manager of the Telluride Power Company, who had associated himself with John F. Cowan in Butte in a water power development on the Madison River. Still later a company was incorporated under the name of The Power Company, and Mr. Buck was a member of its executive construction staff. The first development work on the Madison River was done in 1900, and during the building of it Mr. Buck took an active part, and the company was enabled to commence serving power to Butte industries through a connection with the Butte Electric & Power Company. Mr. Buck was operating engineer for The Power Company until 1905, when the property was purchased by the Butte Electric & Power Company, and he was retained by the purchasers as operating engineer and superintendent of construction.

From 1905 until 1908 Mr. Buck carried out the reconstruction of the dam on the Madison River and built the No. 2 development. In 1910 he came to Butte to take charge of the operations of the then enlarging system of the Montana Power Company, under M. Hebgen, general manager, and F. M. Kerr, general superintendent. During the latter part of 1914 Mr. Buck began the construction of the electrification of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and was engaged in this work continuously until May 1, 1917, during which period he completed and put into operation this 440 mile section from Harlowtown, Montana, to Avery, Idaho. The appreciation of Mr. Buck's services by his company was genuine, as was shown by his appointment in October, 1915, as general superintendent of the Montana Power Company, together with subsidiary companies, which very responsible position he still holds, discharging its onerous responsibilities with dignified capability. The offices are located in the Montana Power Building, at No. 40 East Broadway.

Like his ancestors before him Mr. Buck is a democrat, and stanch in his support of his party, but has never cared to go before the public for support for an office. He belongs to Virginia City Lodge No. 390, Benevolent and Protective Order Elks, which he joined in 1902; the Silver Bow Club; and the Montana Society of Engineers. He maintains his residence at No. 1156 West Platinum Street.

In 1899 Mr. Buck was married at McAllister, Montana, to Miss Gertrude L. Bronner, a daughter of S. M. and Catherine Bronner, the latter of whom is deceased. The former is still living and makes his home at Pokagon, Michigan, being now a retired farmer. Mrs. Buck attended the Montana State College at Bozeman, specializing in the domestic science branch, and is a skilled housekeeper and efficient homemaker, as well as a cultured lady. Mr. and Mrs. Buck became the parents of the following children: Dorothy Alice, who was born June 10, 1900, was graduated from the Butte High School in 1918, and is now attending Reed College at Portland, Oregon; and Edwin R., who was born August 18, 1903, is attending the Butte High School.

RUTH SHERIDAN. The Sheridan family have been influential people at Big Timber for twenty years. The late John E. Sheridan was a widely known Montana newspaper man, who came to the Northwest while in the service of the regular army of the United States. Two of his sons served with honor and credit in the World war. Several other of the children have made for themselves positions of usefulness in their respective communities. His daughter Ruth is now county clerk and recorder of Sweetgrass County and has shown exceptional ability in handling the affairs of that office.

John E. Sheridan was born at Portland, Maine, in 1861, of ancestors who came from Ireland and settled in Maine in colonial times. He grew up in Portland, learned the printer's trade, and in the regular service of the United States army came to Montana in 1888 and was stationed at Fort Assiniboine. He also lived for a time at Barker in Cascade County, and going to Belt he founded the Belt Valley Times, which he edited until 1899. In that year he founded the Big Timber Pioneer and made of that one of the most influential papers in Southern Montana. It is republican in politics and enjoys a large circulation in Sweetgrass and surrounding counties. John E. Sheridan died at Big Timber in 1906. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. At Helena, Montana, he married Miss Augusta Roth, who was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, and is now living at Big Timber.

Miss Ruth Sheridan, the third of their children, was born at Belt, Montana, and was educated in the public schools of Big Timber. She completed her junior year in high school and has become widely known in the town and surrounding country. For a time she was employed in the Big Timber postoffice and in 1918 was appointed deputy county clerk. In the fall of that year her name appeared as candidate on the republican ticket for county clerk and recorder and January 6, 1919, she began a term of two years in that office. Miss Sheridan is a Catholic and active in the republican party.

Her oldest brother, Albert, enlisted in April, 1918, and was sent overseas in June and was with the Expeditionary Forces in France. Her younger brother, Philip, fifth in age among the children, enlisted in October, 1917, and was with the American forces sent to Siberia, going overseas in July, 1918. The second of the family is Mary Sheridan, who is a graduate of the Big Timber High School, attended summer normal school at Dillion several terms, and is a teacher at Lehigh. The next younger than Ruth Sheridan is Rachel, who is a graduate of the Big Timber High School, attended the Rassussman Business College at St. Paul, Minnesota, and is employed as a stenographer at Big Timber. Esther, sixth in the family, is a junior in the Big Timber High School, while Leah is in the sophomore year and Naomi, the youngest, is in grammar school.

Noble M. Walker is president and general manager of the Judith Hardware Company at Lewistown, a business whose service he entered as a clerk less than twenty years ago. He is a native Montanan, and is a member of a family around which revolve many of the most interesting and important associations of the pioneer as well as the modern history of the state.

Pioneering has been a characteristic of the Walker family for several generations. The Walkers are of Scotch-Irish origin, one ancestor coming to this country from Ireland and his wife from Scotland. Their home was in Virginia, and they followed Daniel Boone into the bloody ground of Kentucky. David Walker, grandfather of the Lewistown merchant, was born in Adair County, Kentucky, July 10, 1802. He grew up and married there, and in 1827 settled in Sangamon County, Illinois, where he was one of the first farmers to break the soil of the corn belt. In 1835 he joined the tide of emigration to the Territory of Iowa, locating near West Point in Lee County, long before there was a town of that name. At West Point he spent the rest of his years, a successful farmer, a citizen of much public spirit, and was responsible for much of the early religious influences of his community. He was a charter member of the first Presbyterian Church organized in the Territory of Iowa, and was a member of it until his death, which occurred at West Point, September 1, 1876. He was a ruling elder in his church for twenty-five years. David Walker was the father of several well known citizens of Montana, including the late J. C. Walker, A. M. Walker, H. L. Walker, and also two daughters, Mrs. William Hardenbrook and Mrs. John E. Pyle.

Joseph C. Walker, father of Noble M. Walker, was born at Springfield, Illinois, March 30, 1830, and died at Lewistown, June 8, 1908, in his seventy-ninth year. When he was five years old his parents moved to West Point, Iowa, where he grew up. He served with the Union army during the winter of 1862-63, being at Corinth, Mississippi. He then returned to Iowa, and at West Point in April, 1863, married Miss Ruby A. Mason. She was born in Ohio and was taken as a child to Iowa by her parents. Two hours after their marriage Joseph C. Walker started overland, accompanied by his bother, Alexander M. Walker, and Dr. Allen Hardenbrook, bound for California. They had wagons drawn by ox teams. At Denver the news reached them of gold discoveries in Montana, and Joseph C. Walker and three companions sold their outfit and mule teams and traveled to Montana, reaching Alder Gulch, June 9, 1863. The Walker brothers had some experience in mining in Alder Gulch, not without profit, but soon bought a sawmill and became pioneer lumber manufacturers. In December, 1864, they sold their mill and all returned by stage coach, to Atchison, Kansas, which was then the nearest railway point, the trip requiring thirty days. From Atchison, Joseph C. Walker took his gold to the United States mint at Philadelphia and received a statement dated January 21, 1865, apprising him that the bullion value of his shipment was $8,903.89. Joseph C. Walker and his brother acquired an outfit of wagons and teams and in the spring of 1865 returned to the West, after four months of travel reaching the present site of Deer Lodge. Mrs. Walker accompanied him on this return trip. Soon afterward they settled at Helena, which was then only a placer mining camp, and there again engaged in the sawmill business. Besides lumbering they also operated freighting outfits between Montana points and Nevada. In 1874 Joseph C. Walker was elected a member of the Territorial Legislature from Lewis and Clark county, and served as sheriff of that county for three years. In August, 1883, he moved with his family to Fergus County and engaged in ranching and stock growing. Several years before his death he sold his ranch and moved to the City of Lewistown. At the time of his death he was vice president of the Montana Pioneers Society. He and his wife had three children, Maggie Montana, Noble M. and Joseph A.

Among the many tributes paid to this noble Montana pioneer the following editorial is exceptionally worthy of quotation: "The man who lives an upright and noble life, who has made trails into a new country in order that others may come, and who lays out his course in such a way that friends may follow in his footsteps with assurances that they are traveling the right road, who commands the respect of every acquaintance—he is a man whose name takes a prominent place in history. Such a man was J. C. Walker of Lewistown, a brother of A. M. Walker of Anaconda. A pioneer of Alder Gulch, a member of the Territorial Legislature, sheriff of Lewis and Clark county, in the '70s, a prominent ranch and cattle owner, J. C. Walker made for himself a name of which any man should be proud. Montana's band of sturdy trail blazers is being decimated, and within a few years more all of their names will be enrolled upon the history of the state as the argonauts who have done a glorious service to humanity and have passed to the other shore."

Noble M. Walker was born August 20, 1872, while his parents were living at Helena, Montana. When he was a few months old, in 1873, his mother took him on a long stage journey of 600 miles from Helena to Corinne, Utah. During the summer of 1880 he and his mother left Helena by stage for Fort Benton, going down the river by boat and making a river journey to Bismarck. When Mr. Walker was eight years old his parents moved to Wisconsin, and the education begun at Helena was continued in the public schools of Eau Claire. After two years his parents returned to Butte, where he attended public schools. In 1883, when eleven years old, he earned his first money as a messenger boy for the United States Telegraph Company at Fort Benton. In the fall of 1883 he removed to Judith Basin with his parents, and became actively associated with his father on the ranch as a cowboy. He rode the range for his father and for other outfits altogether for twelve years. After his father closed out the cattle business he continued a sheep raiser for about three years, and in 1903 he removed to Lewistown and went to work as a clerk for the Montana Hardware Company. After three years with that firm he then became a life insurance salesman and in 1905 entered the service of the Judith Hardware Company, rapidly going through successive promotions from clerk until he was elected general manager in 1912, and president and general manager in 1916. The Judith Hardware Company is one of the largest firms of its kind in the Judith Basin, and much of its growth and prosperity in recent years can be directly credited to Mr. Walker's genius as a merchant.

He has also been active in local affairs, serving as alderman from the third ward by election in 1917, and in 1918 was elected president of the Lewistown Chamber of Commerce. He served as a member of the War Industry Board and secretary of the Community Labor Board and is a member of the School Board of District No. 1. Mr. Walker is a republican in politics, is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Elks, Judith Lodge No. 3 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Big Spring Camp No. 108 of the Woodmen of the World. He and his wife are very fond of music and share many other interests in common.

August 26, 1898, Mr. Walker married Miss Jennie M. Harwood. She was born at Morton, Minnesota, a daughter of John and Evelyn (Dodge) Harwood, and was the seventh of their ten children. Her father later became a prominent rancher in Fergus County. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have three children. Joseph Albert, born September 2, 1899, graduated from the Fergus County High School in 1918, and on October 9th of the same year was enrolled as a member of the Student Army Training Corps at the University of Montana. He received his honorable discharge December 18, 1918. Judith Adelaide, the second child, was born April 20, 1901, and was a graduate of the Fergus County High School. The youngest child is Marjorie Evelyn, born February 4, 1908.

Robert H. Watson is a man of wide experience and varied business interests and is connected with several enterprises of Hall, including the operation of a large real estate service. He was born at Nashville, Tennessee, April 20, 1879, a son of Joseph W. Watson. The Watson family was established in the United States by the grandfather of Robert H. Watson, who came to this country from Scotland. Joseph W. Watson was born in Kentucky in 1828, and died at Wichita Falls, Texas, in 1907. Reared in Kentucky, Joseph W. Watson left his native state after reaching maturity and went to the vicinity of Booneville, where he was engaged in farming until after the close of the war between the North and South, during which conflict he espoused the side of the latter section and served in the Confederate army under General Price, being wounded in the right hand. Upon his return home from the war, he went into Indian Territory and was engaged in ranching near Ryan until 1907, when he retired to Wichita Falls. His political beliefs made him a democrat, and he was strong in his support of the principles of that party. In the Baptist Church he found the expression of his religious faith and he gave that denomination a hearty and loyal support. Mr. Watson is survived by his widow who lives at Enid, Oklahoma. She bore the maiden name of Sarah E. Patterson, and was born near Booneville, Missouri. Their children were as follows: John, who is in the harness business at Rush Springs, Oklahoma; Sarah, who married Robert Green, resides at San Marcus, Texas, where Mr. Green is engaged in ranching; Mary, who died at the age of six years; J. H., who is in a real estate business at Dallas, Texas; Elizabeth, who married Oliver Greathouse, now serving as sheriff of a Texan County; Mary, who married Jefferson Thomas, a railroad man, lives in Missouri; George W., who is a mechanic of Amarillo, Texas; James, who lives near Ryan, Oklahoma; Robert H., whose name heads this review; Lucy, who died in 1900; Fannie, who married Tom Johnson a rancher in the neighborhood of Enid, Oklahoma; and Alice who died in Oklahoma when thirty-five years old.

Robert H. Watson attended the public schools of Indian Territory and Kansas, and lived at home until he was seventeen years old. He then went to Medicine Lodge, Kansas, where he worked as a cowboy, and was employed as such at Kiowa and Coldwater, Kansas. With the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, he served his country as a soldier, and then in January, 1899, enlisted for service in the Philippines to which he was sent, and where he remained for three years and eight months, during that period taking part in fifteen expeditions. He was acting quartermaster sergeant in the mounted constabulary scouts. Returning to this country in 1902, he was mustered out of the service at San Francisco, California, from whence he returned to Kansas and for the subsequent two years was in a restaurant business at Wichita, and Raymond, Washington, remaining in the latter city until he came to Hall, Montana. Since locating here he has invested quite heavily in local enterprises and is owner of a barber shop, ice cream and confectionery parlor, pool hall and telephone exchange, and conducts the leading real estate business of this section. Mr. Watson is one of the live business men of Granite County, and whatever he undertakes he carries through to a successful completion. The republican party has in him one of its most forceful exponents. Fraternally Mr. Watson belongs to Raymond Lodge, Loyal Order of Moose of Raymond, Washington; Raymond Aerie No. 1631, Fraternal Order of Eagles of Raymond, Washington, and still retains his interests in these organizations. In addition to his interests at Hall, Mr. Watson is a stockholder of the Drummond Light & Power Company.

In 1911 Mr. Watson was united in marriage with

ADOLPHUS D. MYERS

Miss Alma Hanley at Raymond, Washington. She is a daughter of W. J. and Mary (Campbell) Hanley. Mr. Hanley and his family reside at Hall where he is conducting a garage. Mr. and Mrs. Watson became the parents of the following children: Lucy Belle born in 1912; Henry Jackson, who was born in 1913; James Robert, who was born in 1915; Bessie, who was born in 1917; and Jane, who was born in 1919.

Otto K. Myers, who was brought to Montana when a child by his parents, grew up on a ranch, but for many years has been a successful business man at Lewistown.

He was born at Midland, Ontario, December 1, 1881, a son of Adolphus D. and Della May (Davis) Myers. His father was born in Buffalo, New York, in 1834, while his mother, who is still living, is a native of Canada. Adolphus Myers was a carpenter by trade, was in the merchandise business in Canada for several years, and in 1889 brought his family to Montana. He entered a homestead ten miles south of Great Falls and engaged in general farming. The old homestead among other features had a very fine spring of water. He later sold the ranch and was employed at his trade for five or six years with the B. M. Smelting Company at Great Falls. Then for two or three years he was solicitor for the Great Falls Tribune and in 1905 came to Lewistown and took up the manufacture of soda water and soft drinks. Later he built a fine plant, and operated it very successfully until his death, which occurred September 10, 1918. He was candidate for mayor of Lewistown in May, 1913, against W. D. Symmes. In politics he was a socialist and was a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a Woodmen of the World.

Otto K. Myers, only child of his parents, was eight years old when brought to Montana, and he acquired his education in the public schools of Great Falls. He also worked on the ranch of his father and at one time had a thrilling experience when he and a boy companion got in the way of a stampede of about 1,000 head of cattle. They ran for about three miles before they met his father and other men, who by shooting into the on-coming herd turned their course and saved the lives of the boys. Mr. Myers on leaving the ranch went to work for a soda water company at Great Falls, learning the business, and in 1905 he used his experience jointly with his father's capital in the soft drink industry, and since his father's death has been owner and proprietor of what is one of the flourishing business enterprises of Lewistown.

Mr. Myers is independent in politics, voting for the best man, and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. On June 9, 1913, he married Florence Connolly. She was born in Traverse City, Michigan. They have one daughter, Arelene.

Charles H. Lane. In a city of the importance of Butte almost every line of endeavor is well represented, this region offering an unsurpassed field for the abilities of some of the most enterprising business men of the country. One of them who is attaining to a gratifying prosperity here is Charles H. Lane, manufacturers agent. He was born at Natick, Massachusetts, on May 13, 1854, a son of John Edward Lane, an Englishman, born in 1801, who died at Natick, Massachusetts, in 1861. He founded the family in the United States, becoming a sea captain and sailing out of Boston, Massachusetts, across the ocean and carrying on trading in almost every port of the world. After the organization of the republican party, he voted its ticket. His marriage occurred at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, when he was united with Mary Jane La Coste, born in New Hampshire in 1804. She died at Natick, Massachusetts, in 1884, having borne her husband the following children: Anna, Mary, Victoria, Louise, Josephine, John Edwin, William and Isabelle all of whom are deceased; Susan, who resides at Brooklyn, New York, is the widow of H. O. Daniels, who was a shoe manufacturer, and she now conducts a large custom shoe repairing shop of New York City and gives employment to eleven persons; and Charles H., who is the youngest of the family.

Charles H. Lane was educated in the public schools of Natick, Massachusetts, and was graduated from its high school course in 1870. He began his business career as a clerk for a Natick drug store and remained with it for eleven years. In 1880 Mr. Lane came to the West, and for six years was engaged in the sheep industry in Wyoming. He then engaged with Beckwith, Quinn & Company, general merchants of Carbon, Wyoming, and remained with them until 1889. In that year he came to Butte, Montana, to become secretary of the W. R. Kenyon Hardware Company, now the Montana Hardware Company, and held that office for three years, when he became cashier of the Miller, Chapman & Castle Hardware Company. A year later he became cashier for the Tuttle Manufacturing Company, leaving it in 1897 to assist in organizing the Harrison-Lane Company, dealers in coal and mining supplies at wholesale. At the expiration of a year Mr. Lane sold his interests in this concern and established himself as sales agent, and for twenty-one years has represented the American Steel & Wire Company and other corporations as a manufacturers agent, and he also is a wholesale dealer in coal, his offices being at No. 101 Lewisohm Block, Butte. He covers the whole state of Montana, visiting jobbers only.

A very prominent man and a leader in the local democratic party, Mr. Lane served as mayor of Butte from 1915 to 1917, and gave the city a sound and businesslike administration, and he has also been a member of the school board for eight years. Both as a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Lane is valued by his associates in religious endeavor. He belongs to Summit Valley Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Parker Chapter, Royal Arch Masons and Natick Commandery, Knights Templar, the first of Butte and the last two of Natick, Massachusetts; of Butte Council No. 106, United Commercial Travelers of America; the Rotary Club of Butte; and joined the Silver Bow Club in 1890. Recognizing the value to the community of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Lane is a member of the Butte branch and is serving it as a director.

In 1887 Mr. Lane was married at Belvidere, Illinois, to Miss Eliza Tompkins, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newell C. Tompkins, the former of whom was a retired prospector who died at Butte, Montana, in 1911, having been associated with the Strang Company of Omaha, Nebraska, and Walker Brothers of Salt Lake City, Utah, together with the latter gentlemen opening a bank in that city during its pioneer days, which was housed in a tent. Mrs. Tompkins is also deceased. Mrs. Lane was educated in the girls seminary at Knoxville, Illinois. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Lane have been as follows: Roger O., who was born on November 23, 1888, is cashier in the pay office of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and a graduate of Lake Forest University of Illinois, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts; Anna Isabelle, who was born May 2, 1897, is at home; and Helen Elizabeth, who was born September 23, 1899, is also at home. The latter attended Ferry Hall Academy, Lake Forest, Illinois. The family residence at No. 2744 Edward Street is owned by Mr. Lane and he also owns a double dwelling on North Christopher Street. A man of capabilities and broad vision, he has been able to look into the future and see possibilities not visible to the ordinary man, and has possessed the courage to take advantage of opportunities as they came to his hand. His success is his own creation, and it is not confined to business circles, for he has attained to prominence both politically and socially.

Albert LeRoy Phillips came to Montana with a thorough practical knowledge of the pharmacy and drug business, and since 1912 has been the leading business man of that class in Big Timber.

He was born on a farm in Sullivan County, Missouri, March 15, 1880. His paternal ancestry came originally from Wales and settled in Massachusetts. However, his grandfather, Brice Phillips, was born in Pennsylvania on December 16, 1821, and about 1866 left his farm near Waynesburg in that state and moved to Eastern Illinois, and a few years later went to Sullivan County, Missouri, where he died in 1896. Elias Phillips, father of Albert L., was born in Pennsylvania in 1850, and was sixteen years old when his parents moved to Eastern Illinois, near Laharpe, and was still a youth when he went with them to Sullivan County, Missouri. He became a farmer in Sullivan County and vigorously prosecuted his interests as a grain and livestock raiser and is still a factor in that promising agricultural district of Missouri. He is a democrat in politics and is an active supporter of the Church of God. He married Mary Isabel Rowland, who was born in Elbridge, Illinois, in 1853. Chloey E., the oldest of their children, is the wife of James Scott, a farmer near Yukon, Oklahoma; Albert L. is the second in age; Ira R. is a farmer in Sullivan County; Kenney is also a farmer in that county; and Eva May is the wife of Albert Shaver, a farmer in Sullivan County.

Albert L. Phillips lived on the farm and acquired a rural school education, and in 1898 graduated from the Green City High School. He early determined that his career should not be that of a farmer. In 1902 he graduated from the State Normal School at Kirksville, Missouri, and for two years taught in his native county. At Green City he acquired his first experience in the drug and jewelry business, where he remained two years, then worked in similar lines at Galt, Missouri, one year, and three years at Fairfax, Missouri. With this education and equipment he came to Montana in 1910, and became proprietor of the Melville Drug and Jewelry Company at Melville. His partner there was H. P. Nelson. In 1912 he formed a partnership with W. D. Richards under the name Richards & Company, and established his present business at Big Timber. In 1915 he became sole proprietor, and has given Big Timber a model establishment as a drug store, one of the best stocked and managed stores of the kind in Sweetgrass County. Mr. Phillips lives over his store.

He is a republican in politics, and is affiliated with Doric Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Big Timber, Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, is a member of Green City Camp No. 2656, Modern Woodmen of America, and is a member of Big Timber Chamber of Commerce and the Sweetgrass County Good Roads Association.

Emil O. Kindschy. The deft manipulation of the chisel has at all times commanded a liberal share of wonder and admiration; it has preserved to the human race the beauty of antiquity, has marked the final resting-place of our dearest and most beloved friends, and has made the home of their mortal remains a garden of art and loveliness; it has also contributed largely to the beautifying of our cities, the adornment of our public parks, and to the perpetuating of the memory of the great and good. Among the men of Montana who are identified with this line of work as proprietors of monument establishments, one who has been particularly successful is Emil O. Kindschy, of Lewistown, who has likewise been prominent in civic affairs.

Mr. Kindschy was born on a farm in Montana Township, Buffalo County, Wisconsin, June 1, 1881, a son of Christ and Margaret (von Wald) Kindschy, natives of Switzerland. Christ Kindschy was born in 1836 and was nine years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States, the family settling in 1845 in Sauk County, Wisconsin. After coming to this country he was able to secure only three months of schooling, but as a man of natural intelligence and quick perception acquired a practical knowledge of matters of importance and moment which made up for his lack of a technical education. When a young man he went to Buffalo County, Wisconsin, where he secured a homestead in the wilderness and hewed himself a home out of the virgin forests, and in his latter years was engaged largely in diary farming, with a prosperous business. He was one of the prominent and influential men of his community and served in various township offices, including those of chairman and treasurer, in addition to being active in assisting in the advancement and progress of his county and state. His death occurred in 1912, when he had reached the age of seventy-six years, while Mrs. Kindschy, to whom he was married at Fountain City, Wisconsin, passed away in 1888, at the age of forty-four years. Of their seven children Emil O. was the sixth in order of birth, and five still survive.

Emil O. Kindschy divided his boyhood between working on the home farm during the summer months and attending the district schools in the winter terms in Buffalo County, and when he entered upon his career it was in the role of schoolteacher. He was but sixteen years of age when he took his first class in his home community in Buffalo County, Wisconsin, but the youthful instructor proved proficient and capable of securing results, and for four years he was retained in the same capacity. In 1901 he came to Montana, arriving at Lewistown in February, and shortly thereafter secured a position teaching in the public schools of Fergus County. After four years thus passed he turned his attention to other pursuits and until 1910 was occupied in connection with employment in the ranch business, cattle raising and farming. He then spent a year in visiting his father and other relatives in Wisconsin, but in 1911 returned to Lewistown, where he entered the employ of Abel Brothers, with whom he continued something under three years. In 1913 he embarked in the monument business, and now has a modern establishment at No. 123 East Maine Street, where he has the most up-to-date equipment to be secured. He uses only the best of materials, and, as a natural artist, his love for the picturesque and beautiful asserts itself in every detail of his business.

Mr. Kindschy was married April 25, 1905, to Miss Ursula Camastral, who was born in Switzerland and was eleven years of age when brought to the United States by her parents. Three children have been born to this union: Lillian, Ruby and Doris. In his political views Mr. Kindschy is a republican. He has been active in local affairs, and in the capacity of alderman of the first ward, to which position he was elected in the spring of 1916, worked effectively and constructively in behalf of the interests of his city and his constituency. Fraternally he is affiliated with Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and Mrs. Kindschy belong to Anchor Rebekah Lodge No. 55.

FRANK M. MORSE. Within the past couple of years real Americans have found that they possess a priceless heritage in a line of honorable ancestry dating back to the colonial days of this country, and they realize that some record of their family ought to be put in shape for preservation for their children. Money cannot buy this distinction; it outweighs wealth and high social position, and with it comes as a natural result, an earnest striving on the part of this and future generations, to live up to the standards of those who helped to make this country what it is today, the greatest on earth. One of these one hundred per cent Americans who are living in Montana, is Frank M. Morse, postmaster of Hall, who is one of the prosperous business men of Granite County.

Frank M. Morse was born at Drummond, Montana, October 8, 1886, a son of F. D. Morse, and grandson of Maj. John W. Morse. Major Morse was borne in Maine, where his ancestors settled prior to the American Revolution, coming to this country from England. The date of his birth was 1834, and of his death, 1908, he passing away at Philipsburg, Montana. He came to Philipsburg at a very early day, and for years conducted a feed store here. At the time he selected this city for his permanent home, it was a pioneer settlement, and Major Morse did much to insure its future, both as an official and private citizen. A man of more than average ability and education, he was called upon to functionate as incumbent of practically all of the local offices, and as a non-official advisor on matters of civic importance.

F. D. Morse, father of Frank M. Morse, was born at Bangor, Maine, in 1854, and now lives at Drummond, Montana. Coming to Montana in the early '70s, he was engaged for a time in mining at Bear Gulch, but later homesteaded 160 acres of land in the vicinity of Drummond, to which he has since added until he now owns 1,600 acres of land and devotes it to hay, grain and cattle raising, his property being a very valuable one. His operations are carried on upon an extensive scale, and he has been very successful in his calling. A republican of the old school he has always supported the principles of his party, and served as deputy sheriff of Granite County for eight years and as sheriff for two years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Julia Gasper, was born at Surry, Maine, in 1861. Their children are as follows: Verdine B., and Frank M. Verdine B. was born August 23, 1884, and after attending the Drummond schools, was graduated from the Garden City Business College of Missoula, Montana. He then was engaged in farming until 1916, when he entered into partnership in a mercantile venture with his brother at Hall, Montana. Like his father he is a republican. Verdine B. Morse was married to Wanda E. Burt, a daughter of Charles E. and Rosa (Healy) Burt, the former of whom is now deceased, having been a pioneer liveryman of Drummond, Montana, but the latter survives and lives at Drummond. Mr. and Mrs. Verdine B. Morse have the following children: Frances, Edwin, Muriel and Reuel.

Frank M. Morse was reared on his father's farm until he was sixteen years of age, and during that period attended the public schools of Drummond. For the first five years following the completion of his sixteenth year, Frank M. Morse was in the employ of J. B. Featherman, a merchant of Drummond, and then for two years he was with Duncan Dingwall, another merchant of Drummond. In the meanwhile, desiring to learn something of the theory of business methods as well as their practical application, the ambitious youth took a correspondence course in this branch of learning, and then, feeling qualified for independent action, formed a partnership with his cousin, A. P. Morse, a son of Col. G. W. Morse, a pioneer of Montana, and the two young men carried on a mercantile business together for eighteen months at Drummond, and then, in 1913 moved to Hall, Montana, and bought the small store, 20 by 25 feet, owned by Albert Tinklepaugh. From the time Mr. Morse took over this business, the trade improved and some time ago it was necessary for him to seek larger quarters, and now he and his brother occupy a modern store, 90 by 20 feet, with full basement, and have three warehouses for the storing of their stock. The store is located near the depot, and the brothers keep at least $14,000 worth of stock on hand. Although Mr. Morse is a republican, his fitness for the office of postmaster was so universally recognized, that he was appointed by President Wilson on March 9, 1915, to this office, and has held it ever since. In addition to his other interests, Mr. Morse owns a dwelling at Drummond.

On June 10, 1908, Mr. Morse was married to Miss Anabelle McDonald, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jonas D. McDonald, both of whom were killed in the wreck of the Coeur d' Alene in 1909. Mr. McDonald was pumpman for the Missouri Pacific Railroad at Drummond for ten years prior to his tragic death. Mr. and Mrs. Morse became the parents of the following children: Donald, who was born December 25, 1909; Nevin, who was born March 17, 1911; Julia Irene, who was born in 1912; Fern, who was born in 1915; Carrol, who was born in 1917; and Edith, who was born in 1918.

Mr. Morse is a splendid business man and understands his trade and how to meet its demands. During the difficult days of the war and the reconstruction period he has lived up to government requirements, and made many sacrifices in order to meet them and at the same time protect his customers from excessive prices and unnatural shortage of commodities, and is certain to reap a well-merited reward in the future by a continued patronage from those whose interests he has kept in mind at a time when some of his calling have not hesitated to profit through the necessities of their customers.

CHARLES L. WENTWORTH. The career of Charles L. Wentworth, of Lewistown, illustrates most forcibly the possibilities that are open to a young man who possesses sterling business qualifications. It proves that neither wealth nor social position, nor the assistance of influential friends at the outset of his career, are at all necessary to place a young man upon the road to success. It also proves that ambitious perseverance, steadfastness of purpose and indefatigable industry, combined with sound business principles, will be rewarded, and that true success follows individual efforts only.

Mr. Wentworth was born in Waldo County, Maine, March 26, 1871, a son of Franklin L. and Margaret E. (Bennett) Wentworth, natives of the same county, the father born August 24, 1838, and the mother July 17, 1846. The parents were married at Searsmont, Maine, and had two children: Charles L.; and Nettie, the wife of Harry Haskell, of Portland, Maine. Franklin L. Wentworth passed his boyhood days on his father's farm, where he resided until his enlistment, June 26, 1862, in Company D, Nineteenth Regiment, Maine Volunteer Infantry. He served bravely and faithfully throughout practically the remainder of the Civil war and received his honorable discharge May 31, 1865. At the close of his military career he returned to the homestead, where he resumed farming, and was so engaged until the time of his retirement in 1918. A lover of fine horses, during his active years he was greatly interested in the breeding of such animals, as he was also of Durham cattle. Mr. Wentworth was originally a whig in his political views, but from 1856 was a republican. He was prominent and influential in civic affairs, and in addition to being road supervisor for fifteen years was one of his county's selectmen during a long period. He was active in the movements of the Presbyterian Church, and for many years held the post of deacon. Mr. Wentworth died May 2, 1919, and Mrs. Wentworth on May 16, 1919.

Charles L. Wentworth received his education in the public schools of Waldo County, Maine, walking two miles from his father's farm to the little red schoolhouse on the hill. He was an industrious lad, and when only fourteen years of age earned his first money shingling the home, barn and shed of Isaac Burns, for which his daily wage was fifty cents. On October 19, 1891, Mr. Wentworth left the parental roof, and one week later arrived at Big Timber, Montana, where he engaged in teaming for the C. E. Severance Sheep Company. He subsequently took charge of all the team work and farming, and after about two years became superintendent of the cow outfit of the same company, a position which he held for 1½ years. During 1894 and 1895 Mr. Wentworth attended J. C. Duncan's Business College at Davenport, Iowa. During this time he had been employed as a cowboy in the outfit of Oscar Stephens, and for four years rode the range. His experiences as a rider of the range ceased at the time of his marriage, November 26, 1896, to Miss Iva Ann Corbly, who was born near Sedan, Kansas, January 8, 1875, a daughter of Jacob Ingram and Jane (Bolton) Corbly.

Jacob I. Corbly was born in Pennsylvania and died in 1904 in Montana, when sixty-two years of age. Mrs. Corbly, who was a native of Iowa, died in Kansas when her daughter, Mrs. Wentworth, was but three months old, she being the youngest of three daughters. In the fall of 1881 Mr. Corbly came to Dillon, Montana, by rail, and then traveled overland to near Bozeman, Gallatin County. In 1890 he removed to Fergus County, and bought land four miles northeast of Lewistown, and also took up Government land under his soldier's claim, to which he added until he had nearly 1,000 acres at one time. He was a large cattle operator, and was not only well known in business circles, but was prominent also in civic affairs, was chosen by his fellow-citizens to represent them in the capacity of county commissioner for two terms, and served as a member of the school board for several years. He was a democrat in politics, a member of the Christian Church, and affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

Following his marriage, Charles L. Wentworth located on the land owned by his wife, an entry of 160 acres, and later he himself homesteaded 160 acres in Fergus County. During the time of proving up on this property he worked in the Gilt Edge mining district, and subsequently bought the Nickel Plate stage line, between Lewistown and Gilt Edge, at the same time taking over the mail contract between Lewistown and Kendall. In all, he continued in the stage business for six years, and at the same time continued his farming operations. At this time Mr. Wentworth is one of the big wheat growers of the county and also is actively engaged in breeding standard-bred cattle and horses. His business connections are numerous, including a directorship in the Empire Bank and Trust Company, in which he is a stockholder, the Montana and Eastern Banking Corporation, and the Farmers Elevator Company, of which he was one of the organizers in 1908. The same year he engaged with the Montana State Fair Association as county representative in collecting all the produce exhibited from Fergus County, and in 1910 was made a member of the Advisory Board of that body. In 1913 he was elected vice president of the Montana Seed Growers Association, and in 1918 was honored by election to the post of president of the Fergus County Fair Association. Mr. Wentworth is one of the prominent and influential republicans of his community, and in 1916 was elected alderman of the Third Ward of Lewistown, an office to which he was re-elected in 1918. His terms have been characterized by much constructive work. Mr. Wentworth is fraternally affiliated with Judith Lodge No. 30, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is past noble grand of the Encampment of that order; with Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias; the Dramatic Order Knights of Korassan; Lewiston Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. and Mrs. Wentworth are the parents of two children: Miss Leone Montana, who resides with her parents, and Lloyd Ingram. Lloyd I. Wentworth was married May 27, 1918, to Helen Waspbey, and July 6, 1918, enlisted in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army at Tacoma, Washington. He was subsequently transferred to the Motor Transport Corps, and was sent to Camp Johnson, Jacksonville, Florida. He was promoted to first lieutenant and at the close of the great war was identified with the Instruction Department. He is now held in the Officers Reserve, subject to call for five years from date of enlistment.

Thomas J. B. Shanley, M. D. There is no vocation that commands greater respect and few that offer better opportunities for the display of character and ability than does that of the medical profession. Dealing with the careers of men who have contributed to the upbuilding and prominence of the profession in the great commonwealth of Montana is a task every writer enjoys, for it leads through many and diversified avenues of usefulness, and gives truth and expression to the fact that those, who have done most for their fellowmen and the advancement of the profession, are the ones who have lived honest and unselfish lives themselves. In preparing a review of the lives of the men whose names stand out prominently among the medical men of this state, who by character and achievement have gained notable prominence, the record of Dr. Thomas J. B. Shanley of Butte is found to be one that compels more than passing mention.

Doctor Shanley was born at Burlington, Vermont, on November 11, 1880, a son of M. W. Shanley, and grandson of Thomas Shanley, born in Vermont in 1805, and died at Burlington, that state, in 1885, having spent his entire life in Vermont, where he followed farming. He married a Miss Barrett, also a native of Vermont. His father, great-grandfather of Doctor Shanley, served in the American Revolution as one of the "Green Mountain Boys." The Shanleys came to the American colonies from Ireland, first living at Boston, Massachusetts, but later locating permanently in Vermont.

M. W. Shanley was born at Burlington, Vermont, in 1850, and still makes that city his home, and in it he was reared, educated and married. For a time he was engaged in farming in its vicinity and then turned his attention to building. For about five years he lived in the western portion of North Dakota and was interested in the Stevens, Shanley & Scofield Ranch, where horses and cattle were grown upon an extensive scale, but returned to Vermont. The democratic party gives expression to his political views. In religious faith he is Roman Catholic. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth J. Flynn, born at Cambridge, Vermont, in 1850. Their children were as follows: Frank, who is a resident of Detroit, Michigan, is a large landowner of Towner County, North Dakota, and spends a considerable portion of his time there; Doctor Shanley, of whom we write; Helen, who is studying medicine at Columbia University, New York City, New York; Joseph William, who is an oil operator, resides at Casper, Wyoming; and Bernadette, who for two years was a student of the School of Mines at Butte, but is now attending Columbia University.

Doctor Shanley attended the public schools of Burlington, Vermont, and his environment was a valuable one during the formative period of his life. When he had completed the sophomore year in the Burlington High School, he did the work of the last two years of high school at the University of North Dakota, and then entered Georgetown University at Washington, District of Columbia, and was two years in attendance on collegiate course. For the subsequent two years Doctor Shanley was at Atlanta, Georgia, looking after the mining and plantation interests of his brother Frank, and at the close of the second one he became a student in the medical department of Columbia University at New York City, New York, and was graduated therefrom in 1909, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and as a member of the Greek Letter fraternity, Chi Zeta Chi.

Doctor Shanley was house surgeon at the French Hospital of New York City for two years and seven months, thus gaining an invaluable practical experience, leaving that institution to become resident physician of the Manhattan Maternity and Dispensary Hospital of New York City, where he remained for thirteen months. In December, 1912, Doctor Shanley located permanently at Butte, and entered upon the practice of his profession, specializing in surgery, although he also has a general medical practice, and has built up a very large and valuable connection. His work has ever been discharged with a keen sense of conscientious obligation, and his skill is evidenced through the results which follow his labors.

Doctor Shanley is an independent democrat and a Roman Catholic, following in both his politics and religion the teachings of his father. He belongs to Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a third degree knight; the Silver Bow Club; and the county, state and national medical organizations; and during 1919 served the Silver Bow Medical Society as president. He was also president of the University Club of Butte from July, 1916, to September, 1918. His residence and offices are situated at No. 201 West Granite Street.

In June, 1915, Doctor Shanley was married at Butte to Miss Anne Sennett, a daughter of Mrs. M. Sennett of Butte. Mrs. Shanley was born at Leadville, Colorado. Doctor and Mrs. Shanley have the following children: Thomas J. B., Jr., who was born on December 20, 1917; and Elizabeth Anne, who was born on December 10, 1918.

Always interested in athletics, Doctor Shanley stroked the "varsity crew" during his freshman year at the Georgetown University at the intercollegiate boat race on the Hudson River at Poughkeepsie, New York, in 1901, and came in second, Cornell being first. He has participated in many other boat races, one being against the crew of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland. Doctor Shanley maintains membership with the Virginia Boat Club of Richmond, Virginia, and the Atlanta Athletic Club, and is also a member of The Society of New York Alumni of Georgetown University and of the Menden Alumni Society of Columbia University, New York City. He has always stood for the things which are right and proper both in his profession and outside of it, and no one has been more strict in the maintenance of professional ethics than he.

Ernest R. Patterson, proprietor of one of the chief mercantile establishments of Big Timber, was about two years old when he made his first acquaintance with Montana. That was in 1888, in which year his father brought the family from the State of Maine and settled on the Musselshell River. His father, Eugene L. Patterson, was born near Belfast, Maine, in 1863. He had been employed in the logging camps of Maine, also operated a milk route, and on coming to Montana was foreman for a large ranch on the Mussellshell River and later conducted ranches in the Lake Basin country and at White Beaver. In 1896 he bought a ranch of his own on Sweetgrass Creek, twelve miles from Big Timber, and lived on this property until he sold out in 1908. He then bought the hardware stock of the Montana Trading Company at Big Timber and was financially interested in that business until his death. This is the hardware store of which his only son, Ernest, is now proprietor. Eugene Patterson was a republican and was affiliated with Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias. He died at Big Timber in 1914. His wife was Alice Shorey, who was born in Belfast, Maine, in 1869 and is still living at Big Timber. Ernest R., who was born at Belfast, Maine, May 6, 1886, is the older of two children, his sister Edith being the wife of John Cameron, a rancher near Reed Point, Montana.

Ernest R. Patterson attended rural schools in Sweetgrass County, and later secured a liberal education. For three years he was a student in the State Normal School at St. Cloud, Minnesota, graduated in 1906 from the county high school at Big Timber, and then spent a year in the state university at Missoula. On leaving college he went to work in his father's business and since February 1, 1919, has been sole proprietor. His store at the corner of McLeod Street and First Avenue is a complete establishment, handling hardware and furniture, and there is also an undertaking department Mr. Patterson's partner in this being Casper Graff.

Mr. Patterson is owner of a modern home on Fourth Avenue, and another dwelling on Fifth Avenue. He has served as city councilman of Big Timber, is a republican, is a past chancellor of Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, a member of the Dramatic Order of the Knights of Khorassan and is affiliated with Big Timber Camp No. 10610, Modern Woodmen of America.

He married at Big Timber in 1908 Miss Beulah Busha. On another page is an account of the numerous activities of her father, Charles T. Busha, one of the leading citizens of Big Timber. Mrs. Patterson is a graduate of the Sweetgrass County High School and finished her education in the Southern Female College of Virginia. To their marriage were born five children, Riley, the oldest, and Edith Lenora, both dying in infancy. The other three are Alice Helen, born May 3, 1911, Ida Elizabeth born May 13, 1914, and Beulah Gene, born May 21, 1919.

ARTHUR A. STAPLETON. Since his arrival at Lewistown in 1905 Arthur A. Stapleton has contributed materially to the upbuilding of the city, and on every side can be seen evidences of his ability as a constructor of substantial structures. His career has been indicative of the value of a useful trade when properly mastered and of the awards to be attained through following it through to its highest possibilities, for in this way has Mr. Stapleton become one of the leading factors in the business life of Lewistown and placed himself beyond the possibility for future financial needs.

Arthur A. Stapleton was born at St. Mary's, Canada, October 25, 1874, a son of Arthur and Sarah (Long) Stapleton. His father, who was born in England in 1822, was brought to America on a sailing vessel by his parents when he was a mere child, the family being pioneers of the part of Canada in which they settled. There Arthur Stapleton grew up in a somewhat wild part of the country, learning the various lessons connected with the business of farming, which, with sawmilling, constituted his occupations throughout life. He was a man of industry and integrity, was honored in his community, and death in 1876 was mourned by a wide circle of acquaintances. Mrs. Stapleton, who survived her husband for a long period and died in 1913, at the advanced age of eighty years, was a native of Canada. There were nine children in the family, of whom six are still living, and Arthur A. was the eighth in order of birth. Arthur A. Stapleton was only about two years of age at the time of his father's death, and some two years later his widowed mother took him to Michigan, where, in the town of Lexington, he passed his boyhood and secured his education in the public school. He was an industrious lad and even when still a mere boy did much to assist his mother in her struggles for a livelihood, remaining at her side until he was sixteen years of age. At that time he began to be self-supporting, and went to Grand Rapids, Michigan, to learn the trade of plumber. After completing his apprenticeship and mastering his trade he traveled as a journeyman for some years, and his first permanent residence as a business man with an establishment of his own was at Flint, Michigan, where he remained until 1905. During the time he had been located there he had done a good business and had become encouraged therein, but eventually decided that a wider field was awaiting him in the west, and accordingly, in the year mentioned, came to Lewistown, Montana, where he has since centered his activities. Mr. Stapleton is now at the head of a large and prosperous business, which has grown and developed into the proportions of a necessary commercial asset. He has not alone confined himself to placing plumbing systems in some of the largest buildings in the city; on the contrary, his activities have extended into various fields of business endeavor, he having been particularly active and prominent in the construction of residences and other structures. In addition to ten or twelve handsome and substantial residences which he contributed to the city's upbuilding, in 1916 he built the handsome Stapleton Block on Broadway, and is the principal owner of the Broadway Apartment Building on the same thoroughfare. His business transactions have always been characterized by strict fidelity to principle, contract and engagement, and his reputation is that of a man whose word is as good as though it were backed by his name on a bond. Mr. Stapleton has found little time for politics, but is a stanch republican as a voter. Good movements, and particularly those affecting the welfare of his community, always have his earnest support and cooperation. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On June 28, 1894, Mr. Stapleton was united in marriage with Miss Nettie Tyler, who was born in Michigan, and to this union there have been born three children: Maynard H., Bernice and Tyler, all of whom are attending the Lewistown public schools and reside with their parents.

H. A. FEATHERMAN, who is one of the progressive business men of Philipsburg, is successfully engaged in handling real estate and loans and writing insurance, and has been active in developing this section of the state. He was born at Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania, October 5, 1867, a son of Jacob A. Featherman, and a member of a family of English and French descent. Jacob A. Featherman was born near Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania, where his ancestors had located in pre-Revolutionary days, in 1827, and died there in 1906, having spent his entire life in that vicinity, and during his mature years being engaged in milling. He was a democrat in his political belief, and a Reformed Lutheran in his religious creed. His wife bore the maiden name of Ellen Stotz, and she came of Moravian descent. Mrs. Featherman survives her husband and lives at Allentown, Pennsylvania. She was born at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, February 24, 1834. Their children were as follows: Mary, who married George Johnson, a publisher of Easton, Pennsylvania; J. B., who came to Drummond, Montana, in 1878, became a merchant of the place, and there died in 1918; Lillie, who married M. J. Downs, now deceased, was formerly engaged in a real estate business at Easton, where his wife died in 1917; Annie, who married Reuben Albert, a surveyor, lives at Trenton, New Jersey; Jacob H., who died at Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania, was a farmer during his mature years; Amanda, who died when about thirty, at New Chicago, Montana; Bertha, who is unmarried, lives at Drummond, Montana; H. A., whose name heads this review; Oliver F., who came to Philipsburg in 1885, was a bookkeeper, and died at Philipsburg in 1909; Fannie, who is a trained nurse, lives at Allentown, Pennsylvania; and Daisy, who married Anthony Graham, lives at Allentown, Mr. Graham having had charge of the Allentown Rapid Transit Company for many years.

H. A. Featherman attended the rural schools of Monroe County, Pennsylvania, and then in 1885 came to New Chicago, Montana, and for ten years was in the store of his uncle, John A. Featherman, and in the meanwhile attended the Helena Business College. Going from New Chicago to Drummond, Mr. Featherman clerked in the store of the same uncle until 1906, and in that year was elected treasurer of Granite County, and re-elected to the same office in 1908, serving for four years, his second term expiring in March, 1911. He then became cashier for E. A. Hannah & Company, bankers, leaving that concern in April, 1918, to open up his present business of real estate, loans and insurance at Philipsburg, which he has developed into the leading one of its kind in Granite County. His offices are located in the Featherman Block on Broadway, which he owns, and he also owns a business building and lot on Broadway, adjacent to the post office, and his residence on the corner of Pine and Alfa streets, as well as several other dwellings in the city.

Mr. Featherman is a republican. The Methodist Episcopal Church is his religious home, and he is a trustee of it. Well known as a Mason Mr. Featherman belongs to Flint Creek Lodge, No. 11, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he has held every office including that of master; Hope Chapter No. 10, Royal Arch Masons, of which he has filled every office including that of high priest; Omar Commandery No. 9, of Missoula, Montana; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Noble Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana; and Pearl Chapter No. 14, Order Eastern Star, of which he served for two years as patron. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Philipsburg, and is now one of its directors, and has been active in it and in the community generally, doing more than his part in interesting outside capital, and encouraging civic improvements and reforms.

JOHN H. MCINTOSH. Not only is John McIntosh one of the leading men of Montana, and very active in the life of Butte as general manager of the Associated Industries of Montana, but he is also distinguished as belonging to one of the famous American families, founded here in the very early days of the colonies, by representatives of the family who came from Scotland and located in a portion of the present state of Georgia, which has a county named McIntosh in their honor. Gen. Lachlan McIntosh was one of the eminent commanders of the Colonial troops during the American Revolution, and an aide de camp of General Washington. He waged a successful warfare against the savage Seminole Indians and was one of the founders, together with General Washington and Alexander Hamilton, of the famous Society of the Cincinnati.

The grandfather of John H. McIntosh was John Houston McIntosh, and he was born at Trenton, New Jersey, and died at Saint Mary's, Florida, prior to the birth of his grandson. He married Eliza Higbee, who passed away at Trenton, New Jersey, John Houston McIntosh maintaining homes both at Trenton and on his plantation on the Saint Mary River in Florida, which were occupied by the family according to the season.

John H. McIntosh of this review was born in Early County, Georgia, on February 1, 1879, a son of Dr. B. L. McIntosh, born at Saint Mary's, Florida, in 1837, and died at Marietta, Georgia, in July, 1902. He was reared at Trenton, New Jersey, and was graduated from the American Institute of Medicine and Surgery at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. When a young man he went to Savannah, Georgia, and began the practice of his profession, but his plans were disturbed by the outbreak of the war between the states and he, espousing the side of the South, enlisted in the Confederate army and served all through the war under General Lee, and participated in the various campaigns of that commander in Virginia. He was severely wounded in the last battle of the war, at Sailors Creek in Virginia, in which battle Doctor McIntosh's brother, John H. McIntosh, for whom the subject of this sketch was named, met his death. After his recovery, Dr. McIntosh located in Early County, Georgia, where he practiced his profession until 1888, and was also interested on an extensive scale in the production of rice and cotton. In 1888 he removed to Marietta, Georgia, and continued in practice there until his death. A prominent democrat, he served for one term as commissioner of agriculture for the State of Georgia. He was an Episcopalian, and both as a member of that body and as a supporter of the public schools exerted an influence for good in his community. Doctor McIntosh was married first to a Miss Nesbitt, a native of Georgia, who died about a year after marriage, in 1866, leaving one daughter, Lucy, who married Hugh N. Starnes, and died at Birmingham, Alabama, in 1918, her husband surviving her and engaging in the manufacture of iron in that same city. The second wife of Doctor McIntosh bore the maiden name of Mary C. Hill, and she is now living with her son. She was born in Early County, Georgia, in 1854. By his second marriage Doctor McIntosh had the following family: Charlotte, who died in infancy; May, who married D. C. Cole, a capitalist of Marietta, Georgia; John H., who was the third in order of birth; Bayard, who is superintendent of the woolen mills of Marietta, Georgia; Joseph Higbee, who died in infancy; and Richard H., who is a public accountant of Birmingham, Alabama.

After being trained under private tutors in Early County, when he was ten years old, John H. McIntosh was placed in the Marietta Academy, a boys' school. Later he took the high school course at Marietta, and was graduated therefrom in 1895. Mr. McIntosh then studied law for a year in the office of United States Senator A. S. Clay at Marietta, Georgia, following which he entered the University of Georgia at Athens, Georgia, in 1897, and was graduated therefrom in 1899 with the degree of Doctor of Law and as a member of the Greek Letter College Fraternity, Sigma Alpha Epsilon. During his collegiate course he was active in all branches of athletics and held the Southern record for pole vault for years. He was captain of the track team, played right field on the baseball team, was a member of the "varsity" football team for three years, and during his senior year was awarded the position of all Southern full back.

On January 1, 1900, Mr. McIntosh came west to New Mexico, and as he was without the sufficient funds to open a law office he worked for eight months in the copper mine at Silver City. He then took a position as athletic director at the School of Mines at Golden, Colorado, and held it for a year. Going from there to Leadville, Colorado, he became a reporter on the Herald Democrat, of which he was later made city editor, and remained with that newspaper for a year, when he was made coach for the famous football team containing five former All American players, representing the Leadville Athletic Club, and traveled all over the West, playing the best teams. This was conceded to be the best club team in the West. In 1902 Mr. McIntosh worked as assistant city editor on the Denver News for three months, and then in March of that year came to Butte and became "sports" editor of the Intermountain, now the Daily Post, and continuing as such for a year. During this period he became interested in professional athletics and won the middle weight wrestling championship of Montana when he defeated Adams at Dillon, Montana, for the title. During 1903 he went with the Helena Record at Helena, Montana, for nine months, leaving that paper to take a position as "sports" editor on the old Butte Evening News, which had just been established by F. A. Heinze, the copper king, and remained with it until in September, 1904, when he accepted the position of athletic director and professor of English at the Colorado Agricultural College at Fort Collins, Colorado. While he was with that institution he had signal success in his work, and among other honors won by him, his baseball team was twice champion of the state, or during 1905 and 1906. In the fall of 1906 he returned to Butte and became associate editor of the Evening News, and while in that position promoted nearly all of the large athletic contests held in Butte, from 1906 to 1908. In September, 1908, Mr. McIntosh accepted the position of athletic director and instructor in English at the Montana State College at Bozeman, and remained there as such until the spring of 1911, when he became editor of the Republican Courier, a daily newspaper of Bozeman, but left it in 1912 and came back to Butte and became a partner in the Cadillac State Agency. He sold part interest in this in 1913 and became mining and financial editor of the Butte Daily Miner, holding that position until the spring of 1916, when he resigned and became secretary of the Silver Bow Employers Association, and was so successful in handling industrial problems that a number of other communities organized similar organizations for handling these problems following the methods of Mr. McIntosh. In 1917 there was a coalition of all of these units into the Associated Industries of Montana, of which Mr. McIntosh was unanimously chosen for general manager, and still retains that important position. It is part of his duty to represent Montana twice annually at the National Industrial Conference held at New York City. It is the chief aim of Mr. McIntosh to establish and maintain industrial harmony by bringing employers and employes into a better understanding of each other's problems. Mr. McIntosh maintains offices at Nos. 305-6 and 7 Lewisohn Block.

In his political faith Mr. McIntosh is a republican. He belongs to the Episcopal Church. The Silver Bow Club and the Butte Chamber of Commerce also hold his membership. He is still connected with the Montana Cadillac Company as its vice president, and he owns a modern residence at No. 1119 West Park Street.

On October 22, 1902, Mr. McIntosh was united in marriage with Miss Mary Fleming at Columbus, Georgia. She is a daughter of Dr. Malcom and Anna (Meigs) Fleming, the former of whom was a physician and surgeon who died in Virginia. Mrs. Fleming survives and lives at Columbus, Georgia. Mrs. McIntosh was graduated from the San Antonio, Texas, High School. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh are as follows: Mary, who was born in August, 1908; John H., who was born in June, 1910; Bayard, who was born in January, 1912; and Anna, who was born in June, 1918.

Few men are better suited for their work than Mr. McIntosh. Well educated and carefully trained, belonging to the aristocratic class by birth and early association, he can fully appreciate the stand of those whose capital has placed them above the ruck and stress of industrial striving; while his own struggles early in his career and his subsequent close association with young men in the making have given him a practical working knowledge of the problems of the employes and the dire need for their advancement. His training in law enables him to act in accordance with established ordinances and to plead with both sides so convincingly and authoritatively as to bring about an understanding when no one else could do so. A student of men and their impulses, Mr. McIntosh early learned how to govern both and bring out of those with whom he came in contact the best in them, and to develop latent talents in a most remarkable manner. All of his former work has developed his own resources and made of him a leader of men in the greatest of games—life—in which, because of his fairness, his insight into human nature and his sympathy, he has been chosen to act as both director and arbitrator, and through his services not only are better understanding relations established between the two classes, capital and labor, but the public is a participant in the results.

JOHN O. HELSING was connected with the building of some of the pioneer railroads through Montana and the Northwest, and has led an exceedingly active life, much of it on the open range as a stock man. A few years ago he retired from his ranch and is now enjoying the comforts of a good home in Lewistown.

Mr. Helsing was born in Sweden December 31, 1862. He was the youngest in a family of four daughters and two sons, and was a small child when his father died. At the age of nine years he came to the United States with his mother and a sister. They landed at Quebec, thence went to Chicago, and two months later he accompanied his sister to Lake City, Minnesota. For some five or six years he lived in the family of Fred Winters, a farmer in Minnesota, working for his board and clothing and attending school as opportunity offered. His next experience was as a farm hand at Wheatland, Dakota, spending about two years there. He then returned to Minnesota and went to work in the railway shops of the Northern Pacific at Brainerd. That was his first experience in railroading. After about two years in the railway shops at Brainerd he came to Montana, then the terminus of the railway, and did railway construction work. In the fall of the same year he moved to Reed's Point, about forty miles west of where Billings now stands, and subsequently was at Gardiner, or the present site of that town, which had then been laid out along the proposed route of the railroad. He helped construct some log houses on the site. Then with Mr. Plummer, a railway contractor, he came on to White Sulphur Springs, where he went to work for Charles Cook. He spent the summer of 1882 putting up hay, and he also operated the first self-binder brought into the Deep Creek Valley. In the fall of 1882 he came into the Judith Basin with Barr Smith, a well known horse man, and worked on the range with Mr. Smith for about three years. He was then employed by the prominent Judith Basin pioneer, William Berkin, one summer, and about that time he took up a homestead of 160 acres. He rode the range for about three years, and subsequently, with E. S. Smith, bought 160 acres and engaged in stock ranching. They were associated two and a half years, and upon the dissolution of their partnership Mr. Helsing took over the land and continued cattle and horse ranching until 1900, when he sold his ranch property and moved to Lewistown.

Prior to and preparatory to his settling down to the permanent life of the farm and ranch, Mr. Helsing married Miss Olive Lyons, a native of Iowa. Mr. Helsing is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37 of the Masonic Order and in politics is independent.

Soon after his ordination, Father Meade came to the United States and to Montana, and spent his first few weeks in the state at Walkerville, when on November 5th of that same year he arrived at Philipsburg to assume charge of the parish of St. Philip, and here he has since continued. This parish was organized in 1889, and is the first to be established in Granite County. The present church edifice at Philipsburg, was erected in 1892, but the first services were held at Granite. The parish now includes Southern Cross, Deerlodge County, and Father Meade ministers to the needs of 400 Catholics. Since leaving the army he has been helping his brother at Big Timber in the creamery. The sixth is Frank Trower, who runs the homestead farm at Olney, Missouri. J. E. Trower enlisted the day following the declaration of war with Germany and at this writing is still in the navy, being chief water tender. William Trower is a farmer at Corso, Missouri. James A. Weaver, deputy game warden at Lewistown, is a citizen who has played in his time many parts—farmer, cowboy, range rider, deputy sheriff, merchant, and the scope of his experiences in Montana covers a period of thirty years or more.

He was born in Douglas County, Oregon, February 24, 1868, a son of James B. and Sarah Ann (Wright) Weaver. His father, a native of Tennessee, was reared and educated in that state and when a young man moved into Missouri. He was one of the early Californians, making the trip overland by ox team in 1850. After some experience in the gold diggings he went north to Oregon, locating in Douglas County. He was a pioneer hotel man and merchant in that locality, later became a farmer, and finally retired from active business and spent eight or nine years in Montana with his children. He was a democrat and an Odd Fellow. He died in 1906, at the age of seventy-two. His wife was born in Missouri and died in 1882. They were married in Oregon and had eight children, four of whom are still living, James A. being the fourth in age.

The latter was reared in Douglas County, Oregon, attending the public schools there and spent much of his early life with his uncle, John W. Weaver. When only eight years old he rode one horse and led the other, dragging a harrow over the plowed fields. This farm experience continued for about six years. He then went to Eastern Oregon, became a cowboy in 1887, and rode the range in Wyoming, and in July, 1888, arrived in Fergus County, Montana. He was employed in breaking horses and punching cows and in 1891 received his first initiation into public service when appointed deputy sheriff of Fergus County. Later he was in the saloon and livery business, and was the first city marshal of Lewistown under Mayor J. P. Barnes. For a number of years Mr. Weaver has had ranch interests in the Stanford and Denton country. He was appointed deputy game warden in 1915.

Mr. Weaver is affiliated with Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and has been a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Elks since its organization. Politically he is identified with the democratic party.

On February 24, 1902, his birthday, he married Bertha K. Hosch. She was born in Iowa. Two children were born to their marriage: James Philip, who died at the age of five years, and John Hosch.

Her children were: William T., a railway conductor for the Northwestern railway, living in Worthington, Minnesota; James P. in the livery business at Mankato; Philip E., chef at the St. Regis Hotel, Spokane, Washington; and Martin F. and John H., twins, the latter a roadmaster for the Northern Pacific Railway at Moscow, Idaho; Charles E., powder mixer for the Dupont Powder Company at Ramsey, Montana.

THEODORE HARDING THOMAS has a veteran's experience and record as a miner in the western section of the state. He has been mining in what is now Mineral County for thirty years or more, and while he has met vicissitudes and has had the usual ups and downs of the mining game, his work and profits on the whole have been more than moderately successful.

Mr. Thomas, who enjoys a high place of esteem in Mineral County and is the present county assessor, was born at Canning, in Nova Scotia, Canada, December 6, 1852. His grandfather, Henry Thomas, was born in Wales, in 1779, and in 1829 crossed the ocean and settled at New Canaan, Nova Scotia, where he spent the rest of his life as a practical farmer. He died in 1866. His son, David R. Thomas, was born in Wales in 1826, and was three years of age when the family came to this country. He became a farmer at Canning and in 1861 moved to Wolfville, Nova Scotia, and from there in 1890, having retired, moved to Fitchburg, Massachusetts, where he died in 1910. He was a conservative in Canadian politics and a member of the Baptist Church. His wife was Mary Isabelle Fitch, who was born at New Canaan, Nova Scotia, in 1827 and died at Wolfville in 1869. Jessie, the oldest of their children, died at Fitchburg, Massachusetts, in 1919, being then the widow of Isaac Murray, a merchant in Nova Scotia. Maggie, who died in New York City in 1912, was the wife of Arthur Cunningham, who spent all his active career as a clerk in the postoffice department at Halifax, Nova Scotia, being finally pensioned for several years before his death.

Theodore Harding Thomas, now the only one of the children living, was educated in the public schools of Wolfville, including the high school, and in 1873 received his A. B. degree from Acadia College at Wolfville. At that time his ambition was to become a physician, and he studied medicine at Wolfville and at Port Hawkesbury, Cape Breton. While reading medicine he taught school. Eventually he abandoned his ideas as to a medical career, but continued teaching in Nova Scotia until the spring of 1880.

He was first attracted to the mining district of the West during the Leadville stampede in Colorado. He also spent a time in Denver and at Colorado Springs for two years was a bookkeeper and a log scaler for the Colorado Pinery Trust Company. In 1883 he went to southwestern Colorado in the San Juan district, where he prospected in mines for two years.

Mr. Thomas came to Superior, Montana, in 1885, and his experience covers most of the history of that noted mining section. He was a prospector and placer miner and also did quartz mining for gold, silver and lead. He now owns stock in several successful mines. He is secretary and treasurer of the Golden Sunset Mining Company, the officers of which corporation are in Iron Mountain opposite the Northern Pacific depot. The company operates gold and silver mines on Cedar Creek.

Mr. Thomas was honored by his fellow citizens with the office of county assessor in November, 1918, and began his official term of two years in the following January. He is a democrat in politics and is a former member of the Improved Order of Red Men. In 1892, at Missoula, he married Miss Maggie Briggs, a native of New York state.

HERMAN OTTEN. Holding distinction as one of the earliest cattle men of Montana and as one of the first wheat-growers of Fergus County, Herman Otten, a retired citizen of Lewistown, has led a career that has included experience of an interesting character, and in his business activities has invaded a number of fields of endeavor, in all of which he has been successful.

Herman Otten

Mr. Otten was born at Radereisted Amt der Sted, Germany, February 22, 1838, and received his education in the public schools of his native place. Feeling that the United States offered better opportunities for the gaining of success, at the age of eighteen years he left home and journeyed to New York on a sailing vessel. In New York City he was variously employed for three years, after which, in 1859, he traveled to San Francisco by steamer, around Cape Horn, and for three years was employed on a farm near that city. Later he embarked in the saloon business at San Francisco, but disposed of his interests therein to go to Virginia, Nevada, where he worked for a time in the silver mines. Subsequently, in search of more remunerative employment, he came overland to German Gulch, Montana, by ox-team, but after a short stay joined George Fitchin and John Saylor in a trip to Texas, where the trio bought 300 head of cattle and drove them overland to Big Hole, Montana. Mr. Otten applied himself uninterruptedly to the cattle business until 1876, when he made a trip to the old country to visit his parents, but in 1877 returned to the United States, and June 17 of that year, at New York City, was united in marriage with Elise Ranges, who had been born in Brenkum, Germany, June 3, 1854, and had recently come to the United States. Shortly following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Otten came to Big Hole, Montana, where for some years they resided on the range, but later went to Silver Bow. In 1887 Mr. Otten purchased a ranch at Cottonwood Creek, and in that year first came to Lewistown. Two years later he sold his cattle and became one of the organizers of the Judith Basin Bank at Lewistown, of which he became president. He continued to hold that position when the reorganization was effected that changed this institution to the First National Bank of Lewistown, and he remained in the chief executive capacity until his resignation, when he was succeeded by David Hilger, although he still retains a large share of stock in the institution. Mr. Otten has been practically retired from business affairs since 1909, although he has large holdings and important interests. While at Cottonwood he was the proprietor of a successful general store, and in whatever community he has resided he has had several irons in the fire in order to engage his energies and abilities to the utmost. That his foresight is great is noted in the fact that he was one of the first to realize the suitability of Montana as a cattle country and that he also was one of the first to recognize the possibilities in wheat-growing in Fergus County. His business reputation is of the highest, and in civic and social circles he has a number of important connections.

Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Otten, namely: Anna O., the wife of W. M. Blackford, a prominent attorney of Lewistown, with five children; Herman C., of Glengarry, Montana, who married Florence McMillen, and has two sons; Elise, who died December 9, 1918, as the wife of George W. Tubb, leaving three children; Henry J., who married Jennie Anderson; and Ella M., who resides with her parents.

Charles Halter, present superintendent of the county farm of Carbon County, was the pioneer restaurant man of Red Lodge, and became widely known through his connection with that business.

He was born at Manistee, Michigan, January 14, 1870. His father, Anthony Halter, was born in Germany in 1834 and when a small boy his parents came to the United States and settled in Wisconsin, where the grandfather died. The home in which he was reared was six miles from Milwaukee. After his marriage he moved to Manistee, Michigan, when that was a lumber camp in the midst of the primeval woods. He followed his trade as a millwright for many years and died at Manistee in 1899. He was a democrat and a Catholic. Anthony Halter married Mary Stemper, who was born in Wisconsin in 1839 and died at Manistee in 1876. Their children were: Christine, wife of Alexander Smith, a marine engineer on the Great Lakes living at Manistee; John who was an engineer with the Manistee and Northeastern Railroad and died at Manistee in 1915; Annie, living in Manistee, widow of William Douglas, who owns half of the Manistee & Northeastern Railroad; George, a retired engineer of the Manistee & Northeastern, living at Manistee; Louis who is a messenger for the United States Express Company and lives in Texas; Charles; Michael, who was a blacksmith and died at Manistee at the age of twenty-seven; and Frank, who is a farmer in Idaho.

Charles Halter left school work at Manistee at the age of fifteen and from that time forward has made his own way in the world. He came to Montana in 1897, and soon afterward engaged in the restaurant business at Red Lodge. He was about the first to furnish that service to the community and continued active therein until 1915, when he sold out. The next two years he managed a pool hall in the Pollard Hotel at Red Lodge, and in 1917 was appointed to his present responsibilities as superintendent of the county farm. The county farm is located a mile south of Red Lodge and is a well equipped place, including a fine brick house for the inmates, barns and other outbuildings. There are twenty-one acres of land. Carbon County has only a limited need for this institution, since there are few who have to avail themselves of its facilities. About the highest number who have been inmates of the home is ten, and at the present writing there are only seven.

Mr. Halter is independent in politics, is a Catholic and is a third degree knight of Manistee Council of Knights of Columbus. He owns a dwelling on North Platte Avenue.

He married at Sheridan, Wyoming, in 1905, Miss Mary Johnson, a daughter of Peter and Mary Johnson, both now deceased. Her father was a moulder by trade and worked at Manistee, Michigan, for thirty-five years.

George Robert Lyons. The old New England State of Massachusetts has contributed its share of families which have left their comfortable homes in the East to assist in the civilization and settlement of the newer West, and among those now living in Montana who claim the Bay State as the place of their birth is George Robert Lyons, an extensive sheep ranchman of the Twodot community in Meagher County. However, although an easterner by birth, Mr. Lyons is essentially and distinctively a man of the West, for his education and training have been secured in Montana, and here he has spent his career and won his success.

Mr. Lyons was born at South Lee, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, June 12, 1885, a son of George and Mary (Orr) Lyons. His father, a native of Ireland, came to the United States as a young man, and subsequently made his way overland across the prairies to Montana, where he sought his fortune in the mines at Diamond City. Later he was one of the pioneers of the freighting industry from Salt Lake City to Helena, and then located in the Musselshell Valley, where he was an early and prominent cattle man. His closing days were passed on his ranch in that locality, and there his death occurred in 1912, when he was seventy-two years of age. He was a republican in his political views, but never cared for nor sought public office. Mrs. Lyons, who was born at South Lee, Massachusetts, survives her husband and resides at Twodot. They were the parents of two children: George Robert; and Helen May, the widow of Edward Reaussen, who died in December, 1917, leaving a son, Edward. Mrs. Reaussen resides at Twodot with her mother.

George Robert Lyons was educated in the public schools of Montana, and for additional training was sent to the military academy at Faribault, Minnesota, known as the Chaddock Military Academy. His boyhood days were passed amid the surroundings of the ranch, and he came to immediately know and appreciate horses and cattle, so that it was not surprising that he adopted ranching for his choice of vocations when called upon to determine his career. When he took over the business he conducted it along the same progressive lines as had his father, and subsequently added a band of sheep to the stock on the place. He gradually built up the business to its present proportions through good management and a knowledge of the needs of such an enterprise, and at times has had as many as from 600 to 1,500 head of cattle and from 5,000 to 6,000 head of sheep. This property, the C. L. Ranch, is widely known, as is its proprietor, who bears an excellent reputation as cattleman, rancher and substantial business man of integrity. Mr. Lyons is a member of Castle Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Twodot, and is popular with its members. He is a republican in his political affiliation, and while he has not sought the honors of public life has been prominent in seeking to support the movements which have promised the progress and advancement of the community in which he has made his home for so many years.

Mr. Lyons was married October 16, 1912, to Miss Minnie May Fresser, who was born at Helena, Montana, daughter of John H. Freeser, one of the pioneer miners and stockmen of Montana, now making his home at Twodot. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lyons, of whom four are living: George Robert, Jr., Nancy Louise, Doris Marie and John Henry.

JOHN C. DOCTER, M. D. It is scarcely possible, in these modern days, for a man to be a successful physician without also being a man of learning and of solid, scientific acquirements. Often the youth who feels the inspiration that ultimately leads him into the medical profession, finds his progress one of difficulty from lack of encouragement, opportunity or capital, and when all these drawbacks are overcome, through personal effort, battles have been won that make firm the foundations of character. It is therefore easy to comprehend why the physician is usually a dominating figure in his community. Having conquered so many obstacles in his own career, he is able to overcome those which come up in civic affairs, and his fellow citizens naturally turn to him for advice and support aside from their need of his skill as a professional man. One of these forces for civic betterment and increased healthful conditions at Philipsburg is Dr. John C. Docter, who has but recently returned from his military service during the great war.

John C. Docter was born at Mayville, Wisconsin, April 6, 1891, a son of C. W. Docter, and grandson of John Christian Docter. The great-grandfather of Dr. John C. Docter, a native of Germany, founded the Docter family in the United States. John Christian Docter was born in 1830, and died at Kenosha, Wisconsin, in 1878. After serving in the Union army during the war between the North and South, he located at Kenosha, Wisconsin, where he worked at his trade of a carpenter and served on the city police force. His wife bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Stantz, and she survives him and lives at Kenosha.

C. W. Docter was born at Kenosha, Wisconsin, in 1869, where he lived until after his marriage, when he located at Mayville that state. Early in life he was a photographer, but later went into the mercantile field, and is now one of the leading merchants and publishers of Mayville, owning a large novelty store and serving as president of the Mayville News Company. He also owns one of the popular moving picture theaters of the place and is interested in other business enterprises. Mr. Docter is an independent democrat, and has served as treasurer of Mayville and is now a director of its school board. He married Miss Anna Moeller, born at Kenosha, Wisconsin, in 1871, and their children are as follows: John C., whose name heads this review; Addie, who is unmarried, resides with her parents; Rudolph, who is a practicing dental surgeon of Mayville, was graduated from the Marquette University at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery; Helen, who is a graduate of the Mayville High School, is living at home and Viola, who is also a graduate of the Mayville High School, is at home.

John C. Docter attended the public schools of Mayville, and was graduated from its high school in 1909, following which for a year he was in his father's store. He then entered the Marquette University at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, from which he was graduated in 1914 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. At the same time he took a course in a night school and secured the degree of Bachelor of Science. He is a member of the Greek Letter fraternity Phi Beta Pi.

In 1914 he became intern at the Northern Pacific Hospital, at Missoula, Montana, where he remained until the close of 1915, and then went to Drummond, Montana, and was engaged there in an active practice until January, 1918, when he came to Philipsburg. During 1917 he took a special course in surgery at the Northern Pacific Hospital. On October 19, 1918, he received a commission of first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, and was sent to Fort Riley, Kansas, and had not the signing of the Armistice occurred when it did, he would without doubt have been sent overseas. He was mustered out of the service at Fort Riley, in December, 1918. Returning to Philipsburg, he resumed his general medical and surgical practice which his military service had interrupted, and maintains offices in the Courtney Block. He is now health officer of Granite County, and one of the most progressive young men in his profession in this section. Independent in politics he gives his support to those measures he deems best for the people, irrespective of party lines. He is a member of Ruby Lodge No. 36, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Drummond, Montana; Hope Chapter No. 10, Royal Arch Masons of Philipsburg; Missoula Lodge, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; and to the Philipsburg Chamber of Commerce.

On March 17, 1916, John C. Docter was married to Miss Evaro Avery, at Missoula, Montana. She is a daughter of Amos and Caroline (Brunnell) Avery, the former of whom is deceased, but during life was the pioneer telegrapher of Missoula, and his widow, who survives him, is acting as chief telegrapher at Missoula and is the oldest in point of service in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Mrs. Docter attended the Montana University at Missoula and Bruno Hall at Spokane, Washington. Doctor and Mrs. Docter have two sons, John Christian, who was born March 13, 1917, and Charles William, born January 16, 1920.

P. H. McCarthy, M. D. The affection in which the physician is held by those to whom he has ministered is of a character that excites admiration and inspires respect. The medical man occupies a position that is unique for in his hands lie the lives of those entrusted to his care and upon his knowledge, skill and poise in times of danger depends the future of the community. To the credit of the profession be it said that very few of the men who devote their lives to the healing art fail to live up to the highest standards of fine manhood and citizenship. They put self second, and give lavishly of their time and professional services often without thought as to recompense. They not only care for the ailing, but through their foresight and ability to provide for contingencies, preserve the public health and enforce sanitary regulations which oftentimes revolutionize the general soundness of the people, and establish a salubrity in their communities not dreamed of until they came into the locality with their scientific knowledge. One of the men who belongs to this distinguished class is Dr. P. H. McCarthy, physician and surgeon of Butte.

Doctor McCarthy was born at Hancock, Houghton County, Michigan, on October 15, 1875, a son of James McCarthy, born in Ireland about 1835. The paternal grandfather came to the United States from Ireland when his son James was but a lad, and located in New York City, where James McCarthy received his educational training.

When he was still a young man, James McCarthy came as far west as Hancock, Michigan, where he was married, and he became manager of the Quincy Mine. It was while discharging the duties of this position that he lost his life in 1880, when there was an accident at the mine. He was a veteran of the war between the states. The Roman Catholic Church had in him a devout member. His wife bore the maiden name of Mary Driscoll, and she survives him, making her home at Billings, Montana, her second husband being a ranchman of that locality. James McCarthy and his wife had the following children: Mary, who married John Leary, now deceased, a pioneer of Butte, which city he served as a fireman, lives at Los Angeles, California; Gene, who was a mining engineer, died in Colorado; Dr. P. H., whose name heads this review; and James, who was graduated from the Creighton Medical College of Omaha, Nebraska, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, resides at Goldfield, Nevada. After the death of Mr. McCarthy, Mrs. McCarthy was married to Timothy Hanley, and their children are as follows: Jerry, who is a ranchman, lives at Billings, Montana; William, who is a ranchman of Nebraska; Abbie, who lives with her parents; Robert, who is a physician and surgeon of Billings, Montana, was graduated from the Creighton Medical College of Omaha, Nebraska, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine; and Jennie, who is a teacher in the public schools of Butte, Montana.

Doctor McCarthy attended the public schools of O'Neil, Nebraska, and was graduated from its high school course. For a time he followed mining in Colorado, coming to Butte from that state in 1892, and was employed by the Anaconda Copper Mining Company until 1898, when he matriculated in the Creighton Medical College and after completing the regulation four years' course was graduated in 1902 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Meanwhile, during the summer terms, he attended the Fremont Normal School of Fremont, Nebraska, and for two seasons was professor of chemistry and physiology in that institution. During 1903 Doctor McCarthy was interne in the Presbyterian Hospital at Omaha, Nebraska, and then came direct to Butte and has since been engaged in a general practice, specializing to a certain extent in surgery. In the years following his graduation Doctor McCarthy has taken many post graduate courses, for he is a close student and keeps himself abreast of modern thought in his profession. Not only has he studied at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago, but also in medical institutions of London and Paris, Europe, and of Baltimore, Maryland, New York City, New York, Cincinnati, Ohio, St. Louis, Missouri, and Rochester, Minnesota, specializing on surgery. He has not missed taking a course each year since securing his degree, and his efforts are rewarded by the reputation he has been able to establish as a surgeon, which extends not only over Montana but adjoining states. For some time he has been connected as surgeon with Saint James Hospital of Butte. He is a member of the Silver Bow Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Butte Country Club, Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a fourth degree knight, Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order Eagles. His offices are at Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 Owsley Block, and his residence is at No. 823 West Park Street. Doctor McCarthy is a very heavy holder of real estate in different parts of Montana, all of his interests being centered in this state. Politically a democrat, he was elected from Silver Bow County as a delegate to the national convention of his party held at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1916. Like his father he is a Roman Catholic.

In addition to his extensive practice Doctor McCarthy is also a director in a number of business enterprises of Butte, and is in every way a prominent citizen who has the welfare of this region at heart, and is exceedingly generous in his support of its interests.

Doctor McCarthy was married at Omaha, Nebraska, in 1905 to Miss Julia Stafford, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Stafford. Michael Stafford was a pioneer of the Missouri Valley and served as superintendent of construction of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad through that part of the West. He is now deceased, but his widow survives him and resides at Omaha, Nebraska. Mrs. McCarthy was graduated from a collegiate course with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Doctor and Mrs. McCarthy have a daughter, Mary, who was born on November 7, 1910.

When this country entered the great war, Doctor McCarthy tried to enlist, but was turned down on account of his physical condition. After a second examination he received his commission as captain on May 15, 1918, and was sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison in Indiana as captain of the development battalion, and was later made president of the board of demobilization. On December 18, 1918, he was mustered out of the service and, returning to Butte, resumed his practice.

Doctor McCarthy is a man who is always showing kindness both to individuals and institutions, and is interested in all that pertains to modern progress in the highest sense of the word. He is inspired by high ideals and gifted beyond the ordinary in his professional attainments, and it is probable that his health has been impaired by the absorbing strain of his duties.

ERICK A. ERICKSON is a formally ordained minister of the Lutheran Church and first came to Montana in his capacity as a minister. He organized the church of his denomination at Big Timber, but about ten years ago accepted a call from his ministerial duties to resume his former profession as a teacher, and has since been superintendent of the city schools. He is a skillful teacher, an educator of broad mind and long experience, and has made the Big Timber school system one of the best in the state.

Mr. Erickson, though born in Norway, May 28, 1873, is an American by training and has lived in this country since early infancy. His father, Arne Erickson, was born in 1834 in Norway, and married in that country Johanna Larson. She was born in 1835. They were farmers in Norway and the father served in the regular Norwegian army. In 1875, when Erick was two years old, the family came to the United States and settled at Mona in Northern Iowa, where Arne Erickson was a pioneer farmer. In 1879 he pioneered to Dakota Territory, locating on a farm in what is now Cass County, North Dakota. From there he moved to Grand Forks and homesteaded 160 acres and a timber claim of 160 acres at Reynolds. He still lives on his homestead there, though now retired from the responsibilities of the farm of 320 acres which he owns. He has been a republican voter many years and is a loyal member of the Lutheran Church. His wife died at Reynolds, November 6, 1918. Most of their family of children are farmers or farmers' wives. Ele is the wife of B. Ellison, a farmer at Reynolds. Martin is one of the prominent business men of Reynolds, a farmer, banker, former member of the Legislature and former county commissioner. Lena is the wife of E. K. Grove, and they live on the old homestead at Reynolds. Annie lives at Reynolds, widow of S. O. Myhre, and she owns the farm on which she lives. Amund was a farmer at Reynolds and died in 1917. Erick A. is the sixth in age. Ole was also a farmer and died at Reynolds in 1911. Jennie is the wife of E. G. Brant, a rancher at Conrad, Montana, and Charles, the youngest of the family, is also on a ranch at Conrad.

Erick A. Erickson acquired his early education in the public schools at Grand Forks, graduating from high school in 1888. He received a Normal diploma in 1890 from the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, and for several years taught in Grand Forks County. In 1896 he entered Augsburg Seminary and College at Minneapolis, where he completed the regular college course and received the A. B. degree in 1898, and then continued in the theological school and was graduated Bachelor of Theology in 1901.

As a minister of the Lutheran Church Mr. Erickson spent four years at Bellingham, Washington, after which he was professor of pedagogy and psychology in the Normal School at Madison, Minnesota. In 1905 he came to Billings as a pastor of the Lutheran Church and a few months later was called upon to organize a Lutheran Church at Big Timber. When the church was constituted he remained as pastor and in that capacity was identified with the life of this community until 1909.

Mr. Erickson became superintendent of city schools in the fall of 1909. In the spring of 1919, just ten years later, his contract was renewed for another three year period. He has the supervision of a staff of nine teachers, and the enrollment in the Big Timber schools is 285 students. In 1909 he was also appointed a member of the County Educational Examining Board, and has filled that office continuously. He is a member of the Montana State Teachers' Association, and is widely known over the state through his work as an instructor in the Teachers' State Training School at Bozeman during the summers. He is a gifted penman, and penmanship is usually one of the subjects assigned him in the summer normals.

Mr. Erickson lives in a modern home which he owns on McLeod Street. He is a republican, is affiliated with Big Timber Lodge No. 25 Knights of Pythias and is a member of the Sons of Norway.

In 1902, at Bellingham, Washington, he married Miss Mary Mahlun, daughter of S. J. and Ingaborg (Austing) Mahlun. Her parents live at Reynolds, North Dakota, where her father is a retired farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Erickson have had five children: Alvin, born March 14, 1905; Hilma Johanna, born January 11, 1907; Leonard Melius, born December 24, 1908; Elmer Martin, born November 26, 1910; and Arnold, born May 24, 1916.

JOHN H. STEPHENS, the present sheriff of Fergus County, is a native of old Fort Logan, represents pioneer Montana stock, and his own career has been one of varied eventfulness, experience and service.

He was born May 9, 1878, a son of Albert J. and Fannie E. (Hillis) Stephens. His father, who was born in Pennsylvania, left home at the age of fourteen and spent all the rest of his life in the Far West. His first experience was in the mining district of Colorado around Pike's Peak. Later he went to California and arrived in Montana in the historic year 1863, first locating at Bannock City as a gold prospector. From there he went to Diamond City, was a miner for some time, and then engaged in the butcher business and located a ranch in the Smith River Valley, two miles from Fort Logan in Meagher County. In 1874, at Diamond City, he married Fannie E. Hillis, who was born in Indiana. They moved to a ranch in that year and Albert Stephens was engaged in the cattle business for many years, until 1903. He then sold his ranch and cattle and moved to Cannon Ranch near White Sulphur Springs, where he died in February, 1917, at the age of seventy-nine. His widow is still living on the old ranch at White Sulphur Springs, and is now seventy-one years of age. Albert Stephens during the '80s served as county commissioner of Meagher County. He was one of the first members of the Masonic Lodge at Diamond City and in politics was a democrat.

John H. Stephens was the second of eight children, six of whom are still living, four sons and two daughters. He acquired his early education in the grade schools of Lewistown, and attended business colleges at Davenport, Iowa, Kalamazoo, Michigan, and Helena, Montana. In 1892 he located in Fergus County and was a stockman until 1900. He then farmed for two years and in 1902 entered the Osteopathic College at Kirksville, Missouri, taking the full course and practicing for two years at Dillon and White Sulphur Springs. In 1906 he returned to Fergus County and located a homestead, where he engaged in farming and stock raising near Roy until 1913. He then remained in Roy engaged in the livery and grain business, and in

J. H. Stephens.

November, 1916, the votes of a majority of the people of Fergus County called him to the office of sheriff. He was re-elected in 1918, and has given a thoroughly efficient administration of that important post. Mr. Stephens is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Free and Accepted Masons, and Judith Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically he is a republican.

On March 20, 1900, he married Lillian E. Cook. She was born in Vermont, a daughter of George W. and Emily H. (Orvis) Cook, a well known family of Lewistown. Mr. and Mrs. Stephens have eight children, named Edith L., George H., Joseph C., Ruth, John H., Jr., Robert L., Mary C. and Lucile.

Reuben E. Coy, manager of the Mountain State Telephone and Telegraph Company, with headquarters at Laurel, is one of the experienced young business men of Yellowstone County, and his abilities are held in high esteem not only by the officials of his company, but also by his fellow citizens. He was born at Independence, Wisconsin, March 23, 1884, a son of E. S. Coy and grandson of Abraham Coy, a pioneer farmer of Wisconsin who homesteaded there, and died at Independence, that state, in 1907.

E. S. Coy was born in Minnesota in 1856, but was reared in and about Independence, Wisconsin. For a number of years he was engaged in a mercantile business at Independence, and also engaged in farming, but he is now a rural free delivery carrier out of Independence. Politically he is a republican. For fifteen years he served Independence as constable, and was city marshal for about fifteen years, always taking a very prominent part in civic affairs. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership and has his loyal support. He was married at Independence, Wisconsin, to Barbara Cook, born in Wisconsin in 1864, and their children are as follows: George A., who resides at Laurel, Montana, is night train desk man at the yard offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; and Reuben E., whose name heads this review.

Reuben E. Coy attended the public schools of Independence, Wisconsin, until he was fifteen years old, when he was graduated in the high school work. In 1900 he entered the employ of the telephone and telegraph company at Independence, but at the expiration of two years left to become telegraph lineman for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, working over the entire system until 1909, being during that period one of the two men thus employed. His first trip to Montana was made in 1902, and during the time he was working as lineman he was frequently sent into the state, and was so pleased with conditions here that he located at Laurel in April, 1909, establishing himself in a clothing business, but closed it out in the fall of 1910 to enter the employ of the Mountain State Telephone and Telegraph Company as exchange manager of the Laurel Exchange, comprising Laurel, Bridger, Joliet, Fromberg and Columbus, Montana. Mr. Coy has eighteen employes under his supervision, and the exchange at Laurel is located on Main Street. Politically Mr. Coy is a republican and served on the school board for five years. He affiliates with the Congregational Church. Fraternally he belongs to Corinthian Lodge No. 72, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Laurel; and Arcadia Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of Arcadia, Wisconsin. A booster for Laurel, he is an active member of the Commercial Club. Mr. Coy owns a comfortable modern residence on Fifth Avenue, corner of Third Street.

In September, 1909, Mr. Coy was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Schaffner at Independence, Wisconsin. She is a daugther of J. J. Schaffner, a retired farmer. Mrs. Coy is a graduate of the Independence High School and attended the State Normal School at Stevens Point, Wisconsin. There are no children. Mr. Coy is a splendid type of alert young western business man, aggressive, competent and effective, interested in his community and anxious to give it the best of service. It is such men as Mr. Coy that build up the newer portions of the country and set an example in civic usefulness the older localities would do well to follow.

Mrs. Mary Collier Johnson. The Anaconda Business College is one of the most reliable institutions of its kind in this part of the West, and its courses are designed to give the students a practical knowledge of the fundamentals of commercial life so as to prepare them to step from the schoolroom into good paying positions. The institution is the outgrowth of the ideas and efforts of its owner, Mrs. Mary Collier Johnson, an educator of wide and varied experience and a woman of unusual business capacity.

Mrs. Johnson was born at Houghton, Michigan, and is a daughter of Daniel Sullivan, and granddaughter of Timothy S. Sullivan, born in County Cork, Ireland, who came to the United States and after spending some time at Boston, Massachusetts, became a pioneer of the mining regions of northern Michigan, being one of the first to operate the Isle Royal mine of the Northern Peninsula of Michigan. His death occurred at Houghton, Michigan.

Daniel Sullivan was born at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1831, and he died at Tombstone, Arizona, in 1915. After his marriage which took place at Houghton, Michigan, where he had been reared, Daniel Sullivan was one of the pioneer prospectors of Pioche, Nevada, and then in the early '70s went to Tintic, Utah, and on into the Black Hills of the Dakotas in 1876. Still later he prospected at Georgetown and Leadville, Colorado, and was one of the very first to reach Tombstone, Arizona, which was established in 1879, and there he spent the rest of his life. Mr. Sullivan prospected for gold, silver and copper and made a fortune, but like so many of the prospectors re-invested in other mining propositions. Politically he was a republican. His wife Mary was born at Swansea, Wales, in 1849, and died at Tintic, Utah, in 1874. Their children were as follows: Katherine, who married P. F. Clifford, a merchant of Butte, Montana; Mary, who married R. R. Johnson, lives at No. 23 Main Street, Anaconda, he being clerk for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Margaret, who married W. E. Carpenter, superintendent of a mine in Humboldt, Arizona, and D. S. who lives at Tonopah, Nevada, where he also has mining interests.

Mrs. Johnson attended the public schools of Michigan and Arizona, and then became a student of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, taking a three years' course. Following that she attended the Detroit Business College of Detroit, Michigan. For the subsequent eighteen years she was engaged as a teacher in the public schools, for sixteen years of that time being connected with the Lake Linden, Michigan, High School as assistant principal. In 1901 her attention was turned to the West, and she came to Montana, spending her first two years in the state as an instructor of the public schools of Butte. A woman of broad vision with great faith in Anaconda, she decided to give practical expression to it by establishing a business college, and in 1904 founded the Anaconda Business College at No. 23 Main Street, where the entire second floor is occupied. Pupils come to this college from the city and surrounding district, and her methods and thoroughness are commended by all who employ her graduates. She is very active as a member of the Anaconda Woman's Club, and was elected the first Republican County Central Committee woman of Deer Lodge County, which office she now holds.

R. R. Johnson came to Montana in 1888, and after a year spent at Butte, became associated with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company and has been a resident of Anaconda ever since. A democrat of influence he was elected on his party ticket as a representative to the Thirteenth General Assembly of Montana from Deerlodge County. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have no children.

JOHN B. COPPO. Strength of purpose, intelligently directed, generally brings about a gratifying material advancement. The man who, discovering the calling for which he is best fitted, forges ahead, undeterred by obstacles, undismayed by the chances and changes of life, is the one who reaches his ultimate goal. Such a man through his very prosperity proves his worth, for it is impossible for anyone to reach any height of good fortune if he shirks duty, or seeks to lay upon other shoulders the responsibilities his own should bear. Great centers of industry develop men big of heart and brain, for competition acts as a stimulus and brings out the best in a man. John B. Coppo, member of the co-partnership operated under the name of the Butte Plumbing Company, is a man who honors Butte by his residence in the city, and is honored by it in the success to which he has attained.

John B. Coppo was born at Calumet, Houghton County, Michigan, on September 23, 1879, a son of John A. Coppo. The birth of John A. Coppo took place in 1845, at Ponte Canavesse, Piamont, Torino, Italy, and his death occurred at Butte, Montana, on April 20, 1919. Reared in his native place, he early developed a desire to see new places, and even as a boy he traveled through Switzerland, France and Germany, working as an apprentice to the tinsmithing trade, and later becoming a journeyman tinsmith. This gave him a variety of experiences, for, according to the custom of the times and country, he and his employers walked from place to place, crossing the Alps on foot by way of Mount Saint Bernard.

Having tasted of the pleasures of adventure, it was but natural that he should take a further chance, and in 1872, John A. Coppo came to the United States and located at Calumet, Michigan, and there followed mining for two years. Leaving Michigan, he went into the Black Hills during the rush to them after the discovery of gold, and was there from 1878 to 1879, but then returned to Calumet, and for the next ten years was engaged in its mines. He then came to Montana and continued to work as a miner, being in the employ of the Butte & Boston Company, under Captain Hoatson as superintendent and Charles Palmer as general manager, and it was when he was so employed that his death occurred. Upon locating in this country Mr. Coppo declared his intention of becoming a citizen, and after due process of law received his papers, and thereafter lived according to the rules and regulations of his adopted country and gave an intelligent support to the candidates of the republican party. The Roman Catholic Church had in him an earnest and faithful member.

In 1874 he was married at Calumet to Madaline Rigano, who was born in 1852, and she survives him and makes her home at Butte. Their children were as follows: Lena, who is the wife of John Lamuth, lives on their ranch in Brown's Gulch, Silver Bow County, Montana, and John B., whose name heads this review.

John B. Coppo attended the public schools of Calumet and Butte, remaining in high school through the sophomore year. He then entered the Butte Business College and after taking the regular course was graduated therefrom in 1897. When only fifteen years old he began working as office boy for J. R. Reed, and then was with the World Messenger Company, but it was not until December 15, 1895, that he entered upon his real career, when on that date he began his apprenticeship to the plumbing trade with the Eschle Plumbing & Heating Company, with which he remained for nine years, becoming a journeyman plumber after six years of apprenticeship. Desiring to see a little of the country, Mr. Coppo worked at Boise City, Idaho, and Caldwell, Idaho, and then, in 1904, embarked in business in that city, but sold it in 1906 and returned to Butte, where until May, 1911, he was engaged in working at his trade. He then formed a co-partnership with William De Workin, under the name of the Butte Plumbing Company, and this association is still maintained. The establishment is located at No. 205 South Main Street, and the firm carry on a general heating and plumbing contracting business. Among many other important contracts they have carried out may be mentioned those of the Emmerson and Washington schools, and the Knights of Columbus and Young Men's Chirstian Association buildings, in which the plumbing and heating installation stand as monuments to their skill and fidelity in living up to the spirit as well as letter of their obligations.

The political convictions of Mr. Coppo make him a democrat. In his younger days and up to the year of 1900 he devoted his time and efforts to forwarding the great American sport, "base ball," being manager of Butte's best team in 1898, but in 1899 and 1900 worked as umpire in the Butte City League. As a lover of sport and feeling that his base ball days have gone, he now devotes his time in fishing in summer and plays the good old Scotch game of curling during the winter months. Born and reared in the Roman Catholic Church, he continues a member of it through sincere conviction. He belongs to Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a third degree knight, and also a Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he is exalted ruler. Mr. Coppo owns his modern residence at No. 401 South Excelsior Avenue, and he and his partner own the building in which their business is located.

On June 19, 1905, Mr. Coppo was married at Pocatello, Idaho, to Miss Elizabeth Ray, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Ray. Mr. Ray was one of the pioneer miners of Virginia City, Nevada, from whence he later came to Butte, and there he died, but Mrs. Ray survives him and is living at Butte. Mrs. Coppo died on December 5, 1913, without issue. On August 24, 1915, Mr. Coppo was married to Mrs. Blanche (Bagley) Sullivan, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bagley of Butte, where Mr. Bagley is engaged in mining. Mr. and Mrs. Coppo have a daughter, Mary Montana, who was born on April 5, 1917. By her former marriage Mrs. Coppo had three children, namely: Gertrude Ann, who was born in 1904, is attending the Butte Business College, and Glenn Joseph, who was born in 1906, and Blanche, who was born in 1908, are both attending the McKinley High School. Mr.

Ed. Fabian,

Coppo enjoys the complete and absolute confidence of his business associates. Integrity has been the watchword of his whole career and is the fundamental attribute of his character. He is honest with himself and with all men, and sincere in word and deed.

JOHN B. RITCH. The career of John B. Ritch in Fergus County has extended over a period of thirty-five years, during which time he has been a prospector, miner, range-rider, cattleman, public official and repository of big business interests. At present he is one of the prominent and influential business men of Lewistown, with extensive connections in commercial and financial circles.

Mr. Ritch was born December 31, 1868, in North Carolina. He was but fifteen years of age when he left the parental roof and made his way to the State of Texas, where he secured employment on a cattle ranch and subsequently rode the open range in the Lone Star State. His advent in Montana occurred in 1885, in which year he entered the Judith Basin of Fergus (then Meagher) County in the role of a range rider, later engaging in mining and the newspaper business. He was elected clerk of the Tenth District Court, a position in which he served for eight consecutive years. Since then he has been variously connected with big business interests, making his headquarters at 409 West Main Street, Lewistown. His home here is at 310 South Fifth Avenue. Mr. Ritch is a democrat has wielded some influence in the ranks of his party in Fergus County.

In 1902 Mr. Ritch was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Rehder, and to this union there have been born two children: Myrtle Judith and John B., Jr.

EDWARD FABIAN was a man whose good, honest work and citizenship contributed many things of value to Fergus County, and his name is one to be held in long and respectful memory in that community. His family still live near Lewistown, and one of the sons made a brilliant record in the famous Rainbow Division during the World war.

Edward Fabian was born in Alsace Lorraine, France, October 12, 1850, a son of Blaise and Frances (Schnebelen) Fabian. He was the second in a family of seven children. He acquired his education in France, and at the age of twenty entered the army and served during the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71, battling against Prussian aggression in that war as did his son nearly fifty years later. He lost a finger in one battle.

After the war he worked in his father's vineyard until 1880, when he came to the United States on a steamship to New York City and thence went by rail to Bismarck, Dakota, and by steamer reached Montana at Fort Benton. From there he crossed overland by ox team to Marysville, where his brother Alexander was mining. He spent about a year in that locality and then moved to Helena, working in the grocery store of Charles Lehman. On July 22, 1882, Mr. Fabian married Anna Mary Laibacher. She was born in Switzerland February 20, 1854. After their marriage, which was celebrated in Helena, they worked for M. Beach on a farm until October, when Mr. Fabian went back to the mines at Helena.

In July, 1883, they took their belated wedding trip, making a visit to France, where he remained until 1884, and then returned to Montana, his wife joining him about a year later. He was on the sheep and cattle ranch of Mr. John Brooks on Salt Creek until his wife returned in 1885, and then for a time he was in the employ of Mr. Frank Day. In 1886 Mr. Fabian bought a home on the Kendall Road near Lewistown, and turned his talents to the art of gardening, a business in which he excelled. He raised large quantities of fresh produce and fruit for the Lewistown markets and was actively engaged in that business and acquired a competence until his death on June 12, 1915. He first had a log house on his little farm, but in 1914 constructed a modern home, which he was permitted to enjoy only a short time but which his widow and family still occupy. He was a member of St. Leo's Catholic Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Fabian had five children: Helen Elizabeth, who died in infancy, Charles Edward, the soldier son, Joseph Alexander, Henry, and Freda. Charles Edward enlisted October 5, 1917, and was made a part of the Fourth Division in December, 1917, serving with the Thirty-Ninth Infantry. He left for France in April, 1918, and was placed with the Second Army Corps and saw much of the hard fighting along the Marne. In September, 1918, he was placed in the Motor Dispatch Division, and after the signing of the armistice went with his command to the Rhine in Germany and is still with the Army of Occupation.

JAMES H. JORDAN. Those Americans who can trace back to colonial ancestry have every reason to be proud of their lineage, and of the fact that members of their family have been associated with the constructive work of their country in all of its periods. This wonderful nation did not spring into being over night, but is the outgrowth of a series of epochs and of the character of the people of each. Without the heroism, sagacity, broad vision and shrewd judgment of the country's founders and developers there would not today be any mighty United States of America, but a couple of straggling colonies over which warring European nations would be wrangling. Therefore each one who does have the right to claim one or other of these forebears does so with gratitude, and as he matures and gains proper appreciation of his privilege, tries to so shape his life and policies that in the epochs to come his descendants may in turn point back with pride to him.

Long before the American colonies threw off the yoke of the mother country and laid the foundation of the present government, representatives of two families, the Jordans and the Chases, came to the shores of the New World from Ireland, and from the dates of their several landings took an aggressive and effective part in the history of their adopted country. Their descendants are worthy of them and what they accomplished, and one of the present day who has the blood of both in his veins is James H. Jordan, at Laurel, Montana, whose mother was born a Chase.

James H. Jordan was born in Vernon County, Wisconsin, April 20, 1866, a son of R. W. Jordan and Sarah M. (Chase) Jordan. R. W. Jordan was born in Connecticut, where the family had lived for several generations, in 1830, and he died in Butler County, Iowa, in 1877. Growing up in his native state, R. W. Jordan learned there to be a farmer and followed that calling all of his life. In 1855 he sought better opportunities for his growing ambition in Vernon County, Wisconsin, of which he was a pioneer, but as that section developed his inclination led him further west, and in 1872 he went to Butler County, Iowa, where he rounded out his useful life. From the organization of the republican party Mr. Jordan found in its principles a reflection of his own, and gave it his hearty support. Early joining the Congregational Church, throughout his after life he lived up to its creed and contributed generously of his means and time to further its influence. As a Mason he was equally well known, and in every respect measured up to the highest standards of American manhood. His wife was born in Orleans County, New York, in 1835, and survives him, now making her home in Vernon County, Wisconsin. Their children were as follows: Warren A., who was a farmer, died at Lenox, Taylor County, Iowa, aged thirty-six years; Rosa, who married G. C. Bishop, a retired farmer of Vernon County, Wisconsin; John S., who is manager of a lumber yard, lives in North Dakota; and James H., whose name heads this review.

When he was only twelve years old James H. Jordan left the parental roof to become a clerk in a grocery store at Dubuque, Iowa, where he remained until 1886, then returning to Vernon County, Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farming for eighteen years, and he was then in Northern Wisconsin for eighteen months. For the subsequent four years he was engaged in conducting a mercantile business at Retreat, Vernon County, Wisconsin, and then, in 1910, came to Laurel, Montana. It was his connection with the Government, for which he did general surveying, that brought him to Laurel, and this growing community so appealed to him that when, three years later, he severed his relations with the surveying department he arranged to go with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company so as to remain in this part of the country, continuing with the latter for four years. For the next year he was a member of the sales force of a mercantile establishment, and then was called upon to assume the duties of the office of city clerk, to which he was elected in 1917 and re-elected in 1918, with offices in the city hall. Mr. Jordan has had experience in public office, as he was township clerk at Sterling, Vernon County, Wisconsin, for three years, in all of his campaigns being the candidate of the republican party, for, like his father, he has always espoused its teachings. Both by inheritance and conviction he is a member of the Congregational Church. Not only is he a member of Laurel Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, but is now past grand of it, and he also belongs to Laurel Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Jordan has demonstrated his faith in the future of Laurel and Yellowstone County by investing in a comfortable modern residence at the corner of Fifth Street and Wyoming Avenue, and a 320-acre ranch nine miles southeast of Laurel.

In 1887 Mr. Jordan was united in marriage with Miss Marcia Wightman, a daughter of Andrew B. and Melinda (Austin) Wightman, farming people who became pioneers of Wisconsin. Mr. Wightman is now deceased, but his widow survives and makes her home in Clark County, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan became the parents of the following children: Hazel, who married C. E. Gilbreath, lives on Mr. Jordan's ranch; Ruby, who married H. T. Winters, a ranchman, and they live near Laurel; and Lin, who is attending the Laurel High School.

The advancement of Mr. Jordan is somewhat remarkable for he is essentially a self-made man, and his educational opportunities were exceedingly limited. Possessing, however, natural ability and quickness of perception, from childhood he has been able to make his own way, and make that way a good one, and those who have come into contact with his methods recognize that they are practical and effective. His record as city clerk is clean and satisfactory in every way, and he is able to take care of a large amount of the business of the municipality, applying to the affairs of his office the same alertness that has characterized him all his life. Both he and his wife are popular socially and have gathered about them a congenial circle of friends. As has been mentioned above in this article, it is such men as Mr. Jordan who can claim to be real Americans, and of him it can also be said that like his ancestors he is worthy of the land which gave him birth.

ARTHUR C. KNIGHT, M. D. Holding prestige in the ranks of his profession by reason of superior natural ability, aided by a thorough training, wide experience, an acute comprehension of human nature and broad sympathy, Dr. Arthur C. Knight, is firmly established in the confidence of the people of Philipsburg. Although engaged in practice here only since the beginning of 1919, Doctor Knight has shown himself such a thorough master of his calling as to win an appointment as surgeon for the Bimetalic Mining Company, the Philipsburg Mining Company, and the Gem Mining Company. During the great war he was one of the medical men who left an excellent practice to serve his country, and returned to private life with an honorable record as a soldier and patriot.

Doctor Knight was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, August 24, 1881, a son of John C. Knight, grandson of Valentine Knight, and great-grandson of Gustavious Knight. The Knights originated in England, from whence representatives came to the American Colonies and settled in Virginia. Gustavious Knight was born in Virginia and became a pioneer of what is now Harrison County, West Virginia. During the War of 1812 he served his country as a soldier. His son, Valentine Knight was born in Virginia in 1826, in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, and died there in 1909, having been a farmer all of his life.

John C. Knight, father of Doctor Knight, was born at Byron, Virginia, in 1853, and now lives near Clarksburg, West Virginia. He was reared on a farm at Byron, but after his marriage settled on a farm in Harrison County, where he has been occupied with agricultural pursuits all of his life. He is a democrat, but not active in politics. The Baptist Church has held his membership for many years. John C. Knight was married to Aldena Queen, who was born in Lewis County, Virginia, in 1858, died near Clarksburg, West Virginia, in 1888. Their children were as follows: Doctor Knight, who was the eldest born; and Ernest E., who is assistant state superintendent of schools lives at Charleston, West Virginia.

Doctor Knight attended the public schools of his native county, the State Normal School at Glenville, West Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1902, and then, after he had taught school for two years, became a student of the West Virginia University at Morgantown for two years. He then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, from which he was graduated in 1909 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and a member of the Greek Letter Fraternity Phi Beta Pi, and he is also a member of Pi Kappa Alpha.

In 1909 Doctor Knight entered the Montana State Hospital at Warm Springs as assistant physician, and six months later was made assistant superintendent, and held that position until 1913, when he was appointed by Governor Stewart as state superintendent of the hospital, and continued as such for a year. Doctor Knight then entered upon a general practice in which he was very successful, but as before stated left it to serve his country, and was commissioned a first lieutenant on September 17, 1917, was called to active duty, January 16, 1918, spending six weeks in the medical officers training camp at Camp Greenleaf, Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. From there he was sent to Camp Wadsworth, with the Third Pioneer Infantry at Spartansburg, South Carolina, but was detached from it on June 15, 1918, to serve on the camp examining board. On September 19, 1918, he received his promotion to a captaincy, and was ordered overseas as a casual officer, arriving at Brest, France, on November 22, 1918, after the signing of the Armistice. Doctor Knight was immediately assigned to base hospital No. 214, and there assisted in putting the wounded soldiers in such shape as to enable them to return to the United States. He returned to his own country with a detachment of sick and wounded, landing in New York City on February 9, 1919, and was mustered out of the service on February 11, following which he came back to Montana, and accepting the appointment of surgeon to the three companies above referred to, located at Philipsburg, where he is also engaged in a general practice, with offices on Broadway. Doctor Knight is a republican. Brought up in a religious home atmosphere, he early joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Well known in Masonry, Doctor Knight belongs to Mount Mariah Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Butte, Montana; Butte Consistory in which he has taken the thirty-second degree; and Bagdad Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Butte. He is also a member of Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Maccabees, also of Butte. A believer in professional co-operation, Doctor Knight belongs to Silver Bow County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association.

On April 9, 1911, Doctor Knight was married at Butte, Montana, to Miss Mathilde Le Roy, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Le Roy, residents of Brooklyn, New York, where Mr. Le Roy is an accountant. Mrs. Knight died March 2, 1917, leaving a daughter, Dorothy C., who was born June 25, 1915.

Doctor Knight's success is not the result of any happy chance; luck has played no part in his advancement. At the beginning of his career he was compelled to meet and overcome the same obstacles which arise in the path of every young practitioner. These, however, succumbed to his constant study, his indomitable perseverance and the force of his ability, well applied, and he may today take a pardonable pride in the fact that he owes his present position and prosperity solely to his own industry and effort.

JOHN CHARLES MAGUIRE. The visitor to Butte is liable to be impressed by the miles of well paved streets, but he may not know that the credit for this high class of work is due to John Charles Maguire, general paving contractor, who has done practically all of the paving at Butte, Missoula and Lewistown since 1913. He is essentially a product of the West, having been born at Ogden, Utah, on September 14, 1882, a son of John Maguire. The birth of John Maguire occurred in County Donegal, Ireland, in 1843, and his death at Ogden, Utah, in 1902. His father, grandfather of John Charles Maguire, came to the United States from County Donegal, Ireland, about 1857, and settled first in Vermont, from whence he moved to Iowa, where he owned and operated a farm on the Grand River. In 1867 he came West to Utah, and was engaged in a mercantile business at Ogden, where his death occurred. He was a democrat. A life long member of the Roman Catholic Church, he was active in religious affairs in each community in which he resided. His wife bore the maiden name of Conwell, and she, too, died at Ogden, Utah.

John Maguire was a veteran of the war between the states, in which he enlisted in 1865, and following his honorable discharge he returned to his father's farm on Grand River, Iowa. When his parents went to Ogden, Utah, John Maguire accompanied them, and, like his father, engaged in merchandising, but later engaged in mining and handling real estate, developing into one of the successful pioneers of that city. Also like his father, he was a democrat, and served as a member of the City Council of Ogden. By inheritance and conviction he was a Roman Catholic. For some years he belonged to the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and was at one time president of the local lodge at Ogden, and he also belonged to the Catholic Knights of America. John Maguire was united in marriage with Mary McGuire and she survives him and lives in Butte, Montana. Mrs. Maguire was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, in 1845. She and her husband had children as follows: Philip, who was an accountant, died at San Francisco, California, when he was thirty-five years old; Sarah, who married Con Smith, a rancher, lives at Boulder, Montana; Agnes, who married Fred W. Burns, a mine operator, lives at San Diego, California; Mary, who married Dr. R. C. Monahan, a physician and surgeon of Butte, Montana; Alice, who is unmarried, lives at Butte with her mother; John Charles, whose name heads this review; Nellie, who lives with her mother, conducts an X-Ray laboratory; Grace, who is also with her mother, is engaged in teaching in the Butte public schools; and Charles, who lives at Butte, is a salesman for the L. S. Cohn Cigar Company.

John Charles Maguire attended the public schools of Ogden, and completed the sophomore year of the Ogden High School, and then for the subsequent year was a student of the Intermountain Business College, from which he was graduated in 1899. Mr. Maguire then went to work with his uncle, Don Maguire, a mine owner in northern Utah, and remained with him for two years, leaving him to go into the office of the general foreman of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Ogden. A year later, so satisfactory was his record, he was promoted to be passenger yard foreman at the Union Station, Ogden, and held that position for two years. For the subsequent eighteen months Mr. Maguire was at Goldfield, Nevada, mining both over and underground, and in this way learning the business, and then, in the winter of 1906, he came to Butte, and worked in the old Parrot Mine, and also in the office of the Great Northern Railroad. Once more he returned to Ogden, and during 1907 was in the Sierra Madre district as a contract miner engaged in driving a tunnel. In 1908 he formed a partnership with V. P. Strange, and from then until 1913 was engaged in a general contracting business, which was incorporated in 1909 as the Strange-Maguire Paving Company, and gained a well-merited celebrity in paving work. In 1910 Mr. Maguire had charge of the paving contract at Klamath Falls, Oregon, and during 1911 and 1912 had charge of a similar contract at Missoula, Montana. In the spring of 1913 he severed his connections with the Strange-Maguire Paving Company and located at Butte, since which time he has been an independent contractor of paving work. In addition to his contracts at Butte, Missoula and Lewistown, Mr. Maguire has operated at Pocatello, Blackfoot, Idaho Falls, Rexburg and Saint Anthony, Idaho. His offices are conveniently located at No. 615 Daly Bank Building, and his residence is at No. 1260 West Gold Street, Butte. He is an independent democrat. Like all of the members of his family he is a Roman Catholic, and he belongs to Ogden Council No. 777, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a third degree knight; Ogden Lodge No. 719, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Silver Bow and Country clubs of Butte, and the Judith Club of Lewistown, Montana. Mr. Maguire is a member of the Pacific Highway Association and is vice president of the Silver Bow National Bank, and is otherwise interested in this region.

On January 7, 1911, Mr. Maguire was married to Miss Constance Smurthwaite, a daughter of C. A. and Margaret (Hope) Smurthwaite, residents of Salt Lake City, Utah, where Mr. Smurthwaite is a wholesale dealer in grain. Mrs. Maguire was graduated from the Ogden High School. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Maguire are as follows: Constance Patricia, who was born on August 29, 1913, and Frances Donna, who was born on December 27, 1917. Mr. Maguire is one of the influential men of Silver Bow County, and well known throughout a wide region as a sound and dependable citizen, and one worthy of the highest consideration. His various contracts stand as a monument to his skill and reliability, and his connection with any project insures it proper completion, for he will not tolerate anything but the best of workmanship and a living up to the spirit as well as the letter of a contract.

Frederick A. Bell, assistant cashier of the Empire Bank & Trust Company of Lewistown, has had a thorough training as a banker and was formerly identified with large northwestern banks at St. Paul, Minnesota.

He was born in St. Paul, May 15, 1883, a son of Frederick and Maria (Huxtable) Bell. His father, who was born in Durham, England, in 1858, came to this country when nine years of age with his mother and was reared and educated in St. Paul. He was for some years connected with the Nayes Brothers & Cutler, wholesale druggists house of St. Paul, and later with the Ryan Drug Company of that city. Later he became a paint dealer and several years ago retired and is now living, at the age of sixty-one, at Tacoma, Washington. His wife was born in New York State and died in 1885, at the age of twenty-five. Her two children were Frederick A. and Edward, the latter dying in infancy. Frederick Bell, Sr., is a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Frederick A. Bell received his education in the public schools of St. Paul, including the high school, and at the age of seventeen went to work for the American Exchange Bank of St. Paul. Subsequently he was with the Second National Bank of St. Paul and then returned to the American National Bank, the successor of the American Exchange Bank. On the score of ability and hard work he was advanced to the position of paying teller, and continued his duties until 1910, when he was made a deputy in the office of the county treasurer of Ramsay County. Mr. Bell came to Lewistown and on January 2, 1911, became teller with the Empire Bank and Trust Company, and since October 14, 1917, has been assistant cashier.

He is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Mason, and Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Mason. He is also an active member of the Chamber of Commerce.

On June 27, 1911, Mr. Bell married Miss Louise Marie Martinson. She was born at St. Peter, Minnesota, daughter of John and Ellen Martinson. She has one brother, Edward Martinson. Mr. and Mrs. Bell have two children, Vinette Ellen and John Frederick.

Paul Behrendt, proprietor of the Auto Machine Shop of Billings, is one of the substantial men of the city. He was born near Berlin, Germany, September 26, 1870, a son of Joachim Behrendt, also born near Berlin in 1833, and he died in Germany in 1894, having always lived in his native land. Early in life he was a farmer, but later became a veterinarian for the German Government, on a government breeding farm. Like other Germans of his period, he gave the required military service in the regular German army. The Lutheran Church had in him a devout member. Joachim Behrendt was married to Dorothy Ronnebeck, born, reared and died near Berlin. Their children were as follows: Agnes, who is deceased; Rudolph, who lives near Berlin; Herman, who is a teacher in Germany; Paul, whose name heads this review; Theodore, who conducts a sporting goods store at Billings, Montana, came to the United States in 1895; Louise, who lives in Germany; and Martha, who is also living in Germany.

Paul Behrendt attended the public schools of his native land and there learned the machinist trade. In October, 1894, he came to the United States, and for the first four years lived at San Francisco, California, where he worked at his trade, leaving that city for Livingston, Montana, where for two years he worked for the United States Government in the Yellowstone National Park during the summer months, and during the winter ones he was with the Northern Pacific Railroad. In 1900 Mr. Behrendt came to Billings and established a repair shop, which has expanded into an automobile machine shop and supply house, located at Nos. 2413-2415 First Avenue, North, of which he is the sole proprietor. He gives employment to six hands, and turns out excellent work. His modern residence, located at No. 211 North Twenty-Sixth Street, is owned by him. Mr. Behrendt is a republican. He belongs to the Lutheran Church.

In 1903 Mr. Behrendt was married at Billings to Miss Freida Brey, a daughter of Henry Brey, both of whom were born at Hamburg, Germany, where Mr. Brey still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Behrendt have the following children: Paul, who was born in 1905; Eleanor, who was born in 1907; Helen, who was born in 1909; Marguerite, who was born in 1912; Louise, who was born in 1915; and Richard, who was born in 1918. A carefully trained workman, Mr. Behrendt is able to render an efficient service, and to extract from his employes the best of their work. His success is entirely due to his industry and sound business sense, and is well merited.

Albert A. La Bar. Dating back to colonial days is the La Bar family, which was then founded in this country by a representative who left France, then in a disturbed condition, and sought freedom beyond the seas. Since then members of this honored family have been associated with the development of different sections, some of them leaving the initial place of settlement, Pennsylvania, for Iowa, North Dakota, California, Montana and other states, all of them occupying places of trust and responsibility and holding the respect of their fellow citizens. Laurel, Montana, is the home of one of the younger members of this family, Albert A. La Bar, who is capably managing the lumber yards of the Thompson Lumber Company, Incorporated, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Albert A. La Bar was born in Palo Alta County, Iowa, June 18, 1880, a son of E. G. La Bar, now living on his fruit ranch at Portersville, California. E. G. La Bar was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1841, and was reared in that city, later going to Iowa and engaging in farming in Palo Alta County until 1885, when he removed to Trail County, North Dakota, being one of the pioneer farmers of that section. In 1913 he went to Portersville, California, where he owns and conducts a valuable orchard ranch of considerable proportions. In politics he is an independent. E. G. La Bar was married to Matilda Ingbretson, born in Norway in 1846, and their children are as follows: Carrie, who married Olaus Lee, a hardware merchant of Roth, North Dakota; Albert A., who was the second in order of birth; Cora, who is married, lives with her husband, a locomotive engineer, at Glendive, Montana, where he owns a homestead ranch; Samuel, who has a homestead near Custer, Montana; and Eva, who is at home with her parents.

Albert A. La Bar has been very carefully educated, first in the rural schools of Trail County, North Dakota, and the high school of Hillsboro, North Dakota, after which he was a student of Grand Forks College at Grand Forks, North Dakota, for two years, completing his educational training at the state agricultural college at Fargo, North Dakota, where he was for two seasons. Leaving college, Mr. La Bar put to practical use the instruction he had there obtained by engaging in farming in Trail County until he was twenty-three years old. His inclinations, however, were for a business career, and he formed connections with the Valley Lumber Company at Taft, North Dakota, which continued for two years, during which time he was manager of the company. He then held for four years the same position with the Tolna, North Dakota, branch of the same company, leaving it in 1910 to engage with the O'Neil Lumber Company at Kalispell, Montana. On January 28, 1917, Mr. La Bar located at Laurel, Montana, coming here to become general manager for the Laurel yards of the Thompson Lumber Company, Incorporated, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, which position he still retains. The offices and yards are on Main Street.

In 1904 Mr. La Bar was married to Miss Martina Lee, at Hillsboro, North Dakota. She is a daughter of O. C. Lee, now deceased, although his widow survives him and lives at Kalispell, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. La Bar have the following children: Almeda, who was born January 14, 1907; Elaine, who was born February 12, 1910; and Alem, who was born June 4, 1914. Mr. La Bar is a republican. He belongs to Tolna Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Tolna, North Dakota. One of the best lumbermen in this part of the state, Mr. La Bar is conducting the affairs of his company with efficient alertness, and the annual volume of business is showing a gratifying increase. He is essentially a western product, and is typical of the aggressive, progressive spirit of his part of the country, which is producing so many worthwhile men and women. Still in the heyday of his youth and enthusiasm, he has already achieved business distinction, and the future spreads promisingly before him. Although a newcomer to Laurel, he has the best interests of the city at heart, and is justly numbered among its most representative men and public-spirited citizens.

HENRY J. FAUST. The people of a commonwealth cannot be too careful in their selection of men to represent them in the assemblies of their state for in the hands of these legislators rests the welfare of the interests of all classes. The power is vested in them to enact laws which will work for weal or woe, according to their characters, and to even amend the constitution. Fortunately for Montana the greater number of its representatives in both houses have been men of the highest character and standing, whose pride in their state and its development has made them put aside all personal consideration and work together to further improve conditions and provide for new questions which are bound to arise in any section. One of the men who measures up to the highest standards both as a state representative and private citizen, and who has in his office been of inestimable value to his district and state, is Henry J. Faust, a merchant of Drummond.

Henry J. Faust was born in Chisago County, Minnesota, March 25, 1867, a son of Elias P. Faust, born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, near the border, in 1828, who died in Chisago County, Minnesota, in 1885. He remained in his native land until he was twenty-six years of age, during which time he gave his country the obligatory military service, and then in 1854 left it for the United States. After landing in this country, he came direct to Chisago County, Minnesota, and there took up a homestead of 160 acres of land and became a successful farmer. In time he added to his original farm until he owned 330 acres of valuable land and died on his property. From the time he secured his papers of citizenship he was a republican, and was elected on his party ticket assessor of Chisago Township, Chisago County, for fifteen successive terms, his sterling integrity being universally admitted. He was also elected road supervisor, and was otherwise prominent. In addition to all these activities he was popular as an auctioneer, and his services as such were claimed whenever any sales of importance were held for miles around. The Lutheran Church had in him a faithful member. Like so many of his fellow countrymen, Elias P. Faust was not backward in giving his adopted country the benefit of his former military training and was a soldier in the Union army from 1863 until the close of the war between the North and the South. He married Christina Johnson, who was born in Sweden in 1830, and she died in Chisago County, Minnesota, in 1902. Their children were as follows: Lou, who died unmarried at Ovando, Montana; Mabel C., who married Charles A. Jakways, a retired rancher of Missoula, Montana; and Henry J., whose name heads this review, who attained to maturity, and nine who died in infancy.

Henry J. Faust attended the rural schools of his native county, and the high school at Marine Mills on the St. Croix, Minnesota. Following this for two years he was a student of Gustavus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minnesota, and completed his studies with a business course at the Anoka Business College of Anoka, Minnesota, from which he was graduated in 1885. Although he passed the examination for teachers and received a certificate entitling him to teach school, he never made use of it, preferring a business career.

The first connection Mr. Faust had with mercantile life was as a clerk in a store at Lindstrom, Minnesota, where he also served as assistant postmaster, and he continued this association for three years. In 1890 he came to Montana and for the first six months was a clerk for Weinstein & Company, merchants of Philipsburg. At the expiration of that period he was sent to Drummond, then barely beginning its existence, as check clerk and relief agent for the Northern Pacific Railroad and held that position for two years. In the meanwhile he was forming connections and building up an acquaintance, and when he formed a partnership with C. A. Jakways, his brother-in-law, and established the firm of Jakways & Faust, general merchants of Ovando, Montana, he found these of considerable value. The firm, founded in 1892, continued as a partnership until 1904 when the business was incorporated as the Blackfoot Commercial Company, with Messrs. Faust and Jakways and E. C. Johnson as stockholders and officials. The company branched out so as to include the handling of real estate and this became so important that the company sold the mercantile interests, but still operate extensively in realty. Mr. Faust still holds his interest in this concern.

In the meanwhile Mr. Faust was appointed postmaster of Ovando, and served for ten consecutive years as such, and for twelve years was United States commissioner, rendering the Federal Government a faithful and efficient service in both offices.

In August, 1915, Mr. Faust came to Drummond and purchased the interests of the Featherman Mercantile Company, associating with him in his new venture Charles M. Bassett, renaming the concern the Faust-Bassett Company, which caption it still retains. This is the leading department store of Drummond and Granite County, and is conveniently located on the corner of Main and Broad streets.

A stalwart republican, Mr. Faust has long been a leader in his party, and was elected on its ticket as a representative to the lower house of the State Assembly from Powell County in 1902, and again in 1918, from Granite. In the last session he served on the Highways, Education, State Institutions, Public Health, Libraries, Trades and Commerce, Horticultural and Equal Suffrage committees, and introduced and had passed the bill allowing extracts for culinary purposes to be sold in Montana. In every way possible he served his constituents and made a record that will be a valuable campaign document if he cares to continue in public life.

Mr. Faust belongs to Ruby Lodge No. 36, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is senior warden; Hope Chapter, No. 10, Royal Arch Masons of Philipsburg; Ivanhoe Commandery, Knights Templar of Deer Lodge; Hellgate Lodge No. 383, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of Missoula; and George Thomas Camp, Sons of Veterans, of Deer Lodge. He is president of the Drummond Commercial Club and has been very active in its work and is a booster for Greater Drummond. In addition to his other interests he is president of the Drummond Light & Power Company, a director in the Drummond State Bank, owns a modern residence in Drummond, his store building which is the largest structure in the city, and 520 acres of valuable ranch land in the Blackfoot Valley.

Mr. Faust's son, Marvin Dwight, who was born in 1902 at Ovando, Montana, was graduated from the Mount Vernon High School at Mount Vernon, Washington in the spring of 1919, at that time being honored by being made salutatorian of his class. This young man who is exhibiting considerable brilliancy, is now a student in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Michigan.

FRANK H. LE SAGE. As the largest city of Montana Butte offers exceptional opportunities to aggressive business men in almost every line of endeavor, and one of them who is taking advantage of these openings is Frank H. Le Sage, president and manager of the National Supply Company. He was born at Eagle Harbor, Michigan, on June 9, 1882, a son of Joseph Le Sage, now residing at No. 1010 Nevada Avenue, Butte.

Joseph Le Sage was born at Eagle River, Michigan, on June 8, 1863, and was there reared, educated and married. His parents were pioneers of this region, having come from the East. The family is of French-German descent, representatives of it coming to the Michigan settlement. After working in the saw-mill of Eagle River for a time Joseph Le Sage moved to Eagle Harbor, Michigan, continuing his connection with the saw-mill industry. In 1885 he came to Montana, and was one of the pioneer miners of this region, and is still engaged in this occupation, being now mining engineer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. In politics he is a democrat, but he has never cared to enter public life. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership.

The maiden name of the wife of Joseph Le Sage was Barbara Otis, and she was born in Germany on March 12, 1863, and was brought to the United States in 1864 by her parents, Frank and Gertrude Otis. Frank Otis was born in Germany in 1834, and died at Butte, Montana, in 1904, his widow surviving him and making her home at Butte. In 1864 Frank Otis located at Eagle Harbor, Michigan, where his daughter Mrs. Le Sage was reared and married, and there he conducted a brewery. In 1883 Mr. Otis came to Butte, Montana, and continued to work as a miner until his death. Joseph Le Sage and his wife have the following children: Frank H., who is the oldest; May, who married William Turner, pumpman for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, resides at No. 1210 East Galena Street, Butte; William, who is a miner for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, resides with his parents; Hattie, who married Walter Dedrick, lives at San Diego, California; Charles, who is a carpenter for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, lives with his parents; and Frances, who is a telephone operator, resides with her parents. The sixth child, Joseph, died at Butte when eighteen years old.

Frank H. Le Sage attended the public schools of Butte and the Butte Business College, from which he was graduated in 1912. In the meanwhile, when only fifteen years old, he began working for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, but two years later left it for the Butte Electric Company, now the Montana Power Company. Starting in as an oiler, through steady application and hard work he rose to be engineer and still later to be chief electrician at the station. After ten years with that company he connected himself with the Butte Electric Supply Company as foreman, remaining with it from 1909 to 1914. In the latter year Mr. Le Sage organized the National Electric Company and incorporated it, and handles everything in electrical goods. The offices and store are at No. 204 West Park Street. From somewhat small beginnings Mr. Le Sage has built up one of the largest concerns of its kind in Western Montana. The officials of the company are as follows: Frank H. Le Sage, president and manager; and Mrs. Frank H. Le Sage, secretary and treasurer.

In his political views Mr. Le Sage finds the principles of the democratic party in accordance with his ideas in national matters, but when it comes to local affairs he usually votes independently. Fraternally he belongs to Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He owns his modern residence at No. 938 California Avenue and other real estate at Butte.

In 1907 Mr. Le Sage was married at Butte to Miss Edna Haney, born at Creston, Iowa, a daughter of Charles D. Haney, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1846, and died at Butte in 1904. After being reared and educated in Pennsylvania, and shortly after attaining his majority, Mr. Haney went to Creston, Iowa, where he was married, and where he became foreman at the freight house of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1904 he came West to Butte, where his death occurred. He was a democrat and a member of the Congregational Church, and was a very religious man and active supporter of the church. His fraternal relations were those connected with his membership with the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America and Woodmen of the World. He married Martha Rusk, who was born in New York State in 1864, and she survives him and lives at Los Angeles, California. The children born to Charles D. Haney and wife were as follows: Frank D., who is with the Northern Pacific Railroad, lives at Billings, Montana; Mrs. Le Sage; Erla, who married James P. Hennessy, lives at Los Angeles, California; and Robert D., who died at the age of twelve years. Mrs. Le Sage was educated at the public schools of Creston, Iowa, and went through the sophomore year of the high school course, when she entered the Creston Conservatory of Music, from which she was graduated in 1904, and is a skilled instrumental musician. Coming to Butte, Montana, in 1904 with her parents, she taught music to private pupils until her marriage. She is now very often called upon to use her talents at public concerts and special entertainments. An active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, she oftentimes officiates at the organ and donates her services in musical affairs connected with the church. Mr. and Mrs. Le Sage have one son, Frank D., who was born on September 28, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Le Sage are the center of a very congenial social circle, and Mrs. Le Sage occupies a high position among the musical people of Butte. As a business man Mr. Le Sage's capabilities are unquestioned and his prosperity is the result of his own efforts and farsightedness.

Henry B. Gibson. During the past twenty years the court proceedings of the Tenth Judicial District of Montana have been recorded by Henry B. Gibson, official court reporter. In this long period he has witnessed and placed on record hundreds of trials, many of which have been history-making in their character. Few men are better known among the members of the legal profession and the judiciary, and his accurate, painstaking and expeditious labors have been commented upon frequently in a complimentary way by men high up in the councils of the state.

Mr. Gibson was born at Creston, Ogle County, Illinois, December 8, 1870, a son of Emery Menzo and Henrietta (Buss) Gibson, being the second of three sons born to his parents. His father was born in New York State, January 25, 1846, and as a mere lad went to Creston, Illinois, where he met and married Miss Buss, who had been born in England, May 5, 1850. When he was a lad of but sixteen years Emery M. Gibson had run away from home and his widowed mother and enlisted in the Union army, fighting with the One Hundred and Fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Generals Thomas and Sherman, in all the skirmishes and battles of his command. At the close of the war he was given his honorable discharge and returned to Ogle County, where he was variously employed until elected county treasurer, a position which he retained for several terms. In 1896 he went overland to California and located in San Diego County, where he engaged in the apiary business, and continued therein for twenty years. Eventually he went to Utah, where he is at this time engaged in coal mining. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and in politics is a stanch republican. The death of Mrs. Gibson occurred in 1896.

Henry B. Gibson attended the public schools of Ogle County, Illinois, and after learning stenography, at the age of fifteen years, secured employment with H. H. Cardell, a lawyer at Perry, Iowa. Later he went to Des Moines, Iowa, where he worked for the Green Bay Lumber Company, and subsequently was employed by the same concern in their office at Rhinelander, Wisconsin. In 1890 Mr. Gibson came to Helena, Montana, where he entered the offices of the Northern Pacific Railway as stenographer in the transportation department, but was subsequently transferred to the telegraphers and general ticket agent's office. Upon leaving the employ of the Northern Pacific he was employed for about one year in the office of Atty. Gen. Henry J. Haskell, following which for about six months he was employed by the First National Bank of Helena. When he left the employ of that institution he returned to the Northern Pacific as telegraph operator and assistant ticket agent, and remained in those capacities until 1899. In September of that year Mr. Gibson was appointed court reporter for the Tenth Judicial District, located at that time at Fort Benton. In December, 1900, when the court was changed to Lewistown, Mr. Gibson took up his residence here and has continued in the same capacity to the present time. He is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a republican in his political sentiments.

On December 14, 1898, Mr. Gibson was married to Miss Fredericka Nord, who was born in Canada, and to this union there have been born five children, of whom four are living: Dudley B., who while attending high school volunteered in the Students' Army Training Camp in October, 1918, and was honorably discharged in December, 1918; Evelyn and Edward Nord, twins, attending high school; and Emery Menzo, also a high school student.

Samuel C. Weaver. Lewistown experienced the loss of one of its best and most aggressive citizens in an automobile accident that instantly killed Samuel C. Weaver, head of the Judith Automobile Company and a popular and prominent business man.

Mr. Weaver, whose death occurred while driving his car between Judith Gap and Harlowton on February 7, 1919, had been a resident of Montana for over a quarter of a century. He was born at Myrtle Creek in Douglas County, Oregon, February 11, 1873, son of James B. and Sarah Ann (Wright) Weaver, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Missouri. His father was an early settler in Missouri, went overland to California in 1850, and from there moved to Douglas County, Oregon, where he married and where he spent most of his remaining years as a hotel man, merchant and farmer. He died in 1906, at the age of seventy-two, and his wife died in 1882.

Samuel C. Weaver acquired his education in the public schools of Oregon and was eighteen years of age when in 1891 he came to Montana and began riding the range. He was a cowboy four or five years, and then engaged in the liquor business at Lewistown and from that took up real estate and latterly engaged in the automobile business under the title Judith Automobile Company, with a garage in Lewistown. He was also interested in a number of other local business affairs.

Mr. Weaver was popular, not only in social but in business circles. His reputation as a man of his word was universally recognized and he conducted his affairs on a broad gauge plan which commanded the respect and admiration of all with whom he came in contact. Small or petty ways in business he could not tolerate, and he was a strong believer in the maxim of "live and let live." He held his business and personal honor on a high plane with the natural resulting consequence that his associates always felt that they could bank on him at any time.

In the words of one of the local newspapers: "Sam Weaver was one of the best known and best liked men in Fergus County. He was a keen sportsman and for many years had been prominent in the state trap shooting tournaments." He was affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and in politics was independent. Two of his brothers live at Lewistown, James A. Weaver, deputy game warden, and Edward Weaver. Another brother, William, lives at Geraldine and George lives at Chinook.

March 11, 1896, Mr. Weaver married Myrta E. Duncan. She was born in Caldwell County, Missouri, a daughter of William and Refugio (Slone) Duncan, both natives of Missouri. Mrs. Weaver was the younger of two children.

O. G. KASSNER. It has been truly said that there is no royal road to fortune, but that each man must advance step by step along the highway of life. Some retard their advancement by resting too long by the way; others seek to discover treasure in bypaths, but the one who keeps straight ahead, never shirking work or avoiding responsibilities, is the one who reaches the goal and has the satisfaction of knowing that his success is his own and that he does not owe it to any assistance rendered him. The City of Laurel has as one of its leading merchants a man who has become one of the leaders in his special line not only for this but other cities in the state, and has won a deserved place among the substantial citizens of his county. This man is Otto G. Kassner, grocer and hardware merchant, member of the Laurel Commercial Club and one of the most alert boosters for the city. Like so many of the successes in business life in our western cities, Mr. Kassner is a young man, being in the very prime of life, but he is experienced and sagacious in handling the problems of his trade and those of the municipality.

Otto C. Kassner was born in Blue Earth, Faribault County, Minnesota, April 11, 1880, a son of Edward Kassner, born in Germany in 1839, and died at Blue Earth, Minnesota, in 1886. He was reared, educated and married in Germany, his wife, also a native of Germany, bearing the maiden name of Pauline Shimmel. Entering the German army, he gave his country the compulsory military service, and upon his return from the army resumed his farming which it had interrupted. In 1875 he brought his family to the United States, and coming to Minnesota secured land at Blue Earth and wrested a farm from nature amid pioneer conditions and privations. A lover of liberty and freedom, the republican party's platforms offered him a materialization of his ideals, and from the time he was naturalized until his death he voted its ticket. His wife was born in 1844 and survives him, and makes her home at Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minnesota. Their children were as follows: Emma, who married Albert Matthews, a general workman, resides at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Pauline, who married Gus Matthews, now deceased, is the owner of a large farm, but lives at Blue Earth, Minnesota; Matilda, who married Albert Buegler, an extensive farm owner, resides on their farm at Sauk Rapids, Minnesota; Otto G., who name heads this review; Helen, who married Henry Levnau, died at Sauk Rapids, Minnesota, in 1912, but he survives and is now baggagemaster on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad at Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Lilly, who married Arthur Kelem, a barber, resides at Grand Forks, North Dakota.

Otto G. Kassner attended the grammar and high schools of Blue Earth, Minnesota, and then became a student of the St. Cloud, Minnesota, Business College, completing his course in that institution in 1897. Following that he entered a clothing store at Blue Earth as a clerk, where for five years he was thoroughly grounded in practical salesmanship, using his experience to secure him a better position in a similiar establishment at Appleton, Minnesota. He then went to Macoun, Saskatchewan, Canada, and spent three years there in a general store.

Returning to the United States, Mr. Kassner in 1912 bought an interest in the general store known as the Funk-Wold Company of Laurel, the name being then changed to the Wold-Kassner Company, but he severed his connection with it January 13, 1916, and established himself in a hardware and grocery business on Main Street. Between then and April, 1919, his business expanded to such an extent that he was obliged to buy a large building to house it, his new establishment being also on Main Street. This building is 30 by 130 feet, and he also owns a large warehouse in the vicinity of his store and a residence which he occupies. His knowledge of selling methods, and his desirable connections, which enable him to buy to advantage, have resulted in his building up a fine trade and establishing him as one of the most influential merchants in this part of Montana.

In 1904 Mr. Kassner was married at Mankato, Minnesota, to Miss Tinna Sonnek, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sonnek, the latter of whom died in the spring of 1919, although the former survives and lives at Minnesota Lake, Minnesota, being now a retired farmer, but formerly very active as a pioneer agriculturalist of Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Kassner have three children, namely: Kermit, who was born May 7, 1906; Donald, who was born in 1908; and Willard, who was born in 1912.

Mr. Kassner belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, and to Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a third degree knight. From the time it was organized he has been very active in the Commercial Club of Laurel, and he also belongs to the Billings Midland Empire Club. Having found his opportunity at Laurel, Mr. Kassner has great faith in Montana, and is anxious to educate others in the possibilities of this state, and especially of Laurel and its vicinity. He believes that the West is the place for the young man, and that each year will bring more of those who develop into worthwhile citizens to Laurel and other Montana cities, and through them and their efforts will additional capital be brought for investment in local enterprises.

A stanch republican, Mr. Kassner has always supported the principles for which its best element has always stood, and he is a great admirer of the late Colonel Roosevelt.

GEORGE W. YOUNG, D. D. S. Among the lessons which war conditions are emphasizing is the importance of sound teeth. This is not a lesson which ought to be new in our country, unless the proverb as to the honor of prophets in their own country applies; for American dentists have occupied the front rank throughout the world for many years. But the significance of teeth and diseases incident to them has only comparatively recently been realized by science. It is, however, realized now, and no competent diagnostician overlooks this fertile source of disordered health. A practical rule for all to follow is to have the teeth examined periodically and make sure that no obscure focus of infection exists. In wartime the drastic standards of health demanded by military efficiency required the most careful supervision of the teeth, and the scientific dentist has become a recognized adjunct of military organization. This should carry weight with the civil population, for health in peace is worth considering. War must not have all our efficiency. Good teeth are an essential of good health. In man's constant warfare against disease the dentist fights in the front trenches. One of the skilled men of this learned calling who is engaged in the general practice of his profession in Granite County, is Dr. George W. Young, of Philipsburg.

Doctor Young was born in County Middlesex, Ontario, Canada, September 23, 1860, a son of George Young, who was born in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1822, and died on his farm in County Middlesex, Ontario, Canada, in 1897. He left Ireland with his parents in 1823, his father Charles Young having been commissioned to survey the La Chene Canal, but died of pneumonia contracted while making this survey, in 1827, and George Young was taken by his namesake uncle and reared, they living in the vicinity of Ottawa, Canada, until the lad was sixteen years old. He then began working at the trade of a carpenter, and followed it at London, Hamilton, Kingston and Woodstock, Canada, and built the market at London, Canada. After his marriage, he located on a farm he had bought in County Middlesex, Canada, and there he rounded out his useful life. He was a conservative in politics, and firm in his support of its policies. The Church of England held his membership. The maiden name of his wife was Catherine Bateman, and she was born in Caradoc Township, Middlesex County, Ontario, Canada, in 1827, and died in Middlesex in 1894. Their children were as follows: Mary E., who died in Middlesex, in 1898; Charles H., who is a horse dealer of Glencoe, Ontario, Canada; Doctor Young, whose name heads this review; Harriet Hester, who married S. E. Bowler, a farmer of Salmon, Idaho; Thomas H., who is manager of the Scales Work of Toledo, Ohio; J. L., who is a dentist of New York City; John B., who came to Montana in 1891, died on his ranch at Belt, Montana; and Catherine E., who married K. E. Parson, a hardware merchant of Beaver Dam, Wisconsin.

After being graduated from the rural schools of his native county, and the Strathroy High School of the same county, completing his courses in the latter in 1880, George W. Young taught the school which he first attended, for a year. In 1883 he came to the United States, and after spending a short time at Chicago, Illinois, traveled through twenty-seven states being engaged at carpenter work. He then returned to County Middlesex, but in 1889 came back to the United States, and after a short stay at Great Falls, Montana, was in Helena for two years, where he studied dentistry and worked at his trade. Doctor Young then engaged in a practice with his brother, J. L. Young at Granite, Montana, for a year, when he moved to Philipsburg, and since December 15, 1891, has been engaged in practice here, being the pioneer of his profession at the county seat, now living today. His dental parlors are in the Sayrs Block. Doctor Young is a democrat and served as a member of the city council. He belongs to Granite Camp No. 323, Woodmen of the World at Philipsburg; Court Algonquin No. 3369, Independent Order of Foresters of Philipsburg; and to the Philipsburg Commercial Club. He owns a modern residence on the corner of Sutter and California streets.

On May 26, 1892, Doctor Young was married to Miss Martha Paradise, at Granite, Montana. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Paradise, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Paradise was a wagonmaker at Elizabethtown, New York. Mrs. Young died in 1911, leaving two children, namely: Catherine, who is at home; and Glenn, who served during the great war as a marine, and was in the service for seventeen months. In 1915 Doctor Young was married to Miss Lucy Paradise, his sister-in-law, the ceremony being performed at Butte, Montana. They have no children.

ROBERT H. RAINS. As the largest mining center of the world, Butte naturally attracts to it men of the highest caliber, whose inclinations and abilities have led them to take a constructive interest in those activities founded upon mental production or business lines which are the outgrowth of such production. One of the alert, dependable and enterprising young men of this city is Robert H. Rains, president of the Rains Metallic Packing Company, who has not only gained an enviable position in his special line, but has a bright future before him and is laying extensive plans for a much larger expansion than he has hitherto effected.

Robert H. Rains was born at Silver Cliff, Colorado, on March 12, 1885, a son of W. H. Rains, who was born in July, 1857, at Queensland, Ohio. The Rains family was founded in this country during its colonial epoch, representatives of it coming from Scotland and England to Massachusetts at a very early day. Henry E. Rains, grandfather of Robert H. Rains, was born in New Jersey in 1809, and he moved to Ohio in young manhood and became active as the owner of large saw-mill and flour-mill interests. His death occurred in Ohio in 1893. On his mother's side of the house Robert H. Rains traces back to the same family tree as former president of the United States John Quincy Adams.

Until he was eighteen years of age W. H. Rains lived in Ohio and attended its public schools, but at that time he came West to Leadville, Colorado, and became manager of a mine. In 1878 he moved to Silver Cliff, that same state, still operating as a mine manager. His efforts proved very successful and at one time he was worth $500,000, but the decline in the value of silver stock reduced his fortune so as to practically wipe out all his profits. Always a supporter of the republican party, he was elected on its ticket as a member of the City Council of West Cliff, Colorado, which is located one mile from Silver Cliff, but he is now living in the latter city. W. H. Rains was married to Cynthia Jennie Adams, born at Sedan, Kansas, in 1862, and they became the parents of the following children: Robert H., whose name heads this review; Henry E., who was a stationary engineer at Cripple Creek, Colorado, died of the influenza in 1919; Celia Ann, who married Morey E. Jones of Aurora, Illinois; Leafa, who died on July 12, 1899, aged four years; Leta, who was graduated from the Cripple Creek High School, lives with her parents; and Sidney H., who is in the moving picture show business at Cripple Creek, Colorado.

Robert H. Rains was educated in the public schools of West Cliff, Colorado, and the Canyon City High School, until he was sixteen years old, when he left school to begin work as a stationary engineer at Cripple Creek, Colorado, where he remained until 1907, when he came to Butte. He is the inventor of a metallic piston ring packing for machinery, specially designed for use in pumps, hoists, compressors and all steam machinery. This invention has a nine-year record of successful operation in Cripple Creek, where it was used in mining machinery. In order to manufacture it Mr. Rains incorporated his company at Butte in October, 1919, and it is backed by Montana capital. The officers of the company are as follows: Robert H. Rains, president; Judge Sydney Sanner, vice president; Elmer O. Binder, secretary; and Daniel Rafferty, treasurer. This company was formed for the purpose of putting Mr. Rains' invention on the world's market, and Judge Sanner is the legal adviser and business director, and is assisted in this work by his partner J. L. Templeton. Mechanical experts say that this is the best appliance ever devised for the purposes for which it is used. With the exception of one concern, Mr. Rains' invention is now used by all of the large mining companies of Montana. Judge Sanner's offices are at No. 402 Miner Building, Butte, and Mr. Rains' office and residence are at No. 317 South Dakota Street, Butte. Mr. Rains is a republican. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

In addition to his Butte company, Mr. Rains is promoting a mining company at Corbin, Montana, to develop five claims he owns just east of the old Alta Works.

On December 30, 1918, Mr. Rains was united in marriage with Miss Annie E. Lohrer at Helena, Montana. She is a daughter of Albert and Holda (Birkley) Lohrer, of Corbin, Montana, pioneers of the state. Mrs. Rains was graduated from the Jefferson County High School at Boulder, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Rains have one daughter, Cecelia, who was born on December 16, 1919.

Daniel Rafferty, treasurer of the Rains Metallic Packing Company of Butte, is one of the men of Montana who is proving that success is the fruition of intelligent effort and indomitable persistence in the pursuit of ideals. Of course before there can be accomplishment there must be vision, and after that, long, hard work. He comes from the land of high ideals, enthusiasm and willingness to work, for he was born in County Armagh, Ireland, on March 9, 1881.

The father of Daniel Rafferty was also Daniel, and his birth occurred in the same place as that of his son, during the year 1836, and he died there in 1896, having been a farmer all his life. He was a consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church. His widow, who survives him and lives in County Armagh, was born there in 1844, and bore the maiden name of Mary Brawley. Their children were as follows: Katherine, who is the widow of James Robinson, an officer of the Irish Constabulary stationed at Belfast, Ireland, lives at Dublin, Ireland; John, who lives at Monaghan, Ireland, is an insurance agent; Sarah, who is a graduate nurse, served as such for the British Government during the great war in France, was seriously wounded and now lives at Edinburgh, Scotland; William, who was employed in the tube manufacturing works at Coatbridge, Scotland, died there in 1908; Daniel, whose name heads this review; James, who lives at Darby, Pennsylvania, has been in the employ of the Baldwin Locomotive Works for the past fifteen years; Minnie, who is unmarried, is a dressmaker of Clonas, North of Ireland; Bridget, who is unmarried, lives with her mother; and two who died young. The paternal grandfather was John Rafferty, and he was born, reared, married and spent his entire life in County Armagh, where he was engaged in farming. The maternal grandfather was John Brawley, and he was born in County Armagh in 1813, and died there in 1893, having been a farmer of that region all of his life. On both sides of the house Daniel Rafferty's ancestors were County Armagh people for many generations.

Daniel Rafferty attended the parochial schools of his native county until he was seventeen years old, at which time he left Ireland for Liverpool, England, and spent eight months in a cabinet-making establishment of that city. From there he traveled on into Scotland and worked at Glasgow and Lenoxshire for about six years, during which period he was connected with the iron and steel industry. Mr. Rafferty then went to Greenock, Scotland, and spent three months in a large shipbuilding plant, when he became motorman for the electric street car company and held that position for eighteen months. Returning to Ireland, he paid his old home a visit, and then went to Liverpool, England, and embarked from there for the United States, landing in New York City.

For the first year after his arrival in this country Mr. Rafferty was employed in the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and then for four months he was in the employ of the Philadelphia Traction Company. His next employers were Gimbles Brothers, and he remained with them for six months. Mr. Rafferty then came to Montana and arrived at Butte on July 3, 1909, and from then on has operated in and about Butte, leasing a number of mines, generally in partnership with J. L. Templeton, and has become very successful. Since April 19, 1919, he has been piston expert for the Rains Metallic Packing Company, and he also holds the offices of treasurer and director of this corporation. In politics Mr. Rafferty is a republican. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. Unmarried, he makes his home at No. 507 North Main Street. A man of courage and initiative, Mr. Rafferty has steadily advanced until he is today one of the leading men in his special line, and is also recognized as a mine operator of considerable importance.

Harry L. Fitton. Having served his fourth term as city clerk of Lewistown, Harry L. Fitton is now a partner in the Lewistown Marble & Granite Works. He is an expert accountant, a man of thorough training and experience, having formerly been an educator, and is a citizen whose public spirit leads him to make ready response to wholehearted co-operation with every movement affecting the welfare of his home city.

Mr. Fitton was born on his father's farm in Dane County, Wisconsin, April 15, 1887, a son of James H. and Elizabeth G. (Broderick) Fitton. His parents were both natives of Dane County, Wisconsin, the county seat of which is the City of Madison. His father was born October 16, 1855, and his mother August 21, 1858. They were married November 7, 1884, and of their three children Harry is the oldest. His sister Valeria E., died October 26, 1918, wife of Herbert Gorman, and the younger sister is Velma V. James H. Fitton has long been a prominent farmer, stock raiser and dairyman in Southern Wisconsin, making a specialty of Shorthorn cattle. He has served as chairman of his township board, is a democrat and a member of the Congregational Church.

Harry L. Fitton acquired a good education in local and high schools and took special courses in the University of Wisconsin. He taught his first term of school at the age of seventeen and at nineteen was made principal of the schools of Mount Horeb, Wisconsin. He filled that office creditably for four years and in the spring of 1910 left Wisconsin and came to Lewistown, Montana. Here he took charge of the books for the Department Store of Charles Lehman & Company at Lewistown, serving until August 3, 1912. On the 5th of August of that year he was appointed city clerk under John L. Marshall, mayor, and has served continuously by reappointments in May, 1913, 1915 and 1917. During the war Mr. Fitton was untiring in doing what he could in behalf of the soldiers and war auxiliary movements, especially the Red Cross. He filled out many papers for soldiers free of charge. His wife has been prominent in Red Cross work, being now county superintendent of a department of that great organization, and holds a badge of honor for over 800 hours of work. Mr. Fitton is a democrat in politics, and is exalted ruler of Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In Masonry he is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is now serving his third term as secretary of the Lodge. He is a member of Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons; Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena; and he and his wife are both members of Marie Chapter No. 36, of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Fitton married Miss Adella F. Schantz. She was born at Villisca, Iowa, daughter of Carl J. and Christine (Holmes) Schantz. Her parents are natives of Sweden and both are still living, her father being a farmer in Page County, Iowa. He is a republican and a member of the Swedish Lutheran Church. Mrs. Fitton is the fourth in a family of nine children, all of whom are still living.

Rufus B. Thompson. When in the high tide of his activities Rufus B. Thompson was one of the monarchs of the sheep industry of Montana. His flocks numbered thousands and thousands of head, and grazed over uncounted hills and valleys. He was also well known as a banker of Lewistown, where he lived for a number of years and where his death occurred December 6, 1914.

He was of old New England ancestry and was born at Colchester, Vermont, June 16, 1857, a son of Samuel and Marion (Buell) Thompson. His parents were both natives of Vermont. He was the second of three sons. His father was a Vermont farmer, voted as a whig and republican and was a devout member of the Methodist Church.

Rufus B. Thompson spent his early life on his father's rugged New England farm, and alternated with the work of home by attending school in winter sessions until he was about twenty-one years of age. He then came West, the first stage of his journey taking him to St. Paul, Minnesota. From there he proceeded by stage to Bismarck, Dakota Territory, and thence by steamer up the Missouri River to Fort Benton. He first saw Montana about forty years ago, when nearly all the territory was still in a pioneer condition. From Fort Benton after some time he went overland by ox and horse team to the Judith Basin, and was one of the first settlers on Willow Creek south of the Snow Mountains, where he took up Government land and began the sheep industry. He saw his flocks expand and increase and his business grow until he frequently had from 15,000 to 20,000 head on range at one time. In 1896 he established a feeding station for sheep at Seward, Nebraska, and also owned a home at York in that state. In 1906 he bought a fine home in Lewistown, and spent the rest of his days in that city. He sold his last interests as a sheep man in November, 1914, only a few weeks before his death.

Mr. Thompson was a man of sturdy integrity and could not be moved from the strict path of honorable personal dealings by any inducement. In fact this was one of his dominant characteristics. He believed that all men should live up to their contracts to the fullest, no matter how the financial outcome resulted. In the conduct of his extensive business interests he took a broad view, and his dealings were always characterized by a strict sense of justice to all parties concerned. He never would enter into a business arrangement with any one unless convinced that both sides to the deal would participate in the financial returns, and was always inclined to lean towards the side of generosity in all of his business arrangements.

He was also a man of leadership in public affairs and twice represented his district in the State Legislature. He was also a member of the School Board several terms. Mr. Thompson was one of the organizers of the Empire Bank & Trust Company of Lewistown, and when the organization was completed on March 30, 1907, he was elected first president and filled that office until January 16, 1909. He was affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Politically he was a republican.

Mr. Thompson married Miss Imogene Jacobs, a native of Dane County, Wisconsin, and a daughter of George and Katherine Almira (Warren) Jacobs. Her mother was a native of Vermont. Her father, who was born in Germany, came to this country when seventeen years of age by sailing ship to New York, and thence came west to Iowa, whence he became a farmer and where he spent his last years. He was a whig in early life and later a republican. Mrs. Thompson was the fourth in a large family of thirteen children, eight of whom are still living. Her own children number three, the first, Jesse Fay, dying in infancy. Marion A. is the wife of Frank Ottman, living on the old Thompson homestead, and they have two daughters. Rufus B., Jr., married Susie Martin and has one daughter.

Lawrence S. Stevens, M. D. The medical profession made a record during the late war that will not soon be forgotten. Countless numbers of the profession left well established connections to enlist in the service of their Government when they had every excuse that could be tendered for remaining at home. Their work was of the utmost importance, not only at the front, but in the training camps, where through their skill and experienced knowledge the embryo soldier was prepared for the titanic struggle before him by making him fit physically as well as strategically. The members of this learned profession who made the sacrifice of their material welfare to serve their country will not be forgotten by their fellow citizens, but in the years to come will be pointed out as men who placed their patriotism above the dollar mark, and to whom the fine physical condition of the country's soldiers is largely due. One of these loyal physicians and soldiers worthy of special mention in a work of this high class is Dr. Lawrence S. Stevens of Laurel, Montana.

Doctor Stevens was born in Cedar County, Missouri, October 29, 1881, a son of Dr. B. F. Stevens and grandson of Lawrence Stevens, the latter born in Indiana in 1812, and belonging to an old and honored family in this country, the original emigrant coming from England to Virginia prior to the American Revolution. Lawrence Stevens became a pioneer farmer of Appanoose County, Iowa, where he died in 1888. His wife bore the maiden name of Fletcher, and she, too, was born in Indiana.

Dr. B. F. Stevens was born in Indiana in 1837, and he died in Cedar County, Missouri, May 1, 1882. He was reared in Iowa, but moved to Missouri in young manhood, after having been graduated from the Medical College of Keokuk, Iowa, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. During the Civil war he enlisted in the service, during 1864, and was sent against the Indians in Nebraska. Politically he was a democrat. For many years he was well known as a Mason. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Emma Akin, was born in Kentucky in 1853, and she died in Polk County, Missouri, in 1888. Their children were as follows: Frank, who is a rural mail carrier, resides at Quincy, Missouri; Locie, who married W. E. Vaughn, a ranchman, resides near Judith Gap, Montana; and Dr. Lawrence S.

After attending the rural schools of Missouri and the academy of Lowery City, Missouri, Lawrence S. Stevens in 1900 went to Western Canada and for the subsequent six years was engaged in dealing in real estate, but in that year matriculated in the medical department of the Universiy of Kansas City, Missouri, from which he was graduated in 1910 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and that same year located at Fort Stockton, Texas, where for four years he was engaged in a general practice. In 1914 he came to Montana and until September, 1916, was in practice at Bridger, that state, leaving it for Laurel. In July, 1918. Doctor Stevens entered the United States service and was sent to the Medical Officers Training Camp at Fort Riley, Kansas, in the meanwhile being commissioned first lieutenant in June, 1918. He was assigned to the Sixteenth Sanitary Train of the Sixteenth Division at Camp Kearny, California, commanding Ambulance Company Two Hundred and Sixty-three. He was mustered out March 26, 1919, and returned to Laurel to resume his practice. His offices are in the McCauley Spencer Building on Main Street. Doctor Stevens is local surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. During 1918 Doctor Stevens was president of the Montana State Health Officers Association, and he belongs to the Yellowstone County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and is active in all of these organizations. Fraternally he belongs to Bridger Lodge, Ancient Free & Accepted Masons, and Bridger Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is very active in the Laurel Commercial Club. Politically he is an independent democrat.

In 1909 Doctor Stevens was united in marriage at Fall City, Nebraska, to Miss Matilda H. Hill, born in Iowa, who attended the Clinton High School of Clinton, Iowa, and who is a graduate registered nurse. Doctor and Mrs. Stevens have the following children: Iva Constance, who was born December 29, 1910; Donna Mae, who was born January 3, 1912; and Virginia, who was born September 9, 1916. An experienced medical man, Doctor Stevens enjoys a wide-spread popularity, and is recognized as one of the most efficient men in his profession. Personally he has a large following, winning and holding friends through those characteristics which make for the highest standard of American citizenship.

Wilber I. Power, M. D., physician and surgeon and vice president of the First State Bank of Philipsburg, is one of the best known men of Granite County. He was born at Farmington, Oakland County, Michigan, September 17, 1860, a son of Thomas H. Power, and grandson of Jared Power, who was born in Chautauqua County, New York, in 1806, and died in Oakland County, Michigan. The Powers trace their ancestry back to William the Conqueror, and came from England to the American Colonies long before the Revolution.

Thomas H. Power was born near Farmington, Michigan, in 1830, and he died at Pontiac, Michigan, in 1902. He spent his whole life in Oakland County, and his mature years as a farmer. A republican of the old school, he was elected on his party ticket to several of the township offices, and was very prominent in his community. He married Lydia B. Stockwell, who was born in Redford Township, Oakland County, Michigan, died at Pontiac, Michigan, in 1884. Their children were as follows: Charles S., who is an oil operator, lives near Ossawatomie, Kansas; Walter J., who is a retired farmer, lives at Pontiac, Michigan; Doctor Power, whose name heads this review; Harry, who died at the age of fourteen years; Frank, who died at the age of eighteen years; and Louis, who is an overseer for Henry W. Ford, lives at Detroit, Michigan. After the death of his first wife, Thomas H. Power was married to Flora Perkins, who was born at Birmingham, Michigan, died at Owosso, Michigan, in 1919. They had one son, Frank, who lives at Pontiac, Michigan, where he is working as an automobile mechanic.

Wilber I. Power attended the rural schools of Oakland County, and the Pontiac, Michigan, High School, and then became a student of the State Agricultural College at Lansing, Michigan, from which he was graduated in 1885. In the meanwhile he earned sufficient money for his courses by teaching school in Oakland County and at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and was graduated from the Detroit College of Medicine in 1889, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. While at the Agricultural College he was a member of the Greek Letter Fraternity Delta Tau Delta. For the subsequent year Doctor Power was at St. Mary's Hospital at Detroit, Michigan, and then in 1890 he came West to Granite, Montana, where he was engaged in a general practice for two years. He then located permanently at Philipsburg, building up here a fine medical and surgical practice and has the distinction of being the pioneer in his profession in this city. He took a post graduate course in the New York City Post Graduate School in 1899, specializing on general medicine. Doctor Power has his offices in the Doe-McLeod Building on Broadway. Like his father, a republican, Doctor Power has served as coroner of Granite County for two terms and is now county physician, and city health commissioner for Philipsburg. For one term he was mayor of Philipsburg, and was the candidate of his party for state senator, but on account of the overwhelming democratic majority in this district, was defeated, although because of his personal popularity he ran way ahead of his ticket, in one election losing by only two votes, and the second time he ran, by five. He belongs to Flint Creek Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is past master, having served his lodge as master two terms; Hope Chapter No. 10, Royal Arch Masons, which he served as high priest for three terms; Pearl Chapter No. 14, Order of Eastern Star, of which he is past patron; Granite Camp, Woodmen of the World; Lincoln Homestead No. 559, Brotherhood of American Yeomen. Both as a private citizen and as chairman of the Granite County Chapter of the Red Cross, Doctor Power took a very active part in the war work, and in the Red Cross drives put Granite County over the top. Although not a member, he is serving the Philipsburg Presbyterian Church as a trustee. He is vice president and a director of the First State Bank of Philipsburg, and has been interested in the mining industry for many years, and has been very successful in his ventures in this line. Doctor Power owns a modern residence at Philipsburg, where he maintains his home.

In 1892 Doctor Power was married at Granite, Montana, to Miss Mary Williams, a step-daughter of Thomas Trevaille once postmaster of Granite, Montana, but now deceased. Mrs. Power died at Philipsburg in 1897 without issue. In 1898 Doctor Power was married second to Mrs. Marietta (Stockwell) Sewell, a daughter of Alva and Phoebe (Smead) Stockwell. Alva Stockwell was a commission merchant, who died at Paola, Kansas, but Mrs. Stockwell survives and lives at Paola. Doctor and Mrs. Power have no children, but Mrs. Power has a son by her first marriage, namely: H. F. Sewell, who is an attorney of Conrad, Montana. Doctor Power is one of the most representative men of this part of Montana, and is ranked among the eminent practitioners of his profession.

CHARLES E. O'NEILL. The law is known as a stern mistress, demanding of her devotees constant and unremitting attention and leading her followers through many mazes and intricacies before she grants them success at her hands. This incessant devotion frequently precludes the idea of the successful lawyer indulging in activities outside of the straight path of his profession, especially if his vocational duties are of large and important nature. Then again, some men have been led into the practice of the law through their connection with some other interests which necessitated a knowledge of the law along certain lines, and when this knowledge was gained, a desire was awakened to study still further and make the profession a life work. This latter was the case of Charles E. O'Neill, one of the successful attorneys of Butte, who became a lawyer through his initial studies with reference to banking law.

Charles E. O'Neill was born at Marshall, Missouri, on February 22, 1889, a son of William P. O'Neill. The latter was born in Canada in 1860, and is now residing at Miles City, Montana. While still a child he was brought to Missouri by his parents, and there he was reared, educated and married, and became a farmer of Marshall, Missouri. In 1907 he came to Montana and has since been a resident of Miles City, having extensive farming interests in its vicinity. He is a republican in politics and a Roman Catholc in religious faith. William P. O'Neill married Julia Devaney, born in Missouri in 1865, a daughter of John Devaney, born in Ireland in 1814. His wife was also born in Ireland and they were married in Missouri, where both died, he in 1900 and she in 1901. They were farming people. The children born to William P. O'Neill and his wife were as follows: Stella, who married Dr. F. P Mahon of St. Louis, Missouri, a dental surgeon; Charles E., who was second in order of birth; Ray Francis, who is a railroad employe of St. Louis, Missouri; and Florence, who married George Achmaker, formerly an importer of New York City, but now a resident of St. Louis, Missouri.

Charles E. O'Neill was reared at St. Louis and attended its schools, and in 1906 came to Miles City, Montana, and spent a year on a ranch in its vicinity. He then took a commercial course at the Butte Business College, specializing in stenography and bookkeeping, and in August, 1907, entered the Butte Commercial Bank, with which he learned the banking business, remaining with that concern until January 1, 1909, when he entered the First National Bank of Butte and continued with it until January 1, 1919, a period of ten years. During this time he became thoroughly posted with reference to banking of all kinds and banking law, and was admitted to the bar on June 11, 1919. He at once entered upon a general practice, and his offices are at Nos. 71-72 Owsley Building. Mr. O'Neill is independent in his political views. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he is connected with Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a third degree knight, and the Knights and Ladies of Security. At one time he belonged to the Butte Country Club.

In 1911 Mr. O'Neill was married at Butte to Miss Kathryn C. Sullivan, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Sullivan, both of whom are deceased, he having been a miner of Butte and a member of the police force, and came to the city during its pioneer epoch. Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill have three children, namely: Edalene Frances, who was born on November 6, 1913; Helen, who was born January 22, 1915; and Jack Charles, who was born on November 8, 1916. Although one of the recent additions to his profession, Mr. O'Neill has already proved his ability and is looked upon as one who will rise high in it, for he possesses the characteristics necessary for such advancement, being bold, independent and fearless, scorning petty tricks, fighting in the open for what he believes to be right. A man of sound judgment who weighs carefully both sides, he is certain of rendering impartial justice.

HAROLD C. TILZEY, serving his fourth term as county surveyor of Fergus County, has been a resident of Montana nearly seventeen years and is a civil engineer of long and thorough practical experience and training.

He was born on his father's homestead in Osborne County, Kansas, June 10, 1881, the oldest of the five children of Samuel and Minnie M. (Pitt) Tilzey. His father was born in England December 31, 1854, and came when a child with his parents to America, making the journey by sailing ship and landing in New York. From there the family went West to Iowa, where they were pioneers, and subsequently were identified with the pioneer settlement of Kansas. Samuel Tilzey grew to manhood in Kansas, engaged in farming in Osborne County for a number of years, and later became a buyer and shipper of cattle and hogs to the Omaha market. He was a republican in politics. His wife was born in Iowa September 28, 1861, and they were married in Kansas.

Harold C. Tilzey grew up in Northern Kansas and Southern Nebraska, and attended grammar and high schools at Geneva in the latter state. He has a military record, having enlisted when eighteen years old, September 20, 1899, in Company F of the Thirty-Ninth Regiment of United States Volunteers. He enlisted for a period of two years and was sent to the Philippines under command of Col. Robert L. Bullard. He was made corporal of Company F and served a little more than a year, being given his honorable discharge October 13, 1900. After his return Mr. Tilzey went to work in a hardware store at Geneva, and in 1902 came to Lewistown, Montana, and joined the Civil Engineering Department of the Montana Railway Company. In the fall of 1904 he went to California and was in the Civil Engineering Department of the Western Pacific Railway Company for one year. On returning to Montana he was employed on the survey of the transcontinental line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and his duties on that great trunk line required his time until the spring of 1908. He then took up the private practice of civil engineering at Moore in Fergus County, and in November of the same year was elected for his first term of county surveyor of Fergus County. He was re-elected in 1910 and then followed an interval in which he was again engaged in private practice. He was again elected county surveyor in 1916, and by re-election in 1918 is serving his fourth term. He is now serving as secretary and treasurer of the Montana Society of County Surveyors. He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Judith Club and Chamber of Commerce at Lewistown and in politics is a republican.

June 8, 1907, he married Anna M. Toomey, a native of Nebraska. Their five children are Katherine, Harold C., Jr., Dorothea M., Anna Beatrice and Effa M.

GRANT ROBINSON, postmaster at Lewistown, is a thorough Westerner, a native of California, and has been a miner and rancher, public official, and actively identified with the various affairs of Montana nearly thirty years.

He was born in Humboldt County, California, September 14, 1865, a son of William S. and Electa Lavina (Albee) Robinson. His father was born in Virginia in 1827 and died in 1905, was reared and educated in his native state, and in 1850 went to the California gold fields. After some experience as a miner he turned his attention to farming and stock raising and lived in California the rest of his life. During the war he was a Union democrat. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife was born in Michigan and died in 1918, at the age of seventy-two. They had eleven children, four sons and seven daughters, nine still living, and Grant Robinson was the second in age.

Grant Robinson acquired his education in the public schools of California and worked as a ranch hand during his early manhood. Coming to Montana in 1891 he located in Fergus County, and on May 12, 1897, was united in marriage to Ethel Culver, a native of Iowa. Her parents, George and Caroline Culver, came to Montana in 1891, settling on East Fork, near Lewistown. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson have one son, William Culver Robinson, who was born in 1906.

In 1901 Mr. Robinson bought a ranch on East Fork and operated it until 1908, in which year he was elected county treasurer and by reelection served four years. Mr. Robinson received his appointment as postmaster of Lewistown on May 20, 1913, and by reappointment in 1917 is in charge of the office for a second term. He is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of Helena, Montana. He is also a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

BENJAMIN LINCOLN PRICE. One of the convincing young attorneys of Yellowstone County, Montana, who possesses a distinct impulse toward the humanities among the leaders of thought, and has always been an inspiration for activities of the best sort, is engaged in the general practice of his profession at Laurel. He is a man not readily deceived in men or misled in measures, and is therefore an ideal person for public preferment, which fact his fellow citizens have recognized, for they placed him in the executive chair of their city government. Mr. Price was born in Wabash County, Illinois, July 12, 1882, and for a man of his years has achieved much. His paternal grandfather, William Price, born in Delaware in 1825, sought better opportunities for expansion by turning his face westward, as did his grandson some years later, and located at an early day in its history in Wabash County, Illinois, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there in 1897, having in the interval passed through some trying experiences as a pioneer of that region. After coming to Illinois he was married, the first name of his excellent wife being Melissa.

One of the sons of William and Melissa Price was Benjamin F. Price, born in Wabash County, Illinois, in 1852, and he became the father of Benjamin Lincoln Price, whose name heads this review. Benjamin F. Price was engaged in farming in Wabash County, Illinois, for many years, but is now living retired at Mount Carmel, Illinois. In politics he is a republican, and during 1900 was one of the census enumerators for his community. The Christian Church holds his membership and is a beneficiary of his generosity. Mr. Price is well known as a Mason. He was married to Olive Angeline Duty, born in Wabash County, Illinois, in 1858, and they became the parents of the following children: Flora B., who died at the age of two years; Harmon E., who is a physician and surgeon of Stockton, California, is a graduate of the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio; Benjamin Lincoln, who was third in order of birth; Emma, who married Clyde Lester, an oil operator, resides at Allendale, Illinois; Alfred M., who is a resident of Laurel, Montana, is now serving in the Army of Occupation at Luxemburg; Pearl, who married E. H. Dickson, a farmer, resides at Laurel, Montana; William F., who is a farmer, resides at Laurel, Montana; John D., who is in the radio branch of service in the United States Navy; Olive, who is in the surgeon general's office at Washington, District of Columbia; and Virgil, who is in the United States Navy.

Benjamin Lincoln Price after attending the rural schools of Wabash County, Illinois, attended the university at Valparaiso, Indiana, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Law. Appreciating the opening offered the alert young man in the West, Mr. Price came to Montana, and in the fall of 1908 established himself at Laurel, where he has since remained. Having been brought up in a home dominated by republican sentiments, he naturally affiliated himself with that party, and by his associates was placed on its ticket for mayor of Laurel in 1917, and elected by a gratifying majority. He served as chief executive of the city during 1917 and 1918 and gave his municipality a clean and businesslike administration. As a member of the Commercial Club of Laurel he takes part in the movements to better and advance the city, while professionally he belongs to the county and state bar associations. Laurel Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, has in him one of its most enthusiastic members. Mr. Price owns considerable property at Laurel and in Yellowstone County, including a comfortable modern residence on Sixth Avenue, and the building in which his office and a newspaper and bindery plant are located at Laurel, and a ranch of 600 acres of valuable land outside the city.

On January 6, 1909, Mr. Price was united in marriage with Miss Ibbie J. Fearheiley, at Mount Carmel, Illinois. Mrs. Price is a daughter of Jacob and Anna (Aborn) Fearheiley, residents of Mount Carmel, Illinois, Mr. Fearheiley being a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Price have three children, as follows: Lois E., who was born April 26, 1912; Byron L., who was born July 10, 1915; and Harold, who was born December 20, 1918. Mr. Price is a man who possesses those qualities which are conspicuous in the characters of the best citizens, and in his profession is admittedly one of the leading attorneys of Yellowstone County.

Lawrence Hauck. There are two lines of industry in any community of sufficient size to command outside attention, which exert an influence not easy to over-estimate, banking and the issuance of a newspaper. Through the medium of the first the stability and continuance of all business is assured, and the latter gives expression to the prevailing sentiment with reference to affairs both foreign and domestic, and bears an important part in shaping public opinion upon vital matters. When both these lines of such paramount importance are represented by one man, his value to his fellow citizens is a recognized asset, and his stand on any question is taken as authoritative. Lawrence Hauck, president of the First State Bank of Philipsburg, and editor and proprietor of the Mail, the oldest journal of this region, fully measures up to the standards above set forth, and is one of the most representative citizens of his part of the state.

Lawrence Hauck was born at Schweinfurt, Germany, December 22, 1867, a son of John and Lena (Koetzner) Hauck, also natives of the same place, the family having been located in that part of Germany for many generations. John Hauck was employed by the Imperial Government as roadmaster. Of his four children, Lawrence Hauck was the second in order of birth.

Until he was fifteen years old Lawrence Hauck remained at home and attended the schools of his native city. On August 1, 1883, he took passage for the United States, and upon his arrival in this country made his way direct to Montana. Although but a lad in years, he had been taught habits of industry and had no difficulty in securing employment in a ranch in Deerlodge County, on which he remained for three years. During that period he saved his money, instead of wasting it as did the majority of his associates, and when he had a sufficient amount used it for a course in Deerlodge College, earning what he needed in excess of his savings by hard labor during vacations and between terms. Having thus acquired, entirely through his own, unaided efforts, a thorough training in the language and other essentials of his adopted country, which extended over three years, Mr. Hauck worked for a year as a clerk and salesman for the leading green grocer of Philipsburg, L. W. Shodair. His experience with this concern enabled him to assume the duties of bookkeeper for Elling & Buford, general merchants of Virginia City, Montana, which he continued to discharge for three years. Mr. Hauck then returned to Philipsburg as head bookkeeper for the Freyschlag, Huffman and Company, proprietors of a large general merchandising concern, of which he also became a stockholder. Until this company discontinued business in 1894, Mr. Hauck remained in his responsible position, and at that time went with the First National Bank of Philipsburg, and was one of its efficient employes. This bank then liquidated, and Mr. Hauck purchased an interest in The Mail, his associates at that time being the Bryan brothers, but subsequently Mr. Hauck became the sole proprietor. Always a strong republican, Mr. Hauck took so aggressive a part in local affairs that he was the logical candidate for city treasurer and was elected to that office in August, 1899, by a gratifying majority, and held it for one term. During that same year he was appointed postmaster of Philipsburg and was reappointed, holding the office for eighteen years and giving to the people of Philipsburg an efficient and satisfactory administration. For about twelve years he served as chairman of the county central committee of his party and led it to many a notable victory. His fraternal connections are with the Masonic order, he being a member of Flint Creek Lodge No. 11, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and Hope Chapter No. 10, Royal Arch Masons.

Another achievement of Mr. Hauck which deserves special mention was his promotion of the First State Bank of Philipsburg, and his development of this into one of the sound financial institutions of the county. The bank was organized in 1912 with Mr. Hauck as its executive head, and Dr. W. I. Power as vice president and in 1918 E. E. Springer was appointed cashier. According to the last statement of this bank, its capital stock is $25,000; surplus and undivided profits, $70,000; individual deposits subject to checks, $330,000, with total deposits of $560,000. The total resources of the bank are over $600,000. The bank is located on the corner of Broadway and Sansom Street.

On August 28, 1893, Mr. Hauck was united in marriage with Miss Dora Kroger, a daughter of Charles and Anna Kroger of Philipsburg. Mr. and Mrs. Hauck have five children, Herman, who was born November 18, 1894. He is now associated with his father in the publication of The Mail; Catherine, attending the University at Missoula; Elsie and Dora, attending high school, and John attending public school.

As an editor Mr. Hauck has always displayed a fearless strength in handling public matters, and his reliability and clear, forceful manner of presenting facts have made his journal the exponent of his party and community. Unimpeachable and honorable as he is known to be, his stand upon any question is recognized as the correct one by the better class of citizens and few movements of any kind are inaugurated before he is consulted. A section which has a man of such strength of character in it as Mr. Hauck is sure to progress, and much of the present civic development of Philipsburg and Granite County is due to Mr. Hauck's energy and public spirit.

Charles E. Blankenhorn, M. D. Genius may be the motive power of success, but many who take the trouble to study the lives and leading characteristics of the men of the country who have accomplished something are led to believe that experience and sound judgment must be combined with natural inclination to produce the best results. In the majority of cases where a man has risen above his fellows it will be found that his rise has come gradually through persistent fighting in spite of all opposition. There are many qualities which help to form the character, such as self-reliance, conscientiousness, energy and honesty, and they all work together to produce the highest standing and most satisfactory rewards. The above is certainly true of the career of Dr. Charles E. Blankenhorn, specialist at the Murray Hospital of Butte.

In no other profession is the true character of a man brought out so prominently as that of medicine, and as he really is, so is he held by his professional associates and colleagues. All who have the honor of Doctor Blankenhorn's acquaintance admit that he is respected, honored and beloved not only by his associates, but by those to whom he has long been a ministering friend. Although Doctor Blankenhorn is still in the very prime of young manhood, he has so kept pace with the march of improvement and by personal experiment and investigations, as well as study and exhaustive reading, that he is classed with the most efficient and dependable of his profession. He is one of the physicians and surgeons of Montana who went into the service of their country when it had need of them, and his record as an officer is equal to that he is making in times of peace.

Doctor Blankenhorn was born at L'Anse, Michigan, on April 3, 1889, a son of Charles Peter Blankenhorn, born in 1847. A butcher by trade, Charles P. Blankenhorn lived at L'Anse, Michigan, and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, dying in the latter city in 1909. During the war between the states he served in the Union army, and Doctor Blankenhorn's action in enlisting during the late war was in accordance to his father's teachings and example. From the time he cast his first vote Charles P. Blankenhorn supported the candidates of the republican party. For many years the Methodist Episcopal Church had in him a faithful and liberal member. A Mason, Mr. Blankenhorn rose in his fraternity until he was a Knight Templar. He married Sarah Sageman, born in 1848, who survives him and lives at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Their children were as follows: Alice, who married L. B. Armstrong, a traveling sales manager, lives at Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Harry, who died at the age of fourteen years; Rose, who lives with her mother; Louise, who died in Milwaukee February 2, 1920; and Dr. Charles E.

Doctor Blankenhorn was graduated from the grammar and high schools of L'Anse, Michigan, completing his courses in the latter in 1907. A year later he matriculated at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and was in that institution for two years. After the death of his father he entered the University of Marquette at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and was graduated therefrom in 1913, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and as a member of the Greek Letter college fraternity Phi Rho Sigma.

From June 30, 1913, until June 13, 1914, Doctor Blankenhorn gained valuable experience as an interne in the Murray Hospital of Butte, and then entered upon a general practice with Dr. George W. Clay at Malta, Montana, this association being maintained until Doctor Blankenhorn enlisted in July, 1917, for service during the great war. He was commissioned a first lieutenant and was sent overseas with the Sixteenth Ambulance Corps, Second Division, arriving in France in February, 1918. In July, 1918, he was invalided home, and was mustered out of the service on December 10, 1918. Returning to Montana, he became a physician of the Murray Hospital, specializing in a genito-urinary practice. He has taken post-graduate work at Rochester, New York, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and Chicago, Illinois, perfecting himself in the specialty he has selected for his practice.

The residence of Doctor Blankenhorn is at No. 701 West Granite Street. In political matters he is an independent, not being willing to tie himself down by party connections. The Methodist Episcopal Church affords him a medium for the expression of his religious views. He belongs to Malta Lodge No. 57, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Malta, Montana; Helena Consistory of Helena, Montana, in which he was made a thirty-second degree Mason; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena. His professional affiliations are those he maintains with the Silver Bow Medical Society.

In 1914 Doctor Blankenhorn was married at Helena, Montana, to Miss Grace Jones, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Jones. Mr. Jones is a rancher and stockman of Malta, Montana, but Mrs. Jones is deceased. Mrs. Blankenhorn was educated at the Montana State University at Missoula, Montana, and the State University of the State of Washington. Doctor and Mrs. Blankenhorn have two children, namely: June, who was born on June 4, 1916; and Charles Edward, who was born on February 14, 1918.

Doctor Blankenhorn's strongly marked personal characteristics and decided ability have made him popular in medical circles, and wherever he is known he is held in high esteem. His professional service has ever been discharged with a keen sense of conscientious obligation, and his work is bringing him ample and very gratifying recompense.

JEFFERSON H. AKINS. In any developing community, whether it be emerging from the wilderness or being transferred from village into city the changing conditions offer splendid returns for foresight and business sagacity. The merchant who has the faculty to foresee the strategic commercial situation may claim a conquest just as he who shrewdly secured advantage in martial strife. It was largely through his ability to recognize where trade would develop that placed Jefferson H. Akins upon the high road to business success and prominent position, and for the past eighteen years his Golden Rule Store has been one of the leading establishments of its kind at Lewistown.

Mr. Akins is a product of the agricultural community of Cedar County, Missouri, where he was born on his father's farm September 16, 1867, a son of John and Mary Jane (Halbert) Akins. His father was born in Tennessee in 1835, and died at Humansville, Missouri, in 1910, at the age of seventy-five years, and his mother, a native of Missouri, passed away there in 1914, being seventy-six years of age at the time of her demise. They were the parents of ten children, of whom nine are living, and Jefferson H. was the seventh in order of birth. John Akins was still a lad when his family decided to remove from Tennessee to Missouri, and his boyhood was passed in the latter state, where his young manhood experienced the scenes and incidents occurring during the troubulous days leading up to the final outburst which culminated in the great Civil war. As a farmer and breeder of stock he passed his industrious and useful career, and when he passed away his community lost a good citizen. He was first a whig in his political views and later a republican, and throughout his life was a faithful and liberal member of the Baptist Church, of which Mrs. Akins was also a member.

Jefferson H. Akins attended the public schools of Cedar County, Missouri, and remained on the home farm until he reached the age of twenty years. Up to this time his experiences had been entirely of an agricultural nature, principally in assisting his father, but now he received his introduction to mercantile affairs as a clerk in the general store of his brother, T. J. Akins, at Humansville, Missouri, his salary being $25 per month. Mr. Akins continued to assimilate experience and to perfect himself in business methods until 1896, when he embarked in a general merchandise business at Fair Play, Missouri, remaining in that community until 1900, with a fair degree of success. He next spent one year at Deer Lodge, Montana, and in 1901 came to Lewistown, which has since been the scene of his activities and his success. The Golden Rule Store, as his establishment is known, has grown from modest proportions to be one of the leaders in its line in the city, carrying a full stock of up-to-date goods, which are attractively arranged and moderately priced. As a business man Mr. Akins has shown himself possessed of marked qualifications, and his courteous treatment of his patrons has done much to attract business to his establishment and to make him personally popular. He is well known in Masonic circles, being a member of Lewistown Lodge, No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons; Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knight Templar; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena; and is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His political faith causes him to support republican candidates and principles.

On June 10, 1894, Mr. Akins was united in marriage with Miss Louise Cresap, who was born in Saline County, Missouri, daughter of William P. and Julia (Porter) Cresap, who had six children, Mrs. Akins being the eldest. Mr. Cresap, who was a farmer, a democrat, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at the age of seventy-six years, and his widow is now living with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Akins. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Akins: Bohnda, Jerre H., Marion, Willard and Bruce. Bohnda is the wife of R. E. Dockery, who enrolled at Camp Lewis in the U. S. service in September, 1917. He had received his commission as second lieutenant of field artillery, but surrendered this commission in order to go to France as one of the 200 men selected for advanced artillery work at the front. He has since received his second lieutenant's commission and is now with the Seventy-Seventh Artillery known as the "New York's Own," in France.

G. E. Settergren. One of the solid and reliable young business men of Laurel, Montana, is G. E. Settergren, city treasurer and proprietor of the leading furniture and undertaking establishment in this section of the state, and he has won his place in public confidence through his own unaided efforts. He is a man who deserves the approval of his associates, for his career has been marked by uprightness, industry and thrift, and he has discharged the duties of the several offices to which he has been elected with fidelity and ability. Mr. Settergren was born at Litchfield, Minnesota, January 7, 1882, a son of C. J. and Matilda Settergren, natives of Sweden, the former born in 1831 and the latter in 1834. They were reared, educated and married in Sweden, where he was a farmer. In 1866 they came to the United States, and after a year spent in Indiana, came on west to Minnesota, where he engaged in farming, but later built a tannery at Litchfield, Minnesota, and conducted it for fifteen years. Selling that tannery, he built another at Baldwin, Wisconsin, and a third at Cokato, Minnesota, after selling the one at Baldwin. Finally he sold his last tannery, retired and spent his last days at Litchfield, Minnesota, where he died in 1900. In politics he was a republican. The Episcopal Church held his membership. He and his wife had the following children: Charles, who is in a real estate business at Baldwin, Wisconsin; G. A., who is a retired hardware merchant of Litchfield, Minnesota; F. E., who is a hardware merchant of Baraboo, Wisconsin; J. W., who is a hardware merchant of Grove City, Minnesota; Mary, who is the twin sister of J. W., married Joseph McCarty, a car inspector, and lives at Lewistown, Montana; Matilda, who married A. W. T. Anderson, a merchant of Emigrant, Montana; and G. E., whose name heads this review. The mother died in 1908.

G. E. Settergren attended the public schools of Cokato, Minnesota, and Minneapolis, Minnesota, and also took a business course at a night school. He learned the fundamentals of business life as a clerk in the store of Settergren Brothers at Litchfield, Minnesota, where he remained during 1899, and then, in 1900, came to Montana, and continued clerking for a year more at Livingston, this state. He then found an opportunity to put to practical use the knowledge he had acquired at business college, and acted as a bookkeeper for a year. For the subsequent two years he conducted a mercantile business at Gardiner, Montana, and then in 1905 moved to Laurel, where he was in a general mercantile business until the fall of 1906. At that time he assisted in organizing the Laurel Trading Company, which he served as president until 1908, when he sold his interests and embarked in his present business, expanding it until he has the largest and most perfectly equipped furniture and undertaking establishment in this part of Montana. He owns the building in which his store is located, which has a first floor area of 30 x 100 feet, with a large balcony, and a warehouse in the rear, which is located at the corner of First Avenue and First Street, as well as a modern residence in which he maintains his home. Mr. Settergren owns an interest in a furniture store at Columbus, Montana.

In 1905 Mr. Settergren was married at Litchfield, Minnesota, to Miss Delia Swanson, a daughter of C. O. Swanson, a retired contractor of Litchfield. Mrs. Swanson is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Settergren have three children, namely: Maxwell, who was born January 6, 1907; Doris, who was born January 8, 1910; and Marguerite, who was born March 15, 1913. In politics a stanch republican, Mr. Settergren has been called upon to represent his party upon several occasions, and is now discharging the responsible duties pertaining to the office of city treasurer. He is also on the school board, and has served as a member of the City Council of Laurel. Brought up in the Episcopal Church, he has long been one of its communicants. Fraternally he is a member of Laurel Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Consistory and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; Laurel Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Laurel Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. As one of the enthusiastic members of the Laurel Commercial Club he has been instrumental in drawing outside capital to the city and in bringing the importance and desirability of the city before the public, as well as arousing a proper amount of civic pride among its residents. As a business man he is upright and honorable, and in the undertaking branch of his establishment he displays those qualities so necessary in one who is called in at the saddest moment, and upon whose skill and sympathetic handling of affairs depends the dignity of the occasion. He takes a pride in keeping abreast of the times in his equipment, and guarantees that all the fittings and ceremonies will be of a nature to show the deepest respect to the dead and furnish comfort to the sorrowing relatives.

M. Savage is junior partner of the Perkins-Savage Lumber Company of Billings, to which city he came in the fall of 1914 from Napoleon, North Dakota.

His father, M. Savage, was one of the early pioneers in Minnesota Territory. He was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1823, came to the United States in 1848, at the age of twenty-five, lived in Boston for a time, then worked in the South in Tennessee and in Indiana, where he married, and in 1854 settled on the Minnesota frontier in Scott County, and he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. Mr. Savage moved to South Dakota and died at South Shore in that state. He was a democrat and a Catholic. His wife, Mary Long, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1845, and died at Milbank, South Dakota, in 1913. Their children were: Richard, a resident of Milbank, South Dakota; Nellie, wife of H. W. Pratt, a rancher and sheep man and proprietor of a large laundry at Delta, Colorado; M. Savage, Jr.; James, a rancher at Ingomar, Montana; and John W., who was a contractor and died at Milbank, South Dakota, in 1905.

M. Savage was educated in the rural schools of Scott County, Minnesota, and at the age of sixteen left his father's home and farm and made the best of circumstances and opportunities. He acquired a good education, largely through practical experience. For three years he was a farmer in South Shore, South Dakota, taught school in that state for six years, and from 1900 to 1905 was a buyer for the Northwestern Elevator Company at South Shore. Following that he spent one year with the North Dakota Horse and Cattle Company at Rugby, North Dakota, and from the spring of 1906 until August, 1913, was actively engaged in the hardware business at Napoleon, North Dakota, also in the grain and banking business, following which he spent a year in winding up the affairs of the firm.

Since coming to Billings he has been an active partner in the Perkins-Savage Lumber Company, Montana. Mr. Savage resides at 321 North Thirty-first Street. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Catholic Church and a third degree Knight of Columbus, affiliated with Bismarck Council, and also belongs to Billings Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America and Napoleon Lodge of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. In 1902, at Webster City, Iowa, he married Miss Teressa J. Kelly, daughter of John L. and Catherine (Bonner) Kelly. Her father was a farmer in Iowa for many years and died while living retired at Webster City, where her mother is still living.

Carl B. Ross. It is only natural that the younger communities of the country should attract to them men just entering upon their business careers as they have the courage and enthusiasm which seek an outlet into unchartered seas. In those sections where but little has yet been accomplished, opportunities are many and the young man can hew out his own way unrestricted by the traditions of those who have already blazed a path. Granite County has many of these alert, competent young men who are putting into their work every ounce of their strength and determination, and one of them is Carl B. Ross, cashier of the Granite County Bank of Hall.

Carl B. Ross, was born at Leesburg, Indiana, August 11, 1892, a son of M. Ross, and a member of one of the old-established families of this country, which traces back to English and Scotch origin, and was founded in the Colony of Virginia in pre-Revolutionary times. M. Ross was born in Indiana in 1855, and was there engaged in farming for many years, before he retired. In 1910 he came to Montana and for a time operated in Hill County as a rancher, but once more retired and is now living at Chester. He is a democrat in his political belief and resolute in adherring to his convictions. The Methodist Episcopal Church affords him a medium for the expression of the religious side of his nature. His wife, who was Miss Elizabeth Adaline Taylor prior to her marriage, was born in Indiana in 1860. Their children are as follows: J. J., who is a farmer of Joplin, Montana; Laotha, who married E. P. Scott, a rancher of San Jose, California; George W., who is a rancher of Chester, Montana; Laomer, who served in the World war, being overseas in the medical department for two years, was recently mustered out of the army, and is now at home with his parents; Carl B., whose name heads this review; and Virgil, who is a rancher of Chester, Montana.

Carl B. Ross attended the schools of Leesburg, Indiana, and the Chester, Montana, high school, from which he was graduated in 1912, following which he entered the Inverness, Montana, State Bank as assistant cashier, and held that position for two years, and then began ranching, and was so engaged when he was mustered into the service in April, 1918, and was sent to Fort Missoula, where he was in training until December, 1918, at which time he was mustered out.

Returning home he was made secretary and cashier of the Granite County State Bank of Hall, entering upon the discharge of his duties in January, 1919. He is one of the most efficient men in his line in this part of Montana, as well as one of the most popular. Like his father he is a democrat and Methodist. He belongs to Ruby Lodge No. 36, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Drummond, Montana, and the American Legion. In addition to his connection with the bank at Hall, Mr. Ross is a director of the Drummond Light & Power Company.

On January 1, 1920, Mr. Ross married Frances Kennedy, a daughter of M. Kennedy, a prominent miner of Butte, Montana. Like the majority of the young men of the country, he cheerfully turned from the paths of peace when the country needed his services, and only the signing of the armistice prevented his seeing active service.

John J. Burke, a native of Butte, was born June 30, 1891, a son of James Burke, who emigrated from Ireland to New York City, from there going to Panama and Mexico, then up the coast to California, finally becoming a pioneer mining man of Idaho and Montana, and dying in Butte, Montana, June 25, 1896, leaving besides his son, a widow and one daughter, now Mrs. Julia McMullen.

After attending public and parochial schools, Mr. Burke attended the Butte High School for a period of three years, at the end of which time he entered the employ of the Hennessy Company, Centerville Branch, as a credit man. Leaving that company in 1909, he became associated with the Butte Water Company, where he was employed for seven years. In 1916 he was appointed manager of the New Method Laundry Company at Butte, and later became vice president and director, positions which he still holds. In 1918 Mr. Burke enlisted in the United States army service as a private in the Coast Artillery Corps, was mustered out and returned to

Leo Ornstein

Butte in January, 1919, when he was appointed assistant cashier of the Silver Bow National Bank, later being elected a director of that institution, which position he occupies today.

He is prominent in business circles, being a member of the Butte Chamber of Commerce, Butte Rotary Club, Butte Advertising Club and Laundry-owners' National Association.

Fraternally he is a member of the Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus (of which he was treasurer for a number of years), Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is also identified with the Silver Bow Club, Rocky Mountain Rifle Club, Army League, Navy League, American National Red Cross and American Legion.

Mr. Roehl was born on a ranch in Saline County, Nebraska, December 28, 1884, a son of William F. and Paulina (Fandery) Roehl. His parents are now living at Friend, Nebraska, the father at the age of seventy-three and the mother at sixty-nine. Edward is fourth in a family of six children, four of whom are still living, three sons and one daughter. His father came to this country when a small boy and grew up and was married in Wisconsin. He became a pioneer in Nebraska, buying government land and becoming an extensive stock raiser and cattle feeder and shipper. He also served on the school board and has been an active republican for many years.

Edward R. Roehl grew up on the Nebraska farm, spending the first twenty years of his life there. Before coming to Montana he was a successful advertising man in the employ of several well known publications in the Middle West. He first traveled for the Iowa Homestead, one of the chief farm journals of the Middle West. Later he represented the Capper publications of Topeka, Kansas, in the commercial and livestock advertising department.

On coming to Montana in 1912 Mr. Roehl located at Lewistown and engaged in the automobile business, selling Ford cars. He is head of a very successful and thriving business.

Mr. Roehl married, February 14, 1912, Miss Merna Aller. She was born on her father's farm in Saline County, Nebraska. They have one daughter, Judith. JO R. NORTH, in the real estate business at Billings since 1894, has been a prominent factor in the affairs of that city and has contributed much to the prestige of the family name in Montana.

Mr. North was born at Adel, Iowa, October 27, 1876. His ancestors came from England and were colonial settlers in Virginia and were of the same family as Lord North. Thomas R. North, father of J. R., was born in Ohio in 1838, went as a young man to Iowa, was married in that state, and had a long and active practice as an attorney at law in several states. He moved to Warsaw, Indiana, in 1908, and is still living there, retired. During the Civil war he served as a Union soldier but in politics has been a democrat. He served as mayor of the town of Adel in Iowa and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Thomas R. North by his first marriage has a daughter, Sarah M., living at Medford, Oregon, widow of John H. Whitman, a former abstractor. For his second wife he married Naomi Stewart, who was born in 1842 and died at Medford, Oregon, in 1888. Her children were: Etta, unmarried, and living at Racine, Wisconsin; Austin, a business man at Billings; J., also a resident of Billings; Alice, living at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, widow of Thomas Milliken, a former merchant; Jo R.; and Oto, associated with his brother Jo in the real estate business at Billings. Thomas R. North married for his third wife Laura B. Abbott, who was born in Ohio and is the mother of a daughter, Ava, living at Warsaw, Indiana, wife of Frank T. Simcoke, a railway mail clerk.

Jo R. North attended the public schools of Adel, Iowa, graduating from high school in 1894, in which year he came to Billings. In 1897-98 he returned to Iowa to attend the Capital City Business College at Des Moines. Their only son, Everett W., was born August 13, 1906.

LEO A. HENTER. A young man of eminent ability and discrimination, Leo A. Henter, of Broadview, has had broad and valuable experience in banking, and while employed in this business has developed great aptitude for dealing with financial matters. He was born at Conway, North Dakota, January 22, 1891, of German ancestry on both sides of the house.

His father, Frank Henter, was born in 1836, in Germany, and was there a resident until eighteen years of age. Immigrating then to the United States, he lived for a short time in Chicago, after which he spent a few years at St. Paul and at St. Cloud, Minnesota, where he wooed and won a fair bride. Removing from there to North Dakota, he became a pioneer settler of Fargo, building the first hotel on Broadway and erecting one of the first two houses of that thoroughfare. Three years later he took up a homestead claim at Conway, North Dakota, and in the thirty-four years that he occupied it made improvements of value and note. He now owns 640 acres of highly improved land, including his original homestead property, but is living retired from the activities of life at Henderson, Minnesota. He is identified with the democratic party in politics, and is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He married Johannah Schmitt, who was born in Germany in 1839, a daughter of William Schmitt, who emigrated with his family from Germany to St. Cloud, Minnesota, where his children were reared and educated. Of the eleven children born of their union, two died in infancy, the others being as follows: John, a farmer, died in St. Paul, Minnesota, aged forty-five years; Anna, wife of Peter Norton, a farmer in Conway, North Dakota; Frank, engaged in farming at Conway; Christ, of Broadview, Montana, a farmer; Michael, of St. Cloud, Minnesota, is in the employ of the Great Northern Railway Company; Peter, a well known agriculturist of Broadview, Montana; Joseph, also engaged in farming at Broadview; Isabel, living with her parents; and Leo A.

Acquiring his preliminary education in North Dakota, Leo A. Henter first attended the rural schools of Walsh County, later taking a course of study at the agricultural college in Fargo, and in 1908 graduated from a business college in St. Paul, Minnesota. Returning to the parental homestead, he assisted his father on the farm for a year. On August 8, 1909, Mr. Henter embarked in the banking business at Lankin, North Dakota, beginning at the foot of the ladder of attainments as bookkeeper and stenographer. Proving himself worthy of promotion, he was transferred to Eckman, North Dakota, and was there assistant cashier of the First State Bank until 1915. Removing then to Lambert, Montana, Mr. Henter was for two years assistant of the First State Bank of that place, and the following year was deputy bank examiner, a position to which he was appointed by Governor Stewart. Locating at Broadview in March, 1918, Mr. Henter has since served ably and acceptably as vice president of the Mutual State Bank, of which he is also manager. This bank has a capital stock of $20,000, and a surplus fund of $20,000, it being one of the substantial institutions of the county, and its officers are as follows: Herman Lehfeldt, president; Leo A. Henter, first vice president; William Spidel, second vice president; and N. C. Shepard, cashier. Mr. Henter has also other interests of a business nature, being vice president of the Broadview Hardware Company, and owning a ranch situated twelve miles west of Broadview. Politically he is a democrat, and religiously he belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a third degree Knight in Minot Council No. 1150, at Minot, North Dakota; and is a member of Fordville Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, at Fordville, North Dakota.

Mr. Henter married in 1914, at Bottineau, North Dakota, Miss Irene Nelson, a daughter of Charles and Margaret Nelson. Her father, who was in the livery and draying business for many years, died while yet in the prime of life, and her mother is now living at Grand Forks, North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Henter have one child, Virginia Isabel, born March 1, 1917.

ALBERT TINKLEPAUGH, president of the Granite County Bank and retired ranchman, is one of the substantial men of Hall, and well known all over Granite County. The Granite County Bank is an all-round financial institution, with commercial, savings, trust and real estate loan departments; a personal service bank, and is built on congenial, democratic lines. It makes people feel at home. It earns good-will and holds it, and feeling its obligations, fulfills them. This bank was established in 1913 as a state bank, and has a capital stock of $20,000 and an adequate surplus. Its officials are: Albert Tinklepaugh, president; Jesse H. Henderson, vice president; and Carl B. Ross, cashier. The directors are: Albert Tinklepaugh, Alex Wight, Gust Johnson, J. A. Featherman, H. J. Kolbeck, Jesse H. Henderson and Alfred Johnson.

Albert Tinklepaugh was born in County Brant, Canada West, June 8, 1845, a son of William N. Tinklepaugh, and grandson of Peter Tinklepaugh, a native of Pennsylvania, who died in Steuben County, Indiana, in 1848. The Tinklepaugh family came to Pennsylvania from Germany, some time prior to the American Revolution. William N. Tinklepaugh was born in Pennsylvania in 1821, and died in what was then Deerlodge County, but is now Granite County, near the present site of Hall, in 1895. After he reached maturity in his native state he went to New York City and learned the trade of cabinetmaker, and following it in different places, was a resident of Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dominion of Canada, residing in the latter country but a few years. In 1890 he came to the present Granite County, and remained here until claimed by death. In politics he was a republican. A strong Baptist he was always an active supporter of the local denomination of his faith wherever he lived. His wife bore the maiden name of Mary Swift and she was born in New York State in 1823. Her death occurred at Hall in 1898. Their children were as follows: Albert, whose name heads this review; Charles, who came to Montana in 1873, was one of the pioneers in this part of the state and is now a ranchman of Drummond; Levi, who died in Minnesota at the age of twenty-four years; Ellen M.; who resides at Rollins, Montana, is the widow of the late Perry Engles, a veteran of the war between the states, who died in a soldiers' home at Thompson Falls, Montana; Morton, who was a rancher in the vicinity of Hall, died in 1893; and Lodema, who married Duncan Dingwall, pioneer merchant of Drummond, Montana, where they reside.

Albert Tinklepaugh went to school in Wisconsin, and left home when he was seventeen years and six months old to enlist in the defense of his country in the Sixty-Sixth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, in 1863, and served from then on until the close of the war. That period of stress and hardship made men out of mere boys, and following his discharge Albert Tinklepaugh went to Minnesota and was engaged in ranching in that state until 1880, when he came to Montana and bought 160 acres of railroad land, to which he later added 40 acres, in the vicinity of the present site of Hall, and here he was engaged in ranching until 1914, when he sold his property, and has since lived retired. He has been president of the Granite County Bank since 1915, and his association with this institution gives it added solidity.

In 1868 Mr. Tinklepaugh was married at Preston, Fillmore County, Minnesota, to Miss Christie Carnagie, a daughter of John and Jane (McGowan) Carnagie, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Carnagie was a farmer and machinist during his younger years, but later on in life became a jeweler. Mr. and Mrs. Tinklepaugh became the parents of the following children: Eva M., who married F. W. Herring, a locomotive engineer, now deceased, lives at Philipsburg, Montana; Freeman, who is a general worker of Hall; and Maude, who died at the age of twenty-seven years.

Mr. Tinklepaugh belongs to Ruby Lodge No. 36, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and to Burnside Post, Grand Army Republic of Philipsburg. An unsafe bank is a reflection upon the intelligence of a community. People cannot carry their money on their persons for the transaction of large business deals. They have to have banking institutions, and the community which allows the use of the word "bank" by any other than a regulated institution is reckless. Judged by this, the people of Hall have displayed proper foresight in giving their support to a bank of the character of the Granite County Bank, which is an institution fit for the confidence of its depositors and those otherwise transacting business through its medium. The present sound conditions of this bank is due to the efforts of the men connected with its operation, and they take pride in the fact that its patrons regard it as their ideal of a financial institution.

Lucian Heath Sutton is a native son of Montana, and is a young business man of much enterprise and has given his home city of Hamilton its chief theatrical and amusement assets. Mr. Sutton has been in the theater business for several years, and his experience in business affairs has been rather wide and extended, showing his versatile gifts.

He was born at Helena, November 12, 1892. His father, George L. Sutton, was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1862, was reared in that city, and in 1890 came to Montana. He lived at Helena, later at Bozeman where he was manager of the Bozeman Hotel, and in 1897 moved to Tacoma, where he continued the hotel business. Since 1914 he has been a hotel man in Seattle. He is a republican and a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Lucian Heath Sutton was the only child of his parents. His mother was Elizabeth Hamm, who was born in Missouri in 1869 and died at Helena in 1893. Mr. Sutton grew up in the home of his maternal grandparents. His grandfather William Hamm was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in 1843, of English ancestry and the son of a Methodist minister in Ontario. William Hamm was a widely known and prominent Montana pioneer. He grew up in his native province, was married in Missouri, and in the early days came to Montana, first to Fort Benton and then to Helena. He was a practical lumberman, and as head sawyer was connected with a number of lumber mills in the forests of the Bitter Root Valley and all over Montana. Later he settled at Helena where he owned a residence, and in 1909 retired to Tacoma. In 1916 he established a home at Hamilton, where he died September 3, 1919. In 1898 he served as a constable in Helena. He was a republican in politics. William Hamm married Margaret Rhodes, who was born in Missouri in 1852 and is now living at Hamilton.

Lucian Heath Sutton acquired his early education in the public schools of Helena, finished the sophomore year in the Montana Wesleyan University in that city, and in 1907-08 attended Helena Business College. The first year after leaving school he was employed in the offices of Wallace, Brown & Gaines, a prominent firm of lawyers of Helena, then division counsel for the Northern Pacific Railway. For six months he was with the Griffin Wheel Company at Tacoma, Washington, following which he was stenographer and law clerk for E. C. Day at Helena eighteen months, and for three years, beginning in 1912, was in the grain brokerage business at Seattle. In 1915 Mr. Sutton became private secretary to T. F. Ryan, president of the Ryan Fruit Company.

Mr. Sutton opened the Grand Theater, formerly the Lucas Opera House, at Hamilton, in November, 1916. Under his management this has become one of the leading amusement places in Western Montana. In September, 1917, he also acquired the Star Theater. He conducted these houses alternately, one as a summer theater and the other for the winter season. In May, 1919, after extensive remodeling he reopened the Star as the Liberty Theater, an exclusive motion picture house. This is the best equipped and best patronized theater in Ravalli County.

Mr. Sutton is affiliated with Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hamilton Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, Crusade Commandery No. 17, Knights Templar, Ravalli Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, and Ravalli Aerie No. 1693, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

February 8, 1910, at Townsend, Montana, Mr. Sutton married Miss Isabella M. Hartwig, daughter of W. J. and Isabelle (Burke) Hartwig, residents of Helena, where her father is proprietor of the Antlers Theater. Mr. and Mrs. Sutton have three children: Lucian Heath, Jr., born May 12, 1911; William J., born December 12, 1912; and Isabella M., born August 23, 1916.

Daniel James Burke. During the last twenty years Daniel James Burke, now a resident of Lewistown, has built hundreds of miles of steam and electric railways and has done contracting all over the Northwest country. Large corporations know that the organization of Daniel J. Burke is capable of carrying out any contract it undertakes, and Mr. Burke would be fully justified in feeling pride and satisfaction in the great volume of business he has transacted.

His career has been one of real self achievement, beginning in humble circumstances and today enjoying a splendid position in the business affairs of Montana. He was born on a farm in Wallace Township, LaSalle County, Illinois, six miles north of Ottawa, September 9, 1864. His father, Thomas Burke, who spent his active life as an Illinois farmer, was born in Roscrea, Tipperary, Ireland, in 1837, son of Daniel and Catherine (McGrath) Burke, who came to America in 1840 and were pioneers in the locality north of Ottawa, Illinois, where Daniel J. Burke was born. Thomas Burke, who died April 15, 1901, at the age of sixty-four, his death being the result of an injury received by the kick of a horse, was married November 1, 1860, at St. Columba's Catholic Church in Ottawa, to Mary O'Shea. She was the mother of four children: Catherine, who died at the age of twenty-two months; Daniel J.; John J., who was born November 20, 1865, and lives at Marseilles in LaSalle County, Illinois; and the fourth child died at its birth with its mother on October 8, 1868, when she was twenty-eight years of age. Thomas Burke married for his second wife on February 1, 1872, Mary McCluskey.

Daniel James Burke spent his life on a farm in Northern Illinois, and secured a limited education in the country schools. Soon after reaching his majority he left Ottawa, on February 1, 1886, went to Friend, Nebraska, in the fall of the same year to Schuyler, Nebraska, and on being without capital and with an experience largely limited to the farm he accepted whatever employment he could get. In the spring of 1890 he was made night police at Schuyler, and after a year was appointed chief of police and street commissioner, an office he filled creditably for two years.

The work that paved the way for his larger business career began in 1893, when he was made special agent and claim agent for the Burlington Railroad at Alliance, Nebraska. He was with that railroad until February, 1900, with headquarters at Alliance. At that date he opened a small lumber yard at Bayer, Nebraska. Mr. Burke on March 17, 1900, bought a thirty-team grading outfit from Mile Elmore, then working at Vance, Nebraska, for the Burlington Railroad, and since that date has followed railroad building. His operations as a railroad contractor have been in the states of Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Iowa, Idaho and Montana. The first contract he handled was for the Burlington and Missouri River Railway, part of the Burlington system. He did work for the same company in Iowa, and on April 14, 1906, moved the first dirt at Carterville on the new transcontinental line of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul. This was on the line between Mobridge and the coast. He was actively engaged on this construction until 1909. Mr. Burke then moved his contracting organization for the building of the Northern Pacific line between Rosebud and Miles City, as far as the Bozeman Tunnel. In 1912 he built the Gallatin Valley Electric Railway, now part of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul system. He also constructed the electric railway between Bozeman and Salesville, a distance of twenty miles.

Mr. Burke has had his home and business headquarters at Lewistown since 1912, and since then has constructed 123 miles of railroad in Fergus County alone. He has also added to the resources of Lewistown as a business city, having erected a first class public storage and warehouse building at a cost of $75,000. He is one of the heavy stockholders in the First National Bank and served the bank as director in 1917-18. He belongs to only one organization, the Elks Lodge No. 961, at Alliance, Nebraska. He is a democrat and in religion a Catholic.

Horace A. Weld. Prominent among the representative citizens of Yellowstone County is Horace A. Weld, vice president and cashier of the First National Bank of Broadview. Possessing an unlimited amount of energy and business sagacity, he has the keen perceptive faculties and the grasp of mind that has enabled him to meet great emergencies in the fields of finance, as was proved by his masterly handling of the various Liberty Loan and other drives during the recent World war. Coming from thrifty New England stock, he was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, January 29, 1867, a son of J. O. Weld. His grandfather, Orin Weld, born in 1807, died at Coleraine, Vermont, in 1849, in that part of New England in which the immigrant ancestor of the Weld family settled on coming from Wales to the United States in colonial days.

J. O. Weld was born in 1835, in Coleraine, Vermont, and among its rugged hills grew to a sturdy manhood. As a young man, anticipating the advice of Horace Greeley, he made his way to Minnesota, and while in the employ of J. Dean built the pioneer saw mill of that now flourishing city. Subsequently embarking in business for himself, he was there successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits for a quarter of a century. He is now living retired from active cares, his home being on the shores of the beautiful Lake Minnetonka at Mound, Minnesota. He invariably casts his ballot in favor of the republican party, and is a member and liberal supporter of the Fourth Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic organization, being the oldest Mason in the state, and the only surviving charter member of Minneapolis Lodge No. 19, at the present time, however, belonging to Plymouth Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons. For the past fourteen years Plymouth Lodge has celebrated the anniversary of his being raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. He married, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, Eliza Ann Moore, who was born in Holyoke, Massachusetts, in 1840, and to them four children have been born, as follows: Jennie V., wife of William P. Cleator, of Minneapolis, a member of the Sawyer-Cleator Lumber Company; Ellen, who married Carey Emerson, a whole sale grocery broker at Minneapolis, died in middle life; Horace A.; and Frankie O., who died in infancy.

Soon after his graduation from the Minneapolis High School in 1884, Horace A. Weld secured a position as messenger boy in the City Bank of Minneapolis, and proving himself faithful to his duties in that capacity he was promoted to teller, which position he held eleven years. For two years thereafter he was teller and detail man at the Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis. In 1888 Mr. Weld made a decided change of occupation and residence, going to Alaska, where for a year he was affiliated with the Ladue Gold Mining and Developing Company, later being engaged in mercantile pursuits on his own account for seven years.

Locating at Seattle, Washington, in 1896, Mr. Weld was employed in the purchasing and forwarding industry for eighteen months, after which he was there associated with the National Bank of Commerce for two years, having charge of the savings department. Subsequently, in partnership with Stanley Scearce, he started the First National Bank of Ronan, Montana, and served as its cashier until 1911. Mr. Weld then became affiliated with the First National Bank of Carrington, North Dakota, where he remained as assistant cashier for four years. Coming from there to Broadview, Montana, in January, 1916, he organized the First National Bank of Broadview, which has a capital stock of $25,000 and a surplus fund of $5,000, the officers of the bank being as follows: C. L. Grandin, of Minneapolis, president; and H. A. Weld, vice president and cashier.

Active in public affairs and an influental member of the republican ranks, Mr. Weld served as town treasurer at Carrington, North Dakota, and is now a member and president of the Broadview Council. During all of the Liberty Loan drives during the late war he was at the forefront, serving in each instance as chairman of the local committees, and each time going over the top. As chairman of the Council of Defense he willingly gave his time and personal attention to the duties devolving upon him in that capacity, sparing himself not at all, and it was largely due to his strenuous efforts that this district met with such a great measure of success in its various war activities. He was chairman of both the War Savings Stamps and the War Chest drives and an active member of the Board of Control and Finance and of the War Chest Fund, his financial ability and discernment rendering him especially qualified for the position.

Mr. Weld is a member of the Fourth Baptist Church of Minneapolis, and is identified with the Masonic fraternity, being a Royal Arch Mason. While in Alaska he was Arctic Chief of the Arctic Brotherhood of Alaska, the largest fraternal organization in that section of the country, and has among his choicest treasures a very handsome gold and diamond watch charm presented to him by the lodge as past Arctic Chief. During his career he has accumulated considerable property, owning a ranch of 640 acres situated seven miles west of Rapelje, Montana, and an attractive residence in Broadview.

A. E. Dove

Mr. Weld married, in 1907, at Minneapolis, Minnesota, Lettie A. Wertman, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Wertman.

SAMUEL E. DOVE came to Montana in 1904 as principal of the Billings High School. After a year or two he found an opening in business, gave up educational work, and is now one of the prominent residents of Huntley, being cashier of the Huntley State Bank.

Mr. Dove was born in Shelby County, Illinois, January 17, 1876. He is of Virginia colonial ancestry, his paternal ancestors having come out from England. His great-grandfather, Henry Dove, was born in Virginia and in pioneer times with his small stock of money and goods crossed the mountains and homesteaded at Carroll in Fairfield County, Ohio. He died at Carroll in 1876. Elijah Dove, grandfather of the Huntley banker, was born at Carroll, Ohio, in 1811 and spent all his life on the farm originally taken up and cleared by his father. Three years before his death he moved to Shelbyville, Illinois, and died there in 1806. His wife was Mary Small. She was also born in Carroll, Ohio, and died there in 1876.

W. L. Dove, father of Samuel E., was born in Ohio in 1843 and when a young man went to Shelby County, Illinois. He married in that county and spent the rest of his life as a farmer. He died in 1886. Politically he was an independent and was a member of the United Brethren Church and one of the local preachers of that denomination. W. L. Dove married Eliza A. Warner, who was born in Shelby County, Illinois, in 1853 and died there in 1886, the same year as her husband. Samuel E. Dove is the oldest of four children: Mrs. Julia Maddox is the wife of a farmer at Rapidan, Virginia; James U. is general sales manager for the Swayne Robinson Machine Company at Richmond, Indiana; and the youngest is Delia, wife of Charles Christ, a farmer at Canal Winchester, Ohio.

Samuel E. Dove spent his early life on a farm, but acquired a liberal education, beginning at the rural schools in Shelby County, Illinois, continuing in the Preparatory School at Greencastle, Indiana, and followed that with a course of college work in DePauw University at Greencastle. He was graduated with the degree Ph. B. in 1901. He achieved the scholarship honor of membership in the Phi Beta Kappa and is a member of the social fraternity Phi Delta Theta. During 1901 Mr. Dove was a night school teacher, spent two years with the schools of Kendallville, Indiana, one year in the Rock Island, Illinois, High School, and in 1904 took up his work as principal of the High School at Billings. He remained there two years and then engaged in the mercantile business at Billings and on the Billings Bench. He has been a resident of Huntley since 1907 and was a merchant in that little city until 1913. He has since been cashier of the Huntley State Bank, which was established August 27, 1907, with a state charter. This bank has a capital of $20,000 and surplus and profits of $14,000. The officers of the bank are T. A. Snidow, of Billings, president; Albert E. Platz, of Billings, vice president; and Mr. Dove, cashier.

Mr. Dove is a member of the State and American Bankers Association, and owns an irrigated ranch of 180 acres on the Billings Bench. He is a director of the Bankers Loan and Mortgage Company of Billings. He helped establish the Methodist Episcopal Church at Huntley in 1909, has since been its treasurer and is a member of the Board of Trustees. He is a republican and affiliated with Billings Midland Club.

In June, 1903, Mr. Dove married Miss Nellie Landes at Greencastle, Indiana. She died in March, 1904. In 1906, at Des Moines, Iowa, he married Miss Josephine Bly, daughter of J. W. and Mary (Miller) Bly, both now deceased. Her father was a merchant and farmer at Des Moines. Mrs. Dove is a graduate of Drake University with the degree Ph. B. They have two daughters, Virginia, born June 23, 1908, and Marjorie, born March 6, 1910.

RIBOT J. VALITON is one of the progressive young merchants of Montana, is manager of the Golden Rule department store at Philipsburg, is a university graduate, and in his active career has shown much of the commercial genius inherited from his ancestors.

His father was the late Peter Valiton, a Montana pioneer, whose life was one of the many adventures, vicissitudes, and in the end a great volume of success. Peter Valiton, who died at Deer Lodge in August, 1914, was born in Southern France, December 13, 1832, a son of Peter Valiton. His people were French Huguenots. Peter Valiton, Sr., was a French farmer and in 1850 came to the United States and located near Dubuque, Iowa, where he died in 1858. His widow spent her last years with her son Peter and was killed by a train at Deer Lodge June 6, 1889. Peter Valiton, Jr., grew up on his father's farm in France and had a limited education. He was not yet nineteen years of age when he came to the United States in 1850 and he knew not a single word of English. He lived near Dubuque, Iowa, for about two years, and in 1855 went to Northern Kansas, where he acted as manager for a government contractor and owner of a trading post and freighting outfit. Kansas at that time was in the midst of the border warfare and a part of the great west. In 1859 Peter Valiton had charge of two wagon trains going overland to Colorado. In 1860 he opened a store in Colorado and the following year conducted a restaurant in the mining town of Denver. In the summer of 1862 accompanied by his widowed mother he started for the "Salmon river country" but was deterred from coming to Montana at that time by reports of Indian hostilities. He went on to Virginia City, Nevada, conducted a restaurant for a year or so, and lost practically all his money by mining speculation. He made several ventures in mining both in Nevada and after coming to Montana, but they were almost entirely unprofitable. Early in 1865 he again started from Denver as wagon master of a freighting train for Virginia City, Montana. He soon opened a store in Confederate Gulch at Diamond City, and his success as a merchant soon brought him a substantial capital. Peter Valiton was one of the pioneers of Deer Lodge, where he located in the fall of 1867. His best success was made as a rancher and stockman. At one time he used about 10,000 acres in connection with stock raising. He was also member of a large wholesale and retail grocery house at Butte and in a commercial way his name was widely known over the state. He was never in politics, voted as a democrat, and was a member of the Masonic order and was a French Protestant. In 1875 he married Catherine Epler, a native of Michigan. She died in November, 1877. In 1885 Peter Valiton married Miss Anna N. King, who was born at Morristown, New Jersey, in 1852, and is now living at Los Angeles, California. She was the mother of four children: Francis, deceased; Peter, a resident at Polson, Montana; Carnot, a merchant at Los Angeles; and Ribot J.

Ribot J. Valiton was born at Deer Lodge, Montana, November 2, 1891, and attended the public schools there. He went east for his advanced education, graduating from the high school at Ann Arbor, Michigan, in 1910 and then taking the regular classical course in the University of Michigan, where he received his A. B. degree in 1914. Returning to Montana he engaged in the mercantile business at Philipsburg and has advanced to the management of the Golden Rule department store. He is also a director of the Philipsburg State Bank and owns a modern home in that city.

Politically he votes as an independent. He is a member of the Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Flint Creek Lodge No. 11, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hope Chapter No. 10, Royal Arch Masons at Philipsburg, Pearl Chapter No. 14, Order of Eastern Star.

In 1915 at Annapolis, Maryland, Mr. Valiton married Miss Rosamond Hopkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hopkins. Her father is a banker at Annapolis and is assistant state comptroller of Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. Valiton have one son, Ribot J., Jr., born October 27, 1918.

Hon. William Wallace McDowell, who for the past eight years has presided over the Montana Senate as lieutenant governor, and for four years previous was twice Speaker of the House, has made politics incidental to a very active business career at Butte, where he has his home. Mr. McDowell comes of a distinguished Southern family, his great-grandfather having been one of the generals in the Revolutionary war who signed the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence. The McDowell ancestors came to this country on the ship "Mary and Ann" in 1729, first settling in Pennsylvania and later moving to Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee.

William Wallace McDowell was born at Trenton, Tennessee, January 22, 1867, son of John H. and Emma McDowell. He is well educated, attending and graduating from Union City College, Tennessee, in 1887. Mr. McDowell came to Butte in 1896 and for over twenty years has been prominently identified with the mining and farming interests of the state. He is a director of the Miners' Savings Bank & Trust Company at Butte, and also president of the Reynolds & McDowell Company of that city. A democrat by principle, as well as by inheritance and family tradition, Mr. McDowell soon after coming to Montana interested himself in the affairs of his party. He worked for the benefit of political conditions for many years and never sought any office for himself until he was unanimously chosen as a legislative candidate in 1908. In the following session he was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, and was again selected as Speaker two years later. In 1912 he was unanimously nominated for lieutenant governor at the Democratic State Convention, and was elected that fall. Four years later he was again nominated for lieutenant governor, this time in the primaries, and was again elected.

Mr. McDowell is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, the Elks, Woodmen of the World, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club and the Butte Country Club. Mr. McDowell married in 1912 Mrs. Mary Lee Sturges of Chicago. They reside in Butte.

Charles Hancock. In every progressive community in the country are found men who have worked their way from modest beginnings to leadership in the professions, in business life and in public affairs, and in the controlling of the veins and arteries of the traffic and exchanges of the country. Montana, as a young and growing state, has its full share of self-made men, and at Lewistown one who has advanced himself to a recognized position of preference in the drug and jewelry trade is Charles Hancock, owner of the establishment known as Hancock's Drug and Jewelry Store.

Mr. Hancock was born at Lansing, Allamakee County, Iowa, June 6, 1886, a son of Fremont Walter and Tillie (Hufschmidt) Hancock, both natives of the same locality and both still living, the former at the age of sixty-three and the latter aged sixty-five years. Fremont W. Hancock was engaged in the jewelry business at Lansing, Iowa, until 1893, in which year he removed to Bozeman, Montana, where he has since been employed by H. A. Pease & Company as a watchmaker. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a democrat in his political adherence. Charles Hancock, the second of three children, was educated in the public graded and high schools of Bozeman, Montana, and at the age of eighteen years started to learn the jewelry business with H. A. Pease & Company. After spending about ten years with that concern he came to Lewistown, Montana, where he engaged in the drug and jewelry business in partnership with J. A. Kelley, under the firm style of Kelley & Hancock. This association continued until 1916, in which year Mr. Hancock purchased his partner's interest, and since that time the business has been conducted under his sole proprietorship, as Hancock's Drug and Jewelry Store. The establishment, located at No. 318 West Main Street, is largely patronized, and under Mr. Hancock's capable management has become one of Lewistown's prosperous business places. Its proprietor bears the best of reputations in business circles as a man of sound and unswerving integrity, and his genial and courteous personality has succeeded in winning for him many friendships among his customers.

Mr. Hancock was married January 26, 1910, to Miss Alice Piedalue, who was born at Frenchtown, Missoula County, Montana, a daughter of Dr. Joseph Piedalue, a well-known practicing physician and surgeon of Bozeman. Mrs. Hancock was the eldest of five children. Mr. Hancock is fraternally affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and also holds membership in the Judith Club. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and like other progressive and constructive business men shares in worthy movements for the general welfare. He is a republican, but has not taken an active part in political affairs.

William W. McNaughton is an expert machinist, has covered his trade in many different capacities, and is one of the exceptional men using their skill and experience in managing a complete service for automobile owners. He has a well equipped service station and garage at Billings, and is one of the leading automobile men of the state.

Mr. McNaughton was born at Arundel, Quebec, Canada, April 22, 1883. His father, Naughton McNaughton, of Scotch ancestors, was born in Canada in 1858, has followed the trade of carpenter during his active life and is now a resident of Calgary, Alberta. He married Mary Green, who was born in Canada in 1860 and died at Arundel in 1887. There were children as follows: Naughton, a farmer of Fallon; William W.; and David, who was recently mustered out of the army after one year of service in this country and France. Naughton

JOHN H. NEWELL

McNaughton married for a second wife Beatrice Coughlin, also a native of Canada. She is living at Fallon, Montana, and was one of the first women to take up a homestead there. She is the mother of one daughter, Inez Evelyn, who is living at Fallon, and is the widow of William Binnie, who was a first lieutenant in the army, and was on his way to France with the ill-fated transport Tuscania when that boat was torpedoed.

William W. McNaughton was educated in the public schools of Minneapolis, leaving school at the age of sixteen and spending one year with the steel and rolling mills at Columbia Heights, Minnesota. He learned the bicycle business in Minneapolis, followed it a year and a half and for the next four years served a thorough apprenticeship at the machinist's trade at Minneapolis. In 1905 he turned his skill to automobiles, and has been a skilled and practical expert in all things pertaining to the making, repairing and operating of automobiles for over ten years. After leaving Minneapolis Mr. McNaughton went to Beloit, Wisconsin, then to Marquette, Michigan, returned to Minneapolis in 1907, and first came to Montana as a machinist with the Northern Pacific Railway at Livingston, Montana. From there he removed to Butte, spending eight months with the Butte Novelty Works, six months with the Silver Bow Automobile Company, drove a car for Henry Albertson one year, and in 1910 located at Wibaux, Montana, where for three years he was an automobile machinist, and then after another interval at Minneapolis of eight months came to Billings March 14, 1914. For two years he traveled out of Billings representing the Oakland Motor Company. He was a partner of E. W. Keene in the Montana Automobile Company of Billings until July, 1917, then until the following year was with the Haskell Automobile Company, and in 1918 opened the Buick service station, leasing the old Haskell shop. This establishment is located at 2004 First Avenue, North.

Mr. McNaughton is a democrat. April 21, 1909, at Butte, he married Miss Ellen McDaniel, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. McDaniel, who live at 442 Lincoln Street, Minneapolis. Her father is a carpenter. Mr. and Mrs. McNaughton have two children, Kenneth, born May 10, 1911, and Jean, born November 18, 1913.

Louis Ernest Gordon has been a resident of Montana for a quarter of a century. He is an expert machinist, stationary engineer and electrical worker and is now at the head of the leading plumbing, heating and electrical business in Powell County at Deer Lodge.

Mr. Gordon was born at Somerset in St. Croix County, Wisconsin, May 11, 1872. His grandfather James Gordon was a native of Scotland, and settled in Nova Scotia, Canada, in 1804. He died at Roden, Nova Scotia. He was a man of strong religious tendencies, and also possessed many good traits in a literary way. In his later years he was blind, and found employment for his leisure in writing poetry.

Alexander Gordon, father of the Deer Lodge business man, was born at Roden, Nova Scotia, in 1825, lived there through his boyhood years, was married at Halifax, and soon afterwards removed to Boston, Massachusetts, where he became a ship builder. He was one of the pioneer settlers at old St. Anthony Falls, now the City of Minneapolis. As a contractor he did some of the pioneer building work there. In 1860 he removed to Somerset, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, where he continued his business as a contractor and builder. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army, but was rejected on account of a physical defect. Besides his regular business he invested his surplus funds in farm lands, and acquired some valuable farming property. He sold out his interests in Wisconsin in 1903 and then removed to Fort Frances, Ontario, Canada, where he lived retired until his death in 1913. As an American citizen he was a democrat and was honored with several township offices and always took a keen interest in local affairs. He was reared a member of the Methodist Church. Alexander Gordon married Harriet K. Evans, who was born at Windsor, Nova Scotia, in 1830, and died at Fort Frances in 1914. A brief record of their children is as follows: James A., collector on the toll bridge across the Rainy River at International Falls, Ontario; F. A., a game warden at Glenwood Springs, Colorado, where he died in 1907; W. S. Gordon, whose whereabouts have not been known to his family for the past thirty years; M. M. Gordon, living at the old home at Fort Frances; H. K., a farmer at Grand Prairie in Saskatchewan, Canada; Louis E. and O. H., clerk in a hotel at International Falls.

Louis Ernest Gordon acquired his education in the public schools of Somerset, Wisconsin. At the age of sixteen he became a wage earner, packing shingles in a saw mill. When eighteen he went to St. Paul and learned his trade as a steam and electrical engineer and was a resident of that city until May, 1893. Then for a few months he was employed by the Citizens Electric Light Company of Leadville, Colorado, and in 1894 came to Deer Lodge, Montana, to take the operating charge of the Deer Lodge Electric Light Company. He was at that post two years, then traveled all over Montana running hoisting engines, saw mill engines and stamp mill engines until 1901. In that year he returned to Deer Lodge and opened a plumbing, heating and electrical shop, continuing the business alone for seven years. For the next eight years he was a partner of the heating and plumbing department of the O'Neill Hardware & Plumbing Company, and in 1917 resumed business on his own account, with a complete shop and equipment for plumbing, heating and electrical installation. His offices are on Missouri Avenue, and his business is now the chief of its kind in Powell County.

Mr. Gordon is a member of the Electrical Workers Union, is independent in politics and has been councilman at Deer Lodge for three terms, and is affiliated with Lodge No. 14, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Deer Lodge, Valley Chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons, Zabud Council No. 2, Royal and Select Masters, and Deer Lodge Camp No. 345 Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Gordon resides at 609 Milwaukee Avenue, having a good modern home. He married at Deer Lodge Miss Jennie Harris, a daughter of Henry and Delia (Carroll) Harris, now deceased. Her father was an early day shoemaker at Deer Lodge.

John H. Newell. Of that brand of pioneers whose names deserve to be written in gold on Montana's pages of history, those who explored and proved the vanguard of civilization in Montana in the early sixties, very few remain. One of these few is a retired rancher at Roberts, John H. Newell.

Mr. Newell, who fifty years ago was on terms of acquaintance and friendship with many of the men who had made history in Montana, was born at Findlay, Hancock County, Ohio, March 18, 1842. The Newells as a family came from England and settled in Virginia in colonial times. Many of them have met every test of patriotism. Both the grandfathers of Mr. Newell lost their lives as soldiers in the War of 1812. The parents of John H. Newell were Thomas and Hannah (Rowe) Newell. His father was born in Virginia in 1807, grew up at Lancaster in Fairfield County, Ohio, and was married there, his wife having been born in Fairfield County in 1814. Later he moved to Hancock County, Ohio, about 1837, and in 1852 transferred his home to Piatt County, Illinois, where he died in 1857, his wife having passed away in 1856. He was a farmer, and played a pioneer part in the development of the several localities mentioned. Politically he was a democrat, served as a member of the State Militia, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He and his wife had a large family of children: William, who was a farmer and miner in Colorado and Southern Missouri and died at Joplin in the latter state; James H. who was a mine owner and died in Barton County, Missouri; Thomas J., a business man who died in Oklahoma City; Joseph, who enlisted in 1861 in an Illinois Regiment and was killed in one of the battles of 1863; John H., who is fifth in age; George, who served in the Civil war and died soon afterward from hardships of army life; Caroline, now deceased; Samuel, a retired farmer living at Clinton, Illinois; Almeda, wife of T. C. Graden, a stockman at Amarillo, Texas; and Frank, a farmer in Kansas.

John H. Newell acquired a common school education in Ohio and Illinois. He was fifteen years old when his father died, and after that he worked for three years as a farm hand in Piatt County, Illinois. He went west to Denver in 1860, and during the next three years was a prospector and miner in different parts of Colorado. He was one of those attracted by the news of discoveries in Montana, and on February 18, 1863, arrived at Bannock. After a brief stay there he went to the famous diggings of Alder Gulch, near Virginia City, and was a member of that historic community for two years.

Though he came to Montana in the role of a miner and prospector, Mr. Newell's chief activities in the state has been farming and ranching. From Alder Gulch he moved into the Gallatin Valley, being one of the early settlers near Bozeman, and farmed and ranched there steadily for thirty-two years. He took up a preemption of 160 acres, and grazed his stock over a large amount of public domain. In 1897, having sold his property in Gallatin Valley, Mr. Newell moved to Roberts, and acquired 320 acres of land in that vicinity. He sold his farm in 1918 and is now enjoying a well earned retirement. In politics he is a democrat, but his life has been quietly spent with no noteworthy participation in politics or public affairs.

On January 3, 1866, at Virginia City in Madison County, Montana, he married Miss Lucy Harris, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Green) Harris. Her father was a carpenter and likewise a pioneer of Montana. Mrs. Newell after forty-five years of married life died March 27, 1911. She was the mother of nine children, the oldest, John, dying at the age of fourteen and a half months; Mary, unmarried, and living at Stockton, California; George, a farmer and teamster at Red Lodge; James, a business man of Stockton, California; Samuel, a farmer near Stockton, California; Joseph, who has a farm in Custer County, Montana; Minnie, wife of James Williams, a rancher and stock man in Gallatin County, this state; Thomas Cleveland, owner of a meat market at Roberts; and Grover, whose home is in Wyoming.

CHARLES FRANK JUTTNER has gained a prominent rank among Montana lawyers, and is one of the very able members of the Butte bar.

He was born at Menominee, Michigan, February 28, 1876, son of Joseph and Mary (Marshalick) Juttner. His parents established their home at Menominee when that city was in its infancy, and reared a family of ten children there. These children are all still living. Joseph Juttner the father died at Menominee in 1891.

Charles Frank Juttner grew up in his native city and received two diplomas from the Menominee High School, one in June, 1894, and the other in June, 1896. The following year he spent in the literary department of the University of Michigan, and then continued his studies in the law school until graduating LL. B. in June, 1900.

As a boy at Menominee he had some military training as a member of Company F of the Fifth Regiment Michigan Militia from 1891 until 1893. He held the non-commissioned rank of corporal. While in university the Spanish-American war broke out and at the call of President McKinley for volunteers he enlisted with the Ann Arbor company, Company A of the Thirty-First Michigan Infantry, and remained in service about a year until the close of hostilities. He was a corporal in this company when honorably discharged. He then resumed his work at the university, made up for the lost time and graduated with his class.

After his admission to the bar Mr. Juttner returned to Menominee to practice and was elected prosecuting attorney of Menominee County in 1902. Along with his private practice he has taken some interest in politics in Montana, though strictly within the limits of his profession. In 1916 he was the nominee of the republican party of Silver Bow County for district judge of the Second Judicial District. And in 1918 for that of county attorney of Silver Bow. Mr. Juttner is an active Mason, being affiliated with Mt. Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Deer Lodge No. 3, Royal Arch Masons, Montana Commandery No. 3, Knights Templar, all at Butte, and also the Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte.

Mr. Juttner married Miss Lily M. Sweet. They were married in Butte July 25, 1917, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Charles A. Cook, pastor of the First Baptist Church. Mrs. Juttner is a daughter of Henry J. and Rose Sweet, who were early settlers in Montana. Her father died at Butte. Mrs. Juttner was born in that city, was educated in the Butte public schools, and during her married life has continued an active interest in church work as a member of the First Baptist Church of Butte and is a member of the choir.

PERRY F. BROWN. Prominent among the concerns which are lending practical encouragement to the hay and grain industry of Montana is the P. F. Brown Company, of Lewistown, than which no enterprise has done more to bring these staple products of the state before the public and the trade all over the country. Without a market the products of any community are valueless, local interest comes to a standstill and deterioration sets in; on the other hand, with a live market causing a demand, business progresses and the community, urged and encouraged to greater effort, prospers proportionately. It has been the self-appointed duty of Perry F. Brown, head of the P. F. Brown Company, to promote the hay and grain business of Montana and to find a market.

Mr. Brown was born at Ipswich, Edmunds County, Dakota Territory (now South Dakota), December 5, 1884, a son of Frank E. and Ella A. (Brown) Brown. His father was born at Norwich, Chenango County, New York, January 30, 1853, and was educated in his native state, where he grew up on his father's farm. He subsequently learned the drug business and after his marriage migrated to the territory of Dakota, where he took up a homestead in the vicinity of Ipswich, Edmunds County. He also conducted a drug business at Aberdeen, and later at Mitchell, but in 1914 removed to Dewey County, South Dakota, where he established himself in the cattle business. Mr. Brown breeds full-blooded Hereford cattle, and at this time has more than 100 head in his herd. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is independent in his political views. Mrs. Brown, who was born in Pennsylvania, died in 1885, at the age of thirty-three years, leaving five children, of whom three are living.

The fourth in order of birth of his parents' children, Perry F. Brown received his education in the public schools of South Dakota and Wesleyan College at Mitchell. He first engaged in the grain business at Mitchell in 1903, and during the next eleven years carried on extensive operations among the dealers and agriculturists of North and South Dakota and Minnesota. In 1914 he changed his base of operations to Lewistown, where he has since built up a large and prosperous trade, under the firm style of P. F. Brown Company, dealing in grain, hay and seeds, with offices at No. 421 Bank Electric Building. This concern forwards grain and hay all over the country and bears an excellent reputation in trade circles. It did not take Mr. Brown long after his arrival to realize that Montana needed a market for its output, and toward this end he has worked consistently and constructively. His firm, through one of its members, belongs to the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, and personally he has a number of important business connections, in addition to being associated with civic and fraternal bodies. He maintains an independent stand upon political questions, using his own judgment in regard to the choice of candidates irrespective of party lines.

Mr. Brown was married August 1, 1903, to Miss Bessie Clarke, who was born in Kansas, a daughter of J. W. and Laura (Swain) Clarke, natives of Wisconsin and the parents of eleven children, of whom Mrs. Brown was the seventh born. The Clarke's formed one of the pioneer families of Minnesota, having first located in Blue Earth County, where they passed through the periods of Indian warfare in the late '60s. Later they removed to Stafford County, Kansas, where they were also pioneer agriculturists, but eventually took up their residence at Mitchell, South Dakota, where Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are now living in comfortable retirement. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of one son, Clarke Fisher, who is attending school.

CARL DETLEF HAGGE, manager of the Thompson Yards, Incorporated, at Billings, Montana, has been identified with the lumber business since the outset of his career, and during the time which has elapsed has had wide and varied experience in numerous communities. He has become well and favorably known to the trade throughout this part of the country, and his activities have brought him into association with many of the leading men in the industry, among whom he is adjudged a well-informed, astute and thoroughly competent business man, of substantial standing and sound principles.

Mr. Hagge was born at Arcadia, Iowa, March 5, 1884, a son of Hans and Rosa (Eggen) Hagge. His grandfather, Detlef Hagge, was born in 1827, in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and as a youth fought in the war of 1848. Coming to the United States in 1870, he located in Iowa, where he was for ten years engaged in agricultural pursuits, and then retired from active affairs and settled down to enjoy the fruits of his early labors. Now, at the remarkable age of ninety-two years, he is still a resident of Arcadia, Iowa, and, for his years, very well preserved. Hans Hagge was born in 1856, in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and was fourteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States, being reared in Clinton and Carroll counties, Iowa. He was married in the former county and then engaged in farming in Carroll County, but in 1893 removed to Crawford County, in the same state, where he continued his agricultural operations until his retirement in 1905. Since then he has made his home at Charter Oak, where he is one of his community's most substantial and highly respected citizens. Politically a democrat, for many years he has been active in civic and political affairs in his community, has held office for a long period, and at this time is a member of the board of supervisors of Crawford County. Mr. Hagge married Rosa Eggen, who was born in 1862, in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and who died at Sioux City, Iowa, in 1906, and they became the parents of three children: Minnie, the wife of Herman Hinrichsen, a farmer of Charter Oak, Iowa; Carl Detlef; and Anna, the wife of John Gregory, a farmer of Charter Oak.

Carl Detlef Hagge attended the district schools in the vicinity of his father's farm in Crawford County, and following his graduation from the high school at Charter Oak in 1901 returned to the home farm for one year. Not contented with the prospects of life in the country and farming as a regular vocation, he decided to fit himself for a business career and accordingly pursued a course at the Fremont (Nebraska) Business College, in 1902 and 1903. He again returned to the farm, but in the fall of 1904 started to work in a lumber yard at Charter Oak, where during a short initial experience he was introduced to the business. Next he went to Aberdeen, South Dakota, where he spent a short period in the general offices and then began visiting the various offices of the company as office help and extra yard man, and in the following year had advanced so far that he was promoted to be outside yard foreman at Aberdeen, a capacity in which he acted until May, 1907. At that time he entered the employ of the McCaull-Webster Lumber Company at Aberdeen, as manager of the yard of that concern, but in November of the same year transferred his services to the Phoenix Lumber Company as manager at Strasburg, North Dakota, where he remained until the spring of 1911. His next location was at Ellendale, North Dakota, where he was employed by the same concern as manager, and in March, 1914, when this company sold out to the Wells-Thompson Company, he continued with the new firm. In November, 1914, he was sent to Jamestown, North Dakota, as manager of the yards at that point, and continued with the new firm when the Wells-Thompson Company disposed of their holdings to the Thompson Yards, Incorporated. In May, 1918, Mr. Hagge was sent to Billings, Montana, as manager of the yard and offices, which are situated at Thirtieth Street and Minnesota Avenue, this being the largest yard in Southeastern Montana, and one of the finest and best equipped to be found anywhere. The present officers of the concern are: president, George P. Thompson; vice president, W. H. Boner; treasurer, F. E. Weyerhaeuser; and secretary, F. H. Thatcher. The executive offices are at Minneapolis, and the firm has about 200 branches throughout Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota and Montana.

Mr. Hagge is a democrat in his political support, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He belongs also to the Employers Association, the Billings Midland Club and Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. His modern residence is located at No. 307 Yellowstone Avenue. In 1913, at Ellendale, North Dakota, Mr. Hugge, was united in marriage with Miss Lulu Webb, a daughter of Richard and Emma (Glenn) Webb, of Lindsay, California, where Mr. Webb is the owner of an orange grove. Two children have blessed this union: Dorothy, born October 26, 1914; and Howard, born December 4, 1916.

EDWARD SEARS. As electrical and district master mechanic of the Milwaukee Railway, with 600 men under his superivision, and the technical expert in charge of all the lines of the Milwaukee System in the divisions where electric power prevail, Edward Sears is one of the most prominent railroad operating officials in Montana.

He had a long and thorough training and many exceptional qualifications for his present work. He holds the degree mechanical engineer from Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana, having graduated from that well known technical institution in 1899. The same year he entered the service of the Denver & Rio Grande at Denver, Colorado, and spent three years in the railway shops, not as an ordinary apprentice, but in a sort of post-graduate course in practical railroading, being given an opportunity to learn everything in railroad work. After this in 1902 he went with the New York Central Railway at the DeWitt Roundhouse, East Syracuse, New York, being general foreman there one year. Then for several years until 1906 he was a roundhouse foreman at various localities on the Hudson River division of the New York Central.

His chief training ground for his present work was as general foreman of the electrification department of the New York Central on the Hudson River and Harlem Division, a post he filled from 1906 to 1913. From 1913 to 1916 he was superintendent of equipment for the Portland, Eugene & Eastern Railway at Portland, Oregon. This is now part of the Southern Pacific system. In 1916 Mr. Sears came to Deer Lodge, Montana, as electrical and district master mechanic of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, in charge of all the electrified territory, and with offices at Deer Lodge.

Mr. Sears was born at Williamsville, Michigan, June 5, 1874. He is of English ancestry. His grandfather Edward Sears was born at Darford, England, in 1804, was a land owner in England, but in 1863 sold his possessions and came to the United States, living for three years at Waukesha, Wisconsin, thence moving to Williamsville, Michigan, where he was a successful farmer. He died at Williamsville in 1880. He married Ann Searles, a native of Dartford, England, who died at Williamsville, Michigan. Henry Sears, father of Edward, was born at Dartford, England, in September, 1849, and was fourteen years of age when brought to this country. At Williamsville, where he married, he followed the business of contractor and builder, and put up many of the homes of the early settlers. In 1882 he moved to Redfield, South Dakota, buying a stock ranch, and was a farmer and stockman there until 1902, when he sold out his property and returned to Williamsville, where he owns a large amount of farm property and is now practically retired. He is a republican and a member of the Church of England. Henry Sears married Miss Ocena Rinehart, who was born at Williamsville, Michigan, in 1852. Parker, who is paymaster for the Western Steel Car & Foundry at the Hegewisch shops at Chicago. Arthur is in the automobile business at Cassopolis, Michigan.

Edward Sears grew up on his father's ranch in South Dakota, attending the public schools of Spink County and the high school at Doland and from there entered Purdue University to take his technical course in mechanical engineering. Her father is a veteran engineer of the New York Central Railway. Mrs. Sears is a graduate of the Teachers Normal School of Syracuse. To their marriage was born one daughter Edith on February 3, 1906.

ALBERT EDWARD STRIPP, M. D. Opening to its devotees an extremely wide range of usefulness, the profession of the physician and surgeon is a many-sided one, and that particular phase which accomplishes the more than splendid work of preserving God-given life, says nothing of the world of sorrow that is banished or of the happiness and continued love which is re-enthroned through health restored at the exercise of that divine art. It is indeed a divine art, and those who study it, mellowed and enriched as they are through their association with unmasked humanity, are possessed of a priceless ability to answer the command to "heal the sick." The medical fraternity of Billings has long been noted for the splendid talent possessed by its members, among whom one who has come to the forefront in recent years as a general practitioner of medicine and surgery is Dr. Albert Edward Stripp, who has followed his vocation here since 1916.

Albert E. Stripp was born at Aylmer, Province of Ontario, Canada, April 11, 1877, a son of William Slade and Rosamond (Clayton) Stripp. The Stripp family originated in England, from which country Thomas Henry Stripp, the grandfather of Doctor Stripp, emigrated to Canada, settling at Bowmanville, Ontario, as a pioneer. In his declining years he retired from agricultural pursuits and took up his residence at Charlevoix, Michigan, where his death occurred. William Slade Stripp was born in 1840, at Bowmanville, Ontario, Canada, and was reared and married in his native province. His inclination turned toward commercial pursuits, and he became a well-known wholesale fruit dealer, a business which in 1885 brought him to Michigan, he taking up his residence at Charlevoix. While there he was attracted to the lumber business, in which he eventually embarked, and in which field he achieved excellent success. At the time of his retirement he removed to Long Beach, California, and there his death occured March 20, 1919. Mr. Stripp was a well known Mason and a republican voter. He married Rosamond Clayton, who was born in 1844, at Aylmer, Canada, and died at Charlevoix, Michigan, in 1898, and they became the parents of four children, as follows: William C., who is engaged in the lumber business at San Francisco, California; Albert Edward, the second in order of birth; Frederick S., superintendent of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of Spokane, Washington; and Rosa, the wife of Henry Kanagy, a ranchman of Long Beach, California.

Albert Edward Stripp attended the public schools of Charlevoix, Michigan, where he was graduated from the high school in 1894. After engaging in farming for two years he was attracted to the Great Lakes, where he served for a time as a sailor, but eventually realized the need for further education and accordingly entered Kalamazoo (Michigan) College, where he pursued a three-year course. At the end of that time he entered upon his medical studies, and after a four-year course in the medical department of the University of Michigan was graduated in 1904 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. To further prepare himself he next spent one year as an interne in the hospital of the University of Michigan, and this was followed by one and one-half years of work in the Michigan Asylum for the Insane at Kalamazoo. With this preparation and experience he entered upon the practice of his chosen calling at Charlevoix, but after one and one-half years, in 1908, came to Laurel, Montana, where he was engaged in practice until 1916. While located there he rose to a high place in his profession and served as surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railroad, which operates large shops at that point, and the experience thus gained has proved of inestimable value. He was also one of the foremost citizens of the city, took a prominent part in civic affairs, and served efficiently as mayor for four years. In 1916, in order to increase the scope of his professional activities and to have a wider field in which to display his talents, he came to Billings, where he has since carried on a general practice in medicine and surgery, with offices in the Electric Building, suite No. 217. His clientele has grown steadily since his arrival and he is now accounted one of the leading physicians of the city, having the confidence of his patients and the esteem of his fellow-practitioners. He is a member of the Yellowstone County Medical Society, the Montana Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and also holds membership in the Billings Midland Club. Fraternally he is affiliated with Laurel Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Laurel Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. He has a number of important business connections and is president of the Twenty-Mile Basin Oil and Gas Refining Company. His political views cause him to support the republican party. Doctor Stripp and his family belong to the Congregational Church and reside in their pleasant home at No. 302 Burlington Avenue.

In 1909, at Billings, Doctor Stripp married Miss Montana Tschudy, daughter of O. A. and Georgietta (Nord) Tschudy, the latter of whom resides at Billings. Mr. Tschudy, who was manager of the Billings Club, is deceased. Doctor and Mrs. Stripp are the parents of two children: Georgia Rose, born in August, 1910, and Albert Edward, Jr., born in March, 1912.

Patrick Dalton, superintendent of the Converter department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is not only held in high esteem by his company, but also in the community in which he resides, and is numbered among the substantial citizens of Anaconda. He was born at St. Louis, Missouri, February 28, 1863, a son of James Dalton. James Dalton was born in Ireland in 1820, and was killed in the Civil war during 1862, having come to the United States in young manhood, locating at St. Louis, Missouri, and there worked as a foundryman and moulder. In 1861 he enlisted in a Missouri Volunteer Infantry regiment and was killed on the Mound City gunboat. In politics he was a strong democrat. The Roman Catholic Church held his membership and he died firm in its faith. James Dalton was married to Ellen McNinery, who was born in Ireland in 1820, and died at St. Louis, Missouri. Patrick Dalton was the only child of his parents, and was born after the death of his father, his mother not long surviving.

Until he was sixteen years old, Patrick Dalton received a pension from the Government of $8 per month, and was reared by his uncle, John Dalton of St. Louis. After passing through the grammar schools of St. Louis, Patrick Dalton took the high school course, and was graduated therefrom in 1878, at which time he began working for Evans, Howard Company, dealers in brick tile, sewer pipe and similar products, remaining with this concern from the time he was seventeen until he was twenty-three years of age. Mr. Dalton then came West, arriving at Butte, Montana, in the spring of 1886, and worked for the Parret Smelting Company for a year, leaving Butte for Anaconda in 1887, and engaging with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. His first work was preparing "matt" for shipment to Swansea, Wales, but he was soon promoted to be converter man, rising from that position to be foreman of his department and then superintendent, which situation he still retains, discharging its many responsibilities with practical ability. There are 350 men under his supervision, and the output of his department is 1,000,000 pounds daily when it is running to full capacity. His offices are in the general office building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Like his father before him, Mr. Dalton supports the principles of the democratic party, and for the past twenty years, at different times he has been elected to the City Countil of Anaconda. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, and Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, and Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In addition to his other interests Mr. Dalton is treasurer of the Hidden Lake Mining Company. He owns a modern residence at No. 408 Pine Street, and other real estate at Anaconda.

In 1893 Mr. Dalton was married at Anaconda to Miss Catherine Reid, a daughter of Patrick and Catherine Reid, who live in County Mayo, Ireland, Mr. Reid being now a retired farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Dalton have one daughter, Mary, who was graduated from the Anaconda High School, is now teaching in the public schools of the city, and living at home. Sound, reliable and skilled, Mr. Dalton is a valuable man to his company and is held in the highest confidence by his community.

GUY C. MYERS. Among the men of Billings who are distributing their energies and talents among several lines of endeavor and meeting with an equal share of prosperity in all, one who has achieved success in the loan business and as a rancher is Guy C. Myers. Coming to this city in October, 1911, as manager of the commercial department of the Montana Power Company, he early recognized the opportunities at hand for successful participation in enterprises connected directly or indirectly with the soil, and his subsequent career has been one in which his accomplishments have served to place him among the substantial men of his community.

Mr. Myers was born at Green Bay, Wisconsin, June 25, 1886, a son of Charles A. and Elizabeth (McLaughlin) Myers. The Myers family originated in Holland, from which the original progenitor immigrated to America during the colonial days, and the name soon was well established in Pennsylvania, in which state the grandfather of Guy C. Myers was born in 1827. From Pennsylvania he journeyed as a pioneer into Indiana and subsequently became one of the earliest settlers of Danville, Illinois, where he was the proprietor of the first hostelry of that city, the Pennsylvania House, well known in its day for the distinguished character of many of its guests, among whom was Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Myers died at Danville in 1889. Charles A. Myers was born at Danville, Illinois, in 1864, and was there reared and educated, but as a young man went to Green Bay, Wisconsin, where he had charge of the emigration department for the Northwestern Railway. He was married at Green Bay, where he resided for a number of years, but in 1894 went to Chicago, where he entered the service of the Chicago & Alton Railway, in the same capacity as noted above. From 1907 to 1910 he occupied a like position with the New York Central Lines at New York City, but in the latter year retired from active pursuits and returned to the city of his birth, where he passed away in 1912. He was a republican and prominent in his party, and a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Myers married Elizabeth McLaughlin, who was born in 1867 at Escanaba, Michigan. She survives her husband and is a resident of Chicago, Illinois, and they had two children: Guy C., of this notice; and Marguerite, who is unmarried and resides with her mother.

Guy C. Myers was educated in the public schools of Green Bay, Wisconsin, and Chicago, Illinois, following which he took a course at Culver Military Institute, Culver, Indiana. He left that academy in 1905, at the age of nineteen years, at which time he entered the service of the Danville Street Railway and Light Company as outside man, and later, through consecutive stages, was promoted to the position of manager of the commercial department. In this capacity, in October, 1911, as above noted, he came to Billings with the Montana Power Company, continuing with that concern until 1916, when he resigned his position to enter the farm and city loan business, a line in which he has made rapid advancement. He maintains offices at 208 Securities Building and has developed substantial connections among the leading financial houses of Billings, and a clientele as representative as it is important. While carrying on a successful business in the city Mr. Myers has also taken advantage of the opportunities offered in the country, and at this time is the owner of an irrigated farm of 640 acres located in Mussellshell County, where he has 250 head of cattle. His residence is maintained in the Hedgemer Apartments, Seventh Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street. Politically Mr. Myers is a republican. F. E. Williams found on the list of supporters of worthy public-spirited enterprises.

JUDGE J. K. MILLER was an early traveler, a participant in pioneer activities and a pioneer lawyer in Minnesota, California and Montana. For nearly thirty years his home has been in the Flathead Valley, and in recent years he has lived quietly at his home in Columbia Falls.

He was born near the historic Town of Vincennes on the Illinois side of the Wabash River, March 14, 1850, a son of John and Mary (Kennedy) Miller. His parents were of pioneer stock from early colonial times. His early opportunities in school were limited, and the sound scholarship of his mature career has been due to a lifelong habit of study, reasoning and observation. When he was four years of age he lost his mother and the panic of 1857 having bankrupted his father and scattered the family, he was reared by an older sister to the age of thirteen. He then left home and wandered far before he came to the beautiful Flathead country. He worked on farms in Illinois, Michigan, in the Michigan and Minnesota lumber woods, rafted timber down the Mississippi, and was a teamster on the Yellowstone expedition under General Stanley three years before the Custer massacre. In 1874 he was admitted to the bar at Glencoe, Minnesota, practiced law six years in that state, for two years was a lawyer in California, making a specialty of mining law, and next came to Montana and for seven years engaged in mining and law practice at Helena.

Judge Miller came to the Flathead country in 1891 and continued his professional work and other interests until about ten years ago, when he established his family home in beautiful Glacier Park, filing on a homestead and proving up. He and his wife spend the summer months in that beautiful location.

He married Miss Emma C. Wood at Montevidio, Minnesota, January 1, 1878. She was born at St. Charles, in Winona County, Minnesota, January 7, 1859, a daughter of J. G. and Millie (Brainard) Wood. She was educated in the public schools of Minnesota and in the high school at Rockford, Illinois. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Miller was Mary Amelia, who was liberally educated in school and at home, was a teacher for two years at Kalispell, and when life was most promising for her soon after her marriage she died.

Judge Miller was once a candidate on the populist ticket for judge in Flathead County. Beyond that he has not considered practical politics as a vocation, for which he was fitted by nature. He has been a favorite speaker on many occasions, and has also reduced many of his thoughtful studies to writing. A synopsis and abstract of some of his writings have been published in a small booklet entitled "After the War," and some of his discussions betray a very keen analysis of fundamentals that vitally affect the structure of civilization in America as elsewhere. The wedded life of Judge Miller has been ideal, and to an unusual degree they have been bound together by common sympathies and aims.

Judge Henry J. Grimes, judge of the City Police Court of Butte, has been a resident of that city twenty years, and until recently did an extensive business as a contractor and builder.

Judge Grimes, whose experience in the West and Northwest covers a long period of years, was born in the Town of Stafford, Staffordshire, England, February 17, 1859. His father George Grimes was born in 1830 and died in October, 1869, spending all his life at Stafford. He was a shoemaker by trade, a liberal in politics, a member of the Church of England, had military training with the English Volunteers, and was a member of the Manchester Unity Association and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. George Grimes married Susannah Atkin, who was born at Cambridge, England, and died in Stafford in 1889. Of their three children Judge Grimes is the second. Julia who died at the age of twenty-eight at Walsall, England, was the wife of Alfred Silcock, a painter and decorator. The other daughter Mrs. Edith Seabold, whose husband was a hotel proprietor, died at Bakersfield, California, in 1911.

Henry J. Grimes was educated in the public schools of his native town and spent six years as an apprentice to a carpenter and joiner and worked at that trade in England. October 24, 1886, he reached Utica, New York, where he worked at his trade, and from January, 1887, until 1891 was a resident of the capital city of Albany. After that until 1897 he was in the contracting and building business at Salt Lake City, Utah, and for a year or so was similarly engaged at Salmon City, Idaho. Judge Grimes located at Butte in March, 1899. For the first ten years he was employed as a journeyman carpenter and then entered contracting and continued that business until elected city police judge in April, 1919. Two years of this time, however, he spent on his ranch six miles from Butte. He sold his ranch property in 1917.

Judge Grimes is a republican in politics, a member of the Christian Science Church and is consul commander of Butte Camp No. 153, Woodmen of the World.

He owns a modern home and employed his own skill in remodeling it at 740 Maryland Avenue. Judge Grimes married at Shrewsbury, England, in 1880, Miss Charlotte Faulkner, daughter of John and Sarah (Mickelwright) Faulkner. Her parents both died in England and her father was in the cutlery business.

One of the soldiers whose record Montana loves to honor is that of Harry J. Grimes, son of Judge Grimes. He was born April 27, 1895, is a graduate of the Butte public schools and an automobile machinist. May 28, 1917, soon after the outbreak of the war he volunteered and was in training at Fort George Wright, Spokane, Fort Vancouver, Washington, from June until December, was then sent to Camp Greene, North Carolina, and after one week in Camp Merritt in May, 1918, was sent overseas. He was in Company A of the Fourth Engineers in the Third Army Corps and saw active service in six of the great drives in which the American Expeditionary Forces participated, including Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel, Second Battle of the Marne, the drive at the Vesle River, and the Argonne Forest fight. After the armistice he was sent to Coblenz, Germany, and remained on duty there from December, 1918, until July, 1919. He returned and was discharged as a first class private August 8, 1918. He was promoted to first class private soon after enlistment.

Philipp Laux, whose experience as a Montana business man covers a period of thirty years or more, has had his home at Lewistown during the greater part of this period, and has erected some of the prominent structures in the business district and owns one of the finest homes in the city.

He was born April 1, 1861, in the southern part of Germany, a son of John W. and Catherine (Jung) Laux. His father was a miner in his younger days, later a farmer, and spent all his life in Germany. Both parents are now deceased. Philipp was the oldest of six children, one daughter and five sons, five of whom are living.

He acquired his education in Germany, learning the blacksmith's trade. He came to America and to Montana in the spring of 1885. He was first located at Helena, where his first employment was in a stone quarry. During the winter he cut cordwood and in the spring of 1886 went to Cottonwood and was employed as a blacksmith with Charles Leahman & Company. He worked for this firm until November, 1889. While in Montana he had made the acquaintance of Miss Katie Abell, who was also a native of Southern Germany. In November, 1889, she went back to Europe with some of her relatives and friends, and Mr. Laux followed her and on February 9, 1890, they were married in the old country and on the 12th of February boarded a steamship for the United States. On their return to Montana they located at Lewistown, where Mr. Laux took employment with his brother John, a contractor and builder. John Laux constructed the stone work of the Fergus County Courthouse in 1890. He was associated with his brother in a number of enterprises. In 1888 they had bought 125 head of cattle at $20 a head. In 1891, being without range for this stock, Philipp Laux engaged in the butcher business at Lewistown in order to dispose of the cattle. He continued this for about two and a half years, until the stock had been sold. He then engaged in the blacksmith business and with other parties bought a brewery. Selling this he entered the general merchandise business, and after disposing of his interests in that line took up real estate and building. In 1892 he put up the Laux Building, and has erected a number of other substantial structures in Lewistown. In 1913 he built the Fergus Hotel, a modern hotel that is a credit to the city. His fine home, constructed in 1917, cost $13,000, and is one of the best residences of the city. Mr. Laux is a republican, a member of the Catholic Church and the Knights of Columbus.

Mr. and Mrs. Laux have a family that do them credit. Eleven children were born to them, and those living are four sons and six daughters. John W., the oldest, has been a teacher and is now studying for the priesthood in the Jesuit College at Spokane, Washington. Philipp is a plumber by trade. George Lee is a member of the U. S. Marines, with the rank of corporal, and is now acting sergeant major. The fourth child is Elizabeth. The daughter Francisca for three or four months during 1918 worked as a cook on a ranch, that being her contribution to the patriotic movement to assist the nation to harvest the maximum of crops during war times. Her sister Cecelia, now in high school, was likewise a volunteer worker during the war, and rode a binder during the harvest season of 1918. She is a talented musician, a pianist, and in school has a standing of ninety-five per cent in her studies. The younger children are Catherine, a high school girl, Stella, Margaret and Joseph.

F. H. Ballou. The men connected with the operation of the Great Western Sugar Company are undoubtedly possessed of special qualifications in their several lines, for this corporation has made it a point to draw to it those calculated to give the best of their abilities, so that association therewith is proof of successful carrying out of a life work. This company recognizes the value of new blood in its force, and is given to promote men who are young enough to still feel the urge of enthusiasm and to be under the influence of recent collegiate training. The assistant chief engineer of the Montana Division of this concern is one of the alert, aggressive young men of Billings who has won his successive advancements because he has earned them and not on account of undue influence of outside parties.

F. H. Ballou belongs to an old family of this country, the original founder having journeyed from France to England, and thence to New England during the colonial days. Later member of the family went to New York State, and there the paternal grandfather was born and educated for the Presbyterian ministry, serving in it the remainder of his active life and dying at Clarence, New York. He married a Miss Bissell. The birth of F. H. Ballou occurred at Independence, Iowa, July 30, 1884, and he is a son of F. B. Ballou, who was born at Gainesville, New York, but went to Independence, Iowa, in young manhood, and was there married to Ellen Fisk Hubbard, born at Ashtabula, Ohio, in 1858. Following his marriage he was general agent for the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company at Independence until 1898, but in that year moved to Waterloo, Iowa. There he conducted a business of his own, manufacturing gasoline engines until his death in September, 1918, his wife having died at Waterloo in 1904. Their children were as follows: F. H., who was the elder; and Lois, who is unmarried and lives at Billings, Montana. F. B. Ballou always voted the republican ticket. He was a consistent member, vestryman and active worker of the Episcopal Church, and assisted in building up several parishes. Well known as a Mason, he had attained to the Thirty-Second Degree, Scottish Rite, and the Commandery, and was always interested in the growth of these orders.

F. H. Ballou was reared at Independence, Iowa, and during his boyhood attended its schools, being graduated from the Waterloo High School in 1903, following which he entered the State Normal School at Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he studied mathematics, chemistry and physics during 1903 and 1904. He then became a student of the Stevens Institute of Technology at Hoboken, New Jersey, from which he was graduated in 1908, with the degree of Mechanical Engineer. Mr. Ballou belongs to the Greek Letter college fraternity Tau Beta Pi.

Following his graduation Mr. Ballou entered the employ of the American Sugar Refining Company at Jersey City, New Jersey, as engineer, and for two months was engaged in testing boilers. He was then transferred to the Great Western sugar plant at Eaton, Colorado, and spent a year as a student in engineering, after which he was placed in the engineering department at Fort Collins, Colorado, where the chief engineering department was located. In 1910 he was promoted to the position of traveling engineer from that plant, working as such until 1913, when the company transferred the headquarters of the chief engineering department to Denver, Colorado, and Mr. Ballou changed his route to operate from the new location. In 1916 he was further advanced by being sent to the Billings plant to assume the duties pertaining to the position of assistant chief engineer of the Montana division, comprising the plants at Billings and Missoula, Montana, and Lovell, Wyoming. Mr. Ballou has full charge of the engineering department of the Billings plant, with eight men under his direct supervision. The plant is located one mile south of Billings. Mr. Ballou has supervision over all of the engineering work of the three plants, and is discharging his responsibilities in a manner highly creditable to him.

In 1913, while living at Fort Collins, Colorado, Mr. Ballou was united in marriage with Miss Edna Baker, a daughter of Alfred and Ada L. (Richardson) Baker, the former of whom is now deceased, having been a farmer during all of his active years. Mrs. Baker survives her husband and lives at Fort Collins, Colorado. Mr. and Mrs. Ballou have two children, namely: Frederick, who was born December 21, 1914; and Edna, who was born September 29, 1918. Like his father, Mr. Ballou is a republican. Reared in the faith of the Episcopal Church, he is now a valued member of St. Luke's Episcopal Church of Billings. He belongs to Fort Collins Lodge, Knights of Pythias, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Cosmopolitan Club of Billings and the Billings Midland Club. The Ballou residence is at No. 118 Yellowstone Avenue, Billings, where a helpful home atmosphere is maintained and a gracious hospitality dispensed, both Mr. and Mrs. Ballou being ideal hosts, who enjoy gathering their friends about them.

Henry H. Nell, assistant superintendent of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company Reduction Works, is one of the experienced officials of this great corporation, who has earned his promotion through his own efforts, and is what may be termed a self-made man in the best sense of the word. He was born in Reading Township, Adams County, Pennsylvania, November 11, 1857, a son of Abraham Nell, and grandson of Henry Nell. The Nell family originated in Germany, but was established in Pennsylvania during the Colonial epoch of this country's history. The great-grandfather of Henry H. Nell, was also named Henry, and he established a homestead in Reading Township, Adams County, Pennsylvania, where he died, his property descending to his son, Henry Nell, who spent his life on this farm, and here died. Abraham Nell, father of Henry H. Nell was born on this same farm in 1816, and he also spent his life upon it, and here passed away in 1895. A strong republican he never failed to uphold his political principles, and he was equally fearless in supporting his religious convictions through the medium of the Lutheran Church, of which he was a conscientious member. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Catherine Hess, was born at Hanover, Pennsylvania, in 1819, and she died on the homestead in 1894. Their children were as follows: Adam, who was general agent for the Johnston Harvesting Company, died at Churchtown, Pennsylvania in 1911; Levi, who is living retired at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, was formerly foreman of the steel plant at Steelton, Pennsylvania, and county commissioner of Dauphin County, that state; Matilda, who died at the age of twenty-seven years, in 1880, was living on the homestead, and had never married; George, who is a farmer of York County, Pennsylvania; Amanda, who is the widow of John Zinn, a liveryman, lives at East Berlin, Pennsylvania; Henry H., whose name heads this review; Abraham, who died in 1908, at Boulder, Colorado, had mining interests there and owned a saw-mill; Emeline, who died in infancy; Catherine, who married O. W. Eppley, a farmer residing near Carlisle, Pennsylvania; Sarah, who married William O. Walton, resides in York County, Pennsylvania, where he is engaged in farming; William, who died in childhood; and John, who died at the age of twenty-two years.

Henry H. Nell attended the common schools of his native township, and remained on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age, leaving it in 1880, to come west to Denver, Colorado, to engage with the Union Pacific Railroad. In 1888 he located at Butte, Montana, as an employe of the Union Pacific Railroad, and remained with it in a clerical capacity, from February, 1888, to October, 1889, in the latter month coming to Anaconda as traffic clerk for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. It was not long before he was promoted to be supply clerk, then was made assistant superintendent of the reduction department of his company, which responsible position he still holds. His offices are in the general office building of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Like his father, Mr. Nell is a republican. He was baptized in the Lutheran Church, and reared in its faith. Fraternally he belongs to Denver Lodge, Ancient Free and accepted Masons; Anaconda Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Montana Commandery, Knights Templar of Butte, Montana; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. He is also a member of the Anaconda Gun Club, which for the past twenty years he has served as secretary and treasurer, and is a charter member of the Anaconda Club. For some time he has been secretary and treasurer of the Baltic-Combination Mining Company, and active in its conduct. Mr. Nell resides at the old Upper Works of Anaconda.

In November, 1887, Mr. Nell was married at Denver, Colorado, to Miss May F. Hosford, a daughter of Robert and Mabel (Allen) Hosford. Mr. Hosford was a harnessmaker, and died at Monroeville, Ohio. Mrs. Hosford survives and makes her home at Denver, Colorado. Mr. and Mrs. Nell have one daughter, Mabel Ione, who married Milton A. Reid, chief chemist of the Washoe Sampler of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Butte, Montana. A thoroughgoing man, Mr. Nell commands the confidence of his associates, and is recognized as a substantial resident of Anaconda, in whose prosperity he takes a deep interest. His support can be counted upon of all measures looking toward constructive civic improvements.

Frank A. Lenz, born in Danzig, Germany, February 13, 1862, came to the United States February 22, 1881, applied for first citizenship papers in New York within ten days from his arrival on this side of the ocean, and was admitted to citizenship in Louisville, Kentucky, October 3, 1887. He worked as a laborer and helper at various trades for some months until his better education apparent through his language drew the attention of his employers, from which time on he held positions of clerk, bookkeeper, draughtsman, reporter, assistant editor, editor, teacher, and writer. In 1886 he engaged in newspaper work in Louisville, Kentucky, through which he became acquainted with the officials and members of the bar of that city and of Jefferson County, through which acquaintance he found an opening to enter upon a study of law at the office of Mr. Newton G. Rogers, a prominent attorney of Kentucky.

On the 17th day of October, 1888, he married Miss Louise Kamuf of Owensboro, Kentucky, and of the ten children born to them, they raised eight, five boys and three girls to manhood and womanhood. The two oldest boys, Paul G. and Frank J. were eleven months in France with the American Expeditionary Forces in the late war. The older one, Paul, was severely wounded in the Battle of St. Mihiel, November 1, 1918.

Mr. Lenz did not finish his law studies until March, 1897, when he was admitted to practice in the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, Kentucky. A little more than two years later he was admitted to practice before the Court of Appeals of Kentucky and soon thereafter in the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, District of Columbia.

He came to Montana in 1896, and was admitted to the practice of law in this state in 1897. Wherever he was located he soon became prominent by his interest in municipal, state and national affairs, having formed a strong attachment for the democratic party.

He was often sent out on the stump, especially in German communities of opposite leaning and has shown some power of persuasion in some of these.

Mr. Lenz was one of the four-minute speakers and a diligent member of the Advisory Board to the local draft boards of Butte and Silver Bow County.

Peter Alexander Pender came to Montana twenty years ago as a railway telegraph operator, was in the employ of Montana railroads in different capacities for a number of years, and subsequently joined the Montana Oil Company and is now manager of the business of that corporation at Billings.

Mr. Pender was born at Chatham, Ontario, Canada, August 22, 1881. His father, James Pender, born in Scotland in 1855, came to this country when a young man and located at Chatham, Ontario, where he married and where for many years he was proprietor of the Magnolia Hotel. He has lived retired from business since 1901. He is a Presbyterian. James Pender married Jessie Reid, who was born in Scotland in 1856 and came to this country with her parents at the age of six years. The Reid family also located at Chatham, where Mrs. James Pender died in 1904. Her children were: Mary, wife of Matt Lydon, a farmer at Thamesville, Ontario; Ann, unmarried and her father's housekeeper; Peter A.; Bessie, at home with her father; Margaret, who died in 1913, at the age of twenty-four; and Ursula and Agnes, both at home.

Peter A. Pender acquired his education in the public schools of his native city, graduating from high school in 1898. After a course of study that made him a practical telegrapher he worked in telegraph offices in Chicago and in Winnipeg, Canada, and in July, 1899, came to Billings, spending six weeks in the telegraph office as an operator. He was located at Livingston five months, at Columbus, Montana, two years, and for two years was general clerk in the Division Freight and Passenger Offices of the Northern Pacific Railway at Butte. Mr. Pender for twelve years was traveling freight and passenger agent for the Burlington System, covering the entire State of Montana. He left the railroad in 1917 to join the Montana Oil Company as salesman, and after six months was made manager of the Billings branch.

The plant and offices over which he has supervision are located on First Avenue, East, and Twentieth Street, North. On September 1, 1919, the Montana Oil Company was taken over by the Mutual Oil Company, with headquarters at Kansas City, Missouri. About twenty-five stations in Montana are supervised by Mr. Pender and are located in Montana from Livingston east and in the extreme Northeastern portion of Wyoming.

Mr. Pender is a very popular business man and member of a number of social and civic organizations, including the Midland Empire Club of Billings, the United Commercial Travelers, the Rotary Club, Butte Lodge of Masons, Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Butte, and Buttè Lodge No. 153, Woodmen of the World. He is independent in politics and is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church.

His home is at 217 Lewis Avenue. Mr. Pender married in 1902, at Columbus, Montana, Maude Penman, daughter of David and Margaret (Ayres) Penman, both now deceased. Her father, a native of Scotland, came to the United States, landing at Baltimore, worked in the Pennsylvania coal fields for a number of years, and was a pioneer miner in Montana. He came to this state in 1892 and opened the Cokedale Coal Mines. The last seven years of his life he spent as a hotel proprietor at Columbus, where he died.

ARTHUR L. D'AUTREMONT. The true western spirit of progress and enterprise is exemplified in the career of Arthur L. d'Autremont, whose energetic nature and laudable ambition has enabled him to advance steadily to a leading position in commercial circles at Lewistown, where he is now the president of the Fad Shoe and Clothing Company. He has made his home and centered his activities here since 1900, and during the time that has intervened has had his genuine worth recognized in the high regard of his fellow citizens.

Arthur L. d'Autremont was born on his father's farm in Calhoun County, Iowa, April 14, 1872, a son of Louis A. and Laura E. (Race) d'Autremont. His father, a native of Pennsylvania, was a young man when he migrated to Calhoun County and took up his residence in a more or less unsettled region. There he developed a good farm on the prairie and continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1907, at the age of sixty-seven years. He was a man of industry and integrity, and had the full esteem and respect of those with whom he came into contact. In political matters he was a democrat. His widow, who survives him at an advanced age and resides in Iowa, is a native of Switzerland.

The third in a family of nine children, Arthur L. d'Autremont was reared on his father's farm and secured his education in the district schools of Calhoun County. While all the surroundings of his boyhood and youth were of an agricultural character, they bore no influence upon him in his choice of vocations, for when he reached his majority he began his connection with commercial affairs, securing a position as clerk in a general store at Lohrville, Iowa, in his home community, and subsequently acted in a like capacity in establishments at other places. In the meantime he was carefully conserving his earnings and assimilating all the knowledge possible as to business methods, customs and values, and by 1904 felt ready to embark in business on his own account. Looking over the field, he decided upon the thriving and fast-growing community of Lewistown as the scene for his initial venture, and he has never had reason to regret his choice. His first establishment was a modest one, devoted entirely to the sale of footwear, but the energy and enterprise of the proprietor, combined with his initiative and modern ideas, attracted the trade of the public in such a way that he was encouraged to add a stock of clothing and furnishings. Thus came into being the Fad Shoe and Clothing Company, with Mr. d'Autremont's brother Bert as a partner. The store at Nos. 413 and 415 West Main Street is now classed as one of the best in the state. Mr. d'Autremont is accorded a place among the energetic business men of Lewistown, where he has a number of business and civic connections. He is a republican in his political inclinations, and his fraternal affiliations are with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Lewistown Council No. 1508, Knights of Columbus.

Mr. d'Autremont was married October 3, 1905, to Miss Mary Eppers, and they have had five children, of whom four are living: Lucille, Irene, Marie and Albert L., Jr.

LEON SHAW began his career as a railroad and commercial telegrapher, acquired a knowledge of the newspaper business while taking dispatches for the Associated Press, and for upwards of a quarter of a century has been identified with Montana journalism. He is managing editor and manager of the Billings Gazette, one of the most widely circulated and influential papers in the state.

The Billings Gazette was established as a weekly in 1884, and has been published as a daily since 1901. It is republican in politics and is the official paper of Yellowstone County. There are five daily editions, the midnight, morning, noon, afternoon and evening editions. Every mail train leaving Billings takes the latest edition with the latest telegraph news, and the Gazette is read and is a molder of opinion all over Montana, Wyoming and North Dakota. The daily circulation aggregates nearly 14,000 copies. The Gazette carries both the Associated Press and the United Press dispatches. The officers of the Gazette Printing Company are: J. E. Edwards, president; S. M. Wood, secretary and treasurer; and Leon Shaw, editor.

Mr. Shaw was born at Olathe, Kansas, June 28, 1871. His grandfather, Samuel Shaw, was born in Scotland in 1803, and when a young man came to America and was one of the first settlers in the Sangamon River Valley of Illinois. He was a successful pioneer farmer in that locality and became a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. All five of his sons served as Union soldiers. The names of these sons were Samuel, Timothy, William, James and Archibald. Timothy was the first Illinois soldier killed in the war. Samuel Shaw finally retired to Dixon, Illinois, where he died in 1893.

Archibald Shaw, father of the Billings editor, was born in Illinois in 1838 and was reared and married in his native state. He served as a Union soldier during the last two years of the war in an Illinois regiment, and was mustered out with the rank of lieutenant. Following the war he moved to Olathe, Kansas, where he engaged in the live stock business until his death in 1888. He represented Johnson County in the State Legislature, was a republican and an Odd Fellow. Archibald Shaw married Kate Holbrook, who was born at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1851 and is now living at Long Branch, California. They had three sons:

Leon; Roy, who died at the age of five years; and Henry, a resident of Kansas City and publicity agent for the Kansas City Grand Opera Company.

Leon Shaw was graduated from the Olathe High School in 1888, one of his classmates being former Governor H. S. Hadley of Missouri. He was telegraph operator at Birmingham, Alabama, in the early days of that city for the Kansas City, Birmingham & Memphis Railway. Later he was with the Western Union Telegraph Company at Fort Scott, Kansas, and his experience as a telegraph operator took him to Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, Chicago, St. Paul and to Helena, Montana, in 1892. As a Western Union man he was assigned the duty of taking the Associated Press dispatches, and later he became associated with practical newspaper work on the Helena Record and Helena Record-Herald. He was also with the Butte Miner, and returning to Helena was telegraph and associate editor on the Record-Herald for eight years.

Mr. Shaw also knows something of practical farming and ranching in Montana. While a newspaperman he bought a farm in the Sweet Grass country, lived on it and developed it for five years and still owns 150 acres of irrigated land in that locality.

Mr. Shaw came to Billings to join the staff of the Billings Gazette in 1916. In November of that year he was made editor of the daily morning paper. He has been active in republican politics and was elected to represent the Helena district in the State Legislature during the tenth session, 1906-07. While in the Legislature he introduced and secured the passage of the bill creating the Montana Railroad Commission. Mr. Shaw served four years as president of the Montana Telegraphers' Union. He is affiliated with the Congregational Church and is a member of Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Helena, Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is a former member of the Elks.

In 1892, at Anamosa, Iowa, he married Miss Carrie Gill, daughter of E. J. and Leah Gill, the latter now living at Lucine, Nevada. Her father, who is deceased, was also a Civil war veteran.

H. L. CUMMINGS has been identified in different lines with the business enterprise of Livingston for the past fifteen years, and is now proprietor of one of the most complete garage establishments in southern Montana.

He was born in Peru, Clinton County, New York, August 21, 1857. His grandfather, Henry Cummings, was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, and spent his life there, dying in 1858. George Cummings, father of H. L., was born in Ontario in 1834, but was reared and married in Peru, New York, afterward moved to Lake Placid in Essex County, that state, and died there in 1901. He followed different lines of employment. He was a republican and a very zealous member of the Methodist Church. He married Elizabeth Kent, who was born in Plattsburg, New York, in 1837 and died at Lake Placid in 1900. The oldest of their children is C. H. Cummings, also a resident of Livingston, referred to more particularly in the following paragraphs. The second is H. L. Cummings. George is a farm hand in Alberta, Canada, and Elizabeth is the wife of Hiram McKee, a farmer at Morrisville, Vermont.

H. L. Cummings received his education in the public schools of Peru, New York, and at the age of eighteen began earning his living as driver of a team and at other employments. In 1874 he went to Blackbrook, New York, was a farmer and in the lumber business, and in 1886 established himself in business at Lake Placid, where for three years he was a merchant and then a carpenter and builder. He came west to Livingston in 1904 and for two years continued the carpenter's business, after which he established a livery and coal business and blacksmith shop. He conducted this under the name H. L. Cummings & Son for eight years. Owing to the increasing patronage of his establishment due to the importance of the automobile industry, he has since concentrated his attention on a modern garage at the corner of Lewis and Third streets. He owns the building, 80x100 feet, and does a general garage and repair business. He handles accessories and is local representative for the sale of the Chevrolet car.

Mr. Cummings is a republican, is a trustee of the Methodist Church at Livingston, a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce and a stockholder in the Park Milling Company and in the Park Creamery Company. He is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at Lake Placid, New York. Mr. Cummings owns a modern home at the corner of Third and Lewis streets.

In 1879, in Clinton County, New York, he married Miss Elizabeth Allen, daughter of Frank and Dina (Watson) Allen, both now deceased. Her father was an iron worker. Mr. and Mrs. Cummings have four children. Lyman H., the oldest, was born in New York state in 1881, and for a number of years has been associated with his father in business. He married Rosanna Merrill and has two children, Franklin and Mae. Christina, the second child of Mr. and Mrs. Cummings, is the wife of E. H. Newell, a merchant at Livingston. Loretta married William Shorthill, a street car conductor at Portland, Oregon. Martha, the youngest of the family, is a junior in the Park County High School.

C. H. Cummings, older brother of H. L. Cummings, was born at Peru, New York, February 19, 1853, had a public school education there, became a contractor and was superintendent of a lumber yard at Blackbrook and Lake Placid, New York. Mrs. Cummings died at Livingston in 1908 and all her children died in infancy. In 1909 Mr. Cummings married Mrs. Sarah (Durgan) Westcott, a daughter of David and Mary (McKee) Durgan. Her father was also a farmer at Peru, New York. C. H. Cummings has reared an adopted son, William, taking him when he was a year old. He finished his education in the State Agricultural College at Bozeman and is now engaged in ranching at Reed Point, Montana.

A. A. SHEUERMAN who has been a resident of Butte for about ten years has built up and developed an important and extensive business with that city as his headquarters in theater advertising. Mr. Sheuerman has been in the advertising business off and on since early youth, and has an extensive acquaintance with newspaper and other advertising mediums in the Northwest.

He was born at The Dalles, Oregon, January 17, 1886. His father J. Sheuerman, who was born in Germany in 1857, came to this country when a

Her father is a retired commission merchant. Mrs. Sheuerman is a graduate of the Butte High School.

ELMER J. MO. It is generally conceded that Elmer J. Mo has done an enormous amount of constructive work in Sweetgrass County, supplying the faith, enthusiasm and also the pioneer example and enterprise by which a large and important section of fertile Montana lands have been colonized, developed and brought to the front as an agricultural proposition.

Mr. Mo by profession is a banker. In fact he began life as an accountant. He is a master of technical business detail as well as a master executive. He was born at Sleepy Eye, Minnesota, October 12, 1884. His father, Hans Mo, is still living at Sleepy Eye, was born in Norway in 1849 and came to the United States in 1865. He worked as a farm hand at Hanska, Minnesota, and for several years was employed in a store at Sleepy Eye. In 1881 he became vice president of the State Bank of Sleepy Eye, and now for many years has been president of that institution. He has also served as mayor of his home town, is a republican, a very active worker in the Lutheran Church and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Ancient Order of United Workmen. Hans Mo married Annie Stockstead, who was born in Norway in 1854. Elmer J. is the oldest of their children. Rolf has been in the Big Timber country since 1916 as a rancher. Pearl is the wife of Saxe Somerville, who was with the Expeditionary Forces in France. Alice is a talented young woman, a graduate of Rockford College in Rockford, Illinois, finished her education in the Minneapolis School of Dramatic Art and is now engaged in chautauqua and lyceum work with the University Lyceum Players.

Elmer James Mo graduated from the high school of his native town in Minnesota in 1903, spent six months in a commercial school at Mankato and for three months studied law in the night school of the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis. For two and a half years he was employed by Ross & Davis as utility man in that firm's chain of banks in North Dakota. His work was somewhat in the nature of traveling auditor. In 1908, when he was twenty-four years of age, he was employed by another firm to organize a bank at Crandall, South Dakota. He also served as accountant for the Williston Drug Company at Williston, North Dakota. On returning to Sleepy Eye he was assistant cashier of the State Bank of that town during 1910-11.

Mr. Mo arrived at Big Timber October 19, 1912. For a year and a half he was assistant cashier in the Citizens State Bank and in January, 1914, organized the Scandinavian American Bank of Big Timber. For one year he was its cashier and then until January 1, 1917, was vice president, when he sold his banking interests. In the meantime he had made this one of the strong and reliable institutions, a bulwark of financial opportunity. He had been working to realize an ideal in the development of what is known as the Gibson country around Gibson and Melville, and gave much of his time to the development of a large ranch in that vicinity. His operations have broadened in real estate, the loan and insurance business until he is now head of one of the largest organizations of the kind in the southern part of the state. He has brought hundreds of farmers to this section of Montana, and many thousands of acres have been sold through the medium of his influence and business organization. He individually owns 2,000 acres of ranch land in Sweetgrass County. He has an office building on McLeod Street, and also a modern home on the same thoroughfare.

Mr. Mo is president of the Sweetgrass Abstract and Audit Company. He was a member of the Legislature in 1919, being elected from Sweetgrass County in 1918. During that session he served as a member of the banks and banking, conservation of resources and fishing and game committees. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, affiliated with the Lodge of Elks at Watertown, South Dakota, being a life member, and also belongs to Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias. In 1906, at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, he married Miss Alice Schlief, a native of Wisconsin. They have two children, Hazel, born November 5, 1912; and Rolfa, born June 6, 1916.

R. J. JOHANNES, whose connection with the coal business extends back over a period of twenty-three years, is a man of wide experience, keen appreciation of values, thorough knowledge of the industry which he represents and excellent business judgment. While he has been located at Billings only since 1918, the reputation which he established at Helena during his long career in that city preceded him to this city, where, as sales agent for the Kooi Coal Company and the Bear Creek Field, he occupies a position of importance in the coal trade and has added to the standing which is his by right of past achievements.

Mr. Johannes was born at Humboldt, Michigan, January 17, 1870, and is a son of Nicholas and Lena (Geitzen) Johannes. His father, born in Germany in 1823, was reared in that country and came to the United States in young manhood, his first location being at Port Washington, Wisconsin, where he married Lena Geitzen, also a native of Germany, born in 1839. Subsequently they removed to Humboldt, Michigan, where Mr. Johannes followed his trade of wheelwright, as he did also, later, at Ishpeming, Michigan, and finally at Helena, Montana, where he arrived August 15, 1880, and where he was the pioneer wheelwright of the city. He continued to be similarly engaged throughout the remainder of his life, and being an industrious man and good manager when he died in 1900 was possessed of a comfortable competence. He was a democrat in politics, and he and Mrs. Johannes, who died June 18, 1908, at Helena, were members of the Roman Catholic Church.

The only child of his parents, R. J. Johannes was educated in the public schools of Ishpeming, Michigan and the parochial school at Helena, Montana, added to which was a course in the Helena Business College, which he left in 1888. In the meantime, during the summer months of the years 1886, 1887 and 1888, he had ridden the range as a cowboy. After leaving business college Mr. Johannes secured a position in the Helena Post Office Department as a letter carrier, a position which he retained five years. In 1893 he entered the services of the Royal Milling Company of Great Falls, Montana, as salesman at Helena, and in this position gained valued experience in the art of selling goods. During 1894-5-6 he was salesman for the T. C. Power Company of Helena, the largest implement dealers in Montana, and in 1897 turned his attention to the coal business, conducting a retail and wholesale yard at Helena until May 1, 1918. Mr. Johannes during this time came into contact with numerous large interests in the fuel industry, and as he gained experience became impressed with the opportunities open for a man of his knowledge and experience as a sales agent. In the year mentioned he received an attractive offer, and eventually disposed of his holdings and came to Billings, where, in September, 1918, he entered upon his duties as sales agent for the Kooi Coal Company for Montana and North Dakota, and for the Northwestern Improvement Company of Red Lodge, Montana, the largest coal company in the Northwest. Mr. Johannes covers with his sales the entire territory between Fargo, North Dakota, and Portland, Oregon, and his transactions are immense and important in character. He is one of the best known figures in the coal trade in the state at this time and has innumerable acquaintances among the large operators. His offices at Billings are located at No. 210 Hart-Albin Building. He is a great believer in the future of Montana lands, and at present is the owner of 165 acres of splendid ranch property on the Little Blackfoot River, which he operates as a stock ranch. In this direction, also, he has been successful, having managed his property with rare business shrewdness and admirable foresight. Mr. Johannes is a republican, but has not cared for the doubtful honors of public life, although he is quick to respond to any worthy appeal and stanchly supports all movements which show themselves worthy of his co-operation. He belongs to the United Commercial Travelers, and he and Mrs. Johannes belong to the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Johannes was married March 26, 1914, at Fort Benton, Montana, to Miss Clara Torkelson, daughter of Mrs. Kate Torkelson, of Madison, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Johannes reside in Helena, Montana.

WILLIAM WALLACE GAIL. One of the best known men in the state in advertising, newspaper and political circles is William Wallace Gail of Billings. He was born at East Aurora, Erie County, New York, June 29, 1880, a son of Dr. William H. Gail, and grandson of Reverend Gail, a pioneer clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Western New York. Doctor Gail was born at East Aurora, New York, in 1840, and he died at Buffalo, New York, in 1916, having spent his life in his native state. During the Civil war he gave his country a soldier's service as surgeon of the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry, and upon his return home resumed his practice at East Aurora, continuing it from 1865 to 1912, when he retired. He was a graduate of the Albany Medical School, from which he secured his degree of Doctor of Medicine. Politically he was a democrat. For years he was affiliated with the Episcopal Church. He was well known as a Mason. The maiden name of his wife was Julia Wallace, and she was born in Scotland in 1846, and died at East Aurora in 1890. Their children were as follows: Florence M., who married James B. McCreary, who is a broker in stocks and bonds of Buffalo, New York, but during the great war went to France as a worker in the Young Men's Christian Association; Clarence W., who is with the American Ship Building Company and resides at Cleveland, Ohio; and William W., whose name heads this review.

William W. Gail attended the grammar and high schools of East Aurora, being graduated from the latter in 1894, and he later became a student of Cornell University, New York, from which he was graduated in 1905, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In his senior year he was elected to the scholarship fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa. Early exhibiting literary leanings, Mr. Gail became editor-in-chief of the Cornell Era, a literary monthly magazine, and he was also assistant in the department of sociology and statistics at the university. In 1905 he won the Guilford English essay prize at Cornell.

In 1905 Mr. Gail went to Cripple Creek, Colorado, as a reporter on the Cripple Creek Times, and in 1908 was made its managing editor. The year following Mr. Gail left Cripple Creek for Colorado Springs to become telegraph editor and editorial writer on the Colorado Springs Gazette, and subsequently was connected with the Evening Herald and Evening Telegraph, both of that city. On December 1, 1913, Mr. Gail came to Billings to become editor of the Billings Gazette, continuing in that position for three years, when he resigned to establish himself in a general advertising business under the name of the Billings Advertising Company, of which he is the sole proprietor. This business has grown until it is now one of the largest of its kind in Montana, its operations covering a wide field in this and other states. His offices are at 211-212 Stapleton Block. Mr. Gail carries on a general advertising agency and advertisement writing, and specializes on publicity work. In addition to the work of his agency Mr. Gail is editor and manager of the Midland Empire Farmer, a monthly farm paper.

A stalwart republican, Mr. Gail is very active in politics, now serving as chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, to which office he was elected in the fall of 1918. When the Midland Empire Fair Association was organized the services of Mr. Gail were secured as publicity manager, in which capacity he has continued ever since. He is chairman of the publicity committee of the Billings Midland Club and vice president of the Rotary Club. He was one of the two representatives of the United States on the Resolutions Committee at the International Rotary Convention held at Kansas City, Missouri, in 1918.

Mr. Gail has always been very active in athletics, especially in base ball and tennis. While at Cornell University he was an instructor in the gymnasium, and after going to Cripple Creek he played semi-professional ball. At Colorado Springs he became playing manager of the Colorado Springs Ball Club, and served as such for five years. He has won numerous tennis championships, including the singles and doubles championship at Chautauqua, New York, in 1902, and the city championship at Colorado Springs in 1913 as well as the city championship of Billings in 1917.

As a speaker, both serious and humorous, Mr. Gail is known all over Montana, and is in great demand at banquets and conventions, as well as during political campaigns. When Billings entertained Colonel Roosevelt, October 5, 1918, Mr. Gail was chairman of the "Roosevelt Day" committee, and presided at the auditorium when "our greatest American" addressed 10,000 people, which occasion was his last public appearance. Mr. Gail also originated the movement which resulted in bringing Judge Hughes from Fargo, North Dakota, on a special train to speak at Billings, this perhaps being the first and only instance of the breaking of the itinerary of a presidential candidate. While at Colorado Springs he took a very active part in local affairs, being one of the organizers of the progressive party of Colorado in 1912. He managed the annual convention of the Montana State Newspapers Association at Billings in 1915, which was the largest in the history of the organization, as well as the most effective. He was a leader in the publicity work of the war activities of the state, acting as state publicity director for the first Young Men's Christian Association drive and was permanent chairman of the county publicity organization of the Liberty Loan drives and the War Chest, and later of the War Loan organization. As one of the Four Minute Men speakers he did effective work in the various war drives. In fact during the period this country was in the war, Mr. Gail devoted the major portion of his time and energies to patriotic activities.

On March 25, 1905, Mr. Gail was united in marriage with Miss Virginia Irene Gunderman at Ithaca, New York. She is a daughter of John and Stella Gunderman, now residents of Billings, Mr. Gunderman being connected with the Billings Gazette. Mrs. Gail is a graduate of the Ithaca, New York, Conservatory of Music. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Gail have been as follows: Wallace Henry, who died at the age of ten years; William Morrison, who was born in 1909; and Robert Woodard, who was born in 1911. The family residence is located on a ranch on the Billings Bench, four miles northeast of Billings.

Julius Williams, engaged in the farm loan and real estate business at Columbus, knows the northwestern country as only a native son can, and has been a practical farmer, banker and real estate man in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana.

He was born at Sacred Heart, Minnesota, July 6, 1879. His father, Ole K. Williams, was born in Norway in 1849, and was four years old when his parents came to the United States and settled out on the northwestern frontier in Goodhue County, Minnesota. He grew up and married there and spent his active career as a farmer. In 1874 he moved to Renville County, Minnesota, and in 1907, having retired from the farm, moved to Taylor, North Dakota, where he resides today. He has been active in republican politics and was county commissioner of Renville County several terms and also township clerk. He is a member of the Lutheran Congregational Church. Ole Williams married Annie Simonson, who was born in Norway in 1843 and died at Taylor, North Dakota, in 1911. Their children were: Cornelius, engaged in the farm loan and real estate business at Bismarck, North Dakota; Emma, wife of Will Thom, a general merchant at Minneapolis; Julius; Julia, a twin sister of Julius, is the wife of Christ Rechtfertig, a wholesale merchant at Minneapolis; Stan, a merchant at Warren, North Dakota; Ole, in the hardware business at Warren, North Dakota; Theolenia, wife of Edward E. Ziner, a rancher at Dunn Center, North Dakota.

Julius Williams lived on his father's farm in Renville County, Minnesota, to the age of twenty. He attended common schools there and then for one year farmed independently and at the age of twenty-one moved to Rolla, North Dakota, where he engaged in the land loan business for five years. After that he was in the banking business at Taylor, North Dakota, where in 1908 he established the Farmers and Merchants State Bank and was its president until 1914. Mr. Williams came to Montana in 1914 and for the first year was in the real estate and loan business at Billings and since 1915 his headquarters for an extensive business have been at Columbus. He is sole proprietor of the J. Williams & Company, Incorporated, with offices on Third Street, handling city properties, ranches and farm loans, one of the best equipped organizations of its kind in the Yellowstone Valley. Through Mr. Williams' Company over 100,000 acres of land have been bought and sold since he came to Montana. He personally owns about 8,000 acres of ranch land in Stillwater, Yellowstone, Musselshell and Sweetgrass counties, also a dwelling house at Columbus and his own modern home.

While at Taylor, North Dakota, he served six years as a member of the town council. He is a republican, a Lutheran, and is affiliated with Stillwater Lodge No. 65, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Aldemar Commandery No. 5 of the Knights Templar, and Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite. He is also a member of the Elks at Dickerson, North Dakota, and the Modern Woodmen of America at Taylor in that state. He is an active and pushing member of the Columbus Commercial Club.

Mr. Williams married at Sacred Heart, Minnesota, May 13, 1905, Miss Mary Opdahl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Opdahl of Sacred Heart. Her father is a retired farmer. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Williams are four in number, Orville, Ruth, Marvin and Marjorie. Orville is in seventh grade, Ruth, in sixth and Marvin, in the second grade of the public schools at Columbus.

FRANK H. COONEY is the president of Cooney Brokerage Company of Butte. This business was founded twenty-five years ago by Mr. Cooney and his brother, and from year to year they have developed their facilities and organization to a perfect service between many prominent manufacturers and the wholesale houses in Montana and other portions of the Northwest. The annual volume of business for a number of years has run into the millions.

Frank H. Cooney has been a resident of Montana nearly thirty years. At the age of fourteen he was being paid four dollars a month as delivery boy in a grocery store in Ontario. Those who know him now in his comparative matu ity of nearly fifty years recognize as one of his dominating characteristics an unlimited capacity and desire for hard work. It was hard work that brought him his early knowledge and experience of business, and the success of the Cooney Brokerage Company has been largely due to the fact that he has climbed steadily from the very bottom of the commercial scale.

He was born at Norwood, Ontario, December 31, 1872, son of John W. and Mary (O'Callaghan) Cooney. His father was a native of New York State and his mother of Ireland. Frank H. Cooney is one of four brothers, all of whom have gained prominence in business affairs. His educational advantages were confined to the parochial schools of Ontario, and besides the experience already noted as delivery boy in a grocery store he worked for a time with his father, who was in the nursery business. He was not yet nineteen years of age when he came to Butte in July, 1891, and during the next three years did much to equip himself for independent effort as an employe in a retail grocery store and afterwards in the wholesale department of the Davidson Grocery Company.

In 1894 he and his brother Howard C. established the firm Cooney Bros., and in 1896 incorporated as the Cooney Brokerage Company, merchandise brokers. While the business headquarters of this firm are in Butte, Mr. Frank H. Cooney is a resident of Missoula, and for a number of years has owned and managed extensive farm and livestock interests in the Bitter Root Valley. He is a member of the Elks Club of Missoula, the Silver Bow Club at Butte, the Country Club of Missoula, and the Knights of Columbus, and is a democrat.

December 27, 1899, he married Miss Emma May Poindexter, daughter of P. H. Poindexter of Dillon, Montana. They are the parents of seven children: Francis H., John Philip, Mary Margaret, Walter Poindexter, Tyler Thompson and Virginia Elizabeth, twins, and Gage Rodmon.

ALMON CLARK SPENCER, of Billings, is a native of Montana, having been born at White Sulphur Springs in Meagher County March 16, 1879. His family originated in England, but was founded in the Province of Ontario, Canada, prior to the American Revolution, and Spencerville, Canada, was named for an ancestor of Judge Spencer, and the latter's grandfather was born in the Province of Ontario.

His father, Almon Spencer, was born in Ontario in 1838, where he resided until 1865. He then removed to Helena, Montana, where he was engaged in the mercantile business until the early '70s, being associated in his enterprise with T. C. Power, former United States senator from Montana. He was for a long time also engaged in conducting a butchering and mercantile business at Diamond City, being one of the early residents of that pioneer settlement. He later removed to White Sulphur Springs, being the first merchant to locate at that place. The business he there established has continued ever since, and is now operated under the name of Anderson, Spencer & Company. Shortly before his removal from Canada to the United States he was married to Margaret Ann Stitt, also a native of Ontario. The children of this marriage are Gideon Kennedy, a merchant and banker of White Sulphur Springs; Irene, wife of C. F. Schaffazick, of Spokane, Washington, manager and part owner of the Columbia Store Company, operating stores at Denver, Salt Lake City and Spokane; Herman W., of Los Angeles, California, who is connected with J. B. Long & Company, one of the largest cattle concerns operating in the Northwest; and A. C. Spencer, the subject of this sketch. The father died at Long Beach, California, in the spring of 1909, and the mother at White Sulphur Springs early in the year 1915.

Judge Spencer attended the public schools at White Sulphur Springs and the Helena High School, from which institution he graduated in 1898. He was for one year a student in the University of Minnesota, and thereafter entered the Law Department of the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated in 1902, after a three-years' course, with the degree of Doctor of Law. From that time until the spring of 1904 he was engaged in the general law practice at White Sulphur Springs, being associated with N. B. Smith, who has since retired from the practice.

In 1904 Mr. Spencer removed to Red Lodge in Carbon County, where he was associated in a general law practice with the late Sydney Fox, who thereafter served as judge of the same district over which Judge Spencer now presides. Upon the death of Judge Fox in the spring of 1913 Mr. Spencer continued in private practice by himself until June 1, 1915, when he was appointed judge of the Thirteenth Judicial District, comprising the counties of Yellowstone, Carbon and Big Horn. In the general election of 1916 he was elected to the same office for a term of four years. Prior to his elevation to the bench he served as county attorney of Carbon County and city attorney of the City of Red Lodge.

In the fall of 1917 he removed from Red Lodge to Billings, where he now resides at No. 3410 Second Avenue, North. In addition to his home he has acquired a wheat ranch a few miles north of the city, thereby entitling him to be classed as an "agriculturist." He is also a stockholder in the Anderson-Spencer Mercantile Company above mentioned, and in the Central State Bank of White Sulphur Springs.

Judge Spencer was married in July, 1915, at Deer Lodge, Montana, to Miss Emma Johnson, daughter of George Johnson, a prominent stockman of that locality. There are no children of this marriage.

Politically Judge Spencer is a staunch supporter of the democratic faith, to which his father became a convert shortly prior to his death, he having been a republican until the election of 1896. His father was one of the pioneer Masons of Montana, and he has followed the ancestral footsteps in this direction to the extent that he is a member of Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Carbon Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch

A. C. Spencer

Masons; Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar, of Billings; and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena. He is also a member of Beartooth Lodge of Elks No. 534; the Billings Golf and Country Club; and the Billings Midland Club. He is likewise an active member of the Montana State Bar Association, and the Yellowstone County Bar Association.

His distinguishing characteristic as a trial judge is his extreme fearlessness and his determination to follow what he conceives to be the law, regardless of the personality of the parties interested or the effect of his decision. He is in no sense a "policy jurist." The natural result of this course of procedure, coupled with his excellent judicial temperament, is a most enviable record in the office which he occupies, and the percentage of cases in which he has been reversed upon appeal is most remarkably small.

ALBERT E. PLATZ. Occupying a place of prominence in the business life of Yellowstone County, Albert E. Platz, of Billings, has achieved success in the various lines of industry with which he has been associated, his keen foresight and tenacity of purpose having proved his chief assets while working his way upward to a leading position among the grain dealers of the state and in financial circles. A son of the late Albert E. Platz, Sr., he was born at Racine, Wisconsin, June 10, 1876.

His grandfather, Frederick Platz, was born, in 1808, in Alsace, France, where he worked with his father in the leather industry during his earlier years. Immigrating to the United States, he located in Racine, Wisconsin, where he established a tannery, which he operated until his death in 1884. A pioneer of Wisconsin, going there long before there were any railroads in the state, he watched the development of the country with great interest and performed his full share of the required pioneer labor.

Albert E. Platz, Sr., was born at Racine, Wisconsin, in 1841, and as a young man learned the tanner's trade with his father. Removing with his family to La Crosse, Wisconsin, in 1878, he embarked in the leather business as a manufacturer of harness, and having build up a lucrative business continued thus employed during the remainder of his active life, passing away in 1908. A republican in politics, he served in various local offices. He attended the Congregational Church, and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. During the Civil war he enlisted as a soldier, but being skilled in the manufacture of leather was sent home from the army to work at his trade in order that he might supply the Government with such leather goods as might be needed by the soldiers. His widow, whose maiden name was Margaret Heck, is now a resident of La Crosse. Three children were born into their household, as follows: Minnie, who died in La Crosse at the age of thirty years; M. F., also of La Crosse, is secretary of a syrup company; and Albert E.

Completing his early studies at the La Crosse High School, Albert E. Platz entered Lake Forest University, remaining in that school two years, until 1899. The following two years he worked for his uncle, William Platz, a leather manufacturer and dealer. Changing his occupation in 1901, Mr. Platz assumed charge of the lumber department of a mining company at Black Lake, Idaho, in the Seven Devils mining district, and was there for five years. Returning then to Wisconsin, he located at La Crosse, and for a year was employed as a traveling salesman. Coming to Billings, Montana, in 1909, Mr. Platz established himself in the lumber business, having his headquarters at Huntley. Disposing of his lumber interests in 1916, he embarked in the grain business, becoming president of the Treasury State Grain Company, which owns a chain of five elevators in Montana, they being located as follows: Red Lodge, Fox, Roberts, Boyd and Coombs. Mr. Platz is kept busily employed, his offices being located in the Lincoln Hotel Block. In addition to his grain interests he is serving as vice president of the Rapelje National Bank and of the Huntley State Bank. He owns a residence at 1020 North Thirty-first Street, and has a financial interest in one of the business buildings of Billings. Fraternally he is a member of Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and socially belongs to the Billings Midland and Empire Club. Politically he is an independent republican.

Mr. Platz married, in 1913, at La Crosse, Miss Emma Gund, a daughter of Henry Gund, a prominent business man of La Crosse, and his wife, Eleanor (Johnson) Gund. Mr. and Mrs. Platz have no children.

C. O. HALGRIMS. A prosperous merchant of Broadview, noteworthy for his good citizenship and many excellent traits of character, C. O. Halgrims is actively identified with both the mercantile and agricultural affairs of Yellowstone County, owning and managing a general store, and supervising the management of his homestead property, which is located three miles west of his store. A son of Ole Halgrims, he was born in Dane County, Wisconsin, September 7, 1865. His grandfather, Ole Halgrims, spent a large part of his life in Norway, where he was a farmer and timber owner. After his retirement from active pursuits he came to the United States and spent his last days in Dane County, Wisconsin, passing away at the venerable age of seventy-two years.

Ole Halgrims was born and brought up in Halengdal, Norway, his birth occurring in 1829. Becoming familiar with the various branches of agriculture when young, he took up farming for his life work. Coming to this country in 1843, he settled in Rock County, Wisconsin, and subsequently there took up land and engaged in the pioneer labor of clearing and improving a farm from the wilderness, doing the work with oxen. In 1882 he removed with his family to North Dakota, becoming a pioneer settler of Trail County, where he continued his work, taking up a homestead claim and again redeeming a farm from its pristine wildness. Very successful in his undertakings, he continued his agricultural labors until his death, which occurred in Mayville, North Dakota, in 1907. He was affiliated with the republican party, and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife, whose name before marriage was Anna Kopsing, was born at Eggdal, Norway, in 1832, and died on the home farm, at Mayville, North Dakota, in 1914. They were the parents of five children, as follows: Barbara, wife of Andrew Anderson, a farmer at Mayville, North Dakota; Thomas, for many years a farmer, died in Trail County, North Dakota, at the comparatively early age of forty-eight years; H. O., occupying the old homestead in North Dakota; Ingery, wife of C. Gullicks, a retired farmer of Mayville; and C. O., the subject of this sketch.

Having received his preliminary education in the public schools of Mayville, North Dakota, C. O. Halgrims has since materially added to the knowledge there obtained by intelligent reading, keen observation, and broad experience. Living with his parents until nineteen years old, he was well trained in the various branches of agriculture under his father's instruction, and subsequently, as clerk in a store at Mayville, became familiar with the art of buying and selling. Starting in life on his own account, Mr. Halgrims was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Sharon, North Dakota, for fifteen years. Coming from there to Montana in 1908, he took up a homestead claim of 160 acres lying three miles west of Broadview, and in its improvement has found both pleasure and profit. In 1914 he bought a store in Broadview, the purchase including the building in which it is housed, and in partnership with his son Thomas has since been successfully engaged in the mercantile business, having built up an extensive and remunerative trade, extending over a radius of fifty miles, his customers coming from far and near. He does a general business, his store being advantageously located on Main Street, and being the leading one of the kind in this section of the county. In politics Mr. Halgrims is a stanch republican, and fraternally he is a member of the American Order of United Workmen and of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

On May 21, 1891, in Vernon County, Wisconsin, Mr. Halgrims was united in marriage with Miss Emma Johnson, a daughter of Peter and Bergetha Johnson, both of whom have passed to the life beyond. Mr. Johnson, a farmer in Vernon County, was a republican in politics, and filled many official positions during his active years. Mr. and Mrs. Halgrims have three children, namely: Thomas, a graduate of the Mayville, North Dakota, High School, and now in business with his father, married Clara Van Cleve, and has two children, Thomas, Jr., born in October, 1916, and Helen, born in March, 1918; Bergetha, wife of Fred Fortney, a machinist of Harlowtown, North Dakota, and having supervision of the construction of roads in Wheatland County, that state; and Adeline, now married to Victor Luhfeldt, of Broadview, Montana.

HENRY S. MENDENHALL is a building contractor, and since coming to Montana has operated extensively on his own account, building and selling homes. He is one of the leading men in his line.

Mr. Mendenhall represents an old English family, resident in America for many generations and was born at Winslow in Pike County, Indiana, February 16, 1879. His father, Joseph F. Mendenhall, was born in Marion County, Ohio, in 1843, grew up there and in Indiana, was married in Pike County of the latter state, and was a contractor and builder and also a farmer. In 1885 he moved from Pike County, Indiana, to Christian County, Missouri, and in 1889 to Stone County in the same state. He lived there until his death at Hurley in 1909. He was active in civic affairs in Stone County, serving as justice of the peace, was a republican voter and a leading member of the Christian Church. He was all through the Civil war as a Union soldier, going in in 1861 and was a commander of mounted scouts under Sherman during the march to the sea. Joseph F. Mendenhall married Henrietta Deadman, who was born at Winslow, Indiana, in 1853 and died at Hurley in Stone County, Missouri, in 1917. A brief record of her children is as follows: J. H., owner of a garage at Laurel, Montana; Henry S.; Grace, who died aged eight years; Clara, wife of Samuel Robinson, a farmer at Crane, Missouri; Ada, who died in infancy; J. F., a railroad employe in Crane, Missouri; and Harry B., a farmer at School, Missouri.

Henry S. Mendenhall received his education in the rural schools of Christian and Stone counties, Missouri, and lived at home with his father until he was twenty years of age. After that he farmed for himself in Stone County, spent two years working for the Iron Mountain Railway in Missouri and Arkansas, and from that turned his attention to contracting and building. His experience in that line covers a number of the western states. He moved from Missouri to Texas, and from there moved to Billings in 1913, where he continued as a journeyman for several years, and since 1916 has been in business for himself. Some of the leading residences and business buildings of Billings are products of his skill. He put up the school house in District No. 26. All the residences erected by him since coming to Billings have been sold. His own home is at 108 Custer Avenue.

Mr. Mendenhall is a member of Crane Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America and is a republican. He married Miss Vollie E. Ailshie at Galena, Missouri, in 1899. Her parents were James and Mary (Deshazer) Ailshie, the latter deceased, while her father is a farmer at Hurley, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Mendenhall have two children, Earl Ross, a high school student, and Ava, who is in grammar school.

L. H. SPRING, who is county agricultural agent for Ravalli County at Hamilton, has had a widely diversified and practical experince in Northwestern agriculture. He is a graduate of the Oregon College of Agriculture and was business manager of ranches in Eastern Oregon before he took up his present work as expert counsel and adviser to the agricultural interests of Ravalli County.

Mr. Spring was born at Rockford, Illinois, February 7, 1885. His paternal ancestors came from England and were early settlers in New York. Grandfather William Henry Spring was born in New York State in 1815 and was a pioneer in Northern Illinois in 1846. Locating at Lindenwood near the present City of Rockford he bought a farm and lived on it until his death in 1887. That farm is still owned by his only daughter Miss Ida May Spring. William Henry Spring married Mary E. Warren, a native of New York State, who died at Lindenwood, Illinois, in 1910 at the age of eighty-seven.

Charles B. Spring, father of L. H. Spring, was born in New York State in 1844 and was two years of age when his parents moved to Illinois. Before his marriage he bought a farm a mile northeast of Lindenwood, and that place with many modern improvements is still his home. Charles B. Spring is a member and regular attendant of Union Church in his community and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Helen M. Bulkley, who was born in 1851 at Rockford, Illinois. Her ancestry goes back to Lord Burkley, a conspicuous figure in the early maritime history of England. Her father A. J. Bulkley was born at Saratoga, New York, in 1828 and settled at Rockford, Illinois, as early as 1846. He was a farmer and a soldier in the Civil war. After the war he lived at Rockford, for many years held the office of city weigh master. He died at Rockford in 1905. A. J. Bulkley married Ann Maria Hobart, who was a member of one of the early colonial families, the "House of Fairbanks" of this country. She was born in Aroostook County, Maine, and died at Lindenwood, Illinois, in 1908 at the age of seventy-two. Charles B.

W. E. Bennett

Spring and wife had four children: L. H. Spring; Samuel, a farmer at Rockford; Wilbur, who occupies the homestead in Illinois; and R. C., a farmer at Mountain, Wisconsin.

L. H. Spring received his early education in the rural schools of Ogle County, Illinois, graduated from the Rockford High School in 1905, and as a means of defraying the expenses of his higher education spent two years working on a farm. He entered the Oregon Agricultural College at Corvallis, and graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Agriculture in 1910. As a youth he had been an observer and student of sound agricultural practice, and has re-enforced his experience by the best and most advanced methods of scientific farming. After leaving college he took charge of a ranch in eastern Oregon for eighteen months, and then managed another ranch for five years. In November, 1916, he returned to the Oregon Agricultural College, where he remained several months taking a general review and doing research work in animal feeding. Mr. Spring in June, 1917, went to work for the Wittenburg King Company of Portland, Oregon, being agriculturist in their field department and also buyer and contractor. He resigned in January, 1918, to come to Hamilton, Montana, and begin his duties as county agricultural agent. His offices are in the Chamber of Commerce Building.

Mr. Spring still retains his membership in the Union Church at Lindenwood, Illinois. He is affiliated with Ionic Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In 1910, at Ontario, Oregon, he married Miss Maye Webster, daughter of William and Sarah (Stephens) Webster. Mrs. Webster lives with Mr. and Mrs. Spring. Her father, now deceased, was a business man at Fayette, Iowa. Mrs. Spring is a graduate of the Fayette High School and was a student in music for three years in the Upper Iowa University at Fayette. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Spring is Helen Margaret, born June 19, 1911.

Walter E. Bennett, passenger and freight agent for the Northern Pacific Railway at Livingston, is an old time telegraph operator and has a veteran's record in the railway service of the North and Northwest. He has been continuously with the Northern Pacific nearly thirty years.

He comes of an old colonial family in the State of Maine, of English origin. He was born at Guilford, Maine, September 12, 1861, son of E. W. and Agnes M. (Straw) Bennett. His parents spent all their lives in Maine. His father was born in 1832 and died in 1913, and followed the occupation of lumbering and farming. He filled several township offices as a democrat and was an active supporter of the Methodist Church. His wife was born in 1833 and died in 1911. Their two children were Walter E. and Fred, the latter dying when only eight years of age.

Walter E. Bennett graduated from the Guilford High School in 1879, and in 1883 graduated from the East Maine Conference Seminary at Buckport. During the next two years while clerking in the store of H. Douglas & Company at Guilford he spent all his leisure hours mastering the art of telegraphy. In 1885, having attained considerable skill with the telegraph key, he entered the service of the Milwaukee Railway as a telegraph operator, and until 1891 worked for that road at Algona, Clear Lake and Garner. When he joined the Northern Pacific in 1891 his first post as telegrapher was at Rosebud, Montana. Two months later he was moved from that station and given different assignments along the Yellowstone Division. From 1892 until 1900 he was railway agent at Big Timber, then for three months was cashier in the offices at Butte, another three months was stationed at Belgrade, and in 1901 took up his present duties as freight and passenger agent at Livingston. He has entire charge of the railroad's business at Livingston.

Mr. Bennett has never married. His time and energies have been completely absorbed by railway work. However, he is well known in fraternal circles, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, Livingston Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, in which he has attained the thirty-third degree, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Clinton Head. The record of successful business men needs no introductory preface among the citizens of the community in which their prosperity has been gained, and Clinton Head is undoubtedly a member of the class just referred to. By his strict personal integrity and honorable dealings, combined with brilliant business qualifications, he has become not only one of the leading merchants of Yellowstone County's smaller communities, but also one of the most highly respected citizens of Pompey's Pillar.

Mr. Head was born at Bedford, Iowa, November 9, 1884, a son of W. T. and Cordelia (Burwell) Head, and a member of a family which, originating in England, was founded in America during colonial times. W. T. Head was born at Streator, Illinois, and was there reared and received a public school education. He was married at Streator to Cordelia Burwell, who was born in 1846 at Canton, Ohio, daughter of a sister of the late President William McKinley, and some time after their marriage removed to Bedford, Iowa, where Mr. Head engaged in the life insurance business. In 1913 he changed his place of residence to Laurel, Montana, where his death occurred two years later, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Head was also a member. He was a democrat in his political adherence, and during the Civil war fought as a soldier of the Union, having enlisted in an Illinois volunteer infantry regiment. Mrs. Head died at Bedford, Iowa, in 1910. They were the parents of the following children: Lula M., who is the wife of E. G. Moore, engaged in the implement business at Pompey's Pillar; Clyde, who is manager of operations of a large construction company operating in Oklahoma; William, who is a painter by vocation; Clinton, of this notice; and Edward, recently mustered out of the U. S. army, who is now a resident of Billings.

Clinton Head received his education in the public schools of Bedford, Iowa, and at the age of seventeen years gave up his high school studies and secured employment in a store near Sheridan, Wyoming. He worked there and at Sheridan for seven years, and in 1908 went to Monarch, Wyoming, where he established himself in the mercantile business. His success there was enough to encourage him to widen the scope of his operations, and in 1917 he came to Pompey's Pillar, where he purchased a general store. This is now the leading commercial establishment in this part of Yellowstone County, and the trade has been built up through real business ability and untiring enterprise, coupled with courtesy and an affable, agreeable manner which has gained him many friends.

In addition to his business Mr. Head is the owner of a modern residence. He is accounted one of his community's live business men and public-spirited citizens, and readily gives his support to all good movements. His politics make him a democrat, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally Mr. Head is affiliated with Monarch Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

In 1910, at Sheridan, Wyoming, Mr. Head married Miss Beulah Bateman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Bateman, residents of Monarch, where Mr. Bateman is fire boss in a coal mine. To this union there have come three children: Lucille, born December 31, 1911; Luella, born February 24, 1914; and Laurine, born May 20, 1917.

Frederick R. Munger has been chef and steward for some of the most noted hotels and cafes in the Middle and Far West, and is now proprietor of a high-class restaurant at Lewistown. Mr. Munger has spent practically all his active life in this line of business, and has a natural aptitude and ability for translating raw materials into perfect bills of fare, and has equal ability in managing the system and complicated running of large hotels and cafes.

Mr. Munger was born in Detroit, Wayne County, Michigan, October 21, 1878, a son of Thomas Mason and Martha A. (Patton) Munger. His father, also a native of Wayne County, Michigan, was a farmer and was also active in public affairs, serving as deputy sheriff of Wayne County for over ten years, most of the time as turnkey in the county jail at Detroit. He was a democrat in politics. He died in March, 1904, at the age of sixty-five. His wife was a native of Chicago, and is still living at the age of sixty-seven. They were married in Detroit and had three children, Frederick R. being the youngest.

Frederick R. Munger grew up on his father's farm in Wayne County, Michigan, and attended public schools there. At the age of sixteen he went to work for the Gore Hotel Company in Chicago, spending about a year with them and then acquiring a valuable apprenticeship with the Fred Harvey hotel system. He was located in Dodge City, Kansas, and at various other points along the Harvey system of railroad hotels. Later he became connected with the Sherman House at Chicago as chef in the cafe, and presided over the kitchens when the famous College Inn adjunct of the Sherman House was opened. In the spring of 1904 he went to St. Louis, Missouri, and, associated with others, opened the Parliament House, one of the best known and most liberally patronized cafes on the grounds of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. He remained in St. Louis as chef and steward for one of the prominent hotels, and in 1907 came to Helena, Montana, and entered the service of the Grandon Hotel as steward for about two years. He then engaged in the restaurant business for himself at Helena, and since 1911 has been proprietor of a prominent restaurant of Lewistown.

Mr. Munger married March 10, 1904, Miss Nora L. Donavon, a native of Rockford, Illinois, and the youngest of two sons and two daughters of Dennis and Julia (Leary) Donavon. Her parents were both born in Ireland. Her father died in 1885 and her mother is now living at Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Munger have one son, Frederick R., Jr. Mr. Munger is independent in politics and is active in Masonry, being affiliated with Morning Star Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Helena, Hiram Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons, at Lewistown, also Lewistown Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena and the Scottish Rite Consistory.

Henry E. Smith. There is no greater constructive work than the proper training of the rising generation, and those who are engaged in it are deserving of highest credit. Some of the finest men and women of the country have and are devoting their lives to this important calling, and one of them deserving of special mention because of his ability and fidelity to the highest ideals of his profession is Henry E. Smith, superintendent of schools of Three Forks. He was born at Rewey, Wisconsin, January 28, 1889, a son of H. J. Smith, born in New York State in 1851, but reared in Wisconsin. H. J. Smith was married at Dodgeville, Wisconsin, to Eliza Walker, born in New York State in 1854, and they had the following children born to them: Thomas, who is yardmaster for the Northwestern Railroad, lives at Adams, Wisconsin; Frank, who is a miner of Mifflin, Wisconsin; Gertrude, who married C. D. Streeter, a railroad conductor, lives at Huron, South Dakota; Homer, assistant professor of education, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis; Henry E., who was the fifth in order of birth; Guy, who died at the age of seven years; and Frood, who enlisted in May, 1918, in the United States army for service during the great war, served in France in the Sixth Division of Infantry and became a second lieutenant. Until 1915 H. J. Smith was section foreman of the Northwestern Railroad at Rewey, Wisconsin, but in that year was pensioned and moved to Dodgeville, Wisconsin, where he still resides, employed as flagman for the railroad. He is a republican. Through the medium of the Methodist Episcopal Church he finds religious support and he is active in the local denomination of that body. For a number of years he has been a Mason.

Henry E. Smith attended the public and high schools of Rewey, Wisconsin, being graduated from the latter in 1908, and then for two years taught in Grant County, his native state, in the second year being made principal of a graded school. In order to further perfect himself Mr. Smith then took a course at the Platteville Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1912, and since then has been attending the summer schools at the University of Wisconsin, also taken correspondence courses, and after spending a year at University of Wisconsin, received his degree in 1920. Between 1912 and 1914 Mr. Smith was principal of the high school at Vernon, Wisconsin, and then for a year was principal of one of the city schools of Reno, Nevada, resigning to accept the superintendency of schools of Three Forks in the fall of 1915. He has 2 schools, 11 teachers and 335 pupils under his supervision, and is noted for his efficiency and his influence over his pupils, who are gaining from him not only a technical knowledge of the various subjects, but a broad outlook on life and a realization of the responsibilities of citizenship. Professionally Mr. Smith belongs to the State Teachers' Association, the Gallatin County Teachers' Association and a member of Gallatin County Education Examining Board. His fraternal connections are with Three Forks Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Three Forks Chapter No. 29, Royal Arch Masons. He is a valued member of the Three Forks Congregational Church. Like his father, he is a strong republican, although he has limited his political work to supporting the efficient and dynamic candidates and principles of his party. The Smith family residence is at No. 319 Second Avenue, East, and is owned by Mr. Smith.

On September 2, 1914, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Floy Rose, a daughter of B. B. Rose, a merchant of Three Forks. Mrs. Smith was graduated from the University of Wisconsin at Madison, Wisconsin, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have a daughter, Audrey, who was born December 27, 1918. They are delightful people socially, and in the intellectual atmosphere of their home an impetus is given to movements looking toward the uplift of their community and the advancement of humanity.

H. L. Currier. The best history of a community or state is the one that deals most with the lives and activities of its people, especially those who, by their own endeavor and indomitable energy, have forged to the front and placed themselves where they well deserve the title of progressive men. In the following paragraphs will be found the record of one who has pushed steadily forward and attained to a splendid success in one of the leading mercantile lines and who has earned a reputation as a man of rare business ability, sound judgment and sterling integrity, qualities that have won for him the universal confidence of the entire community.

H. L. Currier was born at Wautoma, Wisconsin, on the 6th of July, 1881, and is the son of Byron P. Currier, who now resides at Frazee, Minnesota. The latter was born in 1855 in Brattleboro, Vermont, where he was reared and educated. In young manhood he moved to Wisconsin, of which he was a pioneer settler, locating at Wautoma, where he became a successful farmer. Eventually he moved to Frazee, Minnesota, which has since been his home and since 1914 he has been retired from active business life. In politics, he gives his support to the republican party, while his religious membership is with the Congregational Church. Mr. Currier married Amelia Pease, who was born in 1857 in Wisconsin, and whose death occurred at Washburn, North Dakota, where she and her husband lived for about ten years prior to locating in Frazee. H. L. Currier, the immediate subject of this sketch, is the only child living, two others, a boy and girl, dying at an early age.

H. L. Currier was reared under the parental roof and secured his education in the public schools of Wautoma. His school attendance was completed at the age of sixteen years and he assisted his father on the home farm until he was twenty years of age. Then, for five years, he was employed in a farm implement store in Washburn, North Dakota, where he gained valuable experience as a salesman. His next occupation was in an abstract office at Minot, North Dakota, where he remained for three years. Then, for a similar period, Mr. Currier was a traveling salesman, selling stationery to the trade and covering the states of Wisconsin, North Dakota, Texas and New Mexico. During the following five years he traveled out of Chicago, representing a large automobile accessory house in the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota. In 1914 Mr. Currier came to Montana as a representative of the Studebaker Automobile Company, of South Bend, Indiana, with whom he remained until 1917. In the latter year he became branch manager at Missoula for the Auto Warehouse and Service Company, handling Studebaker cars, until 1918, when he became manager for the local office of the Missoula Motor Company, which position he retained until January 1, 1919. In these various positions, Mr. Currier not only demonstrated extraordinary qualities as a salesman, but also proved himself a man of unusual executive and administrative ability and gained an enviable reputation among those who were familiar with his work. In January, 1919, Mr. Currier bought J. W. Reely's storage plant and immediately organized a company known as the Security Warehouse and Storage Company. This company was incorporated, with the following officers: President, H. L. Currier; vice president, E. P. Currier; secretary and treasurer, Adolph Wacker. The company's plant is located on West Cedar Street, along the Bitter Root Railway tracks. They do a general storage and transfer business, the volume of business being larger than any similar company in Montana outside of Butte. Mr. Currier has been very successful in all his business ventures and owns several residences and other real estate in Missoula.

Politically, he is a republican and, fraternally, is a member of Minot Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Minot, North Dakota, and Washburn Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Washburn, North Dakota. He is also a member of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club.

In August, 1918, at Conrad, Montana, Mr. Currier was married to Emaline Messersmith, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Messersmith, of Dickerson, North Dakota. Mr. Messersmith was a pioneer settler of Dickerson, having erected the first building there, and for many years was a successful stockman and rancher, being now retired from active labor. Mrs. Currier is a graduate of the North Dakota State Normal School and prior to her marriage she had taught school at Dickerson. She is a lady of culture and charming personality and Mr. and Mrs. Currier are popular members of the social circles in which they move. Mr. Currier gives his unreserved support to every movement for the general good of the community and enjoys the good will of all who know him.

John Bollinger is well known among the grain growers of Yellowstone County, being manager for the Powers Elevator Company at Pompey's Pillar. He is a practical grain man, and has spent all his life in the great harvest sections of the Northwest.

Mr. Bollinger was the first white child born at Harvey, North Dakota, on November 23, 1896. His family was among the pioneers and homesteaders of Dakota Territory. His grandfather, Adam Bollinger, was born in Germany in 1825, and on coming to the United States went to the northwestern corn fields and settled at Eureka, South Dakota. His original homestead he still owns, and has accumulated 960 acres. He is still living at the advanced age of ninety-four, and makes his home with his son Adam.

Adam Bollinger, father of John, was born in 1874, and is now living at Medina, South Dakota. After his marriage at Eureka, South Dakota, he moved to Harvey, established his home on a quarter section of land, where he lived for four years. In 1900 he established the first general merchandise store at Medina, and was also the first mayor of that town and the first representative from that section to the State Legislature. He is still active as a merchant, and is the leading citizen of Medina. He is a stand-pat republican in politics, an active supporter of the Baptist Church, is affiliated with Jamestown Lodge of Elks and has extensive farming interests in addition to his business in town. Adam Bollinger married Marguerite Wohl, who was born in South Dakota in 1875. John Bollinger was the oldest of their children. Rose is unmarried, living with her parents; Albert and Adam both assist their father in his business; Tillie is a high school student, while Elizabeth and William, the youngest, are still in the grade schools.

John Bollinger finished his education in the high schools of Medina and Jamestown, took a business course at Fargo, North Dakota, in 1913, and spent the following year at home with his father. He then entered the service of the Powers Elevator Company, beginning at the bottom of the ladder, working five months at Killdeer, North Dakota, and was then promoted to manager of the local plants. He was there seven months, and on November 22, 1916 was assigned to his present duties as manager at Pompey's Pillar, Montana. He regards Montana as his permanent home, and is an active factor in local affairs. He owns a modern home at Pompey's Pillar.

Mr. Bollinger is a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. On July 3, 1917, at Medina, he married Miss Emma Mullinax, a daughter of Mark and Belle (Malcomb) Mullinax, both now deceased. Her father was a Kentucky farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Bollinger have two children, twins, born September 20, 1918, named Donald and Dale.

GLENN B. BLAKESLEE. Among the comparatively young men of Livingston who have forged to the front no better or worthier example than that of Glenn B. Blakeslee, the well-known merchant and a representative business man, could be found. He is known as a man of excellent judgment. Careful in his calculations, resourceful in his dealings and eminently honorable in his relations with others, people have always reposed confidence in his word and his integrity has been above criticism.

Glenn B. Blakeslee was born September 9, 1881, at Port Madison, Lee County, Iowa, and is a son of John G. and Harriet (Russell) Blakeslee. John G. Blakeslee was born at Shintown, Illinois, in 1841, and was there reared and educated. After his marriage, which also occurred there, he took up a homestead in Kansas, where he resided until the birth of his first two children. He then moved to Lee County, Iowa, and was engaged in the dairy business until 1887, when he located in DeSoto, Nebraska, and followed stockraising and farming. In 1889 he located in Bennington, Nebraska, where he operated a grain elevator and bought grain and live stock. Two years later he went to Newport, Rock County, Nebraska, and engaged in the commission business, handling live stock and hay. In 1893 he engaged in the commission business in Omaha, Nebraska, but a short time later he went to Oklahoma, where for two years he sold nursery stock. In 1898 he attempted to enlist for the Spanish-American war, but was rejected on account of his age. In 1903 he came to Livingston, Montana, and has made his permanent home with his son, H. D. and Glenn B. John G. Blakeslee married Harriet Russell, who was born in 1844 in Shintown, Illinois, and who died at Weaver, Iowa, in 1886. To this union were born the following children: Lucy is the wife of W. C. Bradford, of Livingston, and who is foreman of a carpenter crew on the Northern Pacific Railroad; Harry D., who is referred to specifically elsewhere in this work; Edward, who died in young manhood; John, who was drowned at Weaver, Iowa, at the age of eight years; and Glenn B. John G. Blakeslee is a republican in his political views. He is to some extent engaged in the real estate business, though is practically retired from active life.

Glenn B. Blakeslee received his elementary education in the public schools at Fremont, Nebraska, supplementing this by attendance at the Fremont Normal School, where he took a business course under Professor William Clemmings. Leaving school in 1899, he came to Livingston in January of the following year and was employed as civil engineer by the Northern Pacific Railway for a year. Then for another year he was with the Winslow Mercantile Company and for the same length of time he worked in the store of Thompson & Brother. In 1903 his brother Harry D. Blakeslee purchased a partnership in what was then known as Houston & Alkier's, buying Mr. Alkier's interest. When H. D. Blakeslee entered the firm Glenn became associated with the store, and about a year later he bought Mr. Houston's interest. The firm was then reorganized under the name of Blakeslee Brothers, and continued until Glenn B. bought his brother's interest, January 1, 1914, becoming sole owner. He has now one of the leading stores of Southern Montana and does a business which would be creditable in a much larger city than Livingston. He handles groceries, tinware, graniteware, crockery and queensware, being the largest dealer in the latter line in Montana. Prompt service, goods of quality and square dealing are the elements which have gained for Mr. Blakeslee the phenomenal business which he now enjoys, a business which shows steady annual gains. Mr. Blakeslee also has many other interests, among which are the following: The leading general store at Wilsall; a ranch of 190 acres, known as the Riverside Ranch, located north of the poor farm, 2½ miles east of Livingston; real estate and mining interests at Cook City, Montana; the washer and fan mill at Cokedale; is a director and the president of the National Mining and Development Company of Cook City; a stockholder in the Gardiner Cement Works; a stockholder in the Montana Fire Insurance Company of Butte; a stockholder in the Park Milling Company of Livingston, the Montague Overall Factory, the Livingston Ice Plant, the Montana Spring Wheel Company and the Simplex Auto Wheel Company of Everett, Washington. He was also formerly a stockholder in the Park Creamery, but has disposed of his stock in that company. As a matter of fact Mr. Blakeslee has given his financial and moral support to practically every interest which has given promise of being of material benefit to Livingston. In return he has reaped bountifully himself and is enjoying a richly deserved prosperity.

In 1912, at Livingston, Mr. Blakeslee was married to May Trowbridge, a graduate of the high school at Delavan, Illinois, and the daughter of Frank and Marietta Trowbridge, the former of whom is well known throughout Southern Montana as a breeder of blooded horses. To Mr. and Mrs. Blakeslee have been born the following children: Marietta, born September 8, 1914; Russell Glenn, August 8, 1916; Robert Franklin, April 29, 1919.

Politically Mr. Blakeslee gives his earnest support to the republican party, while his religious affiliation is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which local organization at Livingston he has been a trustee for the past five years. Fraternally he is a member of Zephyr Camp No. 151, Woodmen of the World, Yellowstone Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, and Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce. He is strongly attached to the city of his residence and in which he has concentrated his business activities, and he now occupies an enviable place in the confidence of his fellow citizens.

HARRY D. BLAKESLEE. One of the leading citizens and representative business men of Livingston is Harry D. Blakeslee. His has been an active and useful life, but the limited space at the disposal of the biographer forbids more than a casual mention of the leading events in his career, which will suffice to show that earnest endeavor and honesty of purpose, rightly applied and persistently followed, will lead to success. He is a man of influence in local affairs and is looked upon as a man in thorough sympathy with any movement looking toward the betterment or advancement in any way of his community, where he is regarded as worthy of the confidence and respect accorded him by his fellow citizens.

Harry D. Blakeslee was born at Fort Scott, Kansas, December 27, 1873, and is the son of John G. Blakeslee, who is referred to more specifically in the sketch of Glenn B. Blakeslee, elsewhere in this volume. He was educated in the public schools of Weaver, Iowa, and accompanied the family on their removal to DeSoto, Nebraska, where he also gained some school training. In 1894 he graduated from the Lincoln Business College at Lincoln, Nebraska, and shortly afterward became a traveling salesman for the Chicago Portrait Company, his territory including Eastern and Northern Nebraska and South Dakota. After following that vocation for five years Mr. Blakeslee came to Livingston and for a few months was employed in the mercantile house of James Thompson. He then purchased a partnership in what was then known as Houston & Alkier's, buying the junior partner's interest. At that time his brother Glenn B. became associated with the store and about a year later bought Mr. Houston's interest. The firm was then reorganized under the title of Blakeslee Brothers and so continued until Harry D. sold out to his brother on January 1, 1916, the former taking the ranches owned by the brothers and Glenn B. taking the store. Mr. Blakeslee now owns 1,920 acres of land, all good ranch property. Of this 480 acres are located sixteen miles north of Livingston and Mr. Blakeslee also owns the water right for this land. The remainder of his land is located about five miles from Chico Springs, Montana, which land he rents. For several years Mr. Blakeslee has been engaged as a track shipper, sending hay, grain and potatoes in carload lots to large cities, such as Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Duluth, besides many smaller places through Montana and other sections of the Northwest.

Mr. Blakeslee has long been numbered among the active supporters of all local movements for the advancement of the best interests of the community. During the time he was connected with the store here he was president of the Business Men's Credit Association, and he was one of the organizers of the Livingston Commercial Club, but resigned his membership when he left the store.

In politics Mr. Blakeslee assumes an independent attitude, and his religious membership is with the Church of Christ, Scientist. Fraternally he belongs to Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and to the Eastern Montana Consistory of the Scottish Rite, in which he has attained the eighteenth degree.

In 1901, at Fremont, Nebraska, Mr. Blakeslee married Sarah Crosby, the daughter of J. M. and Martha E. (Hancock) Crosby. Mr. Crosby was a Union veteran of the Civil war, and as a result of his sufferings and privations while a captive in Libby Prison he was practically an invalid during the remainder of his life. He died at Schuyler, Nebraska, in 1914, and his widow now makes her home with Mr. Blakeslee and his wife. Mrs. Blakeslee attended the Normal College at Fremont, Nebraska, and for several years prior to her marriage she was principal of the graded schools at Emerson, Nebraska. To Mr. and Mrs. Blakeslee have been born the following children: Glenn, born October 15, 1902, is a sophomore in the Park County High School; Imogene, born in May, 1904, is a freshman in the same institution; Donald, born in 1906, John, born in 1908, and Gretchen, are in the public schools; and Betty, at home.

JOHN P. SCHMIT, of Luxemburger extraction, was born at Port Washington, Wisconsin, March 11, 1864. He is the eldest of ten children. His father, J. Michael Schmit, was born at Esch op der Ulzicht in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg on October 10, 1838, and his mother, who was Katharina Hansen, was born at Everlingen in the same duchy, October 1, 1842. Mr. Schmit's parents came to America with their respective families in 1846, the Schmits settling on an eighty-acre homestead near Holy Cross and the Hansens acquiring a home in Port Washington, both towns being in Ozaukee County, Wisconsin. Mr. Schmit's parents were married on June 1, 1863. The mother died June 15, 1909, and the father on June 12, 1913.

John P. was educated in the public and parochial Catholic schools of his home town. His first employment was as clerk and bookkeeper in a general store. In August, 1885, he went westward, remaining in St. Paul over winter and in the spring of 1886 he went to Devil's Lake, North Dakota. There he married Susie Weis on December 18, 1887, she going there from her native home to wed him. Mr. Schmit was engaged in business at Devil's Lake until October, 1890. On November 2, 1890, he arrived at Helena, Montana, with his wife and two babies. Mr. Schmit soon after became engaged in gold mining as manager for English and American companies, and followed this occupation in Montana, Oregon and California. In 1899 Mr. Schmit resigned his position with the mining company to take up his home in Helena, where his children were educated.

In 1901 he was appointed register of the state land office by Governor Joseph K. Toole, and remained in the position until April, 1908.

On August 15, 1910, Mr. Schmit entered the First National Bank of Lewistown as assistant cashier. For the past few years he has been active vice president of this leading institution.

He built a nice residence at 821 W. Water Street in the fall of 1910, where he has since resided with his family. His three children, two sons and one daughter, are married and also live here.

Mr. Schmit has always taken a keen interest in public matters and is regarded as one of Montana's most forceful public speakers. He has always been a democrat in politics, and is throughout a thorough and intense American.

JESSEE FRAZER FORBES is president of the Fergus Hotel Company at Lewistown. Of his ability as a hotel manager perhaps nothing could speak in stronger terms than the long period of his service with the famous Fred Harvey Eating House and Hotel System. With his brothers as associates he has given to Lewistown one of the most creditable hotels in the state.

He was born at Wathena, Kansas, May 25, 1885, son of Benjamin N. and Frances (Jessee) Forbes. His father, a native of Ohio, died in 1910, at the age of seventy-two, while his mother was a native of Missouri and died at the age of fifty-six. They were married in Kansas, and their nine children, seven sons and two daughters, are briefly noted as follows: Clyde, who died in infancy; Clinton D.; Edward N.; Pearl Marie, wife of C. H. Bauer; Benjamin N., Jr., who enlisted at Great Falls, Montana, in February, 1918, in the Field Artillery service, reached France in November, some days before the signing of the armistice, and has since returned to the United States and received his honorable discharge March 1, 1919, with the rank of corporal; Jessee F.; Annie; George Thomas, who enlisted in December, 1917, was transferred to Camp Berkeley, California, then to Fort Worth, Texas, as a flying cadet, and was discharged after the signing of the armistice; Wylie H. enlisted in 1917 in the ground school of the aviation service at Atlanta, Georgia, was commissioned a lieutenant, was transferred to Dallas, Texas, then to Kelly Field at San Antonio, and has since been given an honorable discharge.

Benjamin N. Forbes became a prominent farmer and stock man in Doniphan County, Kansas, near Highland. He was a merchant at Highland and Wathena, was president of the Fruit Growers State Bank at Wathena, and established a mercantile business at Sterling, Colorado, known as the Wathena Mercantile Company, of which he was president. He was affiliated with Smithton Lodge No. 1, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, was a Methodist and a republican in politics.

Jessee Frazer Forbes secured his early education in the grammar and high schools at Wathena, Kansas, attended the St. Joseph Business University in Missouri, and gained his first knowledge of business as clerk in the First National Bank of St. Joseph. Later he was made cashier of the Fruit Growers State Bank at Wathena, remaining there about two years. Following that he finished his education with a course in the Kansas State Normal College at Emporia. From that he entered the service of the Fred Harvey Eating House System, being first located at Dodge City, Kansas, was made assistant manager at Houston, Texas, later at Dallas, Texas, and his work with that company until the fall of 1913 gave him splendid opportunities to master the technique and system which has made the organization of Fred Harvey famous throughout the world.

Mr. Forbes came to Lewistown in the fall of 1913 and organized the Fergus Hotel Company, of which he is president. George T. Forbes is vice president and W. H. Forbes is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Forbes is a Mason, having been raised to the lodge at Wathena, Kansas, later demitting and becoming a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37. He is also affiliated with Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, and with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Montana State Hotel Men's Association and in politics is a republican.

J. Harry Schuch, chief engineer of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway, is one of the highly trained men of his profession in this region, and he is rendering an efficient service not only to his road but to the people which it supplies with transportation facilities. Mr. Schuch was born near Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, November 18, 1880, a son of Jacob Schuch and grandson of Peter Schuch. Peter Schuch was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1800, and died at Cogan Station, Pennsylvania, in May, 1886. In 1841 he came to the United States and located in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, where he followed farming, although he was a tailor by trade, and had worked as such in Bavaria. From 1823 to 1829 he served in the German army. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Barbara Drum, was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1807, and died at Cogan Station, Pennsylvania, in June, 1886.

Jacob Schuch was born in Bavaria, Germany, February 17, 1835, and died March 17, 1918, at Cogan Station, Pennsylvania. He was brought to the United States by his parents in 1841, and spent the remainder of his life in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania. A democrat, he held all of the local offices and took an active interest in public affairs. The Lutheran Church held his membership. Jacob Schuch was married to Regina Stoltz, born in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, March 3, 1839, who died in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, July 14, 1917. Their children were as follows: William, who is a farmer of Morenci, Michigan; Charles, who is a farmer of West Unity, Ohio; Emma J., who married C. B. Bastian, a physician and surgeon of Williamsport, Pennsylvania; Peter L., who is a general business man of Cogan Station, Pennsylvania, holds the office of postmaster and conducts a general store; Phoebe E., who married Ed Williamson, a farmer of Nesbit, Pennsylvania; Harriet B., who married Willard Lusk, a merchant of Newberry, Pennsylvania; Catherine M., who died on December 31, 1916, at Newberry, Pennsylvania, was the wife of William Marquardt, who survives her and lives at Newberry, being a telegraph operator and dispatcher; and J. Harry, who was the youngest born.

J. Harry Schuch attended the rural schools of his native county and the Lycoming County Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1900, and then for the subsequent four years he was engaged in teaching school in Lycoming County. He became a student of Bucknell University at Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, and was graduated therefrom in 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Science in civil engineering. In September of that year he entered the employ of the Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad, and for two years was in its engineering department at Greenville, Pennsylvania, leaving that road for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, where for two years he was a draughtsman in its Lincoln, Nebraska, office. In February, 1912, he came to Anaconda and for five years was assistant engineer of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway, when, in October, 1916, he was promoted to the position of chief engineer, and still holds that position, his office being in the general office building of his road on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda.

In 1915 Mr. Schuch was married at Anaconda to Miss Nellie G. Daniels, a daughter of Phillip and Anna (Schantz) Daniels, of Anaconda, of which city Mr. Daniels is police magistrate. Mrs. Schuch is a graduate of the Anaconda High School. Although he votes the democratic ticket, Mr. Schuch has never taken an active part in politics, preferring to give his time to the profession he follows. The Presbyterian Church has in him an active member. He belongs to Eureka Lodge No. 290, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Greenville, Pennsylvania; and the American Association of Engineers. Mr. Schuch owns his own modern residence at No. 715 Hickory Street, Anaconda. Being trained in the theory and practice of his profession, Mr. Schuch approaches his problems with a sure and steady knowledge of the method to adopt in their solution. He is very much interested in the economic and social welfare of men in the engineering profession, especially of the younger men who have not had much experience. As a citizen he measures up to high standards, and while his profession demands the greater portion of his time, he can always be counted upon to support heartily and effectively measures which in his judgment will prove beneficial to his community, state or country. There are few men of the state who stand any higher in the confidence of his associates than he.

Jno. D. Waite

J. E. Muzzy. A highly esteemed resident of Broadview, Montana, and one of its substantial merchants, J. E. Muzzy is actively identified with the advancement of the mercantile and agricultural development of town and county, and holds high rank among the successful business men of his community. A son of the late B. F. Muzzy, he was born August 13, 1864, in Nicollet County, Minnesota, being a descendant, many generations removed, of Miles Standish, a Mayflower passenger. His grandfather, Calvin Muzzy, was born in New York State in 1799, but after his marriage engaged in farming in Erie County, Pennsylvania. Ambitious to advance his material interests, he removed to Illinois, becoming a pioneer of Dupage County, Illinois, and later settling permanently in Minnesota, where he resided until his death, a few years later. He married Betsey Meacham, who was born in New York State, and died in Nicollet County, Minnesota.

Born in 1820, in Erie County, Pennsylvania, B. F. Muzzy grew to manhood on the home farm, and while young was well drilled in agricultural labor. Soon after his marriage he removed to Illinois, locating not far from the now busy City of Chicago, where he followed his independent calling for a brief time. Not satisfied with his prospects there, he migrated to Minnesota, and was there engaged in farming for some time, first in Leseur County and afterward in Nicollet County, continuing a resident of that state from 1863 until 1903. He made one more removal, going to Emmett, Idaho, where he lived retired until his death in 1913, at the advanced age of ninety-three years.

B. F. Muzzy married in New York State, Persis Templeton, who was born in that state in 1824, and died in Emmett, Idaho, in 1912. Six children were born into their household, as follows: Abbie, deceased; Julia, deceased; F. H., whose death occurred at Payette, Idaho, in April, 1918, was for thirty years a rancher in Laramie County, Wyoming, and in Idaho was a fruit grower; Ida, widow of A. M. Howard, a ranchman, resides at Emmett, Idaho; Carrie, who never married and died at the age of thirty-seven years; and J. E., the special subject of this personal narrative.

Obtaining the rudiments of his education in the public schools of Minnesota, J. E. Muzzy continued his studies at the State Normal School in Mankato, Minnesota, for three years. Entering upon a professional career in 1888, he taught school for a year in Leseur County, Minnesota, and a year in Gallatin County, Montana. Going to Oregon in 1890, Mr. Muzzy was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Pendleton for two years. He then returned to Minnesota, and for a year taught in the public schools of North Mankato, and the ensuing six years held a responsible position with a wholesale grocery company, after which he was for five years bookkeeper and cashier for a large manufacturing company at Minneapolis.

In 1908, with characteristic enterprise and forethought, Mr. Muzzy took up a homestead at Reeder, North Dakota, and prior to the founding of the town established himself in the mercantile business, being the pioneer merchant of the place. Selling out at an advantage in 1910, he opened a general merchandise store at Broadview, Montana, and in its management has shown marked ability, having a thriving and constantly increasing trade, his patronage extending many miles in either direction. He has valuable landed property, owning a ranch of 160 acres in Adams County, North Dakota, and 320 acres of land lying six miles east of Broadview, while on Donald Avenue, Broadview, he owns a good modernly improved residence. Mr. Muzzy is a stockholder in the Mutual State Bank of Broadview, and a director of the Broadview Amusement Company. He is a stanch adherent of the republican party, and a member of the Baptist Church. He likewise belongs to the Broadview Commercial Club, and is a member of Broadview Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of Broadview Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Muzzy married in 1898, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, Miss Cora Bittner, a daughter of August and Barbara (Scheure) Bittner, neither of whom are now living. Mr. Bittner was for many years a prominent business man, and also a large land owner. Mr. and Mrs. Muzzy have no children. They are held in high regard throughout the community in which they reside, and their home is ever open to their many friends.

Hon. John D. Waite. The high awards that are securable in influence, character and fortune through a life of honest industry and genuine probity, guided and regulated by a sense of Christian obligation, are illustrated in the life of the late Hon. John D. Waite, Montana pioneer, prominent banker and rancher, ex-state senator, and one of Lewistown's most honored and respected citizens. With no extraordinary endowment of faculty, unaided by inheritance or friendly assistance, he was content to enter into the life which a rising community offered in a humble station, and to follow up the opportunities that opened before him with steadiness and industry, gaining, step by step, the rare fruits of well-directed enterprise, until he found himself the possessor of an enviable fortune, the director of a vast cattle ranch industry, a trusted repository of important interests, and the head of a family circle which yielded the richest fruits of satisfaction of which our human lot is capable, while it still reflects credit upon the wise and guiding hand that trained its harmonious members to lives of usefulness and honor.

John D. Waite, who had been one of the pioneers of Central Montana, who had been closely identified with its interests for thirty-six years, and who had been a central figure in every movement for its advancement, was born in Saratoga County, New York, October 17, 1858, and secured his education in the public schools and Oberlin College, Ohio. In 1880, in company with a friend of his boyhood, Frank E. Wright, he came west, and, having come up the Missouri River by boat as far as Bismarck, North Dakota, took the stage to Helena, where he procured a saddlehorse and rode through to the present site of Great Falls. Subsequently he continued his journey to the Judith Basin, where he secured Government land and settled down to sheep and cattle raising, an industry in which he was later to acquire such position that at one time in his career his bands of sheep numbered 30,000 head. From his original homestead there grew in the western Judith Basin, near Utica, the great Waite ranches, some of the finest in the state, and his cattle and sheep holding interests became among the finest quality and most extensive in Central Montana. He was for years a director in the Bank of Fergus County, and in 1908 was elected its president, a position which he continued to hold until his death, which occurred at his ranch, July 15, 1916.

Aside from his financial and business interests, which were numerous and important, Mr. Waite was probably most prominent as the leader of the republican party in Fergus County and one of the foremost republicans in the state. His splendid judgment and strong personality marked him as a natural leader not long after he had come to Montana, and he was chosen a representative of his party and elected from his county in the Territorial Legislature before Montana was admitted to statehood, and later served in the same capacity in the first legislative assembly. He subsequently served as state senator. In his various civic capacities he showed such marked qualities of leadership and exercised such comprehensive judgment that he was elected as the member from his state on the Republican National Committee, where his service was characterized by the same wisdom of council and efficiency of action that had marked him in the various walks of life. He was favorably considered by his party as its candidate for governor, but declined the honor to give his time and attention to his extensive commercial affairs. In politics he was ever recognized as an honorable opponent, and while sincerely believing in the principles of his party he nevertheless accorded to every man the right to entertain a different view. Among the hundreds gathered at his funeral to pay their final tribute of admiration and respect were many of other political affiliations who felt that their former adversary was their dearest friend.

As a man Mr. Waite was of a genial, cheerful disposition, ever ready to lend a word of counsel and good cheer. His sympathies were as broad as his acquaintance, extending to all the various walks of life, and no person in need made appeal to him in vain. The years allotted to him to live were spent with a dual purpose: To make life rich by his contribution of service and sacrifice, and to enjoy in the fullest measure whatsoever was accorded him. The world is wont to measure success in life by wealth acquired, or social prominence or political position. These are but gauges of qualities which have enabled their possessor to overcome obstacles and push aside hindrances. The true tests of human greatness are the building up of character into symmetrical manhood, and the faculty of contributing to the well-being of the community in some of the many lines which affect the welfare and perfection of society. When success in acquiring fortune and power is employed to better the condition of mankind, to establish and promote worthy enterprises, the best ends of life are attained and the surest guarantee of an honorable reputation secured. While it is given to no one in this mortal state to gain perfection, it can truly be said Mr. Waite was not far from achieving a truly successful life. In commenting editorially upon his death a Lewistown newspaper said: "Lewistown is not alone in her grief over the passing of this good man. He possessed admiring friends in every portion of the state of Montana—friends who knew him as a stalwart pioneer, a representative citizen who had grown and expanded with it. They knew him as a leader of men; a man who was as gentle as a woman and from whose kindly heart radiated good cheer and good will toward his brother man at all times. They will pause many times in coming years to ponder over the good deeds he performed, the usefulness of his citizenship, and thus they will pay tribute to the man as tributes are paid all good men who leave behind them worthy life examples. There are too few men of the type and character of John D. Waite; and yet there are many good men in the world. For what does it count a man to live his life unless when he lies down to his eternal rest he leaves behind him something which will make other lives better. Fortunate will be those who profit by the heritage of honor, fidelity, good will and sturdy principle that this man leaves. More may not be said of any man than that he loved his fellow man."

In 1893 Mr. Waite became identified with the Masonic fraternity and was elected a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. Subsequently he became a member of Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, past eminent commander of Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and past potentate of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. The entire membership of his home lodge, together with many visiting brothers, attended his funeral and escorted his body to its final resting place, where in accordance with the ritual of the order of which he was a distinguished and honored member the last rites were performed. The funeral procession, which was headed by the Knights Templar, was the largest ever held at Lewistown, being practically a mile in length, which indicated in a small way the high esteem in which Mr. Waite was held in the community. In September, 1886, Mr. Waite was united in marriage with Miss Martha Sloan, of Penn Yan, New York, and they became the parents of five children: Donald S., who married Hazel Belden and has two children, John D. and Jean; Judith, the wife of James E. Woodard, president of the Bank of Fergus County, Lewistown; John D., Jr., who married Lillian Taylor, joined the United States Aviation Corps at Berkeley, California, graduated in February, 1918, was then transferred as an instructor to the aviation training field at Chanute, Illinois, and was honorably discharged in December, 1918; David Bradley, who enlisted in the United States Signal Corps in May, 1918, left Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for France, and when last heard from was with the Ninety-first Division, stationed at Grieves, France; and Leslie Stirling, a student of the University of Michigan, who at the time of the signing of the armistice was in training with the Students Army Corps of that institution.

The home life of Mr. Waite was ideal and here were shown the lovable characteristics of the man. The happiest days of an active, vigorous life were spent surrounded by his wife and children. His place in the home and the community will always remain unfilled. The hundreds who gathered to pay a last tribute to their former friend felt that each had sustained a personal loss. His life was a continual benediction, and his death marked the close of a noble, beautiful career.

Albert W. Gates for a number of years has been associated with and an influential factor in a group of prominent business interests at Lewistown. He is one of the executive officials of the Montana Lumber Company and is interested in a number of affairs both local and state.

He was born in Warren, Ohio, October 15, 1873, the only child of Albert R. and Alice (Weeks) Gates. His parents were also natives of Ohio. His mother died in 1874. Albert R. Gates afterward became prominent and well known in Montana. He was a traveling salesman when he came to Montana in 1877, making the journey by rail to Ogden and thence by stage to Butte. For a time he was associated with George Tracey at Helena in the commission and brokerage business, handling groceries. In 1888 he built the Grandon Block in Helena, which was afterward remodeled into the Grandon Hotel, of which he was proprietor until his death. He was also a prominent Mason in this state, being a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He was also a member of the Montana Club, the Lodge of Elks at Helena, and in politics a republican. He died in 1904, at the age of sixty-two.

Albert W. Gates received his early education in the schools of Des Moines, Iowa, and is a graduate of the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota. In 1892, when nineteen years old, he went into the Bankers Life Insurance Company of Des Moines, was later with the Green Bay Lumber Company at Des Moines, Iowa, for a number of years, and in 1900 established his headquarters at Missoula, Montana, as traveling salesman for the Missoula Lumber Company. He has put in almost twenty years in the lumber business and is an expert in practically every phase of the business. In 1905 Mr. Gates came to Lewistown. He began his work for the Montana Lumber Company as bookkeeper, later was first assistant general manager, then secretary, and is now secretary, treasurer and director. The Montana Lumber Company is an organization that has retail lumber yards in nearly twenty Montana towns. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Montana Home Building Company, and a stockholder and one of the organizers of the Lewistown Brick and Tile Company.

He is a man of public spirit and willing to be identified in all movements for the general welfare. He was one of the organizers and member of the executive committee of the Boy Scouts at Lewistown. He was also one of the founders of St. James parish of the Episcopal Church and has been a vestryman since its organization. He is a charter member of the Judith Club, is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Politically he is an active republican.

November 5, 1903, he married at Livingston, Montana, Miss Carrie J. Atkinson, a native of Lafayette, Indiana. They have one son, Albert J.

JOSEPH M. WOLFSKILL. The primary business industry of Stillwater County is farming and ranching, and in the development of those basic resources Joseph M. Wolfskill of Molt has taken an active part for a number of years. Mr. Wolfskill still has a large ranch, noted for its Shorthorn cattle, but as a resident of Molt he is also proprietor of the leading hardware and lumber business of that town.

Mr. Wolfskill represents an old and prominent pioneer family of the State of Missouri. Several generations ago his ancestors came out of Germany and were settlers in colonial Virginia. Mr. Wolfskill's great-grandfather, John Wolfskill, was born in Virginia and became a physician and surgeon. Early in the nineteenth century he moved west to the territory of Missouri, and his father also went to the western frontier and is buried at Salisbury, Missouri. Dr. John Wolfskill practiced for many years in the Missouri River Valley and died at Bedford, that state.

The grandfather of Mr. Wolfskill was George W. Wolfskill, who was born in Howard County, Missouri, in 1820, just about the time Missouri entered the Union. He spent most of his life in that state, but in the days of '49 went out to California and was absent about ten years. He returned by way of the Isthmus of Panama, traveling with a pack mule, proceeding around by sea to New York City and finally returned to his home in Missouri. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and a very active member of the Methodist Church. He died at Bedford, Missouri, in 1904. His wife was Margaret Elizabeth Harvey, who spent all her life in Missouri.

The next generation of the family was represented by John James Wolfskill, who was born near Bedford in Livingston County, Missouri, in 1847, and spent all his life in the northern part of the state as a farmer. For fifteen years he farmed in Linn County, but with that exception he lived in Livingston County and died there in 1904. He was a democrat, was honored with several township offices, was active in civic affairs, and was most widely known, in fact had a state-wide reputation for the pure bred Hereford cattle and Percheron horses which he raised on his farm. He was on the official board and for many years a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church. John James Wolfskill married Margaret Elizabeth Harris, who was born in Howard County, Missouri, in 1850, and died in Livingston County, Missouri, in 1900. Their children were six in number: Martha Jane, who is the wife of Thomas Wells, and they live on the old Wolfskill homestead in Missouri; Flora Grace is the wife of David P. Reece, a farmer near Sampsell in Livingston County; Lulu who died at the age of five years; Joseph M., who is the only member of the family in Montana; Charles, a farmer near Bedford, Missouri; and William H., who died at the age of two years.

Joseph M. Wolfskill was born April 1, 1878, while his parents were on a farm near Meadville in Linn County, Missouri. He grew up and received his education in the rural schools of Livingston County and spent three years in the State Normal School at Kirksville. On leaving school in 1898 he became a farmer in Livingston County, but in 1900 came to the Northwest. For six months he was billing clerk in the railway office at Sheridan, Wyoming, and in 1901 arrived at Great Falls, Montana. The following four years were spent with the Neil Creek Cattle Company, and for another three years he was a farmer in the Gallatin Valley. Mr. Wolfskill became identified with the Lake Basin country in 1908 when he homesteaded 160 acres, and this is still a part of his numerous possessions. His farm and ranch now constitute 480 acres, and he makes a specialty of breeding pure-bred Shorthorn cattle. For his prominence in this industry Mr. Wolfskill is president of the Shorthorn Breeders' Association of Acton, Montana. He still gives his personal supervision to his farm and ranch, but has not lived in the country since the spring of 1917.

He moved to Molt in 1918 and has a fine modern home there. He established the first store in the town, building a large structure for his hardware stock and also conducts a fully equipped lumber yard. It is one of the best concerns of its kind in the eastern part of Stillwater County. Mr. Wolfskill is also a director in the First National Bank of Molt and is president of its Commercial Club.

When he was twenty-one years of age he was elected recorder of Livingston County, Missouri, on the democratic ticket. The following year he resigned this office to remove to Wyoming. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Billings and is affiliated with Corinthian Lodge No. 72, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Laurel.

Mr. Wolfskill married Miss Lucinda L. Houx at Chillicothe, Missouri, in 1898. She is a daughter of George L. and Florence (Cox) Houx, the mother now deceased and the father a retired farmer at Chillicothe. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfskill have one daughter, Lucile, born June 17, 1916.

William H. Casto, Jr., superintendent of the leaching plant of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is a product of the West, and through the medium of the great corporation with which he is connected, is given an opportunity to prove the worth of the sons of the younger states of the Union. He was born at Soldier, Idaho, April 29, 1889, a son of William Henry Casto, and a grandson of William Henry Casto, who died at Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1890. During his younger years he was a hatter, but later in life engaged in farming in Salt Lake County, Utah. The Casto family came to the United States from Spain during Colonial days.

William Henry Casto, father of William H. Casto, Jr., was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1848, and in 1863 came to Montana in company with his uncle John Casto, who reared him. Later he went to the Wood River Country in Idaho to engage in mining, and was thus engaged at Soldier when his son was born. Still later he moved to Hailey, Idaho, where he owned and operated a mine, moving in 1898 to Custer, Idaho, and was also engaged in mining at that point. When he retired, he went to Stanley, Idaho, where he still resides. He is a democrat, and while living at Custer, Idaho, was on the school board, but aside from that did not enter public life. Mr. Casto was married to Blanche Parrott, born in 1865, died at Hailey, Idaho, in 1895. Their children were as follows: Raymond R., who lives at Salt Lake City, Utah, where he is engaged in assaying; Carrie, who married David Williams, a farmer of Stanley, Idaho; William H., Jr., whose name heads this review; Frank, who is in the United States Army; and Elmer, who is an automobile machinist of Detroit, Michigan.

William H. Casto, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Hailey and Custer, Idaho, the preparatory school of the Utah Agricultural College at Logan, Utah, from which he was graduated in 1907, and the University of Idaho at Moscow, Idaho, from which he was graduated in 1912 with the degrees of Bachelor of Science and Mining Engineer. In 1912 he began to work for the government as surveyor in the Forest Preserve Department, and in the fall of that year engaged in mining at Mackay, Idaho, for a short period. For a month he was millman for the Utah Copper Mill at Garfield, Utah, and then followed mining in Idaho until 1913 when in May of that year he came to Anaconda to become assistant in the testing department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. The value of his varied experiences was recognized and the young man was promoted, first to be a solution foreman, then general foreman of the leaching plant, and finally to be superintendent of this plant, which position he still holds. His offices are at the leaching plant of the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Mr. Casto has 120 men under his supervision and is a very competent member of his profession. He is an independent in his politics. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership and he also belongs to Anaconda Council No. 882, Knights of Columbus, of which he is a third degree knight. Professionally he maintains connections with the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers. His residence is at No. 321 West Fifth Street, Anaconda.

In 1916 Mr. Casto was married at Anaconda to Miss Marie Marcille, a daughter of Joseph and Charlotte (Brainerd) Marcille. Mr. Marcille was a steam engineer for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, but is now deceased. Mrs. Marcille resides with Mr. and Mrs. Casto. Mrs. Casto is a graduate of the Anaconda High School and the Spokane Business College of Spokane, Washington. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Casto is Blanche, who was born March 30, 1917. Like others occupying positions of trust and responsibility with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, Mr. Casto stands very high in his community, and while his responsibilities are of so engrossing a character as to prohibit his giving personal attention to politics, he can be counted upon to render efficient aid in promoting and supporting any measure calculated to prove of lasting benefit to Anaconda or Deer Lodge County, and is justly numbered among the worth-while men of this region. Mrs. Casto, both as girl and matron, has become well known at Anaconda, and she enjoys an enviable social prestige for which she is well fitted.

James E. Logan. A brainy, wide-awake man, full of push and energy, James E. Logan occupies a place of importance among the leading business men of Billings, as sales manager of the Northwestern Division of the Great Western Sugar Company, holding a position of great prominence and responsibility. A son of R. M. Logan, he was born November 16, 1879, at Rock Bluff, Nebraska. He comes of distinguished stock, being a lineal descendant of James Logan, the immigrant ancestor of that branch of the Logan family to which he belongs, who served for several years as William Penn's private secretary, and later had the distinction of being the first provinical governor of Pennsylvania. It is needless to add that he was a Quaker in religion.

R. M. Logan was born in 1854 in Steubenville, Ohio, and received his education in that place and in Philadelphia. In early manhood he spent a year in Marion County, Iowa, teaching school while there and devoting all of his leisure time to the study of law. Going from that place to Nebraska, Mr. Logan lived for a year in Rock Bluff, after which he practiced law in Ainsworth, Nebraska, until 1893, meeting with good success. Removing with his family to Delta, Colorado, in that year, he resumed his law practice, continuing until the present time, although he is now practically retired from the profession. Taking an active part in politics, he is prominent in the democratic ranks, having been among the leaders of his party in the political and civil affairs of Nebraska, and chairman of the democratic state committee of Colorado for a number of years.

R. M. Logan married, in Marion County, Iowa, Irene Welch, who was born in Knoxville, Iowa, in 1856, and of their union three children were born, as follows: James E., the subject of this sketch; John Wesley, a cattleman in Utah; and Bessie, wife of B. F. Reed, who is engaged in the practice of law in Denver, Colorado.

Having acquired the rudiments of his education in Nebraska, in the public schools of Omaha and Ainsworth, James E. Logan accompanied his parents to Colorado, and was graduated from the Delta High School with the class of 1898. Desirous of entering the legal profession, for which he was well fitted, he entered the Hastings Law College at San Francisco, California, and there continued his studies for 3½ years. Returning to Colorado, he was employed in mining and ranching at Delta for some time. In the meanwhile, in 1903, Mr. Logan became associated with the Amalgamated Sugar Company of Logan, Utah, as a student and chemist. In 1904 he accepted a position at Eaton, Colorado, as bookkeeper for the Great Western Sugar Company, and later was promoted to the cashiership. Continuing with the company, he subsequently served as cashier of two of the branches of that organization, one being located at Brush, Colorado, and the other at Fort Morgan. In 1906 Mr. Logan became cashier for the company at Billings, Montana, and shortly after was promoted to assistant secretary. In 1915, upon the reorganization of the company, he was again promoted, being made sales manager of the Northwestern Division of the Great Western Sugar Company, and has since performed the duties devolving upon him in that capacity with characteristic ability and fidelity. Mr. Logan's offices are just south of the city limits of Billings, and in addition to having charge over two factories in Montana he has supervision of one in Wyoming. He owns a pleasant home in Billings, at 309 North Thirty-second Street, and has a well-kept ranch in Colorado.

Mr. Logan has various business interests aside from those connected with the sugar company, being president of the Billings Mutual Building and Loan Association, which he organized in 1908; president of the Logan-Wilson Mercantile Company of Long Beach, California; and as a member of the Billings Park Board has been very influential in the starting and building of city parks and playgrounds, enterprises of lasting benefit to the city and of which he may well be proud.

Politically Mr. Logan is a republican, and active in party ranks. Socially he belongs to the Billings Midland Empire Club, and to the Billings Club. Fraternally he is a member of Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena, Montana; of Helena Consistory; and is a thirty-second degree Mason. He is also a member of Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In April, 1906, at St. Joseph, Missouri, Mr. Logan was united in marriage with Miss Alta Wilson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Wilson, residents of St. Joseph, where Mr. Wilson is connected with the Nave McChord Wholesale Grocery. Mr. and Mrs. Logan have three children: James E., Jr., born April 30, 1907; Marie Irene, born May 17, 1909; and Bettie, born December 20, 1915. All of the children were born in Billings.

WILLIAM M. ABEL, a resident of Montana over thirty-five years, is a pioneer market man of Lewistown, and as a member of the firm Abel Brothers commands and directs some very extensive resources in and around that city, the firm being extensive ranch proprietors and stock raisers in addition to their retail meat business.

William M. Abel was born February 23, 1868, at Nassau on the Rhine in Germany, a son of William and Margaret (Jung) Abel. His parents were also born in the same Rhine District, where the father followed farming. He came to America in 1890 and spent the rest of his life in Montana, where he died in 1906, at the age of sixty-seven. His widow is still living at Lewistown.

William M. Abel was the oldest of five children, two sons and three daughters. He grew up in his native land, and 1884, at the age of sixteen, crossed the ocean by steamship to New York City and reached Helena, Montana, March 16th of that year. He spent some time at Helena, working in markets and grocery stores, and in 1891 arrived in Lewistown after a journey by railway and stage. Here he entered the livestock, meat and produce business, associated with his brother John under the firm name of Abel Brothers. They have sold meat and other products to the community for over a quarter of a century, and out of their well earned prosperity have accumulated 880 acres of fine ranch and farming lands devoted both to the production of stock and grain.

Mr. Abel is affiliated with the Independent Order of Foresters and the Woodmen of the World, and in politics is a republican, though often independent and supporting the best man regardless of party. In 1892 he married Margaret Kraus, a native of Wisconsin. Their five children are named William, Eleanor, Edna, Elsie and Frank, all of whom were born in Montana.

JAMES LIVINGSTON MARTIN since locating at Lewistown has made himself a factor in that community's business and civic affairs, and is now serving his second term as clerk of the District Court.

He was born in Polk County, Missouri, April 26, 1877, a son of William A. and Clementine (King) Martin. His father, who was born in Tennessee in 1851, was taken while a child by his parents to Missouri, grew up in Polk County, acquired his education in the public schools, and spent his active life as a farmer and stock man. He died in November, 1916. He was deeply interested in the cause of education and served as a member of the school board many years. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife was born in Wisconsin in 1856, and is still living in Polk County, where she and her husband were married in 1875. James L. Martin was the second of seven children, five sons and two daughters, all living but one.

Mr. Martin spent his boyhood days on his father's Missouri farm. He attended public schools, graduating from high school in 1898, and for a year taught. His first experience in business was as a merchant at Aspen, Colorado, and from there in 1904 he came to Lewistown and continued his successful career as a merchant until 1908. After that he took up the real estate and insurance business, but in the fall of 1912 was elected clerk of the District Court. He began his first term the first Monday in January, 1913, and was re-elected in the fall of 1916. Mr. Martin is a democrat, and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 450 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and with Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias.

February 2, 1908, he married Helma Elberg, a native of Wisconsin. They have one son, James W., born in 1910 and now attending school.

HARRY H. HOWARD was born in 1877 and the Bozeman Daily Chronicle, in 1882. When the Chronicle was ten years old and Mr. Howard fifteen their destinies were linked together in a bond that has not been dissolved for more than a quarter of a century. He is now manager and half owner of the Daily Chronicle plant, one of the best equipped newspaper and printing offices in Southern Montana.

Mr. Howard was born at Canyon City in Grant County, Oregon, August 24, 1877. His paternal ancestors came originally from Scotland and were early settlers in the State of Missouri. On his mother's side Mr. Howard has an admixture of French and German ancestry. His father, Dr. J. W. Howard, was born in Missouri in 1843 and was a child when he accompanied the family on its long migration from Missouri to Grant County, Oregon In the same party and riding in another prairie schooner that made up the train was a young girl, Josephine Cozad, who afterwards became the wife of J. W. Howard. The latter was reared in Grant County, Oregon, was married in that state, was a graduate of Oregon University and for many years a successful physician and surgeon. He practiced at Canyon City, Oregon, and in 1886 removed to Dillon, Montana, where he practiced two years, and then for a number of years was one of the prominent men in his profession at Butte. Finally he retired and lived with his children at Great Falls until his death in 1907. He was a very active republican and prominent in politics in different communities. For one term of two years he served as coroner of Silver Bow County, was an alderman in Butte, and on one occasion lacked one vote of being nominated for mayor of that city. He was also affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, Josephine Cozad, was born in Illinois in 1852, and is still living, making her home among her children. These children were seven in number: John H., in the piano business at Portland, Oregon; J. W., who shares almost a family talent for music and is a professional musician at Boston, Massachusetts; Harry H.; L. L. and E. E., proprietors of a men's furnishing goods store on Main Street in Bozeman; L. D., advertising manager of the Daily Chronicle; and E. C., a musician at Everett, Washington.

Mr. Howard learned typesetting and all the mechanical features of printing, at the same time getting a knowledge of newspaper management and work in the editorial department. Since December, 1911, the Chronicle has been published as a daily. The firm is the Chronicle Publishing Company, William M. Bole being president; James P. Bole, vice president and editor, and H. H. Howard, secretary, treasurer and manager. It is the official democratic paper of Gallatin County. The plant has all the modern facilities for printing a daily paper and doing general commercial and book printing.

Mr. Howard for many years has been devoted and has worked unceasingly for the welfare of his home city. Probably the chief object of his civic energy has been the fire department, which he has served as president for fourteen years. For several terms he has served as president of the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce, also as a member of the City Council four years, for two of those years was president of the Council, and on several occasions acted as mayor. Mr. Howard is a democrat, is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Bozeman Camp, Woodmen of the World, Bozeman Lodge, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and Bozeman Lodge No. 463 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Howard and family reside in a modern home on South Tracy Avenue. He married at Bozeman in 1900 Miss Aline Anceney, who was born at Denver, Colorado, where her parents were early settlers. She was of French ancestry. They have two children: Lillian Josephine, born in 1903, now a member of the junior class of St. Vincent's Academy at Helena; and Charlie Louise, born in 1905, a student in the public schools.

THOMAS B. EDWARDS. The Anaconda National Bank of Anaconda is one of the most stable and conservative banking institutions of this part of the state and its condition reflects credit upon its officers and community alike. Its capital stock is $100,000, its surplus, $30,000, and its deposits, $1,517,486.16. C. Yegen is its president; Thomas B. Edwards is its vice president and manager and M. A. Fulmor is its cashier.

Thomas B. Edwards is one of the best known financiers of the state and since his association with the bank, it has shown a healthy increase in deposits and other business, and gained prestige in the community. Mr. Edwards was born at Roodhouse, Illinois, October 12, 1872, a son of George W. Edwards and grandson of Isom Edwards. The Edwards came from Wales and the name is purely Welsh or Gaelic. The ancestors were a maritime people. Cader Edwards, the emigrant, was born in Wales and became an educated man and a great reader, and when about forty years of age came to the new world, landing at Baltimore, Maryland. There he married a young woman by the name of Margaret or Maggie Noblett and went to what was then the extreme frontier of Virginia. Later he drifted southwest along the frontier until the close of the French and Indian war, 1762-3, and was a member of the Evan Shelby Settlement in what later became the extreme northeastern corner of Tennessee. Here the outbreak of the American Revolution found him, an old man with a large family, but he volunteered and served during that war, participating with Isaac Shelby in the battle of King's Mountain, in which five of his sons and sons-in-law were engaged. Dying at the close of the war, he directed his wife to take the family to the new settlement in Kentucky, and in the fall of 1783 they landed in the Blue Grass section of Kentucky, and from them have sprung the large Edwards family of the United States.

Isom Edwards, grandfather of Thomas B. Edwards, was born in Kentucky in 1799 and died at Roodhouse, Illinois, in 1878, where he was a pioneer and took up a large amount of land becoming an extensive farmer. All of his sons but one were in the war between the States, they being as follows: Thomas, who did not serve, Isom, Presley, James and George W. The only brother of Thomas B. Edwards' mother, Jordan Frame, was killed while serving in this same conflict.

George W. Edwards, father of Thomas B. Edwards, was born at Roodhouse, Illinois, in 1841, and died at the same place in 1907, having lived in that neighborhood all his life and been engaged in farming. He was a democrat and a Baptist, and lived up to his ideals in politics and religion. During the war between the States he served in an Illinois infantry regiment and was in Florida under Gen. Max Sigel. He married Julia Jackson, born in Kentucky in 1843, who died at Roodhouse, Illinois, in 1878. Their children were as follows: George McClellan, who is a farmer of Illinois; Dora, who married Joseph Mirts, a farmer of Carrington, Missouri; James L., who is a farmer of Roodhouse, Illinois; Thomas B., whose name heads this review; Mary Jane, who married a Mr. McFarland, a farmer of Illinois; and Fred, who is a farmer of Garnet, Kansas.

Thomas B. Edwards attended the rural schools of Greene County, Illinois, and a private school of Sullivan, Missouri, and then became a student of the Steelville Normal Business Institute at Steelville, Missouri. Subsequently he studied law in the offices of several attorneys of St. Louis, Missouri, and was admitted to the bar, following which he was engaged in practice in that city from 1900 until 1902. In 1903 Mr. Edwards came to Montana and for some years was associated with the mercantile interests of Yegen Brothers at Billings, during the last four years being manager, but in 1913 he went to Vallier, Montana, where he organized the Vallier Mercantile Company and for three years was its manager. In January, 1917, Mr. Edwards came to Anaconda to become vice president and manager of the Anaconda National Bank. This bank was established in 1904 by Yegen Brothers of Billings as a private institution, and nationalized in 1907. It is located at No. 212 East Park Avenue, and the building was re-modeled in 1917 so that it is now equipped with all modern facilities and appliances for conducting a high grade banking business, and is one of the finest in the city.

Mr. Edwards is an independent republican. He belongs to the Christian Church of which he is an elder. Fond of outdoor sports he belongs to the Anaconda Anglers Club, and spends his recreation period in hunting for big game in the Rocky Mountains, but this is naturally restricted on account of his multitudinous duties. For some years he has been a member of the American Bankers Association. He is vice president and half owner of the Stoup Hardware Company of Billings. Mr. Edwards owns a modern residence at No. 105 East Seventh Street, Anaconda.

In June, 1901, Mr. Edwards was married at St. Louis, Missouri, to Miss Lillie Anderson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Anderson, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Anderson was a farmer of Calhoun County, Illinois, for a long period. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards have no children. A man of excellent education, Mr. Edwards has found it more congenial to use his knowledge in business enterprises than to confine himself to the restrictions of the most exacting profession, and his success proves that his judgment in this respect was sound. Since coming to Anaconda he has taken a business man's interest in its growth and both personally and through the medium of his bank, is responsible for much of the expansion recently shown here.

JOHN KASTELITZ, one of the leading general merchants of Bear Creek, owns and operates one of the most important establishments of its kind in Carbon County. He was born at Zogorje, Austria, which is now a portion of the new country of the Jugo Slavs, June 29, 1878, a son of Jacob Kastelitz, born at the same place as his son in 1847, where he spent his life, his calling being that of a farmer. During the war between Austria and Turkey he was a soldier. The Roman Catholic Church held his membership. He was married to Jennie Fotur, also born at Zogorje in 1847, and died there in 1918. The children born to Jacob Kastelitz and his wife were as follows: John, whose name heads this review; Mary, who married John Sustersich, a farmer of Zogorje; and Frank, who resides at Zogorje, is engaged in mining.

John Kasterlitz attended the public schools of his native place until he was thirteen years of age, at which time he left school and learned the trade of a shoemaker, following it for two years. He then went to Northern Austria, and made ties for the railroad for a time, and for six years was engaged in contracting for ties and stakes. In 1901 he came to the United States and for the subsequent eighteen months was engaged in the same line of business in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. He then went to Pueblo, Colorado, and for four months worked in the smelters, and then began working in the coal mines of Wyoming, being thus engaged for three years. In 1906 he located permanently at Bear Creek, Montana, and for seven years was engaged in coal mining leaving this line of work to become general manager for the Slavonic Cooperative Mercantile Association, holding that position for four years, when he bought the business and has since operated it as a general store. It is located on Main Street, and a very large business is carried on, especially with the miners. In addition to his business, Mr. Kastelitz owns his residence, which is on the edge of town, and a warehouse for storing his stock of goods. Politically he is a democrat. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. He belongs to Bear Creek Lodge, Knights of Pythias; Bear Creek Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Slavonic Society.

In 1910 Mr. Kastelitz was married at Red Lodge, Montana, to Miss Frances Semrow, born in Austria, where she was reared and educated. Mr. and Mrs. Kastelitz have the following children: John, who was born in 1911; Frank, who was born in 1912; Mary, who was born in 1913; Eddie, who was born in 1914; and Silvery, who was born in 1917.

BENJAMIN F. MOULTON, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Fergus County, has until recently been too busied with his extensive interests as a rancher to give much time to public affairs, though his qualifications for official life are widely recognized among his friends and acquaintances up and down Montana, where he has lived for over thirty-five years.

Mr. Moulton was born in Waldo County, Maine, and his people were identified with the Pine Tree State for several generations. His birth occurred February 28, 1867. His parents, Elkanah H. and Melissa (Tasker) Moulton, were also natives of Maine. His father died at the age of eighty-seven and his mother at seventy-seven. Their four children, three sons and one daughter, are all living, Benjamin being the third in age. His father was a farmer and quite a prominent stock man, raising and exhibiting Durham cattle, and standard bred trotting horses, and his stock frequently appeared and won premiums at county fairs in New England. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Masonic Order.

Benjamin F. Moulton spent his boyhood days on his father's farm and acquired a common school education in his native county. He left Maine and came West, and in the spring of 1883 reached Billings, Montana. From there he went to Flat Willow, then in Meagher County, now Fergus County, and was connected with the Montana Sheep Company, which a few years later sold their sheep herds and stocked up with cattle. Mr. Moulton was with this livestock corporation about four years. He then located a tract of Government land on McDonald Creek and engaged in the stock business for himself, handling sheep, cattle and horses. He still owns about 2,100 acres of land and has it highly improved with buildings and other facilities and equipment. In June, 1918, he disposed of his sheep, and his farm is now devoted entirely to cattle, the famous White Face or Herefords, and the Percheron horses. He has about 225 head of Herefords and forty head of Percherons.

Several years ago Mr. Moulton bought a home in Lewistown in order to establish his family convenient to better school facilities. He lives in Lewistown during the winters but his summers are spent on his ranch about forty miles from that city. He was appointed a member of the Board of County Commissioners in 1916, and was elected for a regular term of six years in 1917, and has been chosen chairman of the board. He is a republican and is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Moulton married Julia Smith, a native of Iowa, and they have three children, two daughters and one son, Lucy, Clara and Edwin. Lucy is the wife of Mark Teters, of Montana.

WHITFIELD SHIPLEY, now retired at Lewistown, was the practical coal mining expert who opened up many of the pioneer deposits of coal and lignite in Montana, and from an experience covering nearly forty years probably has more first hand information and history of coal mining in Montana than any other living man.

He was born in England October 9, 1859, a son of Robert and Ellen (Taylor) Shipley. His parents spent all their lives in England, where his father was a gardener. He died in 1870 and the mother at the age of fifty-two. Whitfield was the eleventh in a family of twelve children, only three of whom are still living.

Whitfield Shipley learned mining in the old country and in 1877, at the age of eighteen, came to America, landing at New York City and first going to the coal district around Brazil, Indiana. He was soon employed by the Northern Pacific Railway as a coal mine prospector in the Dakotas. In the spring of 1880 the same company sent him on to Montana, and he located a bed of coal seven miles west of Miles City, at the Town of Lignite. Here he opened the first coal mine for the company. He also went over the proposed line of a railroad toward Washington, and made locations for a number of coal mines. Later returning, he located the coal at Timberline, to which a branch road was constructed. He also opened the mine where Red Lodge now stands, this being the pioneer coal mine for general use in Montana. Mr. Shipley's experience also covers other phases of mining. He was at Maiden in pioneer times, working in the Spotted Horse quartz mines, the Maginnis mines, and then went to Belt and opened the coal mines there. His last practical work as a miner was done in Fergus County. He established himself on a tract of Government land and did coal mining and farming in combination until 1919. In that year he sold his ranch and has since lived quietly retired in Lewistown. Mr. Shipley is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and in politics is a democrat.

On December 29, 1889, he married Mary Ann Couch, a native of South Wales. She is a daughter of Thomas and Maria (Victory) Couch, both natives of Devonshire, England. She is the second child in a family of eleven children, of whom six are living. Her father is still living in Peterboro, Ontario, at the age of ninety-six.

Maj. William Osterhout Whipps. By the importance of his duties Maj. William Osterhout Whipps is one of the most distinguished of Montana sons who shared in the World war.

Major Whipps, who is a son of William C. and Annie E. Whipps, of Kalispell, was born at Helena, January 25, 1888, and was three years old when his parents removed to Kalispell. The brilliant qualities of his mind were evidenced when he was a boy in school. At the age of seventeen he graduated at the head of his class from the Flathead County High School, the following year he spent in the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, and was graduated at the age of eighteen at the head of his class and with the highest marking received by any student that has ever passed through that institution. His scholastic career was completed in Columbia University in New York, where he spent six years, and at the age of twenty-four graduated, having specialized in engineering. On returning from the east he was associated with his father in the mercantile business at Kalispell four years. In 1914 he went to Texas to engage in the Bermuda Onion industry in the southern part of that state. On account of unsettled conditions on the Texan border and the difficulty of getting Mexican laborers he sold his interests and returned to Montana. For about a year he was engaged in the laying out and building of roads in Flathead County.

He had become interested in military affairs and had joined Company F of the State Militia at Kalispell in 1908 or 1909. He became a lieutenant of the company and when its services were required on the Mexican border in 1916 he accompanied the Second Montana Regiment. On his return he was in the engineering department of the Anaconda Copper Company at Butte, but still retaining his commission in the militia he was called to Federal duty March 26, 1917. He opened a recruiting office in Butte. He was promoted to captain April 10, 1917, and assigned to duty as supply officer for the Second Montana Regiment. This regiment on being mustered into the National army became the One Hundred and Sixty-Third United States Infantry. Later Captain Whipps was detached from the regiment and made acting quartermaster at Fort William Henry Harrison, and was on duty there until December, 1917. He was then relieved and ordered to join his regiment in France. He reached England en route to France January 19, 1918, and was detained there and again detached from his regiment to serve as assistant quartermaster at Winchester, one of the principal American camps in England. In April, 1918, he was permanently transferred to the Quartermaster's Corps and assigned as disbursing officer for the Winchester District, embracing Southampton, Portsmouth and some other camps. His duties occasionally required his presence in London and Liverpool. In December, 1918, he was ordered to London and assigned as chief disbursing officer for all England. This was one of the most responsible positions in the American Expeditionary Forces. He was still at work in that capacity as late as December, 1919, engaged in settling up the many accounts of the War Department with the English Government and all other accounts and contracts in England pertaining to the American War Department. He was relieved from duty as chief disbursing officer of England in December, 1919, and immediately assigned to duty in the American Graves Registration Service and placed in temporary command of the zone of Great Britain with headquarters at London.

In the fall of 1918 Captain Whipps was recommended for promotion, but the war being ended by the armistice he did not receive his commission as major until February, 1919. On being solicited to take the examination for a commission in the Regular army he passed a perfect examination and was highly recommended by General Biddle and other high officers for a commission.

In the fall of 1916 Major Whipps married Rose Surgley. They have one child, William Surgley Whipps, born at Helena November 18, 1917.

Howard Zenor Bielenberg. While most of his time is now given to the management of his fine garage at Deer Lodge, Mr. Bielenberg is one of the most widely traveled and experienced citizens of that town. He has mined as far north as the Arctic Circle, has been south to the Equator, and the forty years since he was born at Deer Lodge have afforded him opportunity for a busy and unusual career.

He is a son of N. J. Bielenberg, an honored old resident of Deer Lodge and a man of similar variety of fortune and experience. His father was born in 1846 near the city of Hamburg, but over the line in Holland. In 1848 his parents came to the United States and settled at Davenport, Iowa, where he lived until he was seventeen years of age. He then learned the butcher's trade in Chicago, and in 1863 came to the Northwest frontier, traveling up the Missouri River, and arriving at Fort Benton, Montana, in 1863. He followed his trade in Blackfoot City, then a thriving mining town, and was one of the first butchers in Helena. He bought a ranch on Dempsey Creek in Powell County, and still owns about 7,000 acres in that vicinity. Through many years he continued his trade and his business as a retail and wholesale meat dealer and originated the Butte Butcher Company, an organization still in existence, and in which he has financial interests. His home has been at Deer Lodge since 1873, and he was in the butcher business there until he sold out in 1909. Through half a century or more he has given much time to mining, and has operated at Butte, Helmville, Missoula, in Powell County, at Contact, Nevada, and in fact his interests and operations in the gold, silver, copper, lead and placer mines might be said to cover every important mining district in the West. He is a man of indefatigable energy, great enterprise, and through the exercise of both physical and moral courage achieved more than ordinary success. He was the first man to drive cattle from Montana across to Cheyenne, the nearest railroad point. He is enjoying a serene existence, after the many trials and tribulations of pioneer days. He is a republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Helena Lodge of Masons and the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena and has been a public spirited citizen of Deer Lodge many years. He was the originator of the waterworks system of that town, and in other ways has promoted its development and upbuilding. He owns a large amount of real estate, and some years ago he erected one of the finest homes in the city on Milwaukee avenue. N. J. Bielenberg married Annie Bogk who was born in 1850 and died at Deer Lodge in 1918. Alma, the oldest of their children, is the wife of W. I. Higgins, a mine operator at Deer Lodge; Howard Z. is the second in age; Gussie died unmarried in 1891; she was a prominent member of the Woman's Club at Deer Lodge and as a memorial to her father built and gave to the club its handsome club building. Anne is the wife of M. C. Newlon, a monument dealer at Bakerfield, California. Claude N., the youngest of the family, is on his father's ranch at Dempsey.

Howard Z. Beilenberg attended public school at Deer Lodge, a military academy at Davenport, Iowa, and finished his education in the Helena Business College. At the age of twenty-one he began his independent career when he went north to Alaska, and as a gold prospector and miner was in the Nome rush and later made a trip within the Arctic Circle. He had more than the ordinary success in that northern country. He returned to Deer Lodge in 1901, but in 1902 went back to Alaska and remained there about five years. From 1907 to 1910 Mr. Bielenberg was interested in a ranch at Deer Lodge. He then traveled over the state about a year and on resuming his home at Deer Lodge invested his means in local real estate and established the garage on Main Street which he still owns and manages. This is the leading garage in point of service and equipment in Powell County. In 1911 Mr. Bielenberg made a trip to the Panama Canal Zone to look after some landed interests owned by his father there. Mr. Bielenberg owns a modern home at 509 Missouri Avenue, he is a republican and Presbyterian, and is affiliated with Anaconda Lodge No. 239 of the Order of Elks.

September 2, 1908, at Helena, Montana, he married Miss Annie Winkelman. Her father is the noted John Winkelman of Helena, an interesting pioneer character of the Northwest, born at Beyreuth, Germany, came to the United States in 1869 and for ten years wore Uncle Sam's uniform in the regular army. He was with the army in Montana when some of the buildings were erected at Fort Benton and Fort Missoula. When he left the army after ten years of service he located at Bielenberg, and has been continuously connected with some of the mercantile establishements of that city. He is a republican and Lutheran and Odd Fellow. He married Ellen Gibson, who was born in Sweden in 1854. Mrs. Bielenberg is the only child of her parents, and was liberally educated in the grammar and high schools of Helena, the Helena Business College, and is one of the most prominent Woman's Club members of the state. She is active in the Deer Lodge Club, which she has served as president, and is now chairman of the Literary Department, and in 1906 she originated and has been the first and only president of the Parent-Teachers Association of Deer Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Bielenberg have three children: John Howard, born November 14, 1909; Nicholas I., born November 27, 1913; and Mary Ellen, born December 13, 1914.

Leonard O. Walker owns and conducts the leading general store in his part of Carbon County, and is one of the substantial business men of Belfry, Montana. He belongs to good American stock, his ancestors having come to the American colonies some time antedating the Revolution, and located in New York State, where they continued to make the name of Walker synonymous with probity, sagacity and intense patriotism. With the passage of time members of this family have gone forth and been equally faithful in upholding its high standards in other states, gradually moving westward until Leonard O. Walker is now firmly established in Montana, although he was born in Sullivan County, Missouri, December 9, 1867.

C. E. Walker, father of Leonard O. Walker, was born in New York State in 1829, and he died in Sullivan County, Missouri, in 1897. After growing up in his native state C. E. Walker went to Sullivan County, Missouri, having been married in Illinois, and became one of the pioneer farmers of that region. During the Civil war he served in the Missouri militia, thus rendering a very efficient service to his country and state during a period of great stress. Although he and his wife were married in Illinois, she was a native of Sullivan County, Missouri, where she was born in 1835, her maiden name having been Mary Weaver. She died in her native county in 1889. They had the following children: Frank, who is in the hardware business at Spokane, Washington; Ida, who married E. D. Beatty, a retired farmer of La Mar, Colorado; Leonard O., whose name heads this review; Roy, who is a music dealer of Oklahoma City; and L. J., who is a farmer residing in Sullivan County, Missouri. C. E. Walker was a republican of the strongest type. A member and enthusiastic worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, he was recognized as one of its pillars, and was missed in it, as elsewhere, when he died.

Leonard O. Walker attended the rural schools of Sullivan County, Missouri, and the Green City, Missouri, College, which he left at the age of nineteen years. His first business experience was gained as proprietor of a harness establishment at Green City, Missouri, where he remained for six years, leaving that place for Montana, in 1897, and spending a year on a ranch near Fromberg. For the subsequent two years he conducted a general store at Fromberg, and then bought a ranch in that vicinity, living on it until 1913. He then sold it and came to Belfry, where he began selling harness and shoes in a small way, adding to the lines he carried as he found the demand growing, and now has the leading general store in his part of Carbon County, and carries a stock valued at $15,000.00. The store is located on Broadway, and Mr. Walker is the sole proprietor. Since coming to Belfry Mr. Walker has bought a comfortable modern home, and his interests are centered in this locality, where he is fast becoming a very important factor.

In 1892 Mr. Walker was married at Green City, Missouri, to Miss Lucena Bailey, a daughter of John Bailey and wife, both deceased, Mr. Bailey having been a Missouri farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Walker had two children, John R., who is on a ranch near Belfry, and Jean Irvine, who died at the age of eighteen months. Politically Mr. Walker is a republican and has been assessor for two years, and was on the school board for ten years. Fraternally he belongs to Bridger Lodge Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Green City Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. To Mr. Walker belongs the mercantile sense so that he is able to meet the demands of his trade with an excellent grade of goods and offer them at prices as low as is consistent with their quality. He knows how to buy and understands conditions so well that he can economize in selling and in this way give his customers the benefit of his abilities and connections. Having decided to make Belfry his permanent home, Mr. Walker is naturally desirous to secure for it urban improvements and have it line up with the other communities of Carbon and adjacent counties, so that he may always be depended upon to back with his energy and influence all measures tending to bring about such results.

Burton R. Cole, who has been a lawyer at Lewistown since 1912, has gained much prominence in his profession, and is recognized as an able and hard working attorney whose future, based on the solid achievements of the past, is one of unmistakable success.

May 8, 1912, Mr. Cole married Elizabeth Schilling. She was born in Butte, Montana. They have one son, Burton R., Jr.

John C. Dunn, M. D. A physician and surgeon of exceptional attainments, whose work has brought him a commanding position in his profession at Lewistown, Doctor Dunn at one time engaged in practice at Chicago, but for the greater part of his professional career has been identified with the states of North Dakota and Montana.

He was born at Owen Sound, Canada, October 10, 1873, a son of Captain Edwin and Jennie (Hanna) Dunn. His father was born at Birmingham, England, in 1837 and his mother was born in 1853 at Montreal, Canada, of Scotch parentage. Captain Edwin Dunn came to Canada with his parents when eight years of age, grew up and was educated at Owen Sound, and in 1861 was a Canadian soldier in the standing army of the Dominion during the Fenian raid. Later he served as a captain on the Great Lakes. During the Riel rebellion in Manitoba in 1881 he was captain of the steamer which took General Woolsey to Port Arthur. Subsequently he was commander of the fishing patrol of the Great Lakes. He retired from active life in 1911 and died in May, 1916. His wife passed away in January, 1901. They were married at Owen Sound and had two children, May, wife of James Garvey, and Dr. John C.

Dr. John C. Dunn acquired his early education at Owen Sound, attended the Ontario Collegiate Institute and prepared for his profession at Northwestern University in Chicago. After graduating in 1902 he remained at Chicago in private practice for about five years. He then moved to Stanley, North Dakato, and in the fall of 1911 came to Lewistown, Montana. He and his wife are both active in the Chapter in the Eastern Star, and he is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically he is a republican.

Doctor Dunn married July 27, 1903, Miss Carrie Devine. She was born at Allegan, Michigan, the seventh in a family of five sons and five daughters born to Michael and Julia (Cummings) Devine. Her parents were both born in Canada. Her mother is now deceased and her father, who is eighty-one years of age, spent his active life as a contractor and builder. Doctor and Mrs. Dunn have two children: John Edwin, a student in St. James Military School at Faribault, Minnesota, and May, aged nine, attending the public schools of Lewistown.

Lewis Samuel Hollier. It is a compliment worthily bestowed to say that Gallatin County is honored by the citizenship of Lewis S. Hollier, of Bozeman, for he has achieved definite success through his own efforts and is thoroughly deserving of the proud American title of self-made man, the term being one that, in its better sense, cannot but appeal to the loyal admiration of all who are appreciative of our national institutions and the privileges afforded for individual accomplishment. It is a privilege, ever gratifying in this day and age, to meet a man who has the courage to face the battles of life with a strong heart and steady hand, and to win in the stern conflict by bringing to bear only those forces with which nature has equipped him, self-reliance, self-respect and integrity.

Lewis S. Hollier was born in Christian County, Illinois, on April 5, 1853, and is a son of Christopher Columbus and Nancy (McKinney) Hollier. Christopher C. Hollier was born in the State of Illinois in 1902. He was a farmer by vocation, in which he was successful, and spent his entire life in Illinois. He was a republican in politics, served as town clerk and took an active interest in the civic and political affairs of his community. He was a veteran of the Mexican war and was a member of the Christian Church and of the Masonic fraternity. He married Nancy McKinney, who was born near Springfield, Sangamon County, Illinois, in 1832, and died in Christian County, Illinois, in 1894. To this worthy couple were born the following children: Gunnell McKinney and Clarissa, who died in early childhood; Lewis S. is the next in order of birth; Mary, who died in Park County, Montana, at the age of forty-five years, was the wife of Jacob Bliler, an extensive rancher at Wilsall, Montana; Edward, who died at Livingston, Montana, at the age of fifty years; Alice is the wife of Eli Bliler, a farmer in Christian County, Illinois; Ida is the wife of William Carmony, who resides on the old homestead in Christian County, Illinois; Lucy is the wife of a Mr. Harris, a farmer in Missouri; Nancy Margaret died in childhood, as did Florence Columbia and Minnie.

Lewis S. Hollier received his educational training in the rural schools of Christian County, Illinois, and remained on his father's farm until twenty-eight years of age. In the spring of 1881 he went to Fredonia, Kansas, where he remained for six months, at the end of which time he came to Bozeman, being numbered among the pioneers of this locality, and during the following three years he was employed as a general laborer. He then established a dray line, which he operated for twenty years, and then sold it. For thirty years he has acted as district representative for the Continental Oil Company, and for about twenty years he has been a dealer in wood and coal. Mr. Hollier has exercised sound business judgment in all his transactions and, though starting here at the beginning with practically nothing, he is today numbered among the prosperous and successful men of this community. Besides a comfortable and attractive residence in Bozeman, and other property here, he is the owner of some good land in Southern Oregan.

Mr. Hollier has always been an ardent supporter of the republican party, and served one term as a member of the City Council of Bozeman. Fraternally he is a member of Gallatin Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of Pythagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Hollier has been twice married. In 1874, in Christian County, Illinois, he was married to Marob A. Toothaker, a native of Christian County, Illinois, and who died in Bozeman in 1888. She became the mother of one child, Beatrix, who died at the age of eight years. In 1890, at Bozeman, Mr. Hollier was married to Trena Baker, a native of Iowa, and to them have been born the following children: Georgie is the wife of Frederick Benedict, of Bremerton, Washington, who is a draughtsman in the service of the Government; Alice died at the age of fifteen years; Samuel is a machinist at Bozeman; Trena is a junior in the Montana State College and Myrtle is a sophomore in the same institution; Stella attends the Gallatin County High School. Mr. Hollier has ever given his support to all worthy movements for the advancement of the community. His residence here of many years has but strengthened his hold on the hearts of the people with whom he has been associated, and today no one here enjoys a larger circle of warm friends and acquaintances, who esteem him because of his sterling qualities of character and his business ability.

James McCalman has had a long and varied experience in brick and stone contracting, and has done a great deal of construction work for the state government of Montana. He was the construction contractor for the State Penitentiary, and makes his home at Deer Lodge.

Mr. McCalman was born at Morven, Scotland, December 23, 1859. His father James McCalman was born in the same locality in 1809 and spent all his life there as a farmer. He died in 1894. He was a liberal in politics and a very faithful Presbyterian in his church affiliations. James McCalman married Mary McLaughlin, who was born at Morven, Scotland, in 1820, and died there in 1885. Catherine, the oldest of their children, lives at Troon, Scotland, widow of Thomas Little, who was a merchant; Mary lives at Oban, Scotland, widow of John McIntyre, who was an insurance man; Dr. John is a minister of the Christian Church at Lakemont, New York; James is the fourth of the family; Douglas is a minister of the Presbyterian Church at Strachur, Scotland; Major Duncan of Baltimore, is a major in the Regular United States Army and was all through the World war with the Ninety-sixth Engineers; Margaret lives at Morven, Scotland, widow of Allan Curry, who was postmaster of that town.

James McCalman attended the public schools of his native town in Scotland, and as a youth learned the trade of general building construction. He came to the United States in 1882, following his trade for two years at Minneapolis. It was thirty-five years ago that he identified himself with Montana, with headquarters at Helena. He became a leading contractor in brick and stone work, erecting the first bank at Helena and business buildings and residences. In 1894 he moved to Deer Lodge, where as contractor he erected all the walls of the main buildings and the wings of the penitentiary, a contract that took his time and all the facilities of his organization for five years. After completing the work he spent several years in Alaska as a gold prospector and had considerable success in mining the precious metal. Mr. McCalman returned to Deer Lodge in 1911 and resumed his business as a construction contractor for the State Penitentiary. At present he is working out a large contract at Warm Springs, building the hospital and all the other buildings of the insane asylum. He employs convicts entirely for the work, keeping about eighty busy. He is also erecting the Tuberculosis Hospital, barns, power house, dormitories, kitchens and other structures at Galen, Montana.

Mr. McCalman is a republican in politics. He owns a modern home at 1010 Fifth Street in Deer Lodge. He married at Tacoma, Washington, in 1908, Miss Marion McFarlane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McFarlane of Tobermory, Scotland. Her father was at one time a justice of the peace in Scotland. Mrs. McCalman is a trained nurse and came to this country from Glasgow. They have three children: Ronald, born August 3, 1909; Douglas, born April 27, 1912; and Malcolm, born September 12, 1917.

Charles A. Weil, president of the P. L. Howe Lumber Mills of Eureka, has been through every phase of the lumber industry, from lumber camp to business office, and his experience has covered most of the Middle West as well as the Northwest. His career has brought him generous means, and for years he has been one of the most influential citizens of this section of Montana.

Mr. Weil was born at West Bend, Wisconsin, March 20, 1866, a son of Henry and Catherine (Wightman) Weil. His father was a native of Alsace-Lorraine and a lawyer by profession. Charles A. Weil acquired a public school education in Wisconsin, and at the age of sixteen taught a term of school. He also had some experience in newspaper work before he entered the lumber industry, working in camps and mills and lumber yards in Wisconsin, Illinois and North Dakota, and for the past fourteen years has been at the head of the extensive mills at Eureka. He has many interests with the lumbering and business enterprises of the Northwest.

Mr. Weil married Miss Maude Norris, daughter of William L. and Augusta (Vestey) Norris. Her father was a native of Dublin, Ireland, and for many years editor and owner of the Watertown Republican in Wisconsin, and through his paper and individuality was a staunch upholder of the republican party. Mrs. Weil was born at Watertown, Wisconsin, and finished her education in the Bordulac Seminary at Oconomowoc, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Weil have two children, Genevieve and Kenneth. Genevieve finished her education at Grafton Hall in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, while Kenneth attended the Illinois Northern College at Dixon and a school at Rugby, North Dakota. Genevieve is the wife of G. A. Horstkotte, mechanical superintendent of the Shevlin Hixon Mills at Bend, Oregon. They have one child, Charles A. Horstkotte. Kenneth, who is manager of the Miller Lumber Company at Bend, Oregon, married Laura Reynolds, of Rugby, North Dakota, and has two children, Charles Kenneth and Muriel.

In 1917 Mr. and Mrs. Weil erected one of the finest residences in Lincoln County. It was built almost exclusively of materials manufactured in the mills at Eureka. It is a house in colonial style, and many of its plans were suggested by Mrs. Weil. Mr. Weil is a democrat in politics. He is a Knight Templar Mason, also affiliated with the Scottish Rite Consistory and the Shrine, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. Both Mr. and Mrs. Weil give their active membership and support to the Episcopal Church. During the World war they were prominent factors in the splendid record made by Eureka. Mrs. Weil was purchaser for the Red Cross Chapter and he served as one of the executive committee of the Chapter and was also chairman of the second and third Liberty Loan drives. Mr. Weil in 1916 was elected a member of the Montana Legislature and was in the Legislature for two terms, throughout the war period, serving on a number of important committees and at all times doing what he could to uphold the stanch patriotism of the state.

One of Montana's newspapers referring to his work in the Legislature said truthfully of him: "Representative Weil is one of those men who do things. When given a task to perform it becomes the duty of the moment and is attended to. Therefore it is not surprising that he served as chairman through all the Liberty Loan campaigns in Lincoln County and in the campaigns for the Red Cross and other associated war activities. While a democrat in politics, he is not an intensely partisan legislator, but looks more to the merit of a measure and the welfare of the state than to party preference. This is one of the reasons for his re-election in a county where the republican candidate for state senator was elected by a substantial plurality. During the last session of the State Legislature he was chairman of the important committee on privileges and elections. He has been appointed a member of the committees on ways and means, banking, townships and counties, and fish and game."

Mr. Weil is one of the directors of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Eureka and of the Security State Bank of Whitefish. He was president of the Montana Lumber Manufacturers' Association and also president of the State Forestry Association. The P. L. Howe Lumber Mills, of which he is the executive head, are successors to the Eureka Lumber Company, and at Eureka they have one of the immense manufacturing plants of Montana, with an annual capacity of 60,000,000 feet of lumber products.

Lewis Carlile Clark is a native of the great mining center of Butte, and for a number of years has been actively identified with ranching, stock raising and other business affairs at Lewistown. He was one of the leading men in Fergus County in supporting and maintaining the various war auxiliary movements during the World war

His father was the late Henry S. Clark, one of the earliest Montana settlers and long prominent as a business man and public official of the state. Henry S. Clark was born in New York State, October 5, 1832, and in one line traced his ancestry back to the Mayflower. His father, Rev. Charles Clark, was a Baptist minister and preached at various towns in New York. Henry S. Clark acquired his education in several towns where his father was a pastor, and after leaving the Lowville Academy became a bookkeeper and later teller in the Rome Exchange Bank. He was elected city treasurer of Rome in 1853. In 1855 he went to Chicago, and for three years was a messenger with the United States Express Company. In 1858 he went to Des Moines, Iowa, and continued as an express agent there and at Kansas City, Missouri, until the first of 1860. Early in that year he went to Pike's Peak, Colorado, and with three others located the Manitou Springs and the townsite of Colorado City. The wonderful value of those scenic places was not then appreciated, and he soon became a miner, also ranched near Colorado City, but in 1864 flood and grasshoppers and Indian hostilities drove him away. During 1865-66 he kept a grocery and commission store at Denver.

In 1866 he joined a party making the journey with mule teams from Denver to Montana. He settled at the mining camp of Greenwood, eighteen miles from Helena, and opened a store, kept the stage station and postoffice, and became interested in mining. In 1878 he removed to Butte City. While a successful business man, he was almost continuously identified with some public office during his residence in Montana. He was elected clerk and recorder of Deer Lodge County in 1871, serving seven years; during 1880-81 was deputy assessor of Silver Bow County; in 1882 was elected clerk and recorder of that county, and filled the office four years; and subsequently was deputy collector of internal revenue for the Third Division of Montana.

Henry S. Clark died at Long Beach, California, January 22, 1914. At Fountain, Colorado, August 31, 1863, he married Laura Roberts. She was born in Bourbon County, Kentucky, February 10, 1844, and died at Bartlesville, Oklahoma, March 15, 1912. She was long prominent as a pioneer Montana woman and was widely known for her interests in fraternal organizations. Her father, Samuel E. Roberts, was a pioneer Colorado rancher and stockman. Mrs. Henry S. Clark left Denver in September, 1867, to join her husband in Montana, making the journey by stage coach around Salt Lake. For a time she and her infant son were the only passengers, and they had to pass through long stretches of country recently devastated by Indian raids. She was a splendid type of the pioneer woman, steadfast, courageous, and willing to meet every emergency with the same spirit as her husband. She held many of the prominent offices in the Women's Auxiliary bodies of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Order of Rebekahs, and the Eastern Star. Henry S. Clark was a prominent Mason and Odd Fellow. He and his wife had ten children, two of whom were born in the pioneer district of Colorado and eight in the equally frontier conditions of Montana. The first died in infancy and the son who accompanied his mother on her perilous trip to Montana is William Lee Clark. The others in order of age were Henry S., Arthur B., Clarence, Clara, Hudson, Lewis Carlile and Laura, twins, and one other that died in infancy.

Lewis Carlile Clark was born at Butte, February 1, 1885. He grew up at Butte, attending the grammar and high schols there, and finished his education in the University of Michigan. After his college career he took up stock ranching in Fergus County, being a sheep man, and was president and manager of the North Montana Livestock Company until 1912. After that he devoted his ranch of 887 acres to the growing of wheat. He is now extensively interested in real estate, is a stockholder in the Miners Savings Bank & Trust Company at Butte, and in recent years has given much time to public affairs in Lewistown. After an exciting campaign he was elected mayor of Lewistown in May, 1917, and served until May, 1919. During the war he was the first chairman of the Civilian Relief Committee, is now chairman of the Fergus County Chapter of the Red Cross, and president of the Fergus County War Relief Association. Mr. Clark is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and belongs to Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a past exalted ruler of Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

March 1, 1910, he married Margaret Jane Byrne, a native of Wisconsin. They have three children, named Clara Margaret, Lois C. and Lew Carlile.

William C. Whipps. It is the deliberate judgment of a large part of the citizenship of Kalispell that no one man has longer exemplified the strongest influence of his public spirit in behalf of all matters affecting the welfare of the community as William C. Whipps, veteran merchant, former mayor and a citizen who has never neglected an opportunity to keep his section of the state in the very lead of improvements and development.

Mr. Whipps is of English ancestry. His great-grandfather, Benjamin Whipps, was a Maryland slave holder, and one of the first white settlers in Ohio. Lloyd Whipps father of the former mayor, was a soldier with an Ohio regiment in the Civil war. Lloyd Whipps married Louise Grant, a native of Virginia, her family being remotely connected with that of General Grant.

William C. Whipps was born near Lexington, Ohio, August 30, 1856. He was educated in common schools, attended college at Oberlin, Ohio, and acquired a general commercial education and took a course in telegraphy. In 1872, at the age of sixteen, he went to the Nebraska frontier and as an operator for the Union Pacific Railway was stationed at McPherson. McPherson was the home of Buffalo Bill, the late Col. W. F. Cody; Texas Jack, whose real name was Jack Omohondro, and Doctor Carver, the famous rifle shot. Mr. Whipps became an intimate friend of these celebrities and was dubbed "Buffalo Bill, Jr." The town was on the frontier, in the midst of Pawnee, Sioux and Cheyenne Indians, and many of its white characters were gamblers, horse thieves and murderers. From McPherson Mr. Whipps was transferred to Sidney, Nebraska. He shared in the excitement and romance of the time, and eventually he gave up his position at Sidney with the railroad and joined a party of five on an expedition to the Black Hills. To reach the Black Hills reservation required a hazardous journey over 200 miles, and the Indians were known to be hostile to every advance of the white men. In order to reach the coveted country the party of five left Sidney at one o'clock in the morning June 26, 1875, and traveled chiefly by night, hiding through the day. They arrived at French Creek, near Harney's Peak, July 16th and was the first party to reach there. They located claims on Spring Creek, and were soon at work prospecting and developing their claims. July 29th General Crook ordered all miners to leave by the 10th of August or suffer the penalty of being carried as prisoners to Fort Laramie. There was no other course but to obey, and the men divided their supplies and returned to Sidney, being reduced to starvation rations before they reached that town. Mr. Whipps again entered the service of the Union Pacific Railway as agent and operator, was assigned to duty at North Platte, and subsequently as express messenger was at Denver and Salt Lake. In 1881 he left the railroad and came to Dillon, Montana. He entered the service of the well known firm of Sebree, Ferris & White at Dillon, and was soon promoted to head bookkeeper and cashier of the forwarding department. In January, 1883, the company sent him to Livingston to establish a forwarding house, Livingston being then the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railway. Not long afterward he joined the Merchants National Bank of Helena, becoming its manager, and in 1891 left the capital for Demersville, then the metropolis of the Flathead country. He organized the Northwestern Bank, the first bank in Flathead County, and subsequently organized the First National Bank of Kalispell, erecting for its home the first brick building in the town. He remained as cashier and manager of the First National of Kalispell until 1898. The following five years he was receiver of the United States Land Office, and at the close of his official term engaged in the mercantile business under the name of W. C. Whipps & Son. In 1904 Mr. Whipps erected the Whipps Block, the largest and best building in Kalispell. He is also owner of some fruit land on Flathead Lake, has a summer home there, and is owner of several ranches near Kalispell.

His summer home in Glacier National Park was the first to be built for private use. When the Forrestry Department was contemplating the sale of the timber to private parties at Lake McDonald, Mr. Whipps proved himself an aggressive friend of conservation and took the matter up directly with President Roosevelt, describing the wondrous beauty and other attractions of the region, and suggesting that it be made a national park. President Roosevelt with characteristic energy acted upon the suggestion, and as a result Americans enjoy today a park second to none in the world for its peculiar advantages. The action he took in behalf of the Glacier National Park has been characteristic of Mr. Whipps' entire record as a Montana citizen. He has done everything possible to promote the growth of Kalispell. He became its first elective mayor in 1893 and served three consecutive terms. As mayor he carried out a complete system of sewerage, paved the principal streets and several of the handsome tree lined thoroughfares date from his administration. In 1910 he again yielded to public demand and became mayor. During this administration he brought about the reclamation of 43 acres of marsh lands and transformed it into the beautiful city park named Woodland Park. Mr. Whipps was also one of the prime movers in building the Masonic Temple. He is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Mystic Shriner, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Elks and the Episcopal Church.

At Helena October 20, 1886, he married Miss Annie E. Osterhout. They have two children, William O. and Caroline Louise.

ANGUS L. MCLAUGHLIN. Specific mention is made of many of the worthy citizens of Montana within the pages of this work, citizens who have figured in the growth and development of this favored section of the Union and whose interests are identified with its every phase of progress, each contributing in his sphere of action to the well-being of the community in which he resides and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Among this number is he whose name appears above, a gentleman of large and successful business interests and who for nearly three decades has played a conspicuous part in the development of his section of the country.

Angus L. McLaughlin is descended from sterling old Scotch ancestry, his grandfather having emigrated from the land of hills and heather to the Dominion of Canada at an early day. There he followed farming pursuits, but his death occurred during one of the great cholera epidemics, he himself falling a victim to that dread disease, the event occurring prior to the birth of the subject of this sketch. One of his sons, Lachlan McLaughlin, was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in 1820, and his death occurred in the same locality in 1898. His vocation had been that of a dairyman and farmer. He took an active interest in political matters, in which he took an independent or liberal attitude and served as reeve (supervisor) of his county. He served in the historic rebellion of 1837-38 and in many ways exhibited traits of character that stamped him as a man of more than ordinary personality. He married Flora McDougald, who was born in Ontario, Canada, in 1834, and who died there in 1896. Their children were as follows: Angus L.; Dan, who is general road master for the Great Northern Railway at Sprague, Washington; John, of Livingston, Montana; Ernest, a miner at Butte, Montana; James, who is an official of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company at Winnipeg, Canada.

Angus L. McLaughlin was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, on April 1, 1861. He was educated in the public schools of his home locality and until twenty-seven years of age assisted his father on the home farm. Then for a while he was employed in construction work on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, but in 1890 he came to Montana, locating at Livingston, where he entered the bridge and building department of the Northern Pacific Railroad, in which he was employed for fifteen years. He then became president and manager of the Livingston Building and Manufacturing Company, which at that time handled many large and important contracts in the State of Montana. In 1912 Mr. McLaughlin entered into a partnership with D. Joseph O'Neill, under the firm name of McLaughlin & O'Neill, which has proven one of the strongest combinations in its line in Montana. The firm is engaged in a general contracting business, the construction of business blocks, cement walks, sewers, water works and bridge work of either frame or concrete. Among the contracts the firm has satisfactorily handled are the Big Timber Garage, the water works extension at Laurel, the sidewalk and curb district in the Town of Columbus, the Belgrade sewer district, the completion of the sewer district in the City of Livingston, the Livingston Water Works, the Finck Factory, the Lehrkind business block, the Harvat Block, the residences of D. J. Fraser and Dr. E. V. Foster, besides many other business blocks and residences.

Politically Mr. McLaughlin is a democrat, while his religious membership is with the Roman Catholic Church. He is a member of the Livingston Council, Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Highlanders. He is an active member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce and takes an active part in promoting every movement looking to the advancement of the best interests of his city and community.

On October 4, 1890, Mr. McLaughlin was married to Jeanette McRae, of Ontario, Canada, the daughter of John and Flora (McDonald) McRae. Her father, who was a railroad contractor, is now deceased, and his widow resides at Strathcona, Alberta, Canada. To Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin have been born the following children: George, who was an employe of the Northern Pacific Railroad at Livingston, served one year in the army during the World war, being stationed at Camp Lewis, with the rank of sergeant. He is now associated with his father in business. John was a sergeant major in the United States army, being assigned to the medical department of St. Louis, and he saw nineteen months of border service in New Mexico. He is also associated with his father in business. James A. enlisted in the military service of his country in 1917 and was sent overseas in January, 1918. He was promoted to the rank of sergeant and took part in the famous Argonne drive and other engagements where victory crowned the American arms. His death occurred on April 12, 1918, of disease contracted in the performance of duty and he lies with many of his comrades beneath the soil of France; Lachlan, who is attending the Mount Saint Charles College in Helena, was also in military service, having attended the officers training camp at Mount Saint Charles, at Helena; Ernest is a student in Park County High School. The record of this family for loyalty is a proud one and a heritage of which their descendants will never have cause to be ashamed. In every avenue of life's activities to which he has applied himself, Mr. McLaughlin has proved faithful to every responsibility and today he enjoys the unreserved confidence of his fellow citizens.

OTTO J. SIMMONS, of Red Lodge, has to an exceptional degree made abundant use of his opportunities and his time, and at a comparatively early age has established himself as one of the independent business leaders of Carbon County.

He was born at Oweeta, Arkansas, October 13, 1887, and received his early education in the public schools of Jenny Lind in his native state. His parents moved to Red Lodge, Montana, in September, 1900, when he was thirteen years old, and he attended grammar school there and graduated from high school in 1906. He was then nineteen years of age, and the following two summers he worked in the drug store of H. J. Armstrong, and for eight months drove a wagon for the Red Lodge Laundry Company. He was next employed by the Carbon Mercantile Company until February, 1911, when he was made assistant manager of the grocery department with the Montana Co-operative Mercantile Company, and was with that corporation until 1915. During 1915-16 for two years he was deputy county clerk. His experience in that office brought him to what he regards as his permanent field, the abstract business. He is now secretary and treasurer of the Red Lodge Abstract & Title Company, which was established in April, 1915, and is the leading abstract company for Carbon County. The offices of the company are in the Savoy Block.

Mr. Simmons is a republican, is chairman of the board of trustees of the Congregational Church, is past exalted ruler of Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and a member of the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce. He owns a good home at 217 North Villard Avenue. Mr. Simmons answered the call for military duty during the great war, going to Camp Lewis in the State of Washington in August, 1918. He was mustered out and given his honorable discharge January 24, 1919.

He married at Red Lodge, October 4, 1912, Miss Jessica Dunn, a daughter of Frank W. Dunn. Her father was born in Pennsylvania in 1855, settled in Northern Iowa, near Mason City, in 1884 and was a farmer and is still living at Mason City. He is a republican, and has served as township assessor, and is an active member of the Baptist Church. Frank W. Dunn married Miss Brown, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1857. Mrs. Simmons is a graduate of the Iowa State Normal School at Cedar Falls, was a teacher in Mason City and on coming to Red Lodge, Montana, in 1910, taught in the public schools for two years before her marriage. She is an active worker in the Congregational Church and a member of the Woman's Club.

Edward B. Bloom is one of the younger business men of Red Lodge, enjoys great popularity with all that community, and his ability and pleasing personality have had much to do with the success of the Kaleva Co-operative Association, of which he is the general manager.

Mr. Bloom has the added distinction of being a native son of Red Lodge. He was born there May 3, 1893. His father, Abram Bloom, was born in Finland in 1861, a son of Jacob Bloom, who spent all his life in that country as a farmer. Abram Bloom came to the United States when a young man and soon went west to Rawlins, Wyoming, and in 1888 came to Montana. In 1890, at Great Falls, he married Josephine Jokela, who was born and reared in Finland, her birth occurring in 1865. After their marriage they moved to Red Lodge, where Abram Bloom followed the business of coal mining. He died in 1910. He was a democrat and a member of the Finnish Lutheran Church. His widow is still living at Red Lodge and is the mother of six children: Emma, wife of Martin Rapp, a miner at Red Lodge; Edward B.; Anna, wife of Andrew Wilmonen, a farmer at Boyd, Montana; Elmer, a farmer at Roberts, Montana; Bertha, wife of Ray Houton, of Red Lodge; and Jennie, a telephone operator living with her mother.

Edward B. Bloom has depended largely upon his native talents and experience for his success in life. He attended country schools to the age of eleven, then went to work on a farm for four years and at the age of fifteen became a clerk in the Kaleva Co-operative Mercantile Association. His abilities and industry have been such that the directors of the association afterward promoted him to general manager. The business is general merchandise at 3 South Broadway, and is one of the leading establishments of its kind in Carbon County.

Mr. Bloom is a republican, is a member of Garfield Lodge No. 36, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, of the Elks, and Red Lodge Camp of Modern Woodmen of America. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Bloom owns a modern residence at 10 North Haggin Avenue. He married Miss Esther Erickson at Red Lodge in 1915. Her mother is deceased and her father is Herman Erickson, a retired business man of Red Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Bloom have one son, Walter, born January 20, 1916.

Harold S. Croonquist. This is a family that has been well known in several communities of Montana for over thirty-five years. For nearly twenty years it has been especially prominent at Red Lodge, where the leading business is known as the Croonquist Mercantile Company. The manager of this is Harold S. Croonquist, one of the young and energetic business men of the city.

Harold S. Croonquist was born at Livingston, Montana, October 16, 1891. His father, A. Croonquist, founder of the business at Red Lodge, was born in Sweden in 1862, and was about twelve years of age when he came to the United States. He finished his education at St. Paul, Minnesota, and for several years was a railway mail clerk on the St. Paul Railroad. He came to Montana in 1882, when the Northern Pacific Railway was being constructed. For about ten years he was engaged in the confectionery and cigar business and in 1893 moved to the Yakima Valley in Washington, where he busied himself with his farming interests. During 1897-99 he was a merchant at Livingston, Montana, then established a business at Carbonado and in 1900 came to Red Lodge and established the dry goods and shoe store at 13 North Broadway, which is the leading mercantile enterprise of its kind in Carbon County and is now operated under the business title of Croonquist Mercantile Company. Several years ago he retired from business and is now living at Spokane, Washington. While in Red Lodge he served two terms as a member of the city council and was in every respect a public spirited citizen. He is a republican and a member of the Congregational Church. Mr. A. Croonquist married Miss Mabel E. Harrison, who was born at Waterbury, Connecticut, in 1869. They have a family of seven children: Alfred H., a member of the Croonquist firm at Red Lodge; Harold S.; Hugh A., who spent 1918-19 as a soldier with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, is a stockholder in the Croonquist Mercantile Company and resides on his farm at Opportunity, Washington; Mabel, wife of O. L. Cornwall, a veterinary surgeon at Coeur D'Alene, Idaho; Stanley M., who was an ensign in the United States navy; Ella and Alice, both at home.

Harold S. Croonquist has spent most of his career in Red Lodge. He graduated from the high school of that town in 1909 and the following two years was employed in his father's store. During 1911-13 he was a student in Grinnell College in Iowa, completing the work of the junior year. On leaving college he went to St. Mary's, Idaho, where he was in a store until 1916 and then returned to Red Lodge and became manager of the Croonquist Mercantile Company. His father is president of this corporation, his brother, A. H. Croonquist, is vice president, while Harold Croonquist in addition to his duties as active manager is secretary and treasurer.

He is a member of the local Chamber of Commerce, has served as treasurer of the Congregational Church, is independent in politics and a member of Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Free and Accepted Masons, and Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534 of the Elks. Mr. Croonquist married Laura Curry at Red Lodge, April 9, 1919. Her parents are Joseph and Martha (Bullock) Curry, residents of Renton, Washington, her father being a blacksmith.

J. J. Gerondale, who has been a resident of Red Lodge for the past ten years, is a practical dairy and butter expert, and as a professional and business man has done much to advance the interests of the dairy industry in Carbon County. He is president of the Carbon County Creamery Company.

Mr. Gerondale was born in Brown County, Wisconsin, April 27, 1885, and gained his primary knowledge of dairying in the heart of the dairying district of America. His family is of Belgian ancestry. His grandfather Gerondale came from Belgium and was an early settler in Wisconsin, where he followed farming. He died in Brown County, that state. John Gerondale, father of the Red Lodge business man, was born in Brown County in 1862, and spent his early life there as a farmer. In 1904 he moved to Wallace, Michigan, and has since been a farmer, lumberman and lumber jobber. He is still active in business. He is independent in his political affiliations and is a member of the Catholic Church. His first wife was Pauline Bassine, who was born in Brown County, Wisconsin, in 1864, and died there in 1887, the mother of two sons, Charles and J. J. The former is in the drug business at Detroit, Michigan. For his second wife John Gerondale married Anna Lemense, of Wisconsin. She died at Wallace, Michigan, in 1907, and her children, four in number, are: Almand, who is employed in an automobile factory at Detroit; Leona, who is married and resides at Pestigo, Wisconsin; Norbert, who was a soldier and was a victim of the influenza at Missoula, Montana, in October, 1918; John, living with his father.

J. J. Gerondale attended the public schools of Ingalls, Michigan, and as a youth had much practical experience in dairying. Later he took technical courses and graduated in 1907, after completing the butter and cream making courses at the University of Wisconsin. The following year he spent at work in his technical line at Milwaukee, another year at Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, six months at Manistique, Michigan, and then for a year was traveling salesman for a line of cream separators in Wisconsin and Michigan.

Mr. Gerondale came to Red Lodge in 1909, and was the expert technical man of the Carbon County Creamery Company for several years. In 1916 he and Walter Helm bought out this industry, which was established in 1906 and has been justly considered the corner stone of the dairy industry of Carbon County. In 1917 another creamery was established at Bridger, and these are the only two creameries in Carbon County. Mr. Gerondale is president and Walter Helm secretary and treasurer of the company. The plant is at 423 North Haggin Avenue. The patrons of the creamery are dairy farmers all over Carbon County and some in Stillwater County.

Mr. Gerondale is an independent democrat in politics, a member of the Catholic Church, and in 1918 was exalted ruler of Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534 of the Elks. For the past seven years he has been city milk and dairy inspector of Red Lodge. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

In the fall of 1909, at Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, he married Miss Lillian Helm, a daughter of Chris and Sophia (Colemorgan) Helm. Her parents are both deceased. Her father was a hotel man for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Gerondale have two children: Jack, born May 12, 1912, and James Robert Gerondale, born April 14, 1919.

Henry H. Forman. Montana has drawn to it energetic young men from all over the country, the possibilities of this magnificent state attracting those who are willing to exert themselves and render effective service to their municipalities and communities. Red Lodge is particularly fortunate in the character of the men who have made this city their permanent home, and Carbon County has brought into its courthouse to administer the affairs of this section some of the very best of these residents. One of them, Henry H. Forman, county auditor and responsible man of affairs, had a wide experience prior to coming to Red Lodge in 1917. He was born near Winchester, Clark County, Kentucky, August 15, 1880, a son of Henry Hamilton Forman, and grandson of Henry Forman, born in Kentucky in 1803, and died at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, in 1883, where he had been engaged in farming all of his mature years. During the Mexican war Henry Forman enlisted in defense of his country, and served it during that conflict.

Henry Hamilton Forman was born in Kentucky in 1835, and he died at Indian Field, that state, in 1897, having been in his native state all of his life with the exception of his period of service during the Civil war. In 1861 he enlisted in a Kentucky infantry regiment, and served until the close of the war, during that period being wounded very severely. Returning home after peace was declared, he engaged in an undertaking business, and was also active as a farmer and stockman. In politics he was a republican and he was very active in civic affairs, holding various local offices. A Mason and a Presbyterian, he lived up to the highest ideals of his fraternity and church and was one of the most upright and conscientious men of the community. His wife bore the maiden name of Sarah Rice, and she was born in Kentucky in 1850, and was killed by an automobile in the City of Oklahoma in 1906. Their children were as follows: W. C., who is the owner of a garage of King City, Missouri; Charlotte, who married Douglas Shephard, died at Edmond, Oklahoma, but he survives and carries on an insurance business at Edmond; B. C., who was a carriage manufacturer, died near Paris, Kentucky; R. G., who was a rancher and stockman, died at Fort Concho, Texas, in 1908; W. C., who was a telegrapher, died at Indian Field, Kentucky, in 1898; Henry H., whose name heads this review; O. G., who is in an automobile business at Detroit, Michigan; D. R., who is a druggist of El Paso, Texas; O. L., who is in a real estate business at Los Angeles, California; and Ethel Leora, who married and lives at Los Angeles, where her husband is engaged in the clothing business.

Henry H. Forman attended the common schools of Clark County, Kentucky, and assisted his parents until he was twenty years old, at which time he began ranching and was so occupied in Kentucky, Texas and Wyoming, and then in 1898 made his first trip to Montana, going through the state buying and selling blooded horses. Later he located at Cheyenne, Wyoming. In 1916 he returned to Montana, and was engaged in ranching at Belfry for a brief period, leaving it for Red Lodge in 1917.

Geo. F. Seel

Here he owned a barber shop, and conducted it until he was elected on the republican ticket auditor of Carbon County in 1918, assuming the duties of the office in January, 1919, for a term of two years. His office is in the courthouse. While living in Illinois he had some experience as a public official, as he was there a justice of the peace. Fraternally he belongs to Wataga Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Wataga, Illinois.

In 1903 Mr. Forman was married to Miss Mabel Cornelius at Galesburg, Illinois, and she died at Moline, Illinois, in 1912, leaving two children, Henry C., who was born May 24, 1905, and Myrtle, who was born January 24, 1907. During April, 1913, Mr. Forman was married to Miss Myra Huntington at Billings, Montana. She is a daughter of E. and Lizzie Huntington, who reside in Rosebud County, Montana, where Mr. Huntington is a rancher and stockman. Mr. and Mrs. Forman have a daughter, Vivian, who was born November 2, 1914. Mr. Forman is giving Carbon County a valuable service in the office he holds, and is recognized as one of the representative men of this section, and one who is deserving of the confidence displayed in him by his constituents.

GEORGE ROLLIN CREEL, of Lewistown, has made his home in Fergus County for twenty years, coming to Montana from Illinois.

He was born on a farm close to the Mississippi River, near the Town of Durham in Hancock County, Illinois, in 1873, son of Charles A. and Susan (Yates) Creel. His parents were both natives of Illinois. When he was a year old the family moved to McDonough County, where he spent the early years of his life on a farm just at the edge of Macomb. The corner stone of the limits of that beautiful little Illinois city was located in the front yard of the Creel home.

His first schooling was in the district schools, but becoming acquainted in the city he attended schools at Macomb and completed his education in the Macomb Business and Normal College. He never achieved a college degree, but all his life has been an optimistic student of the pages of the world's history. He has much admiration for the rural life, at the same time desires the advantages of the city.

His father was born in 1844 and is still living, having spent a long and active career as a farmer and stockman. Mr. Creel was only six years old when his mother died in 1880, at the age of forty-two, as a result of typhoid fever. At that time the small boy was much impressed by the service rendered by the undertaker. After leaving school George Creel followed various lines of work. While in a shoe store at Joliet, Illinois, he met a stockman from Geyser, Montana, whose story of Central Montana so interested him that thirty days later he was on his way to Great Falls. One year was spent on a ranch, then he was employed in the quartz mines at New Year, and while working in the Judith Hardware Store at Lewistown, which carried a side line of caskets, he began planning an exclusive business as a funeral director. At that time the impressions made upon him at his mother's funeral were renewed and after much consideration he went to Chicago and completed a course and secured a diploma from the United States School of Embalming.

On his return to Lewiston he had no capital, but his training and experience, combined with his determined ambition, enabled him to bridge over the period in which failure was daily imminent. A friend supplied him with the funds with which he opened his funeral directing parlors in December, 1902, and later the Montana Hardware Company and the Judith Hardware Company sold their stock of caskets and funeral supplies to him. He has since been in business at 605 Main Street, has a splendid equipment and is a man of the proper talent and experience to handle this business most successfully.

Mr. Creel is proud of his citizenship in his adopted State of Montana and is endeavoring to keep abreast with his thriving little city.

He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Order of Elks, Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, Judith Lodge No. 30, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are both members of Marie Chapter No. 36 of the Eastern Star.

April 14, 1903, Mr. Creel married Miss Kittie A. Schaaf, who was born at Alhambra Springs, Montana, daughter of Aaron and Alice (Pool) Schaaf, early settlers of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Creel are the parents of three daughters, Lygra L., Judith Montana and Nita A.

HENRY ROSETTA has been a resident of Montana for thirty years, was formerly well known in coal mining circles in Carbon County, has also been prominent in official affairs and is an extensive rancher near Red Lodge.

He was born near Turin, Italy, February 15, 1870, but has spent his life since early childhood in the United States. His father, Frank Rosetta, was born near Turin in 1837, and while living in Italy cultivated a small farm. During one of the wars in which Italy was engaged in 1856 he hauled supplies to the Italian camp. He came to America in 1876 and was a pioneer settler in Southeastern Kansas, locating at Osage City. He worked in the coal mines there, but later became a farmer, and his death in 1903 was the result of an accident in his cow stable. He was a republican voter and was reared in the Catholic Church. Frank Rosetta married Theressa Fiora, who was born near Turin in 1851 and is now living at Benton Harbor, Michigan. Henry was the oldest of her eight children. A brief record of the others is as follows: Amelia, wife of Emil Balocca, a painter and decorator at Osage City, Kansas; Florinda, wife of A. D. Wardell, a coal miner at Minden Mines, Missouri; Clementine, residing at Osage City, is the widow of Charles Herman, who was a coal mine foreman and farmer; Adolph, of Benton Harbor, Michigan; Emil, a machinist living in Virginia; Quinto, a musician at Benton Harbor; Frank, a printer living at Benton Harbor.

Henry Rosetta was educated in the schools of Osage City, Kansas. He began working and supporting himself at the age of 10½ years, when he was employed as a boy in the coal mines of Kansas. His coal mining experience gave him his first opportunity when he came to Montana in 1890. He was employed in the mines of the Rocky Fork Coal Company until the fall of 1898. In the meantime he had become a well known and popular figure in Carbon County, and in that year was elected assessor of the county. He filled the office for two years and the following four years he engaged in the real estate and insurance business. In the meantime he became interested in coal lands and developed the International coal properties at Bear Creek and was their active manager until 1913. He is still a director in the International Coal Company. Since 1913 he has concentrated his energies on ranching. His home ranch, individually owned, comprises 640 acres five miles northeast of Red Lodge. He also leases over 1,000 acres, and does his business as a stock raiser on a large scale. He served as president of the Rocky Fork and Clear Creek Ditch Company, but refused re-election to that office in March, 1919, and has been connected with the organizations for twenty years. Mr. Rosetta is a democrat and is affiliated with Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. His residence is at 301 North Platte Avenue in Red Lodge. He married in Osage City, Kansas, Miss Clementine Romersa, a daughter of Joseph and Maria Romersa. Her father is now living in Italy while her mother is in Red Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Rosetta had the following children: Alpha, of Red Lodge, a graduate of the high school of that city, is the widow of Chris Sparling, who was a farmer in Montana; Sophie, who married Harry Woodson, of Bear Creek, Montana; Daisy A., a graduate of the high school, married Edwin H. Melville of Los Gatos, California; Kate, also a high school graduate, is at home with her parents and is bookkeeper for the Red Lodge Brewing Company; Adolph, who was a graduate of high school and was a victim of the influenza epidemic at the age of twenty-one, his death occurring November 6, 1918; and Leo, who is a public school student.

MARSHALL E. MILLER. The members of the vast army of business men connected with the various branches of the automobile industry have been recruited from various other occupations and vocational fields, for the autmobile business is comparatively a new one. It is likewise one that appeals to young men just entering upon their careers, and many of those who have already tasted of success are men still in their early thirties. Marshall E. Miller, of Billings, is one who, formerly a farmer, is now proprietor of one of the leading garages of his city. Mr. Miller is a native of Montgomery County, Missouri, born December 11, 1885, a son of J. H. and Alice (Cummings) Miller.

Chris Miller, the grandfather of Marshall E., was a pioneer into Missouri, where he rounded out a successful and honorable career in agricultural pursuits, and died at Bellflower, Missouri, in 1890. His son, J. H. Miller, was born in 1854, in Ohio, where he was reared, and was still a young man when he removed to Vernon County, Missouri, where his marriage took place. For some years he continued to make his home in Vernon County, where he was engaged in farming, a vocation which he subsequently followed in Montgomery County in the same state, but in December, 1916, retired from active pursuits and located near Fromberg, Montana, where he still makes his home. He is a stanch republican in his political affiliation, but is not interested in public affairs save as a voter and a public-spirited citizen. Mrs. Miller, who also survives, was born in 1862, in Vernon County, Missouri, and she and her husband are the parents of three children: Marshall E., of this notice; Claude, who is engaged in farming in Vernon County, Missouri; and Charles, who makes his home with his parents.

Marshall E. Miller was educated in the public schools of Missouri, and continued to reside on his father's farm until he reached the age of twenty-two years. At that time he embarked in farming upon his own initiative and continued to be so engaged until 1911, when he took up his home and centered his activities at Nevada, Missouri, being there employed in general work. Upon locating at Billings in October, 1914, he found employment in a garage and learned the business, and October 23, 1917, founded his present business at No. 112 North Twenty-sixth Street, where he has floor space of 25 by 55 feet. He has a well-equipped establishment, which has developed into one of the leading garages of the city, and is fully prepared to do all kinds of repairing, in addition to which he handles second-hand cars and handles all kinds of accessories. Mr. Miller has built up an excellent trade in his line, and maintains a high standing in business circles. He is an advocate of democratic principles and candidates as regards politics, and is fraternally connected with Lodge No. 558, Loyal Order of Moose.

On December 9, 1908, Mr. Miller was united in marriage at Harwood, Missouri, with Miss Nora Alice Moore, daughter of Steven J. and Alice Moore, now both deceased, Mr. Moore having formerly been a carpenter at Walker, Missouri. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: Raymond, born March 21, 1910, and Juanita, born June 5, 1914.

CHARLIE T. TROTT. A young man of good business capacity, familiar from his youth with the "art preservative of all arts," Charlie T. Trott, of Billings, established the Trott Printing Company, located at 2810-12 Second Avenue, North, in 1909, and has since managed its affairs systematically and efficiently. A son of Charles Trott, he was born August 6, 1884, at Deal, County Kent, England.

Charles Trott, a native of England, was born at Dover, County Kent, in 1854, and there acquired his early education. He was engaged in seafaring pursuits during his early life. In 1890 he immigrated to this country, at once making his way with his family to Montana and locating at first in that part of Custer County that is now included in Rosebud County, at Forsyth, coming from there to Billings in 1899. Since 1914 he has been actively associated with the Trott Printing Company. He married in Deal, England, Charlotte Hall, whose birth occurred in that town in 1856. Five children have been born into their household, as follows: Charlie T., with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned; Richard, of Billings, superintendent of the Trott Printing Company; Georgina, living with her parents; Phyllis, wife of Robert Tallent, who is engaged in mining at Butte, Montana; and Winifred, wife of Charles B. Allen, a contractor and builder at Billings.

But six years of age when he was brought by his parents to Montana, Charlie T. Trott acquired his preliminary education at Forsyth. He subsequently learned the printer's trade. Coming to Billings in 1899, Mr. Trott was for a short time with the Times Publishing Company, and later with the Gazette Printing Company. Ambitious to start in business on his own account and realizing the need of more extensive knowledge of the craft, he spent several years in different plants of large eastern printing centers. Politically Mr. Trott is independent of party affiliations. Fraternally he belongs to Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and socially he is a member of the Billings Midland Club.

Mr. Trott married at Billings in 1914 Miss Emma Christoffersen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mads Christoffersen, who reside in Menasha, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Trott have two children, William, born November 25, 1915; and George, born July 27, 1918.

CHARLEY W. HILL. The name of Charley W. Hill is known to everyone interested in real estate transfers in Page County. For several years he has filled a large place in the business affairs of the City of Livingston, and as an energetic, far-seeing, enterprising man, careful and painstaking in his work, he has won and now enjoys the confidence of all who are acquainted with him and his special line of work.

Charley W. Hill is descended from good old Yankee stock, his ancestors having located in Massachusetts in colonial days. His paternal grandfather, Daniel Hill, was born in Maine in 1816 and died at Lynn, Massachusetts, in 1889. For many years he lived at Swamscott, Massachusetts, where he established a wholesale fish market, in which he was succeeded by his son, Charley W. Hill's father. His wife was a Hathaway of Massachusetts. Mr. Hill's father, also named Daniel, was born in 1825 in Swamscott, Massachusetts, where he was reared, though the greater part of his life was spent in Boston, to which city he moved after his marriage. Eventually he retired and came to White Sulphur Springs, Montana, where he died a few years later, in 1892. He was a republican, a member of the Baptist Church and of the Masonic fraternity. In his younger years he had taken an active interest in military affairs and was captain of the Prescott Light Guards of Boston. He married Caroline Hill, who, though bearing the same family name, was not related to him. She was born in 1827 in Waterloo, Maine, and died at Portland, Maine, in 1896. To them was born but one child, the subject of this review.

Charley W. Hill, who conducts a successful abstracting business at Livingston, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, on November 9, 1857, and received his education in the public and night schools of that city. At the age of seventeen years he began work in the office of the city surveyor of Boston, where he remained three years. In 1879 he came west, locating first at Helena, Montana, of which he was one of the pioneer residents. During the following two seasons he was on Government survey work, and during his first season he was a member of the expedition out of Helena which worked in the flat Willow country. This region is now a part of Fergus County, but at that time the county had not been formed and Lewistown was as yet undreamed of. During his second season he was a member of the party which operated in the Powder River country south of Miles City. Even in that year the railways had not yet invaded the country. He pre-empted 160 acres of land west of White Sulphur Springs, dividing his residence between his ranch and the town. In 1889 he was appointed deputy county clerk and recorder of Meagher County, this being immediately following the admission of Montana to statehood, and three years later he was elected county clerk and recorder, to which office he was three times elected to succeed himself, thus serving six years. He then, in 1898, returned to his ranch, where he spent the next two years, but was recalled to public life by his election as sheriff of Meagher County, in which he served one term. He then started a steam laundry in White Sulphur Springs, but one year later he transferred the plant to Livingston, which offered a better opening. However, in 1902 Mr. Hill sold the laundry and entered the employ of the Livingston Land and Abstract Company, where he gained valuable experience in the most important field of abstracting, thoroughly learning every phase of the business. In 1915 he opened an abstracting office on his own account, in which he has met with most pronounced success, he being now considered the leading abstractor of his county. In 1902 Mr. Hill sold his ranch and now owns a splendid, modern home on South Seventh Street, Livingston.

Politically Mr. Hill is a republican, while his fraternal relations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, his membership being with Castle Mountain Lodge at White Sulphur Springs. He is also a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce and takes a live interest in every project which in any way promises to benefit the city or county.

On August 14, 1889, at Helena, Montana, Mr. Hill married Carrie A. Lewis, a native of Oxford, New York. She received a good education in the public schools and in Oxford Seminary and is a lady of refinement and culture. To Mr. and Mrs. Hill have been born three children, as follows: Lewis L., who had been connected with the Government engineering department in the Yellowstone Nation Park, enlisted in the United States army in June, 1917, prior to the draft, and in March, 1918, was sent overseas as a member of the Third Division, Sixth Engineers Corps, Army of Occupation. He saw much active service up to the time of the armistice, having been engaged on the Marne, in Picardy, at Verdun, where he was wounded, and in the Argonne Forest drive. His services were recognized and he became a first lieutenant of engineers. He is a man of splendid educational attainments, being a graduate of the Park County High School and of Bozeman College. Mary LaVaughn, who lives at home, is a graduate of the Park County High School and for the past four years has served as cashier of the Montana Power Company. Florence J., also a graduate of the county high school, is bookkeeper for the George L. Tracy Commission House.

It will thus be recognized that the Hill family has ably done its part in every relation of life which has presented itself, and they enjoy the sincere respect of all who know them and of their work.

Arthur J. Movius, M. D. Billings is especially fortunate in having among its more able and skilful physicians and surgeons Dr. Arthur J. Movius, who has attained a position of prominence in the medical profession, his career having been one of continued progress. Making a specialty of surgery rather than straying over the entire field of endeavor, he has become widely known as one of the foremost surgeons of Southeastern Montana, being recognized as an authority on that branch of medical science. A son of William R. Movius, he was born at Odessa, Minnesota, August 11, 1878, of German ancestry.

Born in Germany in 1850, William R. Movius came to this country as a youth of sixteen years, settling in Minnesota. Becoming familiar with the various branches of agriculture during the next few years, he bought land in the vicinity of Yellow Banks, that state, soon after attaining his majority, and by dint of hard labor cleared and improved a good farm, and for several years operated a general store. Moving with his family to South Dakota in 1875, he was there actively engaged in the mercantile business until 1890, when he settled at Lidgerwood, North Dakota, and engaged in the manufacture of flour, operating a mill for upwards of a quarter of a century. In 1917 he became a resident of Billings, Montana, where he is now living retired, enjoying the fruits of his previous years of toil. Politically he is a democrat; religiously a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and fraternally is a Mason.

Of the union of William R. Movius with Marcella J. Murray, a native of Minnesota, eight children have been born, as follows: Arthur J., the special subject of this personal sketch; Winfred D., operating a flour mill at Lidgerwood, North Dakota; Marcella, wife of Dr. N. J. Shields, a physician and surgeon at San Luis Obispo, California; Pearl D., wife of Arthur Rosenkranz, an electrician at Lidgerwood; Rex M., treasurer of Sheridan County, Montana, resides at Plentywood; Walter R., engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Billings; Harold E., who is associated with the Billings Laundry Company; and Margaret, wife of Herman Warren, a railroad employe, living in Mobile, Alabama.

The early educational privileges of Arthur J. Movius were confined to the public schools of Big Stone, South Dakota, but in 1895 he was graduated from the Fargo, North Dakota High School, ranking high in his class. The ensuing five years he was employed in the milling business with his father at Lidgerwood, North Dakota. Being of a studious nature, with a real desire to further advance his knowledge, he entered the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, and in 1904 was graduated from that institution with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. While there he joined the Nu Sigma Nu, a medical fraternity. Continuing his residence in Minneapolis, Doctor Movius did post graduate work at Asbury Hospital as an interne, specializing in surgery, for which he had a natural taste and aptitude.

Locating in Montana in 1905, the doctor erected a hospital at Bridger, and managed it creditably for four years, in the meantime gaining a broad experience in his special line of work and a wide reputation for ability and professional skill. Disposing of his hospital in June, 1911, Doctor Movius came to Billings, and having established his offices in Suite 239, Hart-Albin Building, has since built up an extensive and highly remunerative general practice, specializing as heretofore in surgery. He is a man of excellent financial standing, owning a ranch of 640 acres in Treasure County, Montana, a fine residence at 245 Wyoming Avenue, and is a large shareholder in the Security Building and Loan Association, Billings, Montana.

In his political relations the doctor is independent, voting according to the dictates of his conscience regardless of party prejudices. Religiously he is an active and prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a member of its board of trustees. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Socially he belongs to the Billings Midland Empire Club. He has also the distinction of being one of the four physicians of Yellowstone County to hold a fellowship in the American College of Surgeons.

In 1906, in Nova Scotia, Doctor Movius was united in marriage with Miss Marion Murray, a daughter of the late Andrew and Jane (McKenzie) Murray. Her father, formerly a farmer and carpenter, has passed to the life beyond, but her mother, Mrs. Murray, is a resident of Billings. Mrs. Movius is a well-educated, accomplished woman, and a graduate of the Pictou Academy, at Pictou, Nova Scotia. Doctor and Mrs. Movius are the parents of four children, namely: Marcella Jane, born May 15, 1907; Marion, born January 20, 1909; Arthur J., Jr., born October 15, 1910; and William Robert, born November 10, 1914.

WALTER C. STRASZER. Notwithstanding the fact that the republic of Switzerland is one of the smallest countries of the world, it has sent large number of emigrants to the United States during the years that have elapsed since independence was secured. The people of that country, appreciating the blessings of liberty, of which they had had a strong example in their own land, were not slow to recognize the possibilities that opened out in splendid perspective before all who located early in this country. Accordingly, large numbers of the hardy Swiss have crossed the Atlantic and sought homes in the great West of the United States. And here their descendants have been numbered among the most intelligent, patriotic, industrious and upright of our great and wonderful cosmopolitan population. The subject of this sketch can look back with satisfaction to his ancestry, who were of this hardy stock and he has in himself emulated the splendid qualities which characterized them.

The paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch, John Jacob Straszer, was born at Zurich, Switzerland, in 1804, and in 1851 immigrated to the United States, settling in St. Louis, Missouri, where he carried on the business of carpenter and contractor. In 1879 he returned to Switzerland on a visit, and while there was taken sick and died. His son George was born at Zurich in 1845 and accompanied his parents on their immigration to the United States in 1851. He was reared in St. Louis, and there followed the vocation of a tinsmith. His death occurred at Webster Grove, Missouri, in 1912. He was a stanch republican in his political faith and took an active part in the civic and political affairs of his community. He served as deputy United States marshal for three terms and also held county and city offices. At the time of his death he was city marshal of Webster Grove. He was a veteran of the Civil war, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Masonic fraternity. He married in St. Louis Mary L. Zimmerman, who was born in that city in 1843 and who now resides at Webster Grove. To them were born five children, as follows: Albert George is a driver for the National Park Laundry of Livingston; Lillie E. is the wife of W. C. Urban, chief rate clerk for the Missouri Pacific Railway at Webster Grove, Missouri; Walter C. is the immediate subject of this sketch; Ada Lee is unmarried and is a teacher by vocation; Charlotte Marie is the wife of Louis B. Burns, county surveyor of Miami County, Indiana.

Walter C. Straszer was born at Manchester, Missouri, on August 6, 1873, and received his education in the rural schools of St. Louis County. At the age of thirteen years he began working for a commission firm of St. Louis, with which he remained a year, and then spent three years in a grocery store. During the following four years he worked for the St. Louis Street Railway Company. In 1898, at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, Mr. Straszer enlisted in the First Missouri Regiment of Volunteer Infantry and was sent to the camp at Chickamauga Park. He was discharged with the rank of corporal at St. Louis in 1899. He then went to San Francisco, California, and during the following year devoted himself to learning the mechanical details of the laundry business. In 1900 he came to Butte, Montana, and until 1912 was connected with the laundry business in that city. In the latter year Mr. Straszer came to Livingston and established the National Park Laundry, an enterprise which has proven successful even beyond his expectations. The plant was first located on Park Street, but grew to such proportions that larger space was needed and the laundry was moved to 202-4-6 South Main Street. Every facility in the way of up-to-date machinery is provided for the proper handling of the work and today this laundry has the reputation of being the leading house of its kind in this section of Montana. The National Park Laundry is incorporated, with the following officers: W. C. Straszer, president; K. A. Straszer, vice president; F. E. Green, secretary and treasurer.

Politically Walter C. Straszer is a stanch republican and takes an intelligent interest in the trend of public affairs, though he is not a seeker after public office. He holds membership in Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Livingston Lodge, Knights of Pythias; the Livingston Chamber of Commerce; and the Commercial Club and the Railway Club.

In 1901, at Butte, Montana, Mr. Straszer married Kate A. Griffin, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Griffin, the former of whom was a railroad contractor. Both of these parents are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Straszer have two children, George, born in 1903, and Allouez Marie, born in 1907.

Success has crowned the efforts of Mr. Straszer as the legitimate result of unflagging industry and perseverance, coupled with integrity and a genial disposition, and he has justly won and retained the esteem of his fellow citizens.

Edward C. Jones, who came to Livingston in July, 1906, has steadily practiced law since that date and has formed some influential connection in his profession. He is the present county attorney of Park County.

Mr. Jones is still a young man in years, and the better part of his career is still ahead of him. He was born in Vernon County, Missouri, December 2, 1879. His paternal ancestry was from Wales. His father, J. W. Jones, was born in Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, in 1850. When he was ten years old, in 1860, his parents, George W. and Abigail (Duff) Jones, both natives of Huntingdon County, moved to Cleveland, Ohio. While at Cleveland George W. Jones enlisted in an Ohio regiment, the Tenth Cavalry, and served four years in the Civil war. He had previously served in the war with Mexico. Soon after the close of the Civil war, in 1866, he took his family to Vernon County, Missouri, and spent the rest of his life as a farmer there. He died in Cedar County, Missouri. His wife, Abigail, had died in Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania. J. W. Jones received most of his education while at Cleveland. After moving to Vernon County, Missouri, in the spring of 1866, he became a farmer, and in 1911 he came to Montana, locating at Wilsall and was mail carrier between Wilsall and Lat. He died in Park County, April 1, 1918. Politically he was a democrat and was a member of the Christian Church and affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. J. W. Jones married Agnes B. Dade, who was born in St. Clair County, Missouri, in 1853 and is now living in Lat, Montana. Catherine, the oldest of their children, is the wife of W. W. Pepper, a farmer and stock raiser at Lat; Edward C. is the second in age; Mariamme is the wife of R. L. Monroe, of Paul, Idaho; Jacob M. and Robert D. are both farmers at Lat; while Florence E. is the wife of Everett Durham, a farmer and stockman at Menard, Montana.

Edward C. Jones spent his early career in the atmosphere of his father's farm in Vernon County, Missouri, attended country schools, and also the high school at Schell City, Missouri. For four years he gave all his time and energy to farming and began the study of law in the office of Scott & Bowker of Nevada, Missouri. He was admitted to the bar in 1904 and remained in the Scott & Bowker office until January, 1906. In July of that year he came to Livingston and embarked in a general civil and criminial practice. His offices are in the Miles-Krohne Block. Mr. Jones was elected county attorney in 1918 and began his duties January 6, 1919. He is a member of the Park County Bar Association, is a democrat, is affiliated with Zephyr Camp of the Woodmen of the World at Livingston, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is a director in the Montana Mining Company.

His home, which he owns, is at 305 South Seventh Street. Mr. Jones married at Nevada, Missouri, in July, 1906, Miss Eulalie Scott, daughter of Charles R. and Mary (Dixon) Scott, both now deceased. Her father was a lawyer. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have three children: Alma E., born March 23, 1907; Mildred Virginia, born June 23, 1912; and Eulalie, born December 4, 1917.

Byron Lee Pampel, M. D. When Governor Stewart in April, 1918, called Doctor Pampel to membership on the state board of health, a worthy recognition was made of the services of one of the most vigilant and skillful members of the medical profession in Montana. Doctor Pampel has practiced at Livingston for twenty years and is a man of the highest standing in civic as well as professional circles.

He was born at Salem, Nebraska, July 4, 1873, and came to Montana soon after completing his medical education. His grandfather, Christian Leonidas Pampel, was born in France in 1810. As a young man he settled in the Miami Valley of Ohio, and spent his active life there as a farmer. He died at Sydney, Ohio, in 1880. His wife was a Miss Harris, a native of New England, who died in Southern Ohio when about sixty-five years of age. George W. Pampel, father of Doctor Pampel, was born in Sydney, Ohio, in 1843, and left that community when a young man, going to Nebraska, where he was a flour miller. He married at Salem, Nebraska, and in 1878 moved to Centralia, Nemaha County, Kansas, where he was a merchant until 1901. Since then he has lived practically retired from business in Kansas City, Missouri. He is a democrat, a Mason and a member of the Congregational Church. George W. Pampel married Nellie E. Davis, who was born in Vermont in 1846 and died at Kansas City in 1916. Doctor Pampel is the oldest of four children. All the others live in Kansas City, both daughters, Carrie and Althea, residing with their father. The son, Heber D., third in age, is an architect in Kansas City.

Doctor Pampel is a graduate of the Centralia, Kansas, High School, and is also an alumnus of the University of Kansas at Lawrence. He received his A. B. degree in 1895, and then entered the medical department of Nebraska State University at Omaha, graduating M. D. in 1898. For one year he was interne in the Douglas County Hospital at Omaha, and in the spring of 1899 arrived at Livingston and began his busy career as a physician and surgeon. He is a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce and a stockholder and director of the First State Bank of Livingston.

His residence is a modern home at 216 South

Yellowstone Street. Doctor Pampel married Miss Lois Fagaly at Billings in 1903. They have two children: George, born June 17, 1904, and Dorothy, born June 13, 1911.

HARRY BRICE BLAIR thirty years ago was a ranch hand in the Shields River Valley of Montana. Until very recently he was directly interested as an owner in the lands of that famous region. As a rancher he did his part in developing an important section of the state, and is also remembered for his leading part in developing the first telephone system covering a vast stretch of country between Livingston and Myersburg. For the past ten years Mr. Blair has been in the automobile business at Livingston, at first as a sales agent and garage proprietor, and now entirely as an automobile salesman. He has developed an organization that is hardly second to any in the state in the volume of sales.

Mr. Blair, long regarded as one of Livingston's most successful business men, attributes his success to a faculty and habit which in a colloquial term is best described as "plugging along." In terms of real service to the world and humanity such an ability seems more than possession of the most brilliant qualities and talents.

Mr. Blair was born on a farm at Eola, Illinois, September 15, 1868. His paternal ancestors came from Scotland and were early settlers in Pennsylvania, where his father, James A. Blair, was born in 1843. James A. Blair married the mother of Harry B. Blair in Iowa, where he lived several years. He afterward established his home on a farm at Eola, Illinois, and in 1896 retired from the farm and lived at Aurora until his death in 1911. During the Civil war he was employed by the Government as a veterinarian. He was always a republican in politics. For his second wife he married Nettie Fowler, who is living at Batavia, Illinois. His children, however, were all by his first wife, Harry B. being the youngest of eight. A brief record of the others is as follows: Belle, wife of H. E. McDowell, a banker at Clay Center, Nebraska; Hattie, who married James Barclay and both are now deceased; Louise, wife of Edwin Woodworth, a retired rancher in California; Elmer, who was a stockman and died at Myersburg, Montana, at the age of thirty-two; Erve, a resident of Long Beach, California, and a stock raiser having a large ranch on the Clementes Island in Southern California; Ella, wife of J. K. McMurdo, a rancher at Clyde Park, Montana; Frank, who has a large ranch at Clyde Park and lives at Bozeman.

Harry B. Blair attended school at Aurora, Illinois, graduating from high school in 1885. In 1887 he arrived at Livingston, Montana, and the next two years he worked for wages on ranches at White Sulphur Springs. In 1889 he began a modest business for himself raising cattle on the South Fork of the Smith River in Meagher County, and in 1893 he entered the sheep industry. Mr. Blair homesteaded in 1891 in order to secure a base for his livestock operations, and he rapidly developed large herds of cattle and sheep, acquiring an extensive domain of deeded and leased lands, and was a notable figure among the stockmen of the Shields Valley until 1910. In the fall of 1918 he sold all his ranches, about 5,000 acres. During all these years he has been a leader in promoting the best welfare of his section of Montana as an agricultural district. He placed no obstacles in the way of subdividing the old cattle domain, and for years has advocated intensive farming and the introduction of high grade stock raising.

Before he left the ranch he was instrumental in developing a complete telephone system for the Shields River Valley and by 1907 the independent system had 250 miles of telephone line covering the district between Livingston and Myersburg.

In 1909 Mr. Blair entered the automobile business at Livingston, and the following year moved his home to that city. He established a garage and began handling the Reo and Dodge cars. The first year his sales totalled $15,000, and in less than ten years he was doing a business approximating $200,000 annually. In 1917 he sold his garage, and his business offices at 219 South Main now represents a complete auto sales and service station, handling the Reo, Dodge and Franklin cars.

Since coming to Livingston Mr. Blair has also been active in public affairs. He was elected in 1912 a trustee of the schools and has been a director of the Park County Chamber of Commerce and for two years was president of the Commercial Club. He has also served as president of the Ad Club, and is a member of the Park County Automobile Association. He belongs to the Railway Club, is a republican, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks. He is a stockholder in the First State Bank of Clyde Park. Mr. Blair owns a modern home at 307 South Fifth Street and another dwelling on South P Street.

On February 17, 1894, at Macon, Illinois, Mr. Blair married Miss Thirza Van Dorn, daughter of J. W. and Hattie (Wagner) Van Dorn. Her parents reside at Livingston, her father being a retired rancher and president of the First State Bank of Livingston. Mr. and Mrs. Blair have two children, Mildred and Halsey. Mildred is a graduate of the Livingston public schools and is the wife of J. W. Crosby of Livingston. Mr. Crosby enlisted in September, 1917, was sent overseas with the Ninety-first Division on July 1, 1918 and participated in the great fighting of the Argonne Forest, where he lost his right leg. He was a sergeant. The son, Halsey, is a young business man of Livingston, now in partnership with his father.

WILLIAM J. STREVER, one of the accomplished and successful lawyers at Billings, knows life and affairs from the standpoint of a thoroughly educated man, a teacher, farmer and rancher, and did not take up the law until he was nearly forty years of age.

Mr. Strever was born at Boulder, Colorado, July 27, 1873, son of Lloyd G. and Abby Amelia (Geer) Strever. His paternal grandmother was Esther Crandall, a native of England, who died in Michigan.

Lloyd G. Strever was born in New York State in 1840, and about 1843 his parents moved to the vicinity of Lansing, Michigan, where he grew up on a farm. In 1861 he enlisted in the Sixteenth Michigan Infantry and served all through the war, participating in thirty-nine great battles. He was with the army of the Potomac at Antietam, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Cold Harbor, Siege of Richmond and Appomattox, and was mustered out with the rank of lieutenant. After the war he went directly to Central City, Colorado, and engaged in gold mining until 1870, when he took up livestock raising and farming near Boulder. He died on the old homestead at Berthoud, Colorado, July 8, 1907. He was a republican, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the United Brethren Church. His wife was born in Stark County, Illinois, in 1852. They were married at Jamestown, Colorado, and she died at Billings, Montana, May 18, 1915. She was the mother of five children: Charles Dell, a machinist with the Union Pacific Railway at Laramie, Wyoming; William J.; Lura E., who died at Berthoud, Colorado, the wife of H. P. Dennis, who is now a farmer on the Billings Bench, seven miles northeast of Billings; Elmer L., a livestock man and auctioneer at Billings; and Arthur Edwin, who died at Boulder City, Colorado, at the age of twenty-one.

William J. Strever acquired his early instruction in the rural schools of Boulder and Laramie County, Colorado, took a preparatory course in Fort Collins College, and in 1901 graduated from the State Agricultural and Mechanics Arts College at Fort Collins, spending two years in mechanical engineering and two years in a business course. For two years he taught school at Boulder, another two years at Lusk, Wyoming, and for six years was profitably engaged in farming and stock raising in those two states. Mr. Strever studied law for two years in the State University of Colorado at Boulder, and in 1912 entered the State University of Montana, law department, graduating in 1914. In the spring of that year he located at Billings, and during five years has discovered an increasing demand for his services as a lawyer. His offices are in the Hart-Albin Building.

Mr. Strever is a republican, a deacon in the Congregational Church, member of the Yellowstone County and State Bar associations, and is a charter member of Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of Billings Camp of the Woodmen of the World.

August 3, 1904, at Gillette, Wyoming, he married Miss Pearl Reed, a daughter of Henry L. and Henrietta (Hargraves) Reed, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired stockman at Omaha, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Strever have three children: Lura Belle, born May 12, 1906; Henrietta Reed, born February 15, 1909; and Edith Corinne, born April 4, 1910.

George W. Cook is a veteran Montanan, has been a rancher, public official, and in many ways identified with the life and affairs of Fergus County and Lewistown for thirty years. He is now president of the Cook-Reynolds Real Estate & Loan Company.

Mr. Cook was born at Malone, New York, August 30, 1853, a son of Chauncey and Lucretia J. (Hobbs) Cook. His father, born in Vermont in 1810, lived from early infancy in New York State, where he was a farmer. He died in 1855. He was a whig in politics and a very active member of the Presbyterian Church. He had a local reputation as a singer and gave this talent largely to his church. His wife was born in New York State in 1814 and died in 1892. They had eight children, two of whom died in infancy and three are still living. George W. Cook is the youngest child. His mother married for her second husband Amasa A. Rhoades and had two children by that marriage.

George W. Cook attended the public schools at Malone, his native town, and also attended the Academy at Barre, Vermont. At the age of eighteen he taught his first term of winter school, and followed that occupation for several years, alternating between the school room and the farm. He also farmed for himself, and teaching and farming constituted his work until 1880.

In the spring of that year he came West, traveling by railroad as far as Sioux City, Iowa, thence by boat up the Mississippi to Fort Benton, thence by stage to Helena and then to Fort Logan. He worked on a sheep ranch near Fort Logan, was clerk and bookkeeper for J. W. Gaddis Mercantile Company at Fort Logan about two years and then engaged in the sheep business with Dr. W. Parberry. Their ranch was located on Dog Creek in Meagher County, now Fergus County. Mr. Cook was a sheep rancher from 1883 to 1893. In 1890 he was appointed receiver of the United States Land Office at Lewistown, and held that post until July, 1894. He was then elected county treasurer, and by reelection in 1896 served two terms. After retiring from office in 1898 he went into the real estate business with David Hilger under the firm name of Cook & Hilger. In 1903 he retired from this firm and was a grocery merchant a year. After that he resumed the real estate business by himself and in the spring of 1908 organized the Cook-Reynolds Company, which was incorporated the following year. This is one of the largest firms in this section of Montana handling real estate and loans.

Mr. Cook was elected the last mayor of the town of Lewistown on April 9, 1900, and on April 8, 1901, was chosen the first mayor of the City of Lewistown. After about ten years of service he resigned as a director of the Empire Bank & Trust Company. He is a republican, is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

On October 27, 1874, Mr. Cook married Emma H. Orvis. She was born in Ferrisburg, Vermont. To their union were born nine children, a brief record of whom follows: Elizabeth M., is the wife of Dr. A. J. Noble, of San Diego, California. Lillian E., is the wife of J. H. Stephens, present sheriff of Fergus County. Chauncey L. married Matilda Roethter. The next in age is Fanny S. William H. enlisted in July, 1918, was assigned to the Statistics Department of the army with the rank of second lieutenant and reached his overseas department at Brest, France, November 9, 1918, and has since been in charge of the filing department. Mary L. is the wife of Frank E. Doran, an automobile dealer at Lewistown. Ruth P. was married to Peter S. Williams, a well known Lewistown lawyer. Verne M. is the wife of Thomas Baker, a ranch manager. The youngest of the family is Carro C.

Edwin K. Cheadle, a Montana lawyer with a quarter of a century's experience, has built up a reputation that has extended far beyond the limits of his home City of Lewistown. He is especially well known for his capable services of twelve years as judge of the Tenth Judicial District.

Judge Cheadle was born in Indiana, October 22, 1858, a son of Henry C. and Emma K. (Keyes) Cheadle, his parents both being natives of Ohio. His father was a Presbyterian minister, was educated in Ohio, and had pastorates in that state, Indiana and Minnesota. Judge Cheadle was the oldest of five children, three sons and two daughters, four of whom are still living.

He acquired his early education chiefly in the public schools of Minnesota and in 1883 graduated from Carlton College at Northfield, Minnesota. He read law privately and has been a resident of Lewistown since the fall of 1893. He was admitted to the Montana bar at Helena in 1894. Much of his time since beginning practice has been taken up by public responsibilities. He served one term as county attorney of Fergus County. He was elected judge of the Tenth District in 1900, entering upon its duties in January, 1901. He was re-elected in 1904 and 1908, and gave twelve years to the judicial office. He is an honored member of the Fergus County Bar Association and the State Bar Association and in politics a republican.

June 26, 1890, Judge Cheadle married Ida Constance Wohlfahrt. She was born in Minnesota. Five children were born to their marriage, four of whom are still living: Henry B., Marie, Edwin K., Jr., and Constance. Henry B. Cheadle entered West Point Military Academy in March, 1909, and graduated in June, 1913. He was commissioned second lieutenant, ordered to Galveston, later took part in General Funston's expedition to Mexico, and saw active service at various points along the Mexican border under General Funston. For a time he was stationed in the Panama Canal Zone, at Camp Dodge, Iowa, and early in the great war went to France as a captain. Since his services overseas he has been stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and later at Columbus, Georgia, and now holds the rank of major. Major Cheadle married Beatrice Mix. Marie, the oldest daughter of Judge Cheadle, is the wife of Ernest Lorenz, of Oakland, California. The younger son, Edwin K., Jr., entered the Officers Training Camp at Fort Slocum, New York, in 1915, was transferred to the Presidio in California, and is now a first lieutenant of Field Artillery.

Jack Briscoe, judge of the Tenth Judicial District, has been a resident of Montana five years. He left behind him an honorable record as a lawyer, public official and educator in his native State of Missouri, and has rapidly achieved position and influence as a member of the Montana bar.

Judge Briscoe was born in Ralls County, Missouri, February 11, 1870, a son of William J. and Sarah E. (Clayton) Briscoe. His parents were both natives of Monroe County, Missouri, where his father was born December 5, 1838. His widowed mother, born October 23, 1840, is still living at the age of seventy-nine. His father, who died January 16, 1917, spent his active life as a grain and stock farmer, though for two or three years he was also engaged in the drug business. He was an active member of the Masonic fraternity, a Knight of Pythias, a Baptist and a democrat. To the parents were born six children, Judge Briscoe being the third, and four daughters are still living.

Judge Briscoe attended the public schools of Ralls County, the high school at New London, and the Normal School at Chillicothe, Missouri. He studied law while at New London and he also took a course in the State University of Missouri. From 1894 to 1901 he was in school work in his native county, serving as county superintendent of schools one term. He was admitted to the Missouri bar in March, 1902, and practiced law at New London until the fall of 1914. He served as prosecuting attorney for Ralls County four years, 1907-10, and was regarded as one of the leading men in every department of affairs in that county. Judge Briscoe came to Lewistown in December, 1914, and from January 1, 1915, to November 15th of that year was associated with E. W. Mettler in practice. He was appointed judge of the Tenth Judicial District by Governor Stewart, serving until January 1, 1919, when he entered upon his duties as judge by election, having been chosen to that office by popular vote on November 5, 1918. Judge Briscoe served as public administrator in Missouri in 1902 to 1904, three years. He is president of the City School Board of Lewistown, having been elected in April, 1917, and having been appointed to that office in the previous year. His experience as an educator enabled him to render a splendid service to the city school system of Lewistown.

Judge Briscoe is affiliated with New London Lodge No. 307, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, with Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias. He is a democrat and a member of the Fergus County Bar Association.

May 9, 1901, he married Sarah Elizabeth Stout. She was born in Ralls County, Missouri, a daughter of Jacob B. and Eliza J. (Jones) Stout. Her parents are still living, and of their six children four are living, Mrs. Briscoe being the third in age. Judge and Mrs. Briscoe have three children: Marjorie V., born March 11, 1902, and died August 13, 1902; Anderston S., born June 23, 1903; and Allen F., born October 9, 1905.

James Smith, who arrived at Butte on June 1, 1883, had experiences that identify him with a number of pioneer localities in Montana and for the past dozen years has been a resident of Lewistown and one of the well known merchants of that city.

Mr. Smith was born at St. Joseph, Missouri, August 12, 1862, a son of James and Mary Smith. He was the second of three children, two of whom are still living, and was a small child when his parents died. His father was a native of Ireland and his mother of England. James Smith, Sr., came to this country when a young man, and was a pioneer in Western Missouri at St. Joseph, having one of the first hotels for the entertainment of the traveling public, located at what was known as Black Snake Creek.

Because of the early death of his parents Mr. Smith spent his childhood and youth largely in an environment of work to the full bent of his strength. He lived until twenty-one years of age with the family of John Noonan, a Nebraska farmer. It was customary for Mr. Noonan to take in return for keeping the boy all the wages he earned, though at one time after a period of work in the harvest fields Mr. Smith collected his own pay and kept it, that being the first money he ever earned and enjoyed the use thereof. He attended school only a portion of each winter.

Mr. Smith left Nebraska in the spring of 1883, first going to Denver, and then with a cavalcade of mule teams reaching Butte at the date above noted. Here he hauled wood from the lowlands into Butte for the Walker Brothers, also worked in the hardware store of W. A. Largy for eight or nine months and was at Twin Bridges and at Virginia City, where he engaged in the livery and saloon business until 1907. In the latter year he moved to Lewistown, and after one year in the restaurant business opened a stock of furniture and conducted a well appointed store in that line. Mr. Smith has served one term as alderman from the Third Ward and in politics is a democrat.

In July 1889, he married Miss Alice C. Wyrouck. Mrs. Smith is a representative of one of the earliest families of Montana and her own birth occurred in Madison County, this state. Her parents, Jacob and Mary Jane (Howe) Wyrouck, were both born in Pennsylvania, and her father died at the age of eighty-four and her mother at eighty. Mrs. Smith is the only daughter in a family of three children, all of whom are still living. Her parents came to Montana in 1864, overland with ox teams, and were among the first settlers at Alder Gulch. Her father had a pioneer store at that locality, and afterward moved to Twin Bridge and engaged in the cattle and horse business. He finally sold his ranch and spent his last days with Mr. and Mrs. Smith. He was a placer miner at Alder Gulch.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of three children, Harry B., Howard L. and Mae, wife of Frank D. Tallman.

Harry B. Smith was inducted into the special limited service section of the United States Army

J. C. Boddeus

in July, 1918; was sent to Vancouver, Washington, where he was with the Thirty-Second Casual Company, was later transferred to Toledo, Oregon, into the One Hundred and First Spruce Squadron; In January, 1919, was transferred to the Eleventh Casual Company at Vancouver and mustered out on January 27, 1919.

JACOB C. BODDEN. Business is the very life blood of the nation's prosperity, and in order that it course naturally through the veins of commerce and industry it is necessary that the best men of the country devote themselves to its operation. The younger states of the nation have attracted to them some of the most aggressive men of high character, whose energies are exerted to the utmost capacity to develop the natural resources of the regions to which they have come from more eastern points, with the result that new enterprises are brought into being and fostered to a productive and satisfactory maturity. The City of Billings affords many such instances of business prosperity and sagacity, and one of its representative men is Jacob C. Bodden, manager of the Glacier Water Company.

Jacob C. Bodden was born at Theresa, Dodge County, Wisconsin, April 15, 1866, a son of Jacob Bodden and grandson of Adam Bodden. The birth of Adam Bodden occurred near Cologne, Germany, in 1782. A soldier in the German army, he was captured during the Napoleonic wars, and was stationed by the French as a guard at Madrid, Spain. In 1845 he came to the United States, and after a brief period spent at Wayne, Wisconsin, he located at Theresa, Dodge County, the same state, where he homesteaded and died on his farm in 1869. His wife, whose first name was Margaret, was also born near Cologne, Germany, in 1802, and she survived him, until 1888, when she passed away on the homestead.

Jacob Bodden was born near Cologne, Germany, in 1831, and was brought to the United States by his parents. He was reared in Dodge County, Wisconsin, where he spent the remainder of his life, being interested in farming, stockraising and operating a grist-mill at Janesville, Wisconsin. A man of more than local importance, he was a leader in the democratic party of his section, and represented his district in the Wisconsin State Assembly for three terms. For two terms he served Dodge County as treasurer, and for one term as sheriff, and was equally active in civic matters. The Roman Catholic Church had in him a devout member. Jacob Bodden was united in marriage with Gertrude Shiefer, born in Germany in 1841, and brought by her parents to Dodge County, Wisconsin, in 1848, where she was reared. They had the following children: Anna, who is unmarried, resides with her widowed mother at Oshkosh, Wisconsin; John, who lives at Horicon, Wisconsin, is president of the Van Brunt Manufacturing Company; Gertrude, who is unmarried, also lives with her mother; Michael, who resides at Neenah, Wisconsin, is manager of the Durham Lumber Company; Jacob C., whose name heads this review; William, who died at Theresa at the age of thirty-seven years, was a farmer; Ernest, who is a farmer of Theresa; Frank, who lives at Horicon, Wisconsin, is president of the Bodden Brothers Lumber Company; Matilda, who died in 1911, aged thirty-six years; Hubert, who is a farmer of Theresa; Henry, who is connected with the Van Brunt Manufacturing Company of Horicon, Wisconsin; Amanda who is a teacher, resides at Oshkosh, Wisconsin; and Edmund, who is a farmer of Theresa.

Jacob C. Bodden remained on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age, at which time he assumed charge of his father's mill at Janesville, Wisconsin, and conducted it for four years, when he entered the employ of the Riedeburg & Bodden Company, manufacturers of vinegar at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and served it as shipping clerk for four years. Then he and his brother Michael went into the vinegar business as jobbers at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, so continuing for seven years. In 1907 Mr. Bodden came to Billings, and in 1909 organized the Glacier Water Company, a stock company, of which he was a charter member, and of which he is today manager. The plant and offices are at No. 2308 Minnesota Avenue. The company bottles spring waters, and distributes the product through Northern Wyoming and Southern Montana, and has a large and increasing trade.

Mr. Bodden is unmarried, but resides at No. 416 South Thirty-fifth Street, owning his home, which is a modern one. All of his life he has been a democrat. For sometime after coming to Billings he was a member of the Chamber of Commerce. A Roman Catholic by inheritance and conviction, Mr. Bodden is active in the work of his parish, and belongs to Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus. A man of unusual capabilities, he has known how to make his efforts count for something, and not only is successful, but is a valuable asset to any community.

NED A. TELYEA. Beginning his financial career in very early manhood, Ned A. Telyea, of Billings, started in an humble position in a local bank in Nebraska, and through sheer worth and ability has worked his way upward steadily and surely, being now widely and favorably known as cashier of the Montana National Bank, and is enjoying to an eminent degree the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens. He was born at Tekamah, Nebraska, July 6, 1885, a son of C. B. Telyea, who is of French descent, the immigrant ancestor of the Telyea family having immigrated from France to Canada several generations ago.

Born near Buffalo, New York, in 1848, C. B. Telyea was brought up in Wisconsin, where his parents settled when he was a small boy. In early manhood he made an overland trip to Nebraska, locating in Tekamah, where he embarked in mercantile pursuits, for many years being one of the foremost merchants of the place, and where he still lives, although he is practically retired from active business. Many years ago he served in the State Militia, and took part in several skirmishes with the Indians. He is a republican in politics, and while a resident of Wisconsin served as sheriff for a term. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, toward the support of which he is a liberal contributor, and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, whose name before marriage was Ida Landgren, was born in Sweden, near Stockholm, in 1858 and as a child was brought by her parents to the United States, where she was reared, her home having been in Missouri. Four children were born of their union, as follows: Jane, wife of E. I. Ellis, banker of Tekamah, Nebraska; Ned A.; Margaret, with her parents, is a teacher in the Tekamah schools; and Bradford, a pupil in the Tekamah High School.

Educated in Tekamah, Ned A. Telyea was graduated from the high school with the class of 1902. Soon after receiving his diploma he accepted one of the lowest positions possible in the First National Bank of Tekamah, and proved himself so capable and faithful that he was promoted to the position of teller, and remained in that capacity for three years. Going then to Kansas City, Missouri, he spent a short time in the National Bank of Commerce, and was later a teller in the Omaha National Bank of Omaha, Nebraska, for six years. Resigning that position, Mr. Telyea was for two and a half years assistant cashier of the Butte County Bank at Belle Fourche, South Dakota. In 1914 he located in Billings, Montana, and at once entered the Bank of Montana as assistant cashier. The value of his services being recognized and appreciated, he was promoted in January, 1916, to the cashiership of the institution. On January 2, 1917, the Montana National Bank succeeded the Bank of Montana, with the following named officers: A. H. Marble, president; B. S. Langworthy, vice president; and N. A. Telyea, cashier. This bank is one of the sound financial institutions of Yellowstone County, having a capital stock paid in of $100,000 and a surplus fund of $50,000. The handsome building of reinforced concrete, brick and terra cotta, into which the bank was moved in June, 1918, is advantageously situated at the corner of Second Avenue and Broadway, and is recognized as one of the finest bank buildings in Montana.

In his political affiliations Mr. Telyea is a republican, and in religion he is a Presbyterian. Fraternally he is a member of Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of which he is treasurer; of Bellevue Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of Omaha, Nebraska; and socially he belongs to the Billings Club, and to the Billings Midland Club. Mr. Telyea married, in 1913, at Marshall, Michigan, Miss Leora Sawyer, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sawyer, of Marshall, her father being a well known civil engineer of that place. Mrs. Telyea was graduated from the Marshall High School, and subsequently completed her studies at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

O. King Grimstad. Talented and cultured, devoted to the practice of his chosen profession, O. King Grimstad, of Billings, has won distinct prestige as a lawyer, as head of the prosperous firm of Grimstad & Brown having built up an extensive patronage and at the same time, through judicious investments, he has become widely known as one of the most extensive landholders of Southeastern Montana. He was born September 24, 1886, at Brewster, Minnesota, a son of T. K. Grimstad. His grandparents, Knute and Susanna Grimstad, were born, reared and married in Norway. Immigrating to the United States in 1843, they bought a tract of wild land in Wisconsin, and by dint of hard pioneer labor they succeeded in improving a good farm, on which they spent the remainder of their days, the grandfather dying at Daleyville in 1898, at the advanced age of eighty-six years.

T. K. Grimstad was born on the home farm in Daleyville, Wisconsin, in 1853, and there spent his early life. Succeeding to the ancestral occupation, he began life on his own account in Brewster, Minnesota, where he reclaimed a farm from its primitive wildness, and was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death March 7, 1916. A republican in politics, prominent in public affairs, he filled various offices, serving ably and acceptably. He married Tena Rinde, who was born in Norway in 1862, and is still a resident of Brewster. Her parents immigrated to the United States in 1869, settling in Wisconsin, where she was brought up and educated. To her and her husband eleven children were born, as follows: John, engaged in farming at Brewster, Minnesota; Josephine, wife of Charles E. Johnson, a real estate agent and investment broker at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Clark, a banker at Williston, North Dakota; Cora, who has never married, is a resident of Elkhart, Indiana, where she is engaged as a buyer of merchandise, having a well-paying business; O. King, with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned; Ethel, wife of Charles J. Spreiter, a banker, residing at West Concord, Minnesota; Clayton, a banker, living at Brewster, Minnesota, is in the United States Army, serving in the Engineers Corps and being now, in 1919, with the Army of Occupation; Tillie, unmarried, teaches school at Brewster; Knute, whose home is also in Brewster, enlisted in the marine service, and is now with the United States Army of Occupation; Hazelle, a student at the University of Minnesota; and Paul, attending the Brewster High School.

After his graduation from the Brewster High School O. King Grimstad taught school in Jackson County, Minnesota, for two years, from 1902 until 1904, and the following year was principal of the schools at Hazel Run, Minnesota. He was subsequently principal of the high school at Jeffers, Minnesota, two years. Having as a youth determined to enter the legal profession, he attended the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, every summer during his career as a teacher, and in 1908 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, from which he was graduated in 1911, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Coming to Montana in December, 1911, Mr. Grimstad together with Rockwood Brown, began the practice of his profession at Billings, and met with encouraging success from the start, the firm being organized as Grimstad & Brown with offices in suite 3-4-5, Montana National Bank Building. This enterprising firm, which has a general civil and criminal practice, has won many suits of importance and note, and has established an enviable reputation for thorough and honest legal work.

On July 6, 1918, Mr. Grimstad enlisted in the Naval Air Service, and after being trained at Pensacola, Florida, was there commissioned as ensign in the aviation service. On February 7, 1919, he was placed in the Reserve Corps. Possessing business talent corresponding with his legal ability, Mr. Grimstad has invested largely in Montana lands, owning at least 15,000 acres in three of the counties, Yellowstone, Carbon and Big Horn. He likewise owns a modern residence in Billings, and is a stockholder and director in several large corporations.

Although not active in political ranks, Mr. Grimstad supports the principles of the republican party by vote. Religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church, of which he was for two years a trustee. Socially he belongs to the Billings Midland Club, and to the Billings Golf and Country Club. Fraternally he is a member of Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and was elected exalted ruler in 1918 and resigned to enter the service of the United States, as above noted.

Her parents, Charles H. and Jane McMullen, are living at Ann Arbor, Michigan, her father being a retired agriculturist. Mr. and Mrs. Grimstad have one child, Tarje Mc. Grimstad, born July 16, 1915.

Wilbur F. Bigelow. A man of sterling worth and integrity, amply qualified by his natural abilities and broad experience in the commercial world for the responsible position he holds as cashier and chief accountant for the Northwestern Auto Supply Company, W. F. Bigelow, of Billings, is performing the duties devolving upon him in that capacity with credit to himself, and not only to the satisfaction but to the pleasure and profit of the members of the firm which employs him, his practical and methodical methods relieving them from all financial worries. The lineal descendant on the paternal side of one of three brothers that immigrated from Scotland to New York in early colonial times, later becoming a pioneer settler of Ohio, Wilbur F. Bigelow was born in Newton, Iowa, March 26, 1878, being a son of L. M. Bigelow.

His paternal grandfather, Benjamin F. Bigelow, was born in 1804, in Ohio, and was there reared and married. He became a farmer from choice, but thinking to improve his opportunities for bettering his finances he migrated to Illinois in 1857. Not satisfied with life on the unbroken prairie, he moved with his family to Davenport, Iowa, in 1864, and a short time later bought a tract of land lying just north of Newton, Iowa, and was there employed as a tiller of the soil until his death in 1885. His wife, whose name before marriage was Harriet Farley, was born in Pennsylvania in 1805, and died in Newton, Iowa, in 1899.

L. M. Bigelow was born on the home farm in Ohio in 1843. In 1857, a lad of fourteen years, he accompanied his parents to Illinois, and there remained until after his marriage. In 1864 he and his wife and his parents assumed possession of a farm situated three miles north of Newton, Iowa, and in the years that followed he placed the greater part of the land under a good state of cultivation, rendering it one of the most productive of any in the locality. In 1895, having accumulated a fair share of this world's goods, he moved into the Village of Newton, where he lived retired from business cares until his death in August, 1918. He married Eliza A. Warren, who was born in Illinois in 1848, and died at Newton, Iowa, in 1912. Their children were as follows: Flora, residing at Long Beach, California, is the widow of the late F. E. Wiltbank, who was engaged in farming during his life; Nellie E., wife of Lee M. Sturtevant, a traveling salesman, living in York, Nebraska; Jessie W., who married F. M. Keasey, a retired farmer of Ontario, California; Wilbur F., the subject of this sketch; and Earl, proprietor of a cigar store at Newton, Iowa.

Having acquired his elementary education in the rural schools of Jasper County, Iowa, Wilbur F. Bigelow entered the Normal College at Newton, Iowa, and was there graduated with the class of 1896. Endeavoring to acquire a practical knowledge of business affairs, he subsequently worked for others in Newton for five years, and during the next four years was there engaged in mercantile pursuits, operating a grocery. Going to Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, in 1905, Mr. Bigelow served as cashier for a mercantile firm until 1911, and the following year filled a similar position at Spokane, Washington. Coming from there to Billings, Montana, in the fall of 1912, Mr. Bigelow accepted a position as cashier and auditor for the Hart-Albin Company, and retained it until March, 1918. Since that time he has been actively associated with the Northwestern Auto Supply Company, which does business with all of the states of the great Northwest, its trade extending to the Pacific coast. He serving as cashier and chief accountant for the firm, a position which he is ably filling.

Politically Mr. Bigelow is a stanch supporter of the principles of the democratic party. Religiously he is affiliated with the Christian Science Church. Fraternally he is a member of Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Free Masons; of Ashlar Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; of Billings Consistory, being a thirty-second degree Mason; and of the Knights of Pythias. He has a pleasant rural home of five acres near the Polytechnic Institute.

Mr. Bigelow married in 1902, at Newton, Iowa, Miss Elizabeth L. Harsh, a daughter of William and Eva (Boyd) Harsh, neither of whom are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Bigelow have one child, Charles L., whose birth occurred July 25, 1903.

CHARLES H. GUTHARD. Conspicuous among the substantial business men of Yellowstone County is Charles H. Guthard, of Billings, who as president of the Northwestern Auto Supply Company is at the head of one of the most notable mercantile enterprises of this section of the country. He is carrying on an entirely wholesale business, the territory in which he operates covering not only the whole of Montana, but extending throughout all of the adjacent states. A son of the late Henry Guthard, he was born May 6, 1868, in Saline, Michigan, of German ancestry.

Born in Germany in 1827, Henry Guthard came to the United States with his mother in 1833, and was reared and educated in Washtenaw County, Michigan. Indians were then plentiful in that region, the vast forests through which bears, wolves and other wild animals roamed at will, being their happy hunting ground. After reaching man's estate he bought a tract of heavily timbered land near Saline, and immediately began the almost seemingly impossible task of hewing a farm from its primitive wildness, laboring with persevering diligence and courage. Succeeding well in his efforts, he continued a resident of Washtenaw County until his death in 1901, at Saline. He was a democrat in politics, and an ardent supporter of the Congregational Church, with which he was identified by membership. His wife, whose maiden name was Kate Bieber, was born in Germany in 1834, and in 1846 came with her brother Henry to the United States, settling in Michigan, where she spent her remaining days, dying at Saline in 1902. Seven children were born to them, as follows: John, engaged in farming at Saline, Michigan; Libbie, unmarried, lives at Saline; Emma, who died at the age of forty years, was wife of the late Carl Bickwell, a publisher; Mary, wife of Prof. Herman Weihe, an instructor in one of the schools at Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Katie, wife of John Heininger, a farmer in Saline, Michigan; Charles H., of this sketch; and Clara, wife of Rev. James Rilling, pastor of a Congregational Church at Van Wert, Ohio.

Receiving his common and high school education in Saline, Michigan, Charles H. Guthard subsequently entered the employ of a lumber company, and for three years after celebrating the fifteenth anniversary of his birth worked in the pine woods. The following six years he was employed as a farm hand, and having thus gained a practical knowledge of the different branches of agriculture was for five years engaged in general farming on his own account. Deciding to make a change of occupation, Mr. Guthard opened a hardware and implement store at Saline, and managed it successfully from 1897 until 1908. Going from there to Denver, Colorado, he embarked in what at that time was a new business, and for a year sold automobiles in that city. Locating in Cody, Wyoming, in 1909, Mr. Guthard remained there two years, selling automobiles the first half of the time, and managing the Cody Trading Company the last year. Making his advent in Billings, Montana, in 1911, he was here engaged in the automobile business for four years, selling cars until 1915.

In the latter year Mr. Guthard organized the Northwestern Auto Supply Company, which is now incorporated, its officers being C. H. Guthard, president; Rockwood Brown, vice president; and E. C. Guthard, manager, secretary and treasurer. The company's plant and offices are situated at 425-7 North Broadway, occupying one of the principal business buildings of the city, it being a large brick structure, three stories in height, with a basement. As previously mentioned, the firm does a wholesale business only, handling automobile accessories on an extensive scale, its trade covering Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Oregon and Washington. The company has branch shipping houses at Great Falls, Montana, and at Pocatello, Idaho, where a very large business is carried on, although the main office is at Billings, and in the supervision of these three houses Mr. Guthard has fifty-two trustworthy men in his employ. He is also interested in the agricultural advancement of Montana, having a two-fifths interest in a ranch of 12,000 acres located near Toluca. He owns a modernly constructed residence at No. 205 Wyoming Avenue, where he and his family enjoy life to the utmost.

Mr. Guthard is a republican in politics, and a Presbyterian in religion, being a faithful member of that church. Fraternally he is a member of Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; of Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar; of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and of Billings Consistory, being a thirty-second degree Mason. He also belongs to the Billings Midland Empire Club.

At Saline, Michigan, in 1892, Mr. Guthard married Miss Louisa Schroen, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Schroen. Her father, a retired farmer, still resides in Saline, Michigan, but her mother has passed to the higher life. Mr. and Mrs. Guthard have two children, namely: Edgar C., a graduate of the Billings High School, now manager and secretary and treasurer of the Northwestern Auto Supply Company, married Ada Sleeper, of Billings, and has one child, Jean, born May 15, 1918; and Raymond, now, in 1919, a senior in the Billings High School.

JOHN R. SWEARINGEN. An influential and highly respected citizen of Yellowstone County, John R. Swearingen, of Billings, president of the Montana Sash & Door Company, has achieved distinction in the business life of the city, and by reason of his ability, tact and integrity has gained a leading position in industrial manufacturing and mercantile circles of this section of the state. A son of Abraham T. Swearingen, he was born February 1, 1861, in Blue Earth County, Minnesota.

His paternal grandfather, John Swearingen, was a native of Illinois, and in the Prairie State grew to a vigorous manhood. Casting his lot early in life with the pioneers of Minnesota, he settled in Martin County, and there established the first flour mill erected west of Dubuque. He continued a resident of that county until his death at Fairmont at the venerable age of ninety-two years. On the paternal side he came of Dutch ancestry, the Swearingens from whom he was descended having emigrated from Holland to America in colonial days. He married a Miss Brown, who was also a native of Illinois.

Abraham T. Swearingen, a native of Illinois, was born in Champaign County in 1829. He attended the pioneer schools of his day, and while yet a boy was initiated into the mysteries of farming as then carried on, very little machinery being then in use. Going to Blue Earth County, Minnesota, when a young man, he began life for himself as a farmer, and in the pioneer task of putting his land under cultivation met with good success. In 1880 he removed to West Union, Iowa, where he started in an entirely different line of business, opening first a furniture store and later becoming a lumber dealer at Perry, Iowa. In the latter industry he met with good results, and continued a resident of Perry until his death in 1915. During the Civil war, almost immediately after its outbreak, he offered his services to his country, enlisting in the Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and with the exception of the time he returned to his home to defend his family from the last Indian outbreak in that locality served until the surrender of Lee on April 9, 1865. A republican in politics, he was ever loyal to the interests of his party. He married Amy Allen, who was born in New York State in 1834, and died at Perry, Iowa, in 1914, at the good old age of eighty years. They had but one child, John R., of whom we write.

After leaving the public schools of Blue Earth County, where he was born, John R. Swearingen continued his studies at West Union, Iowa, taking a preparatory course under the tuition of Prof. S. S. Ainsworth, head of a private school. When but sixteen years old he entered the service of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railroad Company, with which he remained six years as telegraph operator. In 1879, at Perry, Iowa, he embarked in the lumber business, beginning in a very humble position in the yard and gradually worked his way upward until he had managed the details of the business. In 1882 Mr. Swearingen bought the yard in which he had formerly been employed, and for twenty years carried on a substantial business as a dealer in lumber. Selling out in 1902, he was associated with the Huttig Manufacturing Company at Muscatine, Iowa, for four years, serving as its vice president. In 1906, still retaining his connection with the company, he came to Billings, Montana, as manager of its branch house, a responsible position that he filled most ably and satisfactorily. He subsequently organized the Montana Sash & Door Company, which was incorporated January 20, 1911, with the following named officers: J. R. Swearingen, president, and R. C. Cardell, secretary and treasurer. This company is carrying on an extensive and remunerative business in sash, doors and interior finishing material, and does all kinds of mill work, either plain or decorative, its plant and offices being advantageously located at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Broadway. From this plant its products are shipped to all parts of Eastern Montana and Northern Wyoming, its trade being large and constantly growing. Mr. Swearingen has other property interests of value, owning a commodious residence at 301 Clark Avenue, and at Judith Basin has an immense ranch, containing 1,350 acres of good land. He has been actively identified with various other enterprises, but his present business has reached such proportions that it requires his entire time and attention, and he has been forced to dispose of his other interests, although he is one of the directorate of the Billings Gas Company.

Politically Mr. Swearingen is a strong republican.

J. W. Snellbacher

Fraternally he is a member of Perry, Iowa, Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of Almyra Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; of Perry Commandery, Knights Templar; of Zagazig Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and of Des Moines, Iowa, Consistory, being a thirty-second degree Mason. Socially he belongs to the Billings Golf and Country Club.

Mr. Swearingen married first, in 1881, at West Union, Iowa, Miss May Redfield, who was born in that town in 1861, and died at Oelwein, Iowa, in 1882. Their only child, Mabel, a graduate of Saint Catherine's Hall at Davenport, Iowa, married A. Peddecord, a traveling salesman, residing in Perry, Iowa. Mr. Swearingen married for his second wife, at Perry, Iowa, in 1886, Miss Florence Cardell, a daughter of Leander and Emma Cardell, and of this union one child has been born, Irene, wife of George Arnott, Jr., of Billings, a well known attorney. Mrs. Arnott is a woman of culture and refinement, who has had excellent educational advantages, having been graduated from the National Cathedral at Washington, District of Columbia.

J. W. Snellbacher, a prominent member of the Billings bar, has spent all his life in the West, was formerly a teacher, and came to Montana in the service of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company.

He was born at Plattsmouth in Cass County, Nebraska, October 4, 1883. His father, Michael J. Snellbacher, was born in Germany in 1841, came to this country when a young man, and, a blacksmith by trade, established the first blacksmith shop at Plattsmouth, Nebraska. He was in business there the rest of his life and died December 30, 1891. He was a republican, served as a member of the City Council, was active in the Lutheran Church and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At Plattsmouth in 1882 he married Amelia Margaret Lau. She was born in Germany March 23, 1863, and is now living at Colby in Thomas County, Kansas. J. W. Snellbacher is the oldest of the five children of his parents. Claude Philip, born May 13, 1885, is a farmer at Colby, Kansas; Henry Fred, born October 19, 1886, is also a farmer in that vicinity; Margaret, born May 14, 1889, is the wife of L. C. Howard, a rancher and stock raiser at Miles City, Montana; Lulu, born May 20, 1890, is the wife of William Ehler, a farmer at Hollyrood, Kansas. The mother of these children married for her second husband George Ullrich, who died at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, in 1901. By this union there were six children: George, born July 21, 1895, served as a corporal with the American Expeditionary Forces; John, born July 21, 1895, is a member of the United States navy and in the spring of 1919 was stationed at Gibraltar; Philip, born October 4, 1896, was in the spring of 1919 with the army at Camp Funston, Kansas; Augusta, born July 4, 1898, is employed in the postoffice at Miles City, Montana; Lena, born September 6, 1899, is a teacher at Colby, Kansas; and Lavina, born June 20, 1901, is still at home with her mother.

J. W. Snellbacher acquired his education in the public schools of Plattsmouth, attended the high school at Colby, Kansas, graduated from the Colby Academy in 1908, and as a means of paying his way through school he taught in Thomas County for four years. For two years he was also principal of the high school and graded school at Brewster, Kansas. In 1910 Mr. Snellbacher entered the law department of the University of Michigan, graduating LL. B. in 1913. He then came to Anaconda, Montana, and was in the service of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company 1½ years. For a short time he had a law office in San Francisco, but on August 1, 1913, located at Billings and has rapidly achieved prestige as a successful lawyer. His offices are in the Stapleton Building.

Mr. Snellbacher is a republican in political affiliations, is a member of the Congregational Church, and in Masonry belongs to Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Billings Commandery No. 9, Knights Templar, and Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite.

In 1919 he built a modern home just outside the city limits of Billings. Mr. Snellbacher married at Billings June 22, 1918, Miss Inez Richtman, a daughter of Jacob and Sophie Richtman. Her mother lives at Billings, and her father, who was a Union soldier in the Civil war, is deceased.

Walter S. Smith. One of the pioneer business men of Lewistown who is still actively engaged in mercantile pursuits, Walter S. Smith has lived long and continuously in Montana, and is one of the men who can speak from direct experiences of the days of the pack train freighting outfit, was himself a pioneer and was personally acquainted with many of the notable figures of the Northwest in the stirring and romantic days preceding railroads and when all this country was devoted to mining and stock raising.

He and his family have come a long way from their ancestral haunts. Mr. Smith was born in St. Albans Township, Somerset County, Maine, June 24, 1859, and Maine was also the native state of his parents, Benjamin R. and Eunice Elizabeth (Knight) Smith. His father was both a physician and farmer. During the Civil war he and his oldest son, Edmund, were Union soldiers. At the close of the war in 1865 he moved from Maine to Monticello, Wright County, Minnesota, and took an active part in the frontier life of that locality. He bought a farm and also practiced medicine, after taking a post-graduate course. At one time he owned 300 acres of land in Minnesota. Later he lived in Leavenworth, Kansas. He died at the advanced age of ninety years. He was a whig and later a republican in politics. His wife died at the age of sixty years. Their ten children, five sons and five daughters, made up a large family of whom five are still living, Walter S. being the eighth in age.

Walter S. Smith was about six years old when his parents moved to Minnesota, and he grew up in that frontier state. While attending the public schools during limited terms he work on his father's farm and in the spring of 1879, when twenty years of age, started out in the world to find what of adventure and reward it could bestow upon his ability. His first experiences were in the Black Hills of South Dakota. He made that journey by railroad as far as Bismarck and then by stage to Deadwood. With his brother S. R. Smith he engaged in the furniture business, also operated a hack line from Lead to Deadwood, and was in that locality about three years. He then came through to Coulson and saw that town moved on west to the present site of Billings. He and Dave Price with their teams of horses brought fifteen passengers from Lead to Billings. Among these passengers were P. P. Tooley, Mr. Fost, Mr. Gusthurst and other noted men of the time in the Northwest. During 1880-81 Mr. Smith was freighting between Miles City and Billings, and during the summer of 1882 he helped Paul McCormick put up hay for the Government at Fort Custer. In the fall of 1882 he assisted in moving the Town of Clark City on the Yellowstone River to the present site of Livingston. Thus he has helped at the birth of at least two important cities of Montana. He drove a stage line from Livingston to Bozeman during the winter and in the spring of 1883, conducted a freighting outfit between Bozeman and Helena and from Helena to Fort Benton, handling freight for Ford Brothers and for I. J. Baker & Company between Fort Benton and Fort McCloud and, returning from Fort McCloud, in the summer of the same year he also took freight to the Maiden Mining Camp, and in the fall of that year located a homestead near Maiden. He improved his land and became a cattle and horse raiser. In 1896 Mr. Smith returned to Lead, South Dakota, and once more engaged in the furniture business. Upon his return to Montana in the fall of 1898 he located at Lewistown, which city has been his home now for over twenty years. He is the pioneer furniture merchant of Lewistown. In 1916 he purchased 440 acres and started a ranch. This ranch is stocked with about seventy-five head of cattle and from ten to twelve horses.

Politics and office holding have never been an object of ambition with Mr. Smith. He served one term as alderman for the First Ward of Lewistown. He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, and is a past master of his lodge and past high priest of the chapter. He and his wife are members of Marie Chapter No. 36, Eastern Star, he being a past worthy patron and she a past matron. Mr. Smith is also a past chancellor of Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias.

On January 26, 1887, at Maiden, then a mining camp in the Judith Basin of Fergus County, Mr. Smith married Miss Marie Mier. They have one daughter, Eunice, who is married and the mother of two sons and one daughter.

E. C. Sweitzer. Proprietor of the leading dry goods establishment at Lewistown, with another successful branch at Harve, E. C. Sweitzer served a long apprenticeship as a mercantile clerk, and with accumulated experience and modest capital has won success where so many failed.

He was born at Galena, Illinois, February 24, 1870, son of Leo and Louise (Franz) Sweitzer. His parents were both born in Germany and came to this country with their respective parents when children. They are still living in St. Louis, Missouri. Leo Sweitzer learned the carpenter's trade and was a contractor and builder at Galena, Illinois. During the Civil war he enlisted for a three year period and after receiving his honorable discharge re-enlisted and continued fighting for the Union until the close of hostilities. After the war he carried on an extensive business at Galena until 1909, when he retired. He is an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic and in politics a republican.

E. C. Sweitzer was the fifth in a family of six children, four of whom are still living. After getting his education in the public schools of Galena he found a position as clerk in a dry goods store, and in 1900 came to Montana. For two years he was manager of George Simon's store at Livingston, and then removed to Lewistown, where he engaged in the dry goods business as a member of the firm of Hart & Company. In 1910 he bought out Mr. Hart's interests and is now proprietor of the business conducted under his individual name. He is a master of all the details of buying and selling dry goods, and has made his store at Lewistown a center for the trade of a large section of country. He established his branch at Havre in 1915.

Mr. Sweitzer is affiliated with Lewistown, Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Rotary Club and the Judith Club and in politics is a republican. He is also a director of the Bank of Fergus County.

May 24, 1908, he married Stella Mackey. Their two children are Cecilia Louise and John Thomas.

Henry Neill, whose interests have identified him with Lewistown since 1910, is a Montana pioneer, and his own life has been a record in keeping with that of distinguished members of the family, including his brother, the late John S. M. Neill, who became a lawyer at Helena in 1881, was a former surveyor general of the state, and for many years proprietor of the Helena Independent.

The father of Henry Neill was Rev. Edward Duffield Neill, who was born in Philadelphia August 9, 1823, a son of Henry Neill, a Philadelphia physician. Edward Duffield Neill was educated in the University of Pennsylvania and graduated from Amherst College in 1842. He studied theology at Andover and Philadelphia and in early life was ordained a Presbyterian minister. His first work was at Galena, Illinois, and from 1849 to 1860 he was a minister at St. Paul, Minesota, then a frontier outpost of the Northwest. He built the first House of Hope in St. Paul. His fame as an educator and author is even greater than that attending his work as a minister. He served as superintendent of public instruction and as chancellor of the University of Minnesota in 1858-61. At the beginning of the Civil war he became chaplain of the First Minnesota Regiment and served as hospital chaplain until 1864. From 1864 to 1869, under appointment of President Lincoln, he was secretary to the president for signing land patents. In 1869 President Grant appointed him United States consul at Dublin, Ireland, where he remained until 1870. He was the founder and from 1873 to 1874 was president of McAllister College at Minneapolis, and on leaving the chair of president he continued as a member of the faculty of that institution as professor of history, literature and political economy. His long and useful life came to a close in 1893, at the age of seventy. He was a historian, and all modern histories of Minnesota are based upon the pioneer work he did, published in 1858 under the title "A History of Minnesota." He also brought out a work on the Colonial History of Maryland, on the Old Virginia Company of London, on the English Colonization of America, on the Founders of Maryland, on the Virginia Colony under James I, and in 1887 published a "Concise History of Minnesota."

Rev. Edward D. Neill married Nancy Hall, who was born at Snow Hill, Maryland, and died in 1895, at the age of seventy-two. They were the parents of five children, four sons and one daughter, Henry being the second in age.

Edward Duffield Neill had two distinguished brothers. One, John Neill, who was born at Philadelphia in 1819 and died there in 1880, was a pioneer American surgeon, and his published works are part of American medical literature. He served as a surgeon and also as medical director for Pennsylvania in the Union army during the Civil war.

The other brother, who gained distinction as an American soldier, was Gen. Thomas H. Neill, who was born at Philadelphia in 1826 and died there in 1885. He graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1847, and up to the period of the Civil war was assigned to frontier duty.

H. J. Russell

From 1853 to 1857 he was an assistant professor at West Point. He was promoted to captain in 1857, and helped muster and organize regiments early in the Civil war. In February, 1862, he was made colonel of the Twenty-Third Pennsylvania Volunteers. For gallantry at the battle of Malvern Hill he was brevetted a major. He commanded a brigade in the Maryland campaign and guarded the crossings of the Potomac in September and October, 1862. In November of that year he was commissioned brigadier general of volunteers. For his services in the battle of Chancellorsville he received the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel. He was in the battle of Gettysburg, and for gallantry at Spottsylvania was brevetted a colonel. He was acting inspector general in Sheridan's Shenandoah campaign, and at the close of the war received the brevets of brigadier general United States army and major general of volunteers. In 1869 he was made lieutenant-colonel of the First Infantry, and in 1871 was transferred to the Sixth Cavalry, and commanded that regiment on the frontier against Cheyenne Indians during the campaign of 1874-75. From 1875 to 1879 he was commandant of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and in the latter year was promoted to colonel of the Eighth Cavalry.

Henry Neill was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, April 15, 1855, and received most of his education at Minneapolis, and during his father's official duties in Dublin, Ireland, also attended school in that city. Instead of a profession he chose his opportunities in keeping with the environment in which he was reared in the Northwest. His first regular employment was as a track hand in building the Ashland Central Railway in Wisconsin, now a part of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. This took him to Duluth and later he went West to the present site of Fargo, North Dakota, which was then a tent town (1873). He spent the fall and winter at Fargo and in June, 1874, joined a surveying party which was commissioned to mark the international boundary line with monuments along the Forty-Ninth parallel of latitude. He was thus employed until September, 1874. He then proceeded to Fort Benton, where he left the expedition and came to Helena, Montana, and was employed as a measurer with a threshing crew operating one of the old style outfits in the grain fields of the Northwest. January 1, 1875, Mr. Neill was employed as a teacher for the children of Michael Gunnett. In April of the same year he went to work for Len McFarland, surveying the Centennial Valley. This work was finished in the summer of 1876, the tract was given the name of Centennial Valley. He then returned to Helena and was employed as a guard at the United States prison, soon afterward being appointed turnkey and serving in that capacity two and a half years. He then engaged with Joseph Hartwell in a saw mill, being afterward promoted to yard man and finally acquired a half interest in the mill with Mr. Hartwell. He continued in the saw mill and lumber business some six or seven years, and from that entered the contracting and building line. He constructed the jail and courthouse at Glasgow, Montana. Under Governor Robert Smith Mr. Neill served as land agent for the State of Montana, and held that office under three different governors. At the end of his third term he resigned and in 1910 moved to Lewistown, where he acquired a tract of about 500 acres of land. He still owns 294 acres, most of it representing improved and high class farms. During 1917-19 Mr. Neill had this ranch under lease. Some of his land he has made into a subdivision near Lewistown known as Lewistown Heights, and has erected many handsome homes in that location, including his own residence. Mr. Neill is a democrat and is affiliated with Helena Lodge No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with the Royal Arch Masons.

September 1, 1880, he married Florence A. Eddy. She was born in Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Neill had four children: Alice Nancy; Samuel, who died at the age of twenty-three; Minnesota F. and Kathryne.

Edward Brassey. A resident of Montana over fifty years, Edward Brassey has touched the life and affairs of the state at many points, and has helped to make as well live history. He is best known in the region around Lewistown, and among other things that make his name and life significant is the fact that he taught the first school in Fergus County.

Mr. Brassey is a native Englishman, born October 22, 1844, a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Poyntz) Brassey. His father was born in Wales and spent his active career as a lumber merchant at Liverpool, England. He died in 1876. The mother was born at Bermuda and died in 1879.

Edward Brassey, the oldest of four children, received his early education at Liverpool and in early manhood came to America. He landed at Helena, Montana, in 1867. He was employed as a miner in the Last Chance Mine during that summer and in the fall of 1867 became secretary for a local company putting up mining buildings on the Eldorado Bar. For two winters he was employed teaching school in Cave Gulch, and then worked in the mines along that creek and at Diamond City. In 1881 he was elected county superintendent of schools for Meagher County, and he also served two terms as county commissioner of Meagher County, including what is now Fergus County. In the meantime he has acquired some interests as a rancher, and located his ranch on Beaver Creek and lived on it for about ten years. Since 1890 his home has been at Lewistown. During this time he has filled many public offices, including two terms of eight years as register of the United States Land Office. For two terms he was public administrator, and is now a justice of the peace, having dispensed justice in that capacity for many years. Mr. Brassey is an honored member of the Montana Pioneer Society, and has filled all the offices in Lewistown Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically his affiliations are republican.

December 23, 1876, Mr. Brassey married Miss Recina Smith. She was born at Fort Scott, Iowa, and was brought to Montana by her parents when only three years of age, in 1863. She was therefore a Montana pioneer and spent her girlhood days at Old Virginia City. Mrs. Brassey died in September, 1918. She was the mother of two children: William E., who married Bell Burgh and has three children: and Lillian, who is the wife of James Charters and the mother of two children.

Harry J. Russell. The lumber interests of Billings and a wide territory surrounding it have an important exponent in Harry J. Russell, whose constructive labors in this field are carried on as vice president of the Russell Lumber Company, which has long held an enviable position in the state. Harry J. Russell was born in Labette County, Kansas, September 17, 1876, a son of J. K. Russell, and grandson of John Russell. The latter was born in Kentucky in 1817, but became one of the pioneer farmers of Jackson County, Indiana, where, after he had developed considerable wild land and become one of the representative men of his section, he died in 1894. He was married to a Miss Prince, also a native of Kentucky. The Russell family is one of the old ones of this country, the American progenitor of it having come to the American colonies from Scotland prior to the American Revolution.

J. K. Russell was born in Jackson County, Indiana, in 1840, and there he was reared and educated, and became a school teacher. Leaving his native state in 1871, he went west to Labette County, Kansas, where he pre-empted 160 acres of land, and lived on his farm until 1887, becoming during that period one of the representative men of the county, which he served as registrar of deeds, and deputy sheriff for six years. In 1887 he became interested in the lumber interests of that part of the state, but left Kansas in 1905 and homesteaded in Carbon County, Montana, a 160-acre farm, residing on it for three years. In the meanwhile his sons had gone into the lumber business at Billings, and in 1908 he went to that city to render them such assistance as his own experience in this line enabled him to give them. Desiring to revisit his old home, he returned to Indiana in 1911, and died at Crothersville that same year. His remains were brought back to Billings and are here interred. While still residing in Jackson County, Indiana, he was married to Philena A. Thompson, who survives him and lives at Billings. She was born in Jackson County, Indiana, in 1848. Their children were as follows: E. S., who is a rancher of Prague, Oklahoma; J. I., who is in the lumber business at Lindsay, California; O. O., who is a lumber merchant of Denver, Colorado; L. Frank, who resides at Edgemont, South Dakota, was formerly connected with the Russell Lumber Company of Billings from 1902 to 1908; Harry J., whose name heads this review; and C. A., who is bookkeeper of the Hecla Mining Company of Burke, Idaho. J. K. Russell served his country as a soldier during the Civil war, enlisting in Company K, Eighth Indiana Cavalry, and remaining in the service for three years, from 1862 on. His political sentiments made him a democrat. From boyhood he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he was a very active worker in it and a generous supporter of its good work. Fraternally he belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Odd Fellows, and took an intelligent interest in these lodges. Both as a farmer and lumberman he left his mark on his times and section, and is remembered as a potential figure in the life of Billings.

Harry J. Russell was reared in Kansas, attending the public schools of Mound Valley and Oswego until he was sixteen years old, when he left to begin learning the fundamentals of commercial life in a grocery business at Chicago, Illinois, remaining in that city for four years. He then went to Southern Missouri and spent two years in its lumber regions, and a year in the sawmills of Mississippi and Louisiana, thus gaining a first-hand knowledge of the lumber business which has since been of inestimable value to him. Desiring to study the industry from another angle, he was bookkeeper for the Forest Lumber Company at Alliance, Nebraska, for three years, and then until 1903 served as manager of the lumber company at La Harpe, Kansas. From 1903 to 1904 he was manager of the Russell Lumber Company at Tulsa, Oklahoma, which was established in 1902 at Kansas City, Missouri, by O. O. Russell, and had two yards in Kansas, one at La Harpe and the other at Mulberry, and two yards in Indian Territory, one being at Tulsa and the other at Medford, all of which were sold in 1904, in which year Harry J. Russell came to Billings. The object of his coming to this city was to assist in establishing the Russell Lumber Company here, his associates in the work being O. O., L. I., H. J. and J. I. Russell. The yards of this company are located at First Avenue and Twenty-second Street, North. Its present officials are as follows: O. O. Russell, president and treasurer; H. J. Russell, vice president; and T. B. Lee, secretary. It is incorporated.

In 1908 Mr. Russell was married at Alliance, Nebraska, to Miss Bergetta E. Mangan, who was born in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Russell have one daughter, Regina, who was born June 20, 1911. The family residence at 3418 First Avenue, North, is a modern house, owned by Mr. Russell. Politically he is an independent, but has not as yet found time nor has he had the inclination to enter public life, his attention being fully occupied with the affairs of his company. However he is interested in everything connected with the expansion of Billings, and may be relied upon to co-operate in work calculated to advance its welfare.

MICHAEL J. GOSCH, present county treasurer of Fergus County, has been a resident of Montana a quarter of a century, and it was his capacity in business affairs as well as his wide-spread popularity that caused the people of Fergus County to give him such an enviable majority when they elected him county treasurer.

Mr. Gosch was born in Green Lake County, Wisconsin, on his father's farm, September 19, 1874, a son of John and Frances (Comiskey) Gosch.

His father, who was born at the City of Danzig, now the internationalized port of Poland, was brought to this country when a mere child by his parents, who landed at New York after a sailing voyage of six weeks. The family came west to the wilds of Wisconsin, locating in Greenlake County, where they were pioneers. John Gosch cleared a farm from the woods there and spent a very active life for many years. He spent his last days in retirement at Berlin, Wisconsin. He had no concern with politics as a matter of office seeking and was a democratic voter. He died at the age of eighty-seven. His wife was born in New York State and died when eighty-four years of age. Their five children, two sons and three daughters, are still living.

Michael J. Gosch, youngest child, received his education in the common and high schools of Berlin, Wisconsin. He has always been willing to depend upon himself for his share of success and prosperity. As a youth he clerked in grocery stores at Berlin, and in April, 1894, arrived at Butte, Montana, where for about two years he was clerk and bookkeeper with a wholesale produce establishment. From Butte he removed to Helena and attended the Engelhorn Business College. Mr. Gosch has been a resident of Fergus County since 1898. For the first year he worked on the ranch of Samuel Tyler on Flat Willow Creek. He was then in the sawmill business for three years, and engaged in that business and in ranching for himself at Maiden in Fergus County. His mills furnished the lumber and timbers for the Gold Leaf mines at Gilt Edge, the Kendall and Barns King mines of Kendall and the Spotted Horse and McGinnis and Columbine mines at Maiden.

Mr. Gosch has been a resident of Lewistown since 1911. He served four years as deputy county treasurer, and in November, 1916, was elected as chief of that office and re-elected in November, 1918. He received the largest vote in the primary and the general election of any man on the democratic ticket in Fergus County.

Mr. Gosch is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, and with Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Elks and with the Knights of Pythias. On November 25, 1907, he married Miss Mary Weisbrod, a native of Warsaw, Wisconsin. They have one son, Karl.

FRANK DAY is a name known and respected by everyone in Lewistown and many other sections of Montana. Mr. Day, eighty-three years of age, came to Montana fifty-five years ago and has borne a working and useful part in the development of Montana from frontier conditions.

He was born July 25, 1836, at Bishopton in County Durham, England, a son of Thomas and Charlotte Day. He came by sailing vessel to America at the age of nine years and joined a brother at Mineral Point, Wisconsin. Wisconsin was still a territory, and he has therefore lived nearly all his life in the changing frontier conditions of the United States. He learned the blacksmith's trade at Mineral Point, and at the age of nineteen married Elizabeth Little, of the same town. Five children were born to their marriage.

In 1864 Frank Day joined a party making the trip overland by mule team to Virginia City, Montana. He had the usual run of experience in the gold and silver mines there, but eventually resumed his trade and was for a time a traveling blacksmith, shoeing the stage horses. Later he set up a shop in Cave Gulch, near Canyon Ferry, and remained there a number of years. Eventually he was blacksmith for the Government at Fort Logan, and in 1881, leaving his family at that military post, removed to Fort Maginnis to assume similar duties. His family joined him at Fort Maginnis in 1882.

Mr. Day was one of the founders of Lewistown. He and Jacob Holzemer bought 160 acres known as the Reed place at Reed's Fort. This land is now included in the modern City of Lewistown. He succeeded Mr. Reed as the second postmaster of Lewistown, and the old log building which served the uses of the postoffice is still standing and has an interesting title as the first postoffice of Lewistown. Mr. Day has recently donated this landmark to the city with the intention of having it preserved and made a public institution because of its many historic associations. Mr. Day also built the Day Hotel, one of the pioneer hostelries at which the traveling public was entertained for many years. The manager of the hotel was Mr. Holzemer, while Mr. Day managed the ranch. Later, when the partners dissolved and divided their business, Mr. Day retained the ranch property. In 1894 he built a blacksmith shop, and operated it for several years. Since 1898 he has been practically retired from his business and now makes his home with his son George H. Day. The winter of 1919 he spent in California.

Frank Day was one of the men who organized Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and served it as master. It was a member of King Solomon Lodge No. 9, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Helena, Montana, before coming to Lewistown. In politics he is a republican.

GEORGE H. DAY, a prominent ranchman and business man of Lewistown, is a native son of Montana, and his experience and interests he directs makes his career worthy of representation in this history of the state.

Mr. Day was born at Canyon Ferry, near Helena, Montana, May 30, 1875. He is an adopted son of Frank and Bertha (Tyson) Day. His foster father is the grand old pioneer of Lewistown, a brief account of whose life is found elsewhere.

George H. Day attended school at Lewistown, and the first money he earned was riding a race horse. He was then only nine years of age. He practically grew up in the saddle and was an expert cowboy in early youth and has done every work demanded of a practical ranchman. For many years he has been a successful breeder of full blooded Percheron horses and White Faced cattle. Since 1910 he has had full charge of the extensive ranch of Frank Day, operating nearly 3,000 acres of land. He raises between 300 and 500 acres of wheat every year. The day ranch is one of the best around Lewistown and the building equipment is of the highest standard. The old homestead is located at Reed's Fort, as the old townsite of Lewistown was once known.

Mr. Day is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and served two years as secretary of the lodge. He and his wife are members of Marie Chapter No. 36, of the Eastern Star, and in politics he is a republican.

July 15, 1899, he married Lillian E. Demuth. She was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of Peter and Mary A. (Dorn) Demuth. Mr. and Mrs. Day have six children: Bertha H. and Frank R., both high school students of Lewistown; Donald M., Earl William, Marion L. and Elizabeth.

PETER J. OSWEILER, whose record has been one of steady promotion to increased responsibilities in the banking affairs of Lewistown, is cashier of the Bank of Fergus County, and without help from anyone since arriving here practically a stranger has achieved a definite success and standing in the community.

Mr. Osweiler was born in Brighton in Kenosha County, Wisconsin, March 21, 1880, son of Paul and Susannah (Sellen) Osweiler. His father was a native of Europe and came to this country with his parents, Peter and Kate Osweiler. They made the ocean voyage by sailing ship, and from New York City journeyed up the Hudson to Albany, thence by canal boat to Buffalo, and by sailing ship around the lakes to Milwaukee. They located in Kenosha County when all that country was covered with heavy timber and the grandparents hewed a farm out of the wilderness. Paul Osweiler grew up there in pioneer days and was a Wisconsin farmer the rest of his life. He was a member of the Catholic Church and died in 1888, at the age of thirty-five. His wife was born at Milwaukee and is now living at Ashton, Iowa. There were two sons and two daughters, three of whom are still living.

Peter J. Osweiler, the oldest child, when eleven years of age removed with his widowed mother to Ashton, Iowa. There he continued the education which had been begun in the schools of Brighton in Kenosha County. He also worked out as a farm hand and has never asked for any reward which he could not earn and deserve. At the age of eighteen he became clerk in a general store, and four years of that experience gave him a considerable knowledge of business. With that equipment he came to Montana, making the journey by rail and stage to Lewistown, where he arrived in January, 1902. For about two years he was bookkeeper for Charles Lehman, and then spent a year and a half as deputy county assessor. Since August 1, 1905, he has been connected with the Bank of Fergus County, first as bookkeeper, then as teller, then assistant cashier, and since March 1, 1917, as cashier. He is also president of the State Bank of Leigh, Montana.

Mr. Osweiler is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, and is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus. On June 12, 1906, he married Helena M. Boor, a native of Ashton, Iowa. They have three children, Paul Leonard, Helen and Mark Anthony.

JOHN C. HUNTOON. A resident of Montana for a quarter of a century, John C. Huntoon has devoted himself to many and important interests, but for the greater part of the time to his profession as a lawyer. The firm of Blackford & Huntoon, of which he is a member, have a prestige hardly excelled by that of any other law firm in the state.

Mr. Huntoon, whose home for the past fifteen years has been at Lewistown, was born at Peterboro, Ontario, Canada, May 13, 1865, a son of Josiah S. and Betsey Josephine (Kathan) Huntoon. His parents were both natives of New York State. His father, who was born in 1830 and died in 1916, at the age of eighty-six, spent all his active life as a lumberman in Canada, and in his later years acquired extensive ranching interests in Montana. He learned the lumber business in New York State and at the age of twenty-one removed to Canada. He was a pioneer, a woodsman fortified with every experience from the lumber camp to the wholesale end of the industry. For many years he was at the head of the Muskoka Lumber Company on Georgian Bay, an industry that manufactures between 18,000,000 and 20,000,000 feet of lumber every year. For nearly forty years he enjoyed a distinctive rank among Canadian lumbermen. In 1887 he made his first investments in Montana, locating at Utica in Fergus County, where, associated with W. A. Waite, he embarked a large amount of capital in sheep ranching. This firm for many years had from 16,000 to 20,000 head of sheep on their lands. Josiah Huntoon retired from active business in 1900 and spent the last ten years of his life at Ontario, California. When he was eighty years of age he learned to drive his automobile. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, and in the United States was a republican in politics. His wife was born in 1833 and died in 1899, at the age of sixty-six. John C. Huntoon was the fourth in a family of two sons and three daughters.

He was educated at Collingwood, Ontario, and Toronto, and eventually entered the University of Michigan Law School, from which he was graduated in 1891 with the degree LL. B. He was admitted to the Michigan bar the same year, and for two years practiced at Detroit, where he was associated with a prominent Michigan lawyer, Col. John Atkinson. In October, 1893, he came to Montana and located at Great Falls, where he practiced with J. A. Largent, under the firm name of Largent & Huntoon, for about four years and then with William Cockrill, under the firm name of Huntoon & Cockrill, until 1900. Then for three years Mr. Huntoon gave up his profession to assume the management of the extensive sheep ranch of his father. He disposed of the greater part of the ranches in 1917. Locating at Lewistown, he began practice as senior partner of the firm Huntoon, Worde & Smith. After three years Mr. Huntoon engaged in practice alone, and since 1914 has been a member of the firm Blackford & Huntoon, handling a general law practice. Mr. Huntoon has been prominent as a republican, serving as chairman of the County Central Committee of Fergus County and in 1908 was elected county attorney, an office he filled two years. He is affiliated with Cascade Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Great Falls, with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the county and state bar associations and is the present secretary of the Fergus County Bar Association.

April 20, 1887, Mr. Huntoon married Miss Julia Maud Towler. She was born at Collingwood, Ontario. They have one son, Clarence S., who for a number of years has been in the automobile business. He was manager of the Standard Great Falls Garage, later agent for the Willard Storage Battery Company at Seattle, Washington, and in 1917, at the entering of the United States into the great war, enlisted. He was in camp at Berkeley, California, and later at Fort Worth, Texas, and received his commission as a lieutenant in the aviation corps a short time before the armistice was signed. Clarence Huntoon married Margaret Stapleton at Seattle, Washington in 1918.

JOSEPH S. SIMINEO. The solid business interests of Billings and the public affairs of the city as well have furnished the medium in which Mr. Simineo's abilities and enterprise have worked effectively for over twenty years. Mr. Simineo is the present county treasurer of Yellowstone County and bears a name known and respected all over that section of the state.

He was born at Chicago, August 26, 1869, and is of French Canadian ancestry. His great-grandfather came from France and settled in Canada. His grandfather, Simon Simineo, was born in the Province of Ontario in 1793, and moved from Canada to Grand Haven, Michigan, and later to the State of Colorado. He died at Gunnison, Colorado, in 1881, being accidentally killed while unhitching his team. Joseph Simineo, father of the Billings public official, was born at Grand Haven, Michigan, in 1847, was reared there and for two years conducted a meat market business at Watseka, Illinois. Then for a brief time he lived in Chicago, where his son was born, and in 1872 took his family to Colorado and became a farmer and stock raiser. In 1889 he accomplished another stage of westward migration, moving to Washington and engaging in the meat business at Almira and Bellingham. Later he went to Vancouver, British Columbia, retiring from business in 1901, and died in 1902. He was a democrat and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. At Watseka, Illinois, he married Zoa Soucie, who was born at Watseka in 1852 and is now living at Walla Walla, Washington.

Joseph S. Simineo, only child of his parents, acquired his early education in the public schools of Douglas County, Colorado, also at Waterville, Washington, and attended a business college at Portland, Oregon. At the age of twenty-one he began his business career as an associate with his father in the meat business. After five years he came to Montana, reaching Billings on October 9, 1896. For 7½ years he was in the employ of Yegen Brothers, then for 1½ years was in the meat business for himself and for fourteen months was associated in the same line with Julius Zyert. For three years Mr. Simineo had charge of the business office of the Gazette Printing Company at Billings, and then took up the school supply business and for three years handled a large volume of business over all of Eastern Montana.

For a number of years he has been a public official in Billings, serving as a member of the City Council from 1911 to 1917. In 1913 he was appointed deputy county treasurer, an office he held six years. In the fall of 1918 he was elected county treasurer of Yellowstone County and began his duties March 3, 1919, for a term of two years. From 1915 to 1917 Mr. Simineo was president of the City Council. He is an active member and treasurer of the Baptist Church and is affiliated with Billings Star Lodge No. 41, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Billings Lodge, Woodmen of the World, the Royal Highlanders of Billings, and is a member of the Midland Club.

In 1895, at Bellingham, Washington, he married Miss Izetta Trask. She was born in the State of Maine and died at Billings, Montana, in November, 1909. Her only son, Millard T., was a student in the Polytechnic Institute at Billings two years and enlisted from that school on May 6, 1917, joining the National Army and seeing much active service overseas, and in the spring of 1919 was still in the army of occupation in Germany. In 1911, in Yellowstone County, Mr. Simineo married Miss Bessie Rupert, a daughter of James and Lydia (Morse) Rupert, of Minnesota, in which state she was born. They have one daughter, Lois, born July 9, 1916.

WEYMOUTH D. SYMMES. Though comparatively a young man, Weymouth D. Symmes has been actively identified with the affairs of Montana over thirty years, the greater part of which time has been devoted to merchandising, a business in which he has achieved signal success. He is the active head of the Power Mercantile Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind, with headquarters at Lewistown.

Mr. Symmes was born in Canada, January 30, 1870, a son of Thomas J. and Mary (Weymouth) Symmes. His father was also a native Canadian, and spent his life as a farmer in that country. He died in 1905, at the age of sixty-nine. The mother was born in Bethel, Vermont, and died in 1914, also aged sixty-nine. Weymouth D. was the third in a family of seven children, six sons and one daughter, four of whom are still living.

He acquired a public school education in Canada and also had some experience on his father's farm. He taught a term or two of school, and on September 8, 1889, arrived in Montana, locating at Livingston, where he clerked in a mercantile house. Later he was at Missoula, and was in the engineering department of the Northern Pacific Railway until March, 1892. Mr. Symmes has been a factor in Lewistown since March, 1892, and all that time has been associated with the Power interests. He was with the T. C. Power Company until 1894, when as one of the stockholders he organized the Power Mercantile Company and has since been its general manager. He is also general manager and secretary of the Judith Basin Mercantile Company at Hobson and Utica, and is president of the Lewistown Wholesale Company.

While the extent of these establishments is such as to require a great deal of time and energy, Mr. Symmes' public spirit led him to accept the post of mayor of Lewistown and he gave the city a very fine administration of its affairs from May, 1913, to May, 1917. Fraternally a prominent Mason, he is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Hiram Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also a charter member of Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and in politics is a republican.

August 31, 1898, he married Miss Ionia Long. She was born at Santa Cruz, California. They have four daughters and one son, Dorothy I., Elizabeth, Mary Ruth, Grace B. and Weymouth D., Jr.

WALTER B. CHRYSLER. The entrance of Walter B. Chrysler upon his independent career was not a particularly auspicious one. He was possessed only of a common school education, commendable ambitions and great capacity for careful application to his work, but his lack of finances or helpful influences bothered him little, because his self-reliance was of such a sturdy character that it enabled him to develop to the utmost the capital with which nature had endowed him. It was not within his make-up to fail; his inherent judgment pointed out the way for him to proceed, his keen insight discerned opportunities, his native powers developed new fields, and the ability which he possessed allowed him to make each new venture a successful one. Eventually, in 1914, he identified himself with the Billings Ice and Coal Company, of which large and important concern he has since been manager.

Mr. Chrysler was born at Troy, New York, November 16, 1857, a son of Sylvester and Elizabeth (Stevens) Chrysler. The family originated in Holland, and was founded in America during the days of Hendryk Hudson, the family home being in New York. In that state, in the old Hildeburg Mountains, Schenectady, in 1819, was born Sylvester Chrysler, who was reared in that community and resided there until 1861. In his youth he served seven years as an apprentice to the trade of carriage making and a like period in the car shops, and eventually became assistant manager of the old Troy & Albany Railway, under I. V. Baker. In 1861 he removed to Sauk Rapids, Minnesota, where he did general work at his trade, and in 1865 went to Fort Ripley, in the same state, where during that year he had charge of the wagon repair shop for the United States Government. Returning to Sauk Rapids in 1866, he was engaged in farming for two years and was then appointed one of the first railway mail clerks, a position which he held for three years, being then placed in charge of a car shop at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he remained until 1881. He then spent one year at Denver, Colorado, as manager of car shops, but again returned to Sauk Rapids and conducted a wagon and repair shop until 1909, when he came to Billings and made his home with his son until his death during the same year. He was a republican and a faithful member and active supporter of the Congregational Church, and was well known in fraternal circles, being a member of the Masons and a seventh-degree Odd Fellow in New York. Mr. Chrysler married Elizabeth Stevens, who was born in New York State, and died at Sauk Rapids, Minnesota, at the age of fifty-six years, and they became the parents of five children, as follows: James S., a retired ranchman of Dykeman, Minnesota; a daughter who died young; Charles B., who is connected with a transfer company at Sacramento, California; Walter B.; and William, who died young. By a prior marriage Mr. Chrysler had one son, George S., who is deceased.

Walter B. Chrysler was educated in the public schools of Sauk Rapids, following which he attended the normal school at St. Cloud, Minnesota, for a short period. He was but fifteen years of age when he laid aside his school books and started into work for the old St. Paul & Pacific Railway at St. Paul, with which line he was connected until 1881. In the spring of that year he accompanied his parents to Denver, Colorado, and formed connections with the Denver & Rio Grande Railway, in the same department as his father. In the fall of that year, however, he transferred his services to the Northern Pacific, and was stationed at Brainerd, Minnesota, where he remained until 1885. It was in that year that he was sent by his company to Billings, to take charge of the car works at this point, and remained as the directing head thereof until 1894, when he entered the employ of Yegen Brothers, having charge of the hardware and implement departments. In 1914 he took charge of the coal department of the Billings Ice and Coal Company, and at the present time is manager of the entire business, the offices and yards of which are situated at Thirty-first Street, South, and First Avenue, while the main offices are in the Yegen Block on Minnesota Avenue. Mr. Chrysler is well known in business circles as a man of the strictest integrity and highest principles, a good executive, and one of strong force of character. He is the owner of his own home at No. 109 North Thirty-first Street, a modern residence, and has various other interests and holdings. In politics a republican, he has served capably as justice of the peace, and has always carefully and conscientiously performed the duties of citizenship. He is an ex-member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to Billings Camp, Woodmen of the World, and to the Highlanders.

In 1886, at Sauk Rapids, Minnesota, Mr. Chrysler was united in marriage with Miss Esther M. Thomas, of that city, where the Thomas family is well known and highly esteemed. To this union there have been born four children: Walter S., an electrician, who resides at Murray, Utah; Eugene Franklin, who died at the age of eighteen months; a son who died in infancy; and Kenneth Lynn, an engineer in the valuation department of the New York Central Lines, with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio.

GLENN CHARLES MCALISTER. It is seldom that an individual attains to more than ordinary success in any one line. Life is too short to admit of proper preparation for the duties of widely divergent professions or vocations, yet here and there there appears an individual so gifted that he apparently could have succeeded in any field which he had chosen for his own. In this class is named Glenn Charles McAlister, who is not only one of the leading architects of Billings, but who has also achieved a notable success as the proprietor and operator of an extensive ranch.

Mr. McAlister was born at Monticello, Missouri, November 2, 1873, a son of James T. and Ruth E. (Lovitt) McAlister. The McAlister family is of Scotch-Irish origin, and its progenitors immigrated to America during Colonial days. James T. McAlister, the grandfather of Glenn C., was a pioneer of Missouri, where he passed his life as a farmer, and prior to the Civil war worked his land with slave labor, being a planter of the old regime. His death occurred at Monticello, Missouri, in 1874. The younger James T. McAlister, father of Glenn C., was born in 1842, in Kentucky, and was there reared and educated, but in young manhood went to Illinois, where he was married to Ruth E. Lovitt, who was born in 1847 in Ohio, and still makes her home at Abingdon, Illinois. From Illinois Mr. McAlister moved to Monticello, Missouri, where for twelve years he followed contracting and building, then went to LaHarpe, Illinois, where he was engaged in the same line of endeavor for fourteen years, and finally located at Abingdon, where he conducted a like business until his retirement from active life. His death occurred at that city January 10, 1914, when his community lost one of its reliable, substantial and highly respected business citizens. Mr. McAlister was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a democrat in his political affiliation, while his religious faith was that of the Christian Church and he was a consistent church member. He and his wife were the parents of six children, as follows: Allie, who married J. M. Staley, a business man of Clear Lake, South Dakota; Buelah, the wife of William A. Harvey, a farmer of the vicinity of Abingdon, Illinois; Glenn Charles; June, the wife of Charles Melvin, a business man of Peoria, Illinois; Roy, engaged in agricultural pursuits at Parkman, Wyoming; and Guy, in the United States Army Hospital Corps at San Francisco, California.

Glenn Charles McAlister was educated in the public schools of LaHarpe and Abingdon, Illinois, and attended the high school at the latter place, where he also took a two-year course in the normal school. He left school at the age of twenty-one years, and two years later came to Montana and settled at Butte, where he became engaged in architectural work, mastered the profession, and followed that line of endeavor for two years. For two years thereafter he was identified as engineer with the Boston Montana Mining Company, and then, during the year 1900, applied himself to a study of heating and ventilating. In 1901 he first came to Billings and engaged in architectural work, remaining until 1903, when he went to Sheridan, Wyoming, and remained there until 1905. Returning to Billings in the latter year, he again resumed his professional activities, with offices in the Hart-Albin Building, and since that time has risen to high rank in his calling. Among the principal buildings which he has designed may be mentioned the Elks Club, Billings; Senator Kendrick's home, Sheridan, Wyoming; the court house there; two of the large new schoolhouses at Billings; the South Side Fire Station; and a number of the most modern residences at Billings, including the beautiful home of T. A. Snidow. In addition to his activities in his profession Mr. McAlister has been successful in his ventures as a ranchman, and at this time is the owner of a splendid homestead of 640 acres located in Custer County, Montana. He is also the owner of his own home, an attractive residence at No. 1052 North Thirty-second Street, and has various other holdings and interests. He is independent in his political views, and casts his vote for man rather than party. His religious faith is that of the Congregational Church, and he holds membership in the Billings Club.

In 1905, at Slack, Wyoming, Mr. McAlister was married to Miss Beatrix May Powers, daughter of T. A. and Millie (Brittain) Powers, natives of that community, where Mr. Powers is a rancher. Mrs. McAlister is a graduate of the Sheridan High School. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. McAlister: Beatrix Virginia, born May 23, 1909; and Raymond Powers, born February 5, 1911.

CARL R. MEYER, examiner for the Associated Mortgage Investors at Billings, has been identified with enterprises pertaining to lands and land investments practically from the start of his career. In his present capacity he represents a concern of more than fifty years' standing which is extensively engaged in the farm mortgage business, a field in which Mr. Meyer's undoubted abilities, backed by his years of specialized training, find an excellent medium for demonstration and expression.

Mr. Meyer was born in Sarpy County, Nebraska, December 21, 1886, a son of U. C. and Carrie Belle (Foote) Meyer. His father, now a resident of Peru, Nebraska, was born in 1856, at St. Mary's, Iowa, where the family home was located until that little community was practically washed away by an overflow of the Missouri River, at which time the paternal grandmother of Carl R. Meyer took her children to Sarpy County, Nebraska, and located on a homestead, U. C. Meyer being at that time about seven years of age. Three years later she died, and the lad grew up with his elder brothers and sisters, took up farming on his own account, and eventually purchased the homestead, upon which four of his own children were born. He continued to successfully cultivate this homestead until 1894, in which year he moved to a stock ranch in Buffalo County, Nebraska, and after two years took up his residence at Peru, in order that his children might secure better facilities for their educational training. He sold the homestead at the time of his retirement, but is still the owner of two farms near Peru and is accounted one of his community's substantial citizens. He was road overseer and a member of the school board in Sarpy County for many years, and at present holds a position on the Peru school board. He is a republican voter and a member of the Baptist Church, in the work of which he takes an active and helpful part. Mr. Meyer married Carrie Belle Foote, who was born near Saginaw, Michigan, in 1862, and they became the parents of nine children, as follows: Ethel, who is the wife of W. S. Bostder, a real estate broker of Chadron, Nebraska; Pearl, unmarried, who holds an important position with a shipping company at Newport News, Virginia; Carl R.; Earl, a practicing attorney of Alliance, Nebraska; Hazel, unmarried, who is taking a nurse's training course at Kirksville, Missouri; Belle, unmarried, who is engaged in teaching school at Chester, Nebraska; Opal, who died at the age of nine years; Crystal, who is attending normal school at Peru; and Arthadel, who is attending high school there.

Carl R. Meyer was educated primarily in the rural schools of Sarpy County, Nebraska, following which he attended the normal school at Peru for four years. Graduating therefrom in 1904, he began his career as a school teacher in the rural districts of Douglas County, Nebraska, but after two years of experience of this nature decided that the educator's profession was not his forte, and accordingly secured his introduction to his present line of work by engaging in the real estate, abstract and title business at Auburn, Nebraska. After two years of such operations he went to Omaha, Nebraska, as secretary of the Midland Guaranty and Trust Company, a position which he held until January, 1912, and then removed to Winterset, Iowa, where he organized the Security Loan and Title Company, of which he was secretary, treasurer and general manager until October 1, 1917. He then came to Billings with the North Real Estate and Investment Company, and after nine months severed his connection with that concern to enter upon his present duties as examiner for the Associated Mortgage Investors. This institution, which has its headquarters at Rochester, New York, is an old established company which has been in existence for about a half a century. The Billings offices are located at No. 206 Hart-Albin Building. Mr. Meyer is accounted one of the best informed men in his line in this part of the state, and bears a high reputation in business circles, where he is known for his integrity and his fidelity to engagements. He is a republican as to political sentiment, belongs to the Presbyterian Church, and fraternizes with Winterset (Iowa) Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Winterset Chapter, Royal Arch Masons.

In 1908, at Omaha, Nebraska, Mr. Meyer was united in marriage with Miss Florence S. Johnson, daughter of Charles J. and Augusta (Molander) Johnson; residents of Omaha, Nebraska, where Mr. Johnson has been in the auditor's office of the Union Pacific Railway for the past thirty-five years. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Meyer: K. Wilton, born April 15, 1909, and Florence Marguerite, born April 21, 1917.

O. Fletcher Goddard. If it takes a generation for a family to become established in a community, that period has been more than fulfilled in the case of both Mr. Goddard and the City of Billings. From territorial times to the present Mr. Goddard has been really and vitally conspicuous in the affairs in his home city and state. One of the oldest members of the Billings bar, he has been successful in his profession, business affairs and in politics.

He was born in Davis County, Iowa, in 1853, of old Virginia Colonial ancestors, a son of Richard Tilton and Elizabeth (Tannehill) Goddard. His parents were natives of Ohio and moved to Iowa in 1842, when Iowa was still a territory. His father was a farmer in that state and died in 1892, after a residence of a half a century.

O. Fletcher Goddard was one of a family of four sons and three daughters. He grew up on a farm, had a common school and academic education and taught school in various towns in Iowa while studying law. He studied law under his uncle, Judge Tannehill, at Centerville, Iowa, and was admitted to the bar in 1880. Following this for three years he practiced at Corydon.

Mr. Goddard identified himself with the young Town of Billings in March, 1883. One of the hardest working members of his profession, he has long since attained an enviable place in the bar of Montana and his name might be fitly mentioned with any group, however small and exclusively representing the best abilities and character of the legal profession. Much of his work has been in corporation law, and the firm of Goddard and Clark of which he is senior partner, are district attorneys for the Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railroad.

In later years many extensive and valuable business interests have demanded a large part of his time and attention. He is a director of the Montana Coal and Iron Company owning and operating a large coal mine at Bear Creek, Montana, is secretary of the Yellowstone Packing Company, and is owner of several irrigated ranches in Yellowstone County, and much improved real estate in Billings, including his own modern home at 304 North Thirty-first Street.

Through all the varied history of the republican party in Montana from territorial days to the present Mr. Goddard has been a consistent and unwavering advocate of the principles of true republicanism. He served as prosecuting attorney and district attorney in territorial times, was a member of the constitutional convention of 1889, served in the State Senate of 1891 and 1893, and in 1893 his individual influence prevented the election of a democratic senator from Montana. He was the gold standard candidate of the republican party for Congress in 1896, and at his own expense made a campaign over the state as a forlorn hope of his party when all the West and Northwest was completely committed to the free silver issues. Mr. Goddard stood solidly for the old line republican party in the campaign of 1912, when again the bulk of his former party associates gave their support either to Roosevelt or Wilson.

Mr. Goddard is a charter member of the (old) Billings Club and also a charter member of the Billings-Midland Club. He is affiliated with lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner.

January 20, 1881, at Centerville, Iowa, he married

Miss Alwilda Stephenson, a native of Ohio. Of their three children the oldest is Lora, a graduate of Drake University at Des Moines, Iowa, who finished her education in the University of Michigan and later took special work in voice culture in Northwestern University in Chicago. She is the wife of William P. Rixon, a prominent business man of Billings. Mr. and Mrs. Rixon have a daughter, Helen Rebecca, born in 1912. Helen, the second daughter, graduated with the class of 1908 at Montana University, and is now the wife of E. W. Adam, a farmer and stock raiser at Mosely, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Adam have two children, Emil, born in 1916, and Richard Fletcher, born in 1918. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Goddard was Wilbur F. Goddard, who died in 1913 at the age of eighteen.

Harold H. Winter. The Ryniker-Winter Hardware Company of Billings is one of the largest and most complete establishments of its kind, both wholesale and retail, in Southeastern Montana. Its story is a remarkable piece of business history illustrating the possibilities of growth and expansion under the direction of men of such phenomenal energy and progressiveness as Harold H. Winter, the president, and Mr. Ryniker, the vice president.

Both these men, associated in a business and also through family ties, were formerly residents of Quincy, Illinois. Harold H. Winter was born in that city July 18, 1885, and is still young, as that date indicates. His father, John E. Winter, was born in Germany in 1854, and when an infant came to the United States with an uncle. His father had been compelled to leave Germany because of participation in a rebellion in that country. John E. Winter grew up in St. Louis, Missouri, where he married, and had a long and interesting experience as a Mississippi River boatman. He was a captain and pilot on the Mississippi before the war, in 1861 enlisted in a Light Artillery Regiment, was wounded at the battle of Wilson's Creek in Southern Missouri, and afterward was appointed and served as captain of a gunboat on the Mississippi. After the war he lived in St. Louis until 1870, when he moved to Quincy, and in 1874 retired from the river and was a traveling salesman. He died at Quincy in 1900. Politically he was a stanch republican. John E. Winter married Elizabeth Thomas, who was born in Quincy in 1859 and died there in 1895. They were the parents of five children: W. T., formerly a sheep herder in Wyoming, now living retired at Quincy; Al G., a resident of Billings and referred to more particularly in later paragraphs; Jeannette and Edith, both unmarried and living at Quincy; and Harold H., the youngest of the family.

The latter attended public school in his native city, also the National Business College there, and as a youth learned the pattern making trade in one of Quincy's factories. He followed this business in Chicago for several years, and while there took a mechanical engineering course. In 1907 he returned to Quincy and in 1908 came out to Billings. In association with W. C. Ryniker, under the firm name of Ryniker & Winters, he began business by the purchase of the Cedargreen Brothers tin shop. Out of that modest establishment has grown the Ryniker & Winter Sheet Metal Works and other affiliated enterprises. Ryniker & Winter took charge of the tin shop May 15, 1908. November 15, 1910, the business was incorporated under the name Ryniker-Winters Company. Mr. Winters is president and W. E. Ryniker vice president, while C. M. Winter is secretary and treasurer. December 31, 1915, a change of name and organization was made, when the Ryniker-Winter Hardware Company was incorporated, and at the same time the sheet metal works was made a separate corporation, known as the Ryniker-Winter Sheet Metal Works, with Mr. Winter as president, Mr. Ryniker vice president and manager. The Sheet Metal Works are between First and Second avenues on Twenty-fifth Street, North. The wholesale hardware plant and offices are at Seventeenth Street and Montana Avenue, while the retail stores, handling a general stock of hardware goods and equipment, are at Twenty-fifth Street, North, and Second Avenue. There are few firms in the state that have more extended business connections than this. Twelve persons are employed in the hardware business and twenty-five in the sheet metal works, while the wholesale business covers a territory 200 miles in a radius around Billings.

Mr. Winter is a republican, affiliated with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Quincy Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and is a member of Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Elks, the United Commercial Travelers and the Billings Midland Club.

Mr. Winter owns and occupies with his family a modern home at 242 Wyoming Avenue. He married Miss Cora Ryniker, of Livingston, Montana, in 1910. She was born at Quincy. They have one daughter, Jeannette, born March 14, 1912.

Al G. Winter, a brother of Harold H., was born at Quincy May 17, 1875, was educated in the grammar and high schools there and the Gem City Business College, and as a boy took up newspaper work. In 1898 he enlisted in Company D of the Nebraska Infantry for the Spanish-American war. He spent the greater part of that year in camp at Lincoln, Nebraska, and at Camp Chickamauga, and was mustered out at Old Fort Omaha in the fall. In May, 1899, he enlisted for the Philippine war, in Company C of the Thirty-fifth United States Volunteer Infantry. He saw much active service in the Far East, being with General Lawson and was provost sergeant at Bilibib, the United States military prison. He returned and was mustered out at the Presidio at San Francisco in November, 1901. The following year he resumed newspaper work as a reporter with the Quincy Whig, and in 1909 made his first trip to Billings and for a time was employed by the Ryniker-Winters Company. He then resumed his newspaper work at Quincy, but since 1917 has considered Billings his permanent home and is now bookkeeper and office manager for the retail hardware department of the Ryniker-Winters Company and the Sheet Metal Works. He is independent in politics, a member of the Episcopal Church, and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. April 11, 1914, at Terre Haute, Indiana, he married Miss Christine M. McLay. She was born in Scotland and came to the United States in 1913.

Arthur Leslie Hewett is president of the Security Bridge Company at Billings, one of the largest bridge and general construction organizations in the Northwest. Mr. Hewett learned the bridge building business in Minneapolis, has spent the greater part of his active life along that line, and his work called him out to Montana long before he acquired a permanent residence in this state.

Mr. Hewett represents old New England stock. He was born in the Town of Hope, Maine, March 18, 1867. The Hewetts were a colonial family from England. His grandfather, William Hewett, was born in 1800, and spent his active life as a carpenter in a mill at Hope, Maine, where he died in 1882. He married Eliza Fogler, who also died at Hope.

M. D. Hewett, father of Arthur L., was born at Hope, Maine, October 12, 1841, grew up and married there, and served through practically all the Civil war as a member of the Sixteenth Maine Infantry. Like his father he became a carpenter, also operated a furniture factory in Maine, moved to Findlay, Ohio, in 1885 and continued his business as a furniture maker there and in 1914, after his wife's death, he removed to Billings and is now living on a ranch near that city. He is a republican, an active supporter of the Congregational Church, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and has been affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. He married Sarah M. Hastings, who was born in Knox County, Maine, and died at Findlay, Ohio, in 1913. They had three children: George E., employed in a sash and door factory at Findlay, Ohio; Arthur L.; and Florence, wife of P. T. Baker, a rancher at Billings.

Arthur L. Hewett acquired his education in the rural schools of the town of Hope and in Knox County, Maine, and at the age of seventeen went to work in a grocery store at Augusta, in his native state, for six years, and in 1888 moved to Minneapolis and took up bridge building work with S. M. Hewett & Company. The head of this firm was a great-uncle. He learned his trade there and remained in Minneapolis until 1910. In the meantime, beginning in 1892, he had been making trips to Montana supervising bridge construction and had an office in Billings from 1904. He has supervised the construction of sixteen bridges along the Yellowstone River. Moving his residence to Billings in the spring of 1910, he established the Security Bridge Company, which has been practically a continuous organization since 1900, and it was incorporated in 1911 with the following officers: A. L. Hewett, president; W. P. Roscoe, vice president; and P. W. Hastings, secretary and treasurer. The offices are at 502 North Thirty-second Street. The business of the firm is not only the construction of bridges but the building of waterworks, sewers, other concrete work on irrigating ditches, and heavy construction. A branch office is maintained at Lewiston, Idaho. The operations of this firm cover the states of Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

Mr. Hewett is treasurer of the Carbon County Agricultural Company, is an independent republican in politics, is affiliated with Minneapolis Lodge No. 19, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, St. John's Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons, at Minneapolis, Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Billings Midland Club and the Rotary Club.

In 1910, on coming to Billings, Mr. Hewett built a modern home at 934 North Thirtieth Street. He married Miss Myrtie M. Glasser, of Minneapolis, in August, 1894. She is a daughter of Henry J. and Susan F. (Thompson) Glasser, her mother living with Mr. and Mrs. Hewett. Her father, a traveling salesman, died at Minneapolis in 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Hewett are the parents of five children: Florence, a graduate of the village high school, completed her education in the State Normal at Bozeman and is now the wife of W. J. Sherley and resides near Emigrant, Montana. Viva M. is a junior in the University of Minnesota. Henry attends the village high school, Sarah is in the grammar school, and the youngest, Arthur Leslie, Jr., is called Pat because he was born on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1916.

FRANK A. COUSINS has spent all his life in the Northwest, has been a grain dealer for many years, and is now member of the firm Ladd & Cousins, grain dealers, and operates two elevators in Montana.

Mr. Cousins, whose operations prior to locating at Billings were largely directed from Minneapolis, was born at Spirit Lake, Iowa, November 23, 1871. James Cousins, his father, was born at London, England, November 23, 1823, a son of John Cousins, who brought his family to Quebec, Canada, in 1828. John Cousins spent the rest of his life as a farmer in Canada. James Cousins in 1857 came to the United States and located as a pioneer at Fort Atkinson in Winneshiek County, Iowa. In 1870 he moved to Spirit Lake and again did some pioneer work, breaking the heavy sod of the virgin prairie. He spent the rest of his life at Spirit Lake and died September 15, 1899. He was a consistent members of the Episcopal Church all his life and voted as a republican. James Cousins married Sarah Fitzsimmons, who was born in England in 1832 and died at Spirit Lake in 1888. They had a large family of children, five of whom died young. Frank Arthur is the youngest of six who reached mature years. The oldest, J. A., is a carpenter at Spirit Lake; T. H. was a retired grain dealer at Carrington, North Dakota, and died May 31, 1919, leaving a wife, daughter and two sons; C. S. is coal inspector for the Union Pacific Railway Company, living at Seattle, Washington; Sarah, of Spirit Lake, is the widow of James Swailes, a traveling salesman; and W. A., who operated a dray line, died at Lake Park, Iowa, in the spring of 1893.

Frank A. Cousins was educated in the public schools of his native town, including high school, spent one year at the Spirit Lake Academy and completed the sophomore year in Iowa College at Grinnell. After a course in the Capital City Commercial College at Des Moines he left school in the spring of 1892, spent one year as a farmer at Spirit Lake and two years at Grinnell, and in the spring of 1897 moved to Carrington, North Dakota, and took up what has been his main business, grain buying. He was there until 1905, and then for two years devoted all his time to managing his farm. In 1907 Mr. Cousins became traveling superintendent for the Lyon Elevator Company, covering Central and Western North Dakota and Eastern Montana. He made his first business trip to Montana in 1910. The Lyon Elevator Company consolidated with the Russell Miller Milling Company in 1909, and at that time Mr. Cousins joined the Occident Elevator Company, a subsidiary of the Russell Miller Milling Company, and was superintendent until 1913, with headquarters at Bismarck, North Dakota. In the fall of 1913 he was transferred to the home officers of the Occident Elevator Company at Minneapolis as assistant general manager. In 1916 Mr. Cousins located at Billings and from August 1 of that year until April 1, 1917, was on the road for the Carney Coal Company.

In December, 1916, he bought an elevator at Huntley, Montana, and soon gave up his other connections in order to spend all his time looking after this elevator, also another which he owns at Worden, Montana, and his interests as a member of the firm Ladd & Cousins, which was formed in August, 1917. His partner is W. P. Ladd, whose name is noted elsewhere in this publication. The offices of the firm are in the Electric Building at Billings.

Mr. Cousins is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, is affiliated with Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was deputy grand master of the Masons of North Dakota when he left that state. He is a member of Carrington

Chapter No. 15, Royal Arch Masons, and Carrington Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America. He belongs to the Midland Club.

Mr. Cousins and family reside in a modern home at 316 Lewis Avenue. He married Miss Viola May Dickerson at Grinnell, Iowa, October 27, 1892. She was born at Bunker Hill, Illinois, June 10, 1869, a daughter of S. W. and A. Melvina (Hoyt) Dickerson both now deceased. Her father for many years followed his trade as a wood worker at Grinnell. Mr. and Mrs. Cousins have one daughter, Alberta Winifred. She is a graduate of the Bismarck High School and of the Handicraft Guild at Minneapolis, and is now keeping books for the firm of Ladd & Cousins.

HARRY C. STRINGHAM'S chief experience has been in financial affairs, and he plays an important and vital part in Billings' commercial life as secretary of the Billings Credit Men's Association.

Mr. Stringham was born at Denver, Colorado, November 24, 1885. His paternal ancestors came from England and were early settlers in New York. One member of the Stringham family served as a general in the Mexican war. Mr. Stringham's grandfather was a Civil war veteran and died in the Old Soldiers Home at Little Rock, Arkansas. Fred Stringham, father of Harry C., presents a remarkable instance of physical integrity and service that may be expected from a man of absolute temperance and industry. He was born at North Branch, Michigan, in 1860, lost his mother when he was twelve years old, and then went to Galesburg, Illinois, with his father. At the age of eighteen he went west to Denver, and for the past forty-one years has been a locomotive engineer with the Denver and Rio Grande Railway. He will be retired on a pension in 1920. He has been a railroader, has worked steadily and has a splendid record, and is a notable exception to the old time railroad man in the fact that he has never used intoxicants or tobacco. The rewards of his temperate and industrial life appear in a material way, since he has amassed a fortune estimated at $75,000. Many years ago, while living at Manitou, Colorado, he served in the office of alderman. He is independent in politics, is a Mason and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fred Stringham married Minnie Pultz, who was born at Charleston, South Carolina, in 1865. They had five children: Jesse and Grace, twins, the former in the mining business at Bates, Arkansas, while Grace died of the influenza at Bates in 1918; Harry C.; Will, general manager of the Sootless and Smokeless Coal Company at Bates, Arkansas; and Fred, Jr., a farmer at Rocky Ford, Colorado.

Harry C. Stringham was educated in the public schools of Manitou, Colorado, graduating from high school in 1906, and finished his education with eighteen months in a business college at Colorado Springs. He left school with a financial career in view, and went to work at the very bottom in the Oberlin National Bank at Oberlin, Kansas. After six months he went to Pittsburg, Kansas, as an employe of the First National Bank, and when he left there he was draft teller. He was next with the Bradstreet Company in their offices at Portland, Oregon, and in 1913 came to Billings, continuing here for three years as a Bradstreet reporter.

In 1916 Mr. Stringham organized the Billings Credit Men's Association, of which he is secretary, and performs the important task of managing financial adjustments for the various members of that association. His offices are in the Hart-Albin Building. His home is at 2807 Seventh Avenue, North. He is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, the Billings Golf and Country Club and the Elks.

In 1910, at Pittsburg, Kansas, he married Miss Lois Fuller. She is a daughter of Judge Arthur and Hannah (Richardson) Fuller, of Pittsburg. Her father is a prominent attorney and served three terms as judge of the District Court of Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Stringham have one son, Arthur Benjamin, born June 21, 1918.

REV. CYRIL PAUWELYN. St. Patrick's Church of Billings is under the charge of Rev. Father Cyril Pauwelyn, one of the scholarly and efficient men of his church, and since he has been located here the affairs of the parish have been admirably administered. He was born at Poelcapelle, West Flanders, Belgium, and there educated for the priesthood, but was not ordained there, as he lacked twenty-two months of the canonical age for the sacerdotal honors when on June 28, 1885, Bishop Juenger ordained the members of his class in the chapel of the American College at Louvain. He left Antwerp August 22, 1885, as a deacon, at the same time as the Rt. Rev. Bishop Aegidius Juenger and the Rev. Fathers Verbeke and Hillebrand. Arriving at Helena, Montana, he became an assistant of the late Rt. Rev. J. B. Brondel until he was ordained to the priesthood on November 29, and placed in charge of a circuit including the following churches: Missouri Valley, Boulder Valley, Three Forks, Jefferson Valley, Miles City and Bozeman, and later added to this number a church at Marysville and one at Glendive. At Marysville he had a building constructed under his personal supervision. while at Glendive one was acquired by the purchase of the meeting house of the Congregationalists. This circuit extended from Helena to the Dakota line, along the Northern Pacific Railroad, a distance of 500 miles, and sometimes, owing to the poor transportation facilities, he was forced to travel with the crew of a gang working on railroad construction, on a hand car, in order to visit his parishes. He was the first priest ordained in Montana for the diocese of Helena.

In the fall of 1887 Father Pauwelyn was relieved of some of his arduous duties by Fathers Follet and V. Van den Broeck, and he moved his headquarters from Helena to Miles City, whose first resident priest he became, although he also had under his charge Dawson, Custer and Yellowstone counties, which included what are now known as Carbon and Sweet Grass counties, 56,365 square miles in all. There was a church at Miles City, dedicated to the Sacred Heart, and one at Glendive, Dawson County, dedicated to St. Juliana. In the rear of the Miles City Chapel were two rooms, which Father Pauwelyn called his home when not "on the road." At that time Miles City had a boarding school kept by three Ursuline Nuns, who had under their charge ten boarders and twenty-five day pupils.

Between 1887 and 1891 Father Pauwelyn improved the churches at Miles City and Glendive and Billings, secured the site and raised funds for the first church at Red Lodge, for which place he was the first visiting priest, saying the first Mass there in a log cabin July 30, 1889, and from that day on holding services every fifth Sunday. Before the church at Red Lodge was built Father Pauwelyn took a six month trip to Europe, and upon his return was transferred to the Butte and Dillon missions, first making his headquarters with Father Van de Ven at St. Patrick's Butte. While Father Pauwelyn was attached to St. Patrick's Church in Butte, in the course of his ministrations he became acquainted with James Tuohy, a successful prospector and miner, discoverer of some of the famous copper mines on Anaconda Hill. Father Pauwelyn attended Mr. Tuohy in his last illness in 1893, and at his request drew up his will, in which there were three bequests to the Catholic Church in mining properties. One, the Black Hawk, he bequeathed to St. Joseph's Orphanage of Helena, a second, the Pilot, to the benefit of sick and disabled priests of the Ecclesiastical Province of Oregon, and the third, the Burke and Balaklava, went to Bishop Brondel, of Helena, and was sold in 1907 by Bishop Carroll for $400,000. The greatest part of this amount was used in 1909 in the building of Mount St. Charles College in Helena.

In 1893 Father Pauwelyn transferred his residence to Dillon, where a church had been erected by his predecessor, Father Dols, but was not completed and the parish was heavily in debt. Father Pauwelyn not only completed the church, but cleared off the debt and improved the original building. He secured ground for church purposes at Sheridan, a station attended from Dillon, but before he could commence building he was re-appointed to the Miles City Missions, October 19, 1898, remaining there for three years, when he again became the successor of Father Dols, this time at Great Falls, where there were 2,500 in the parish, and he proved himself equally efficient as an able and successful city pastor, just as he had when visiting widely separated missions.

On May 18, 1904, the diocese of Helena was divided and Great Falls was made the seat of the new episcopal jurisdiction, and it fell to his lot to prepare and direct the installation ceremonies of the appointed bishop, and he acquitted himself in so masterly a manner as to reflect dignity upon the church and credit to his ability. He was then transferred to Glendive once more, and attended to the spiritual welfare of the parishes in Dawson County. In 1908 Father Pauwelyn returned to West Flanders because of the illness of his mother, and in 1909 he was stationed at Billings. At that time the beautiful church edifice was burdened with a heavy debt of $25,000, the priest's house was unfinished, and a parochial school was only something that lived in the hearts of the more hopeful.

Father Pauwelyn felt he had a work worthy of the best efforts of any priest, and began it with characteristic promptitude, his first work at Billings being the renovation at his own expense of the rectory. At a cost of over $4,000 he made it habitable for himself and his assistant priest. As was usual with him, he indulged his native love of flowers and shrubbery, and not only laid out a beautiful lawn at the rectory, but the church as well, and encouraged the people of his parish to improve their own lawns in like manner.

In the fall of 1910 Mother M. Olive, General Superior of the Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth, visited St. Vincent's Hospital at Billings, and after making due investigations she promised to send two sisters in the fall of the next year to take charge of the school. In order to have suitable building ready Father Pauwelyn had the old church remodeled and divided into three class rooms. On August 28, 1911, St. Patrick's Parochial School was formally opened with Sisters M. Louise and Barbara as teachers, with forty-eight pupils as the first day's enrollment. Within a year this school had increased until there were eighty pupils. In 1912 another teacher was added and the sixth and seventh grades taught in the third classroom. In 1916 a fourth room was provided by making use of the north side sacristy, so that the school now has the full eight grades and 175 pupils are in attendance, but much more appropriate housing has been provided by Mrs. Kate Fratt. When Father Pauwelyn was first made resident priest of the church at Miles City he united in marriage Miss Katherine Sheehan of Lambertsville, Illinois, and David Fratt, a wealthy stockman of Yellowstone County, Montana. When Mr. Fratt died March 19, 1912, he left his widow his sole heir, and she, looking for some appropriate memorial to his memory, consulted with her old friend and spiritual advisor, Father Pauwelyn, and by his advice purchased the lots and presented them to St. Patrick's Church on Christmas Day, 1916. After her death, which occurred the following New Year's day, it was found that Mrs. Fratt had set aside $100,000 to be used in the erection and maintenance of a parochial school, of which $50,000 was to be used for the erection of the building and $50,000 for the support of the school. This building was erected, and is one of the most modern and beautifully equipped of its kind in the state. Over the entrance is a tablet bearing the inscription, "Kate Fratt Memorial Parochial School."

Father Pauwelyn has lent his support to the erection of a hospital for St. Vincent's at a cost of $450,000, assisting in selecting the new site. This hospital profits from the generosity of Mrs. Fratt, who left to it a bequest of $25,000.

The Knights of Columbus, established at Billings in 1907, is growing in strength and numbers, the membership being now considerably over 200. It was proposed by this order at the state convention held in Anaconda May 20, 1918, to erect a monument on Jefferson Island, near Whitehall, in commemoration of the first Mass offered there in 1841 by Father De Smet, S. J. This was the first Mass said in the State of Montana.

Each year has seen a healthy and remarkable growth in the parish, both spiritually and materially. The indebtedness of $25,000 assisted by the bequest of $5,000 from Mrs. Fratt, has been cut down to $8,000. The confirmation class sometimes numbers as many as 100 members and St. Patrick's has from twenty to thirty converts annually.

The present church edifice was completed in the spring of 1906 at a cost of $64,300, and the decorations are particularly artistic. The Catholic cemetery, known as "Calvary," is two miles west of Billings on high ground, with proper drainage. The first to be buried in it was Patrick Kelly, born in Ireland, who died at Billings when sixty-five years of age, November 15, 1906.

St. Patrick's Church has several out missions, in 1907 the Laurel parish being created, with Rev. Father Charles Truemper as first resident priest, and all of the territory west of Billings west of Canyon Creek was attached to the new center. The Crow Reservation south of the Yellowstone was opened to settlement, and the Huntley U. S. Reclamation project was created by the Federal Government, so that new territory covering about 37,000 acres of irrigated land brought in settlers and many small towns came into existence, such as Huntley, Ballantine, Worden and Custer. These missions are now attended monthly from Billings, and will be until they in turn so develop as to warrant the establishment of a new center of activity.

CHANDLER C. COHAGEN is a prominent young architect of Billings, a son of a well known contractor of the same city and has had abundant opportunity from early youth to acquire a thorough knowledge and experience in all the technique of building construction, working for his father before he entered the school of architecture in the University of Michigan.

Mr. Cohagen was born at Pierson, Iowa, April 24, 1889. He comes of a family of mechanics. His great-grandfather was a native of Ireland and an early settler in Ohio. The grandfather spent his life in Ohio, dying at Columbus many years ago, and was a carpenter and builder by trade.

John R. Cohagen, father of Chandler, was born at Columbus, Ohio, in 1857, grew up there, was married in Missouri, and during his residence at Pierson, Iowa, was a farmer. In 1907 he moved to Billings, and has since been a successful contractor and builder. He is a member of the Billings City Council, is a republican, an active worker in the Christian Church and affiliated with Billings Star Lodge of Odd Fellows and the Encampment of the same order. John R. Cohagen married Mary Turner, who was born at St. Louis, Missouri, in 1859. They have two children, Chandler C. and Ora, the latter an unmarried daughter at home.

Chandler C. Cohagen attended public school at Pierson, Iowa, graduated from the high school at LeMars in that state in 1906, and from that year until 1912 was employed in all the practical details of construction and architectural work, coming in the meantime to Billings with his parents in 1907. In 1912 he went east and entered the college of architecture in the University of Michigan, graduating in 1915 with the degree Bachelor of Architecture. While in university Mr. Cohagen became affiliated with the Kappa Psi social fraternity, the Alpha Rho Chi professional fraternity, and the Tau Sigma Delta honorary fraternity.

On returning to Montana in 1915 he organized the firm of McIver, Cohagen & Marshall, architects. Their offices were established at Great Falls, but in 1916 they also established an office at Billings, and the offices at Great Falls were sold in September, 1917, when McIver & Marshall went to the war. Mr. Cohagen now practices with headquarters in the Electric Building. His firm has designed the Natural Science Building of the State University at Missoula, the Deaconess Hospital at Billings, and many schools and private residences.

Mr. Cohagen is a member of the Christian Church and superintendent of its Sunday School, is treasurer of the church and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Scottish Rite Consistory, the Masonic Club, Star Lodge of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Rotary Club and the Billings Midland Club.

His own modern home is at 131 Lewis Avenue. September 18, 1917, at Billings, he married Miss Flora Brown, a daughter of John and Addie (Riggs) Brown. Her father was a farmer in Missouri and is now deceased. Her mother is living at Billings.

Everett E. Lofgren. By his commendable work both before and since his admission to the bar Everett E. Lofgren has gained a reputation and won the confidence of both the members of his profession and the public and is enjoying a good practice at Billings.

He was born in Brown County, South Dakota, April 6, 1891. His father, Frank G. Lofgren, is still living in Brown County. He was born in Sweden in 1847, was reared and educated in his native country to the age of twenty-one, and in 1868 went to Germany. While in that country he was employed in the construction of the Kiel Canal. In 1882 he came to the United States and settled out on the Dakota frontier, in what is now Brown County, and steadily for over thirty-five years has prosecuted his industry as a farmer. He is a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church. Frank G. Lofgren married Anna Carlson. She was born in 1857, in Chisago County, Minnesota, and died in Brown County, South Dakota, in 1906. They were the parents of a large family of nine children: Ella Victoria, wife of George Alex, a farmer of Claremont, South Dakota; Matilda, wife of George Swenson, a gas engine expert living in Fargo, North Dakota; Charles Walter, who is in the United States Navy; John F., a farmer at Broadview, Montana; Oriel, unmarried and living at Claremont, South Dakota; Everett E.; Clinton G., who was with the United States Army of Occupation in Germany; Francis, a farmer at Watauga, South Dakota; and Arthur D., a musician living at Fargo.

Everett E. Lofgren attended the rural schools in his native county, graduated from high school at Langford in 1908, and then spent two years in the state college at Brookings, South Dakota. He had an experience as a school teacher in Brown County for three years and in 1912 came to Billings. While studying law he paid his way as a stenographer, spent one year in the offices of Judge F. B. Reynolds, another with C. F. Gillette at Hardin, and two years in the county attorney's office. Mr. Lofgren was admitted to the bar in 1916 and has already acquired a good civil and criminal practice. His offices are in the Yellowstone National Bank Building.

Mr. Lofgren is a democrat and served as deputy county attorney during 1917-18. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, is secretary of Billings Aerie No. 176, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and a member of Billings Camp, Woodmen of the World.

On April 12, 1916, Mr. Lofgren married at Helena, Montana, Miss Agnes Butler. Her mother is Mrs. Jane Butler, who resides at Toston, Montana. Mrs. Lofgren is a graduate of the Billings Business College.

Robert J. Hanley, M. D. A well trained, earnest and sincere physician and surgeon whose work has already attracted attention, Doctor Hanley has been a resident of Billings since 1916.

He was born at O'Neill, Nebraska, September 15, 1890, and in the paternal line is a direct descendant of the O'Sullivan Bere, a prominent character in Irish history. His father, Timothy Hanley, was born in Ireland in 1842, and was about eleven years of age when his parents came to the United States and settled at Hancock in the Northern Peninsula of Michigan. He was reared there and became a miner, but in 1875 moved to Nebraska and took up a ranch at O'Neill. He spent the rest of his days in Nebraska and died in 1907. He was a democrat and a Catholic. At Hancock, Michigan, he married Mary (Driscoll) McCarthy. She was born in Ireland in 1842 and is still living at O'Neill, Nebraska. Her first husband was James McCarthy, a native of Ireland. He was a miner and died at Hancock, Michigan. By this marriage there were two sons, both physicians, P. H. and James L. McCarthy. Both are graduates of the Creighton Medical College at Omaha, Nebraska, and P. H. McCarthy is a physician and surgeon at Butte, Montana, while his brother is practicing his profession at Goldfield, Nevada. Timothy Hanley and wife had four children: Jerry P., living on the home ranch at O'Neill, Nebraska; William, a rancher at O'Neill; Genevieve, who is a primary teacher at Butte, Montana; and Robert J.

Dr. Robert J. Hanley acquired his education in the public schools at O'Neill, graduating from high school in 1909, did one year of college work at Creighton University in Omaha, and then took the full four years' course in the medical school of that university, graduating M. D. in 1914. He is a member of the Phi Beta Pi college fraternity.

J. A. Snidow

Doctor Hanley for one year was an interne in St. Joseph Hospital at Tacoma, Washington, and with that training and preparation began his professional work at Billings in 1916. He specializes in surgery. His offices are in the Security Building and his home in the Hedgemere Apartments.

Doctor Hanley is a democrat, a member of the Catholic Church, Billings Aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and Billings Lodge Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Billings Midland Club. In 1916 at Billings, he married Miss Kathryn Smith, a daughter of James and Margaret Smith, who live at Tipton, Indiana. Her father is a farm owner. Doctor and Mrs. Hanley have two children: Robert, Jr., born June 2, 1917, and Margaret Mary, born May 2, 1918.

THOMAS ASH SNIDOW came to Billings in 1891 and soon afterward invested his modest capital in a flock of sheep. With the sheep industry through all its ups and downs he has been continuously identified for over a quarter of a century. However, that is only one of many things which give him a distinctive place in the history of Billings and Montana. One of the largest land owners and leading financiers of the city, he has consistently for many years promoted its wholesome and well rounded development and is regarded as one of the men chiefly responsible for the premier position Billings now enjoys in Eastern Montana.

While thoroughly identified with Montana, he has exhibited much loyalty to his native State of Missouri, his home ranch being known as Missouri Ranch, and he also built a large business structure in Billings known as the Missouri Building. He was born near Madison in Monroe County, Missouri, January 31, 1863. His paternal grandparents were William and Chloe (Frely) Snidow, both of German parentage. William G. Snidow was born in Virginia in 1795 and in 1837 he took his family across country with ox teams to the State of Missouri, settling in Monroe County. He developed a farm out of the prairie and woods of that locality, and besides his success as a farmer he became known as a man of leadership in local affairs, was a democrat and active in the Baptist Church. He died in Monroe County, Missouri, in 1866.

The oldest of his children was James Martin Snidow, who was born in Virginia September 21, 1825, and was twelve years of age when he went to Missouri. He bought a farm of his own in Monroe County in 1854, and during subsequent years became noted for his great enterprise, progressiveness and skill as a farmer, horticulturist, and stock raiser. He always patronized new inventions in farm machinery, and was a breeder of the best horses. He was sound in religious doctrine as a Baptist and was a thorough going democrat, but never active in public office. He died June 28, 1908. He married Miss Martha Ash on October 16, 1853. She was born in Indiana April 11, 1832, a daughter of George and Naomi Ash, natives of Kentucky, where her father was born in 1800 and her mother in 1803. The Ash family came out of England and settled in America in colonial times. From Kentucky they moved to Indiana in 1831 and subsequently were early settlers of Monroe County, Missouri, where George Ash died in 1863 and his widow in 1891. Mrs. James Martin Snidow died August 2, 1895, the mother of ten children. Besides Thomas Ash another son has become well known in Montana, James P., vice president and manager of the State Bank of Huntley.

Thomas A. Snidow grew up on his father's Missouri farm, and the work of the farm was made to fit in with his duties and privileges at school. He was about twenty-two years old when in the spring of 1885 he went out to California and then followed his initial contact with the life of the Far West. For fourteen months he worked on a California ranch, then bought and raised a crop of wheat on a section of land, and on selling his property began cutting cordwood for a lumber company. He was also fireman of a hoisting works, and saw a great deal of the experience of lumbering, ranching and other industrial development in different parts of California. He returned to the old home in Missouri at the close of 1888 and the following year bought a farm in Randolph County, that state, and put in a crop. He also did some buying and selling of livestock.

In April, 1891, Mr. Snidow again started for the West, was for a few months engaged in the ice business in Castle, Montana, and in July, 1891, came overland to Billings, where in October he invested his savings in 855 head of sheep. Their sale a little later so encouraged him that he bought 1,500 head and removed them to Big Horn County in Wyoming and in the spring of 1893 increased his flock by 700 more. Old timers in the ranching industry need not be reminded of the conditions of the following months. During the extreme cold of the following winter he lost about 900 sheep and the financial panic did the rest, taking away practically all the earnings and savings of a number of years of hard work and thrift. That was a critical time in his career, but he stood the test well. In the spring of 1894 he removed with what remained of his sheep to Yellowstone County south of Billings and formed a partnership with P. B. Moss, who furnished 700 head of sheep and a ranch for range. They became equal partners in the enterprise, all the active operation devolving upon Mr. Snidow. Then followed years of hard work, the closest attention to business, and by 1900 he had re-established his credit and his financial position.

In October of that year a partnership was formed with the First National Bank of Billings, of which Mr. Moss was president, resulting in the organization of the Snidow Sheep Company, with Mr. Moss president and Mr. Snidow treasurer. Mr. Snidow became sole proprietor of this business in 1907. At that time he was running approximately 77,000 head of sheep and had 400,000 acres of land under lease on the Crow Indian Reservation. He sold out his interest in the business in May, 1911. In October, 1909, he and three other men had bought the stock of the H. P. Rothwell Livestock Company of Rothwell, Wyoming, afterward known as the Owl Creek Land and Livestock Company. In 1908 he had also bought a two-thirds interest in the Basin Cattle Company in Big Horn County, a company owning several thousand head of Hereford cattle and a number of the highest bred Belgian Percheron and Shire horses.

Mr. Snidow still owns 6,000 acres of ranch lands in Montana. His home ranch is about thirty miles west of Billings on the Northern Pacific Railroad and also on a fine highway over which Mr. Snidow makes frequent trips in his automobile. This is the Missouri Ranch, and while conducted for profit it is in a larger sense a model institution that renders service to the entire agricultural and stock husbandry interests of the state. It is the home of the finest specimens of sheep, Duroc hogs, horses and poultry. A large amount of the land is under irrigation, and with the aid of irrigation Mr. Snidow has for years produced bumper crops of oats, wheat, alfalfa and sugar beets.

Mr. Snidow also has a great variety of financial and business interests. Reference has already been made to the large fireproof theater, hotel, office and store building at Billings erected by him and named the Missouri Building. He helped organize the Huntley State Bank in 1905, and is its president. He is also president of the Boyd State Bank, which he organized and opened for business March 5, 1919, with a capital of $20,000. He is president of the American Land and Live Stock Company of Billings and president of the Billings Gas Company and has been identified with a number of other financial and industrial corporations. In recent years his capital and enterprise have gone far afield. Associated with William Woods of Billings, he is an operator in the oil fields of the parish of Caddo near Shreveport, Louisiana, where he and Mr. Woods own 120 acres now being developed. He has developed another lease in the same vicinity, where one well has been brought in of 500 barrels capacity. He has another lease of 480 acres. He is also interested in a prominent petroleum field in Lee County, Kentucky.

In 1918 Mr. Snidow completed a home of almost unsurpassed beauty and comfort among the residences of Billings. It is located at 820 Division Street, and stands in the midst of a large tract of well kept grounds 150 feet square. While independent in politics and not seeking office for the sake of office, Mr. Snidow has long been recognized as one of Billings' most useful citizens. He served four years as an alderman, but his chief municipal enthusiasm has been in behalf of a public park system. He has been a member of the Park Board of Billings since organization. In fact the first tract of ground formally laid out as a public parkway is situated on Division Street in front of his residence, and was improved and beautified by his own manual labors in spare time evenings and mornings. Five other well laid out small parks in the city district are due to his foresight and planning. At the present time, however, he is planning his big work in that form of municipal advancement, revolving about a tract of fifty-four acres situated north and west of town adjoining the Polytechnic Institute grounds. Mr. Snidow is president of the Hiland Homes Company, which has under development a large tract of 214 acres adjoining the city on the north and west, all platted and ready for incorporation within the city limits.

As these brief facts indicate Mr. Snidow has always worked for a Greater Billings, and coming generations will have much to owe him for his foresight and public spirit. He is a member of the Billings Midland Empire Club and the Billings Club. November 26, 1899, he married Miss Sallie L. Rodes. She was born in Monroe County, Missouri, a daughter of John C. and Virginia Rodes. Her father was a well known farmer and leader in public affairs in Shelby County, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Snidow had two children: Martha, who died in infancy, and Virginia, born October 17, 1903, now a junior in the Billings High School.

PRESTON B. MOSS, a Montana resident of over a quarter of a century, was for many years executive head and owner of the First National Bank of Billings. His later fame is destined to rest upon a specially conspicuous and substantial achievement as a city builder. His capital, resources and individual enterprise have been deeply engaged in the projected and now building city of Mossmain, one of the most ambitious projects of city planning in the entire Northwest.

Mr. Moss was born at Paris, Missouri, September 28, 1863. His father, David H. Moss, who died at Paris in 1906, was for many years a lawyer and banker. He was born at Columbia, Missouri, in 1828, and was descended from a family that came from England to Virginia and thence moved west to Kentucky and later to Missouri. As the date of the birth of David H. Moss indicates, the family were identified with Central Missouri from earliest pioneer settlement. David H. Moss was a California forty-niner, going West during the gold rush and spending two years on the Pacific Coast. He was a democrat, a very active member of the Christian Church and belonged to the Masonic fraternity. His wife was Melville Hollingsworth, who was born at Paris, Missouri, in 1838 and died there in 1915.

Preston B. Moss acquired a public school education in his native town, attended the Kemper Military Academy at Boonville, Missouri, and on leaving school at the age of twenty had an active experience of six years in the lumber business at Paris. Mr. Moss came to Billings in 1892. For eighteen years he was owner and president of the First National Bank and gave that institution its enviable reputation and standing among the banks of the state.

Since leaving the bank he has given the bulk of his time and energies and private resources to the building of the City of Mossmain, located in Yellowstone County. The site of Mossmain is at the junction of the Great Northern, Burlington and Northern Pacific Railways, and is contiguous to the greatest freight distributing yard in the Northwest. The plans for that city represent a happy combination of modern idealism with sound commercial judgment. Building cities by plan, and it might be said by wholesale, is something comparatively new in America, but several individual instances might be cited of such construction on a scale of splendid success and results. The plans for Mossmain were drawn by one of the most brilliant architects and city planners in the world, Walter Burley Griffin, formerly of Chicago, famous as the architect who won by international competition the first prize for the plans for the Federal Capital of Australia. The plans drawn by Mr. Griffin for Mossmain embrace every item of experience gained in recent years, and embody modern ideas but provide for every degree of comfort in individual homes as well as economic facilities and convenience in a town that will serve a great railroad center.

Mr. Moss has his offices in the Masonic Temple at Billings. He is interested in the Northern Hotel at that city and is owner of the Billings Utility Company. Politically he is strictly independent. Mr. Moss is one of the prominent Masons of Montana, having affiliations with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery of the Knights Templar, of which he is past eminent commander, and is a past grand commander of the State Knights Templar. He is also affiliated with Billings Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, of which he is a past potentate.

In 1889, at Paris, Missouri, Mr. Moss married Miss Mattie Woodson, daughter of G. W. and Iantha (Jackson) Woodson. Her mother is living at Billings. Her father, deceased, was for a number of years a merchant in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Moss are the parents of five children: Woodson, who is a graduate of the Phillips-Exeter Academy of New Hampshire, is in the cattle business with home at Billings. Miss Kula, at home, is a graduate of the Dwight College at Englewood, New Jersey, a school in which her younger sister, Miss Melville, also finished her education. Preston B., Jr., a graduate of the Billings High School, is now serving in the National Army, and David H. is a high school boy.

JUDGE F. B. REYNOLDS, who came to Billings in April, 1909, was a lawyer and public official of distinction in his home state of Michigan, and in Montana has achieved a particularly high reputation as a lawyer. He has specialized in corporation and livestock cases, and such has been the quality of his work that he represents important interests in Idaho, Wyoming and Colorado, and also represents livestock interests in Chicago.

Ten years of absence have not caused the citizens of his old home community in Branch County, Michigan, to forget the quality of his citizenship and services. Judge Reynolds was born at Quincy in Branch County, Michigan, January 20, 1874. He is a son of Judge Norman A. and Emorette A. (Harding) Reynolds. His mother is descended in direct line from a brother of General Israel Putnam of Revolutionary fame. Judge Reynolds' career and that of his honored father have been almost parallel in politics, religion, war and professional interests.

Judge Reynolds represents one of the oldest American families. His first ancestor in America was John Reynolds, who was born in England in 1612 and with his wife, Sarah, settled at Watertown, Massachusetts, in 1633. He finally located at Greenwich, Connecticut, where he died in 1660. The sixth child of John Reynolds was Joshua Reynolds, and he served as a member of the Connecticut Legislature. Judge Reynolds' Revolutionary ancestor was Joseph Reynolds, who at the time of the war for independence was living in Dutchess County, New York. During that war he was on a scouting expedition and was taken prisoner and confined in the hold of a British prison ship in New York Harbor. This Revolutionary soldier was a son of Caleb Reynolds and a grandson of Joshua Reynolds.

Judge Norman A. Reynolds, who lives surrounded by a wealth of affection and esteem at Coldwater, the county seat of Branch County, Michigan, was born in Cayuga County, New York, May 28, 1843, and was reared a farmer's son, educated in district schools and academies. September 7, 1861, he enlisted in Company A of the Tenth New York Cavalry, and at the end of three years' re-enlisted and veteranized, and continued with the Army of the Potomac until honorable discharged August 8, 1865. He was promoted from the ranks through various grades to that of first lieutenant, and was acting captain of his company in the Battle of Gettysburg. He was wounded three times, receiving his last wound at the fighting at Appomattox just before Lee's surrender. He was once captured, but escaped before reaching prison. After the war he returned home, visited several states in the West, and on March 1, 1866, became a resident of Branch County, Michigan. He was a farmer near Quincy until 1876, and then sold the farm and after a diligent period of study was admitted to the bar in 1878. In the same year he was made Circuit Court commissioner and in 1880 was elected probate judge, serving three terms or twelve years. He retired from practice in 1903 and in that year was appointed by the governor a member of the board of control of the state public school and was re-appointed in 1905. He was also for one term mayor of Coldwater. He is a republican, active in the Methodist Church, a member of the Masonic fraternity and has long been one of the most influential citizens of Coldwater. He married for his first wife Emma Dofferty. She died at Quincy, Michigan, and both her children are deceased. In 1872 he married Emorette A. Harding, who was born in Allen Township of Hillsdale County, Michigan, in 1843.

Frank B. Reynolds was about three years old when his parents moved to Coldwater, and he attended the public schools of that city, graduating from high school in 1891. He spent two years as a special student in the literary department of the University of Michigan, studied law in his father's office and took his senior law course in the University of Michigan, graduating LL. B. in 1895. The same year he began practice at Coldwater in partnership with his father, and that relationship continued until December 31, 1900. Judge Reynolds, as noted above while living in Michigan had a career closely paralleling that of his father. He was for three years city attorney of Coldwater and two terms Circuit Court commissioner. In May, 1898, he enlisted in the Thirty-second Michigan Infantry, for service in the Spanish-American war, and was color sergeant of his regiment. He was in camp at Tampa, Fernandina, Florida, and Huntsville, Alabama, and was mustered out in September, 1898. In 1900 he was elected probate judge of Branch County and was re-elected in 1904, serving two terms in that office, whereas his father was three terms probate judge. Judge Reynolds on retiring from office in April, 1909, came direct to Montana.

He is a stockholder in the American Bank & Trust Company and served several terms as director, is a director of the Billings Building and Loan Association and the Security Building and Loan Association. With a large and important law practice he has yet found time for many civic and institutional duties. He is a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a member of the board of trustees of the Billings Midland Club, a director of the Billings Young Men's Christian Association and chairman of the state committee of the Young Men's Christian Association since its organization in 1912, is one of the directors and secretary of the Billings Deaconess Hospital Association and is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite.

Going back again to the years of his boyhood, it should be noted that when thirteen years of age Judge Reynolds was captain of a company of cadets, well equipped and uniformed, at Coldwater, Michigan, and had the honor of being presented with a sword by the famous Civil war leader, General Rosecrans. This presentation was made at Hillsdale, Michigan, at a state encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

In 1896, at Coldwater, Michigan, Judge Reynolds married Miss Florence M. Hilliar, daughter of Purches and Adelaide (Adams) Hilliar. Her parents are now deceased. Her father at one time was a farmer at Coldwater, Michigan. Judge and Mrs. Reynolds have two children: Adeltha A., a graduate of the Billings High School, now the wife of Vern D. Clark, who was assistant teller of the Montana National Bank at Billings and is now secretary of the Security Building & Loan Association of Billings, and Frances, who is specializing in musical studies.

OLAF GARDEN, whose work from early manhood has been connected with the promotion of sales of farming implements, particularly threshing machinery, came to Billings as representative of the Minneapolis Threshing Machine Company, and is manager of the Billings branch, handling all the machinery output of that company over a large area in the Northwest.

Mr. Garden was born in St. Peter, Minnesota, August 7, 1877. His father is Ole L. Garden, who was born at Totem, Norway, in 1841, son of Lars Garden, who was born in the same locality in 1811. Lars was a school teacher in Norway, and late in life, after retiring from this profession, came to the United States and died at St. Peter, Minnesota, in 1871. Ole L. Garden grew up in his native country, served his regular term in the Norwegian army, and coming to the United States in 1869 settled in St. Peter, Minnesota. He married there, and in 1878 moved to Norman County in the same state, homesteading a claim, and gradually developing his possessions and interests in that locality until he now owns 1,280 acres, comprising two complete sections of land. Aside from his local affairs he has served as township treasurer, and is a member of the Lutheran Church. He married Mary Dahl, who was born in 1847, also at Totem, Norway. She died at Gary, Minnesota, in 1886. She was the mother of seven children: Lewis, editor of the Gary Graphic; Christine, unmarried and living with her father; Regina, living at Crookston, Minnesota, widow of H. B. Lanager, a traveling business man who was killed in a railroad wreck in 1908; Olaf, who is the fourth among the seven; John O., a real estate broker at Wolf Point, Montana; Oswald, living on the home farm at Gary, Minnesota; and Martin, a merchant at Gary.

Olaf Garden grew up on his father's farm in Minnesota until he was twenty years of age. He attended the rural schools of Bear Park Township in Norman County, and on leaving home entered the threshing machine business. He spent one year as salesman at Crookston, Minnesota, for the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company. For seven years he was salesman for the Avery Company at Fargo, North Dakota, following which for two years he was a local machine dealer at Hettinger, North Dakota. Thus after ten years of successful experience he joined the Minneapolis Threshing Company as a salesman and was located at Winnipeg, Canada, Grand Forks, North Dakota, and on December 1, 1916, came to Montana in charge of the Billings branch of the company. The plant and offices are located at 413-19 North Twenty-fifth Street. This branch, of a business which covers the entire Northwest, was established at Billings in 1909, the building being erected in 1910. It is the combined plant and warehouse and covers 140 by 200 feet. The business, comprising the handling of threshing machinery, gas and steam engines in the territory worked from Billings, includes Montana and Wyoming. The head offices of the company are at Minneapolis.

Mr. Garden during his business experience has found opportunity to make some permanent investments and owns a ranch of 320 acres in Kidder County in North Dakota, and another of 160 acres in Polk County, Minnesota. He also has a modern home at 1001 North Thirty-first Street in Billings.

Mr. Garden is a republican and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Mitchell, South Dakota, Royal Arch Masons, Constantine Commandery of the Knights Templar at Crookston, and Kem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Grand Forks.

December 29, 1912, at Decorah, Iowa, he married Miss Theoline Sophia Severson, a daughter of Kittle and Anna (Luraas) Severson. Her mother died in 1918 and her father is a farmer near Decorah. Mr. and Mrs. Garden have two daughters, Marguerite Ada, born December 1, 1914, and Adeline Lillian, born January 2, 1917.

Ray Anderson is a veteran telegrapher, worked all over the Northwest for railroads and for the Western Union, but his time is now crowded with the official duties of justice of the peace, police judge and United States commissioner at Billings.

Mr. Anderson, one of the younger officials among the citizens of Billings, was born at Broken Bow in Custer County, Nebraska, February 6, 1886. His father, Rasmus Anderson, was born in Denmark in 1864, came to the United States at the age of eighteen, landing in Boston, spent two years working at different things in Chicago, and then moved to Custer County, Nebraska. He owned and operated a farm for many years, but in 1894 engaged in the real estate and insurance business at Broken Bow. He is still living there and is now practically retired. He has been active in public affairs, and served one term as commissioner in Custer County. He is a republican, a Knight Templar and a Shriner. Rasmus Anderson married Louisa Barnes, who was born in Illinois in 1865, her people being among the pioneers of that country. Rasmus Anderson and wife had six children: Ray; N. M., a traveling salesman living at San Francisco; O. K., a traveling representative for Swift & Company, living at Broken Bow; Lee I., who is a member of Evacuation Company No. 30, of the American Expeditionary Forces with the Army of Occupation in Germany; Eunice, unmarried, and a teacher at Anslemo, Nebraska, and Florence, who is married and lives at Lincoln, Nebraska, her husband being with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

Ray Anderson attended the public schools at Broken Bow, also had a business college course there, and at the age of fourteen began learning telegraphy with a local office of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. As a railroad telegrapher he was employed at many points in Nebraska, Wyoming and South Dakota until 1904, when he went to Livingston, Montana, in the despatcher's office of the Northern Pacific Railway. In the same year he was transferred to Butte, remaining in the yard office for a short time and was then moved to Billings, handling a key in the telegraph office of the Northern Pacific until 1909. In that year he became chief operator for the Western Union Telegraph Company at Billings, but left telegraphy in 1912 to become deputy county treasurer and deputy county assessor. He held both those offices for two years. In the fall of 1914 he was elected justice of the peace, beginning his official term January 1, 1915. He was re-elected in 1916 and 1918. His present term expires in January, 1921. In April, 1917, he was made police judge for the City of Billings, and since May, 1916, has been United States commissioner for the District of Montana. This last office was for a term of four years, and he is therefore a representative of the city, county and federal governments. He has his own offices at 101½ North Twenty-seventh Street and has an office in the city hall. He is an extensive property owner, having six dwelling houses and other real estate in Billings.

William P. Rixon. The Rixon family came to Billings more than twenty-five years ago, and William P. Rixon then was old enough to appreciate the pioneer character of the town, and since early manhood has been active in its growth and business activities. His is one of the leading names in real estate circles of Billings.

Mr. Rixon was born in Milton in Western Ontario, Canada, July 4, 1876. His ancestors came from England and were early settlers in Canada. His father, John Rixon, was born in Ontario, March 23, 1831, grew up and married in his native country, and was a man of rather adaptable genius, being a carpenter, a printer and a farmer. He had a good farm and a printing office in Canada. In 1882 he came to Miles City, Montana, and thence traveled overland by wagon to Billings. He worked in some of the early printing offices in Billings, followed his trade as a carpenter, and erected some of the main buildings in the early days of the city. He died at Billings, an honored and respected citizen, in September, 1905. He was one of the earliest members and most active supporters of the Episcopal Church in Billings, while in politics he was a republican. John Rixon married Susanna Panton, who was born in Ontario in 1845 and is still living at Billings. She is the mother of a large family of eight children: Anna, wife of P. L. Reece, a railroad contractor living at Nicholson, Pennsylvania; Mary, who died at the age of sixteen; Helen, wife of Leslie Bates, president of the Standard Forms Board Insurance of Alameda, California; Eleanor, wife of J. B. Fritschi, who is also in the insurance business in Alameda; Fred P., a druggist at Billings; William P.; Winifred, wife of Charles J. Chapple, a Billings druggist; and Harold A., assistant cashier of the Security Trust & Savings Bank of Billings.

William P. Rixon was six years old when his parents came to Montana. He attended the public schools at Billings, but at the age of fifteen left his books and studies to begin his independent career. For six years he was employed in Mr. Chapple's drug store, and then for four years traveled for Swift & Company. On leaving the road in 1905 Mr. Dixon took up the real estate and insurance business and has since built up a large clientele in both lines. His offices are at 10 North Twenty-seventh Street and his modern home is at 311 North Thirty-fourth Street.

Mr. Rixon is a member of the Episcopal Church, is a republican and is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. In June, 1907, at Billings, he married Miss Lora Goddard, daughter of O. F., and Alwilda (Stevenson) Goddard. Her parents live at Billings, where her father is a prominent attorney. Mr. and Mrs. Rixon have one daughter, Rebecca Helen, born September 28, 1911.

J. N. Whittinghill, district manager of the Montana State Telephone and Telegraph Company at Billings, entered the telephone industry early in life, and his father, a resident of Pocatello, Idaho, was a veteran telephone man, having been connected with some of the early systems in the West.

The Whittinghills are an English family, came to America in colonial times and were pioneers of Kentucky. They were also identified with the early settlement of Indiana, where Mr. Whittinghill's paternal grandfather, P. N. Whittinghill, was born in 1831. He spent most of his life at Dale, Indiana, and died at Booneville in that state in 1916. He was a veteran of two wars—the war with Mexico and the Civil war.

L. P. Whittinghill, father of the Billings telephone man, was born at Dale, Indiana, in 1854, grew up there, and shortly after his marriage at Rockport moved to Selvin, where he was a merchant and postmaster. In 1890-93 he was in the railroad business at Huntingburgh, Indiana, and from 1893 to 1905 was a merchant at Las Animas, Colorado. He entered the telephone business at La Junta, Colorado, and since 1912 has been plant chief of the telephone system at Pocatello, Idaho. He is a republican voter. He married Frances Armstrong, who was born at Rockport, Indiana, in 1864.

J. N. Whittinghill, only child of his parents, was born at Selvin, Indiana, November 4, 1884. He acquired his early education in the public schools of Huntingburgh, in his native state, and at Las Animas, Colorado, and was graduated from the La Junta High School in 1903. During the next five years he was employed in the general offices of the Santa Fe Railway at La Junta. In 1908 he entered the telephone business at La Junta, beginning as a helper and acquiring a thorough knowledge of the business both in the technical and business departments. He was made district cashier at La Junta, was manager at Lamar, Colorado, for eighteen months and in October, 1911, came to Helena, Montana, as division cashier. January 1, 1918, occurred his promotion to the post of district manager of the Billings district, comprising Northern Wyoming and all of Montana east of Logan. The Billings offices, at 15 North Twenty-seventh Street, have the supervision of three hundred persons.

Mr. Whittinghill is a member of the Billings Club, the Billings Midland Empire Club, the Rotary Club, and Billings Country Club and is affiliated with the La Junta Lodge No. 701 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a republican. He married Miss Edna McDonald at La Junta, Colorado, in October, 1911. Her parents are Charles and Elizabeth (Kelley) McDonald, residents of La Junta. Mr. and Mrs. Whittinghill have four children, Noral, born March 5, 1913; Charles, born May 11, 1914; Robert, born February 12, 1916, and Frances, born December 30, 1917.

William P. Roscoe. One of the distinctive features of Billings is the youth of the city's leading business men, and it is a very desirable one, for these progressive citizens enter into their work with the enthusiasm and high ideals not often retained after experience and age have mastered a person, and their community consequently prospers because of these characteristics. One of these men is William P. Roscoe, vice-president of the Security Bridge Company and one of the most aggressive and effective young business men of Billings. Mr. Roscoe was born at Wadena, Minnesota, February 12, 1886, a son of Peter Roscoe. The family is of French extraction, the grandfather, Charles Rascicot, having founded it in the United States. This name has been Americanized into Roscoe.

Peter Roscoe was born in 1860, and has been for a number of years the traveling representative of a wholesale crockery house of Minneapolis, his trade territory being the State of Minnesota, although he resides at Minneapolis. He is a democrat and for some years was postmaster at Wadena, Minnesota. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to the Maccabees. Peter Roscoe was united in marriage with Catherine O'Grady, born at Kilkenny, Minnesota, in 1857, and their children are as follows: William P., whose name heads this review; Nora, who is the wife of Charles Carroll, an insurance operator of Billings; Maurice J., who is in an insurance business at Minneapolis; and Louise, who resides with her parents.

William P. Roscoe attended the public schools of Minneapolis until he was sixteen years of age, but then went to the western part of what is now South Dakota and was a cowboy for three years. Returning then to Minneapolis, he took a position with the Security Bridge Company, and, beginning at the very bottom in 1905 as a laborer, has worked his way up, being made foreman of construction work at Minneapolis. In October, 1910, he was sent to Billings, Montana, as a contractor for the company, and in 1915 was promoted to the vice presidency, in which position he has since continued. He is a practical man, understanding every detail of the business, and his services are valued accordingly by his company. A stanch republican, he has been very prominent in his party. A Catholic by inheritance and conviction, he is active in his parish. The Roscoe family residence is at No. 209 Avenue D, and is one of the conveniently modern ones of Billings.

In 1907 Mr. Roscoe was united in marriage at New Ulm, Minnesota, to Miss Florence Nenno, a daughter of N. J. and Margaret Nenno, now of Clinton, Iowa. Mr. Nenno is a retired merchant. Mrs. Roscoe was graduated from the high school at New Ulm, and is a lady of recognized charm and delightful personality. Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe have three children, namely: Margaret, who was born May 14, 1908; Mary Bernice, who was born in 1915; and William P., Jr., born July 21, 1917.

J. L. McDonnell. The career of J. L. McDonnell during the past ten years has been a steady rise to increasing responsibilities in the service of some of the great meat packing firms of the country. One of the most coveted positions in the packing industry is the management of branch houses. Mr. McDonnell is the present manager of the Billings branch of Swift & Company.

Mr. McDonnell was born at DeGraff, Minnesota, May 29, 1887, but has spent most of his life since early childhood in Montana. His grandfather, Patrick McDonnell, came from Ireland and first settled among the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence River and Canada and afterward moved to a farm in a pioneer district of Minnesota, in which state he spent the rest of his life. J. J. McDonnell, father of J. L. McDonnell, was born on one of the Thousand Islands in Canada in 1849, lived there to manhood, and then moved to Brainerd, Minnesota. He spent a number of years as a farmer near Brainerd and DeGraff and in 1889 became one of the pioneers of Great Falls, Montana. He helped build the first smelter at Great Falls, later was a merchant and is now in the mercantile business at Mossmain, Montana. For three terms he was a member of the Great Falls City Council, and in many other ways identified with the growth and prosperity of that city. He is a Catholic in religion. J. J. McDonnell married Maria Murphy, who was born at Belle Plaine, Minnesota, in 1859. Their family of children consists of the following: F. H. McDonnell, owner of a macaroni factory at Great Falls; George, a rancher at Great Falls; the third in age is J. L. McDonnell; J. P. McDonnell is a salesman at Great Falls; Mary is the wife of H. J. McGowan, a Great Falls merchant; Agnes married L. C. Baker, a salesman living at Billings; and Florence, Marie and Lawrence, the three younger children are still at home with their parents.

J. L. McDonnell was two years old when he came to Montana. He attended the public schools of Great Falls, finishing his sophomore year in the high school, and this was followed by a business course in the Great Falls Business College. On leaving school in 1905 he spent one year in the employ of Strain Brothers, general merchants, for five years was associated with his father in the store and then acted as solicitor for the Grand Union Tea Company one year.

He started at the very bottom of the ladder in the packing industry, his first appointment being in 1909 as a wagon driver for Armour & Company. Later he was made shipping clerk from Great Falls to Denver, was sent as a salesman to New Mexico, later returned to Denver as city salesman, and in 1914 joined the packing house of Sulzberger & Sons as city salesman at Great Falls. Mr. McDonnell has been with Swift & Company since 1915, at first as salesman at Great Falls and after two months was moved to Billings and given the management of the branch house in that city. This branch house is located along the Northern Pacific tracks. Mr. McDonnell has the supervision of quite a staff of people in the branch house, fifteen clerks and salesmen.

He is a member of the Billings Midland Club, is affiliated with Denver Camp No. 1 of the Woodmen of the World, is a third degree Knight of Columbus, and a member of Billings Council 1259, and his church affiliation is Catholic.

Mr. McDonnell and wife reside in the Wesch Apartments at Sixth Avenue, North. He married at Las Vegas, New Mexico, in 1912, Miss Bess Wroe, daughter of J. W. and Ella (Farrow) Wroe. Her parents now live at Denver, her father being retired from active business pursuits.

N. L. Martin. A well known and highly esteemed citizen of Yellowstone County, N. L. Martin, proprietor of the Martin Pickling Factory at Billings, and the owner of a fine ranch at Huntley, is carrying on his industrial work most systematically, and by strict attention to the details of his business operation, and his thoroughly upright dealings, both as a manufacturer and an agriculturist, is meeting with gratifying success. Coming from thrifty Swiss ancestry, he was born April 10, 1883, at Casselton, North Dakota, a son of B. F. Martin. His paternal grandfather, Nathaniel Martin, was born in Switzerland and as a young man immigrated to the United States, becoming a pioneer settler of Ohio. Taking up a tract of Government land, he began the improvement of a homestead, and with his neighbors, who were few and far between, suffered all the hardships and privations of life in a new country, among other disadvantages having been forced to haul his corn fifty miles in order to have it ground. Nothing daunted, however, he subsequently became a pioneer settler and farmer of Winona County, Minnesota, where he resided until his death in 1885.

Born on the parental homestead in Ohio in 1850, B. F. Martin was but a small boy when taken to Winona County, Minnesota, where he was reared and educated, attending the pioneer schools and assisting in the pioneer task of reclaiming a farm from the wilderness. Succeeding to the occupation to which he was reared, he became a tiller of the soil, and soon after his marriage bought land in Casselton, North Dakota, where he was extensively engaged in general farming for many seasons. Going from there to St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1891, he operated two meat markets there for three years. Removing then to Clear Lake, Minnesota, he carried on farming in that locality until 1911, when he settled at Hurdsfield, North Dakota, where he now owns and manages a large stock and grain farm. He is a republican in politics, and a member of the Lutheran Church.

B. F. Martin married Anna Luhmann, who was born in 1855 in Germany but as a child was brought to America by her parents, who located in Minnesota, where she was brought up. Into the household thus established eight children were born, as follows: N. L., with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned; Ben, residing at Billings, Montana, is a representative of the Watkins Remedy Company of Winona, Minnesota; Marie, wife of Chester Drury, a farmer in Hurdsfield, North Dakota; William, engaged in farming in Hurdsfield; John, whose home is in Hurdsfield, is now, in the summer of 1919, in Germany with the United States Army of Occupation; Nicholas, also following agricultural pursuits in Hurdsfield; and Esther and Helen, living with their parents.

After completing the course of study in the public schools of Minnesota N. L. Martin entered the Agricultural College at Saint Anthony Park, Minnesota, and was there graduated with the class of 1905. The ensuing two years he was employed at Cody, Wyoming, as time keeper on the irrigating tunnel then being constructed by the Government. Coming from there to Montana, Mr. Martin filed on a tract of land in Huntley, and having proved up his claim lived upon it six years, in the meantime adding improvements of value, and now having its sixty acres under cultivation. While there Mr. Martin embarked in the pickling business in Huntley, Montana, beginning on a modest scale, the first year putting up fourteen barrels of good pickles. The second season he put up 320 barrels, and the third year, encouraged by his success, he erected a small plant in Huntley, which he operated for three years. In 1914, in order to enlarge his operations, Mr. Martin established his large pickling factory in Billings, at the corner of Twentieth Street and Montana Avenue, and is now carrying on an immense business, shipping each year twenty-seven carloads of pickles of all kinds and sizes, putting them up in glass, stoneware or barrels, as the trade demands, and sending them to all parts of Wyoming, Montana, North Dakota and Idaho, employing as many as twenty-five people in the work. Mr. Martin has an attractive home at 215 Lewis Avenue, Billings, and also owns his plant. He is independent in politics, and is a member of the Billings Midland Empire Club.

At Red Lodge, Montana, in 1910, Mr. Martin married Harriet Hall, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hall. Mr. Hall, who was a retired farmer, died in Manning, Iowa, in 1918, and Mrs. Hall still resides in Manning. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have two children, Robert, born April 7, 1912, and Harriet, born August 30, 1914.

George A. Wright has played an effective part in the development of Northeastern Montana as a homesteader, farmer, merchant and public spirited citizen. He was one of the early business men of Dooley, where he still has his home.

Before recounting his Montana experiences it will be appropriate to note his early life and family connections. He was born in Shiawasse County, Michigan, January 19, 1882. His grandfather, Arthur Wright, was a Canadian of Irish stock, and moved to Michigan prior to the Civil war. He enlisted in a Michigan regiment in the Union Army. He died at Fenton when about eighty-two years of age. He was three times married. His son George W. was the child of his first wife, and by his second marriage he had a daughter, Mrs. Oliver Launstein, a resident of Owosso, Michigan.

George W. Wright, father of the Dooley business man, was born in Michigan, spent his life as a laborer and farmer and died at Owosso in 1894, at the age of thirty-five. He married Mary Jane McKenzie, who was born in the Province of Ontario. Her father, George McKenzie, was a Canadian of Scotch parentage. Mrs. George W. Wright died in 1899, at the age of forty-two. Besides her son George A. she had two children, both living at Detroit, Grace and Blakeman.

George A. Wright had some experience in farming in North Dakota prior to his removal to Montana. In 1907 he filed on a half section of land in sections 3 and 4, township 34, range 54, southwest of Plentywood. He proved up on this claim in the fall of 1912. In a building 12 by 12 feet he and his wife and child lived during the first year, until their permanent house of frame was erected in 1908. Mr. Wright began farming at once, and while the first few years were not satisfactory as crop years, the range furnished grass for hay, and that supplemented the poor crops sufficiently to give a living. Good grain crops of wheat, oats and flax were harvested in 1911 and 1912. Mr. Wright is still a land owner but has not given his personal attention to farming since 1912.

For one year, with home at Plentywood, he did a local business buying and selling horses, and in July, 1913, identified himself with the new village of Dooley, buying a lot, erecting a building and opening a stock of hardware merchandise about the 1st of September. He continued to sell goods until the close of the year 1918, when he closed out his local business. Most of his interests since then have been at Opheim in Valley County, in addition to his farm near Plentywood. He sold both hardware and farm implements at Dooley, and in 1916 he and Lee Munson erected the first garage in the town. They conducted this business two years and then Mr. Wright sold. He also owns some developed farm lands near Dooley.

Mr. Wright was one of the first members of the Dooley School Board, and as a private citizen has always been interested in local affairs. He is a democrat, and since reaching his majority supported Parker for president in 1904, Bryan in 1908, and Wilson in the last two elections. Mr. Wright has contributed to Dooley's growth by the erection of one of its best residences, a nine-room bungalow built in 1917. This is a modern home with full basement, and from it the family have dispensed a generous hospitality.

Mr. Wright married Miss Ida Garrison. They were married in Rolette County, North Dakota, October 27, 1903, the ceremony being performed by a Methodist minister, Rev. Mr. Kishpaugh. Mrs. Wright was born near Belville, Ontario, March 26, 1880, and in 1889 her parents settled at Owosso, Michigan, where she finished her education in the high school. She is a daughter of Robert W. and Lucinda (Trumper) Garrison, natives of Ontario. The Garrisons were farmers and her father is now living at Belville, Ontario, while her mother died at Rolette, North Dakota. Mrs. Wright has a sister, Mrs. J. A. Charbonneau, of Ryder, North Dakota. After completing her education Mrs. Wright was a teacher in North Dakota, doing her last school work at Fisher in that state. She cast her first presidential vote for Mr. Wilson in 1916 and during the war was an active Red Cross worker at Dooley. Mr. and Mrs. Wright have an interesting family of children, named Grace Evelyn, Frank Garrison, Robert Bruce, Lucile May and Mildred Melvina.

Charles E. Stroup. Practically every line of endeavor is ably represented at Billings, the local demand being for the best in each, and some of the most reliable men of the country have consequently been attracted here. One of those who has found in this city congenial surroundings and opportunity for creditable advancement is Charles E. Stroup, a hardware merchant. He was born at Blain, Pennsylvania, May 18, 1882, a son of George M. Stroup. The great-great-grandfather came to the American colonies about the time of their revolution and located in Pennsylvania, where his son, Peter Stroup, grandfather of Charles E. Stroup, was born, he coming into the world at Toysville, that state, in 1811, and he left it at Blain, the same state, in 1892, after having spent his life in Perry County, where he was engaged in farming.

George M. Stroup, son of Peter and father of Charles E. Stroup, was born at Blain, Pennsylvania, in 1845, and he died there in 1917, having spent his life within its confines, devoting himself to farming. A strong republican, he was associate judge of Perry County for two terms, was county assessor for the same length of time, and took a very active part in the politics of his county. The Lutheran Church had in him an earnest and generous member, and he was always active in church work. During the Civil war he was a teamster for the government, and as such was at the battle of Gettysburg and other important engagements. George M. Stroup was married to Mary Martin, born at Blain, Pennsylvania, in 1847. Their children were as follows: Annie, who married Dr. H. W. Woods, a physician and surgeon, lives at Blain, Pennsylvania; Margaret, who married William Morrow, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, died in 1913, but her husband survives her and is traffic agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Pittsburgh; Robert M., who is a banker of Zap, North Dakota; Charles E., whose name heads this review; Frank Neff, who is superintendent of schools at Palmyra, New York; and Laura, who married Roy Allen, now principal of schools of Meriden, Connecticut.

Charles E. Stroup attended the common and high schools of Blain, Pennsylvania, and was graduated from the latter at the age of sixteen years. Going to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, he served his apprenticeship to the mercantile trade, studying all of its details, for five years, and then, in 1904, came West to Bozeman, Montana, where he spent six months. In October, 1904, he arrived at Billings and entered the hardware establishment of Yegen Brothers, Incorporated, there spending four years. For the subsequent year he was with the Flemming Hardware Company, and in 1909 established his present hardware business at No. 2812 Minnesota Avenue, which is one of the leading establishments of its kind in the city and in Southeastern Montana. The business is now incorporated as the Stroup Hardware Company, with Charles E. Stroup as president and treasurer; T. B. Edwards as vice president; and L. L. Worthington as secretary. Mr. Edwards is one of the prominent business men of Anaconda, Montana. The policies of the company are such as to win the confidence and approval of the trade, and a healthy increase is shown annually. Mr. Stroup is a republican of the stalwart type, but has never cared to assume the responsibilities of public life. The Congregational Church affords him a religious home, and benefits by his generous donations. Star Lodge No. 41, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Billings Midland Empire Club hold his membership. The Stroup residence, which is owned by Mr. Stroup, is located at No. 233 Wyoming Avenue.

In 1910 Mr. Stroup was united in marriage with Miss Annetta Freeman, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Freeman, both of whom are deceased, having been in life farming people in Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Stroup have two children, namely: Charles E., who was born June 1, 1914; and Jean, who was born December 5, 1918. A man of unusual business capacity, Mr. Stroup has devoted himself to perfecting his knowledge of one line of endeavor and, concentrating as he has done upon it, he has produced results which must be gratifying to himself and his associates, as well as beneficial to the city with which he has permanently identified himself. It is such men as Mr. Stroup who form the great backbone of American business supremacy and thus aid so materially in the development of any community in which they see fit to establish themselves.

JOHN C. ABRAHAMSON acquired his early knowledge of merchandising in Minnesota, of which state he is a native, and for the past ten years has been actively identified with business in Carbon County, Montana, where he is vice president of the Roberts Elevator Company.

The next fourteen years he spent in brickyards at Minneapolis, and in 1880 settled at Dassel, Meeker County, where he homesteaded eighty acres. After selling the homestead he bought a farm of 167 acres three miles east of Dassel, and brought that into a fine state of cultivation and improvement. He died there July 9, 1914, and the old farm is now owned by his three sons. He was a republican and an active supporter of the Lutheran Church. J. V. CONLEY. In the present practical age little attention is paid to those who bewail their misfortune in having no "luck," for that word has lost its old meaning. Thorough preparation for the business of life in any line and faithful and persistent application usually explains one man's success over another, which is easily illustrated in considering those who have gone forward in any profession or industry. It has been men of enterprise who have won notice and position in the big affairs of the world everywhere, and Billings, as a representative community, has noted examples. One of these who has achieved much in the space of fourteen years is J. V. Conley, who is secretary and treasurer of the Lindsay Billings Company, of which he is also a director.

J. V. Conley was born at Indianapolis, Indiana, August 30, 1885, and is a son of J. H. and Mary (McCarty) Conley, and a grandson of Martin Conley. The latter was born in Ireland in 1809, and came to the United States and settled at Decatur, Illinois, where he lived many years, engaged in railroading. He was a veteran of the Civil war and he died at Decatur in 1901 and was laid to rest with military honors. J. H. Conley was born in Massachusetts in 1851, moved later to Illinois and then to Indianapolis, Indiana, as best suited to his business, which was railroading. In 1893 he moved to Decatur, Illinois, and engaged in farming in that vicinity until 1905, when he came to Montana and farmed here until 1917, when he retired to Stockton, California. He owned one of the first irrigated farms of the Billings Land & Irrigation Company. He votes the republican ticket. He married Mary McCarty, who was born in 1858, and they have had the following children: Mary, who is the wife of J. P. Carroll, clerk of the Supreme Court, and resides at Helena, Montana; John M., who is a retail merchant of Stockton, California; Julia, who is the wife of Ora Kemp, a ranchman near Huntley, Montana; J. V., who is the fifth in order of birth; Nellie, who is the wife of G. A. Rhodes, of Walla Walla, Washington; William J., who is in the farm implement business at Stockton; and Edgar P., who operates a ranch near Billings.

J. V. Conley attended the public schools of Indianapolis and was graduated from the high school at Decatur in 1901, when he entered James Millikin University, from which institution he was creditably graduated in 1904. For one year afterward he worked as bookkeeper for the Standard Oil Company at Decatur, and then accompanied the family to Billings, Montana. From 1905 to 1907 he was with the Billings Hardware Company, his duties being in both office and store in the capacity of general utility man. He then went with the Twohy Brothers Construction Company, for which he was purchasing agent and paymaster from 1907 to 1910, in the latter year coming to Lindsay & Company as bookkeeper. Through promotion he later became secretary and treasurer when the company was incorporated as the Lindsay-Walker Company, and he was also one of the directing board. In February, 1917, the Lindsay Billings Company bought the Lindsay-Walker Company, and Mr. Conley became an official of this organization, as stated above. The offices of the company are located at No. 2715 Minnesota Avenue and an immense business is done in the handling of wholesale fruits, produce and confectionery, its trade territory extending to Thermopolis, Wyoming, on the south, to Big Timber, Montana, on the west, to Judith Gap, Montana, on the north, and to Forsythe Montana, on the east. Mr. Conley has a force of twenty employes. Strict discipline is maintained, but Mr. Conley is a just and generous employer.

At Billings, Montana, in October, 1917, he was married to Miss Hazel Morris, who is a daughter of H. M. and Jennie (Hopper) Morris. Mrs. Conley is a graduate of the Billings High School. The family home is at No. 321 North Thirty-second Street. They attend the Congregational Church. In politics Mr. Conley is a republican. He is a member of the Elks and belongs to the Billings, the Billings Midland, the Empire and the Billings Golf and Country Clubs, and the Young Men's Christian Association, and has been very helpful in the latter organization during the war relief activities of the association. Personally Mr. Conley is a man of unimpeachable character.

DELL H. HOLLIDAY was for many years engaged in railroad work, and achieved a place of prominence in railroad circles. It was that service that brought him west of the Missouri River, and when he retired from the transportation business he was in Wyoming, and from there about fifteen years ago came to Billings, where he has built up one of the largest real estate and insurance agencies in the eastern part of the state.

Mr. Holliday was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, March 28, 1859. The family were among the earliest settlers of Fairfield County. His great-grandfather was a native of Scotland, and on coming to America settled in Maryland. The grandfather, John Holliday, was born in Maryland in 1819, and early in life moved to Fairfield County, Ohio, where as the result of many years of labor and good management he cleared up a farm of 300 acres originally covered with heavy timber, and left that farm to his son, Jacob R., who was born there, and the same farm was also the birthplace of Dell H. Holliday. John Holliday died on the old homestead in Ohio in 1877. His wife was Magdeline Ruffner, a native of Pennsylvania.

Jacob R. Holliday was born in Fairfield County, and spent much of his life there as a farmer. In 1879 he moved to Fairbury, Nebraska, where he was one of the first settlers and developed his homestead. After five years he returned to take charge of the home farm in Ohio, living there three years, and then retired to Beatrice, Nebraska. A short time before his death he moved to Hurdland, Missouri, where he died in 1899. During the Civil war he had enlisted in the Seventeenth Ohio Infantry, but after ten months was incapacitated by reason of a sunstroke. That sunstroke also was the direct cause of the shortening of his life. He was a republican, and from childhood was an ardent oil-school Baptist in religion. Jacob R. Holliday married on April 30, 1858, Julia M. Cartright. She was born at Parkersburg, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1839, and is still living at Oklahoma City at the age of eighty. Dell H. was the oldest of her four children. John W., the second, is a veteran railroad engineer, having been with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad continuously since 1880. He still has a main line passenger run out of Denver, where he resides, and also owns 100 acres of farm land adjoining that city. Orpha K., the third child, is living at Oklahoma City, where her husband, Peter Jacovitch, a candy maker, died. Eura B. is the wife of J. C. Hare, of Kansas City, Missouri, a traveling salesman.

Dell H. Holliday was educated in the public schools of Lancaster, Ohio, lived on his father's farm to the age of twenty-one, and then his father, according to the prevailing custom, gave him as his capital or start in life a horse, saddle and bridle. In the meantime, however, he had been making energetic efforts to train himself for a career. In 1876, while living at home, he had learned telegraphy, and he secured his first practical experience in one of the local offices of the Columbus and Hocking Valley Railway. In 1880 he entered the service of the Burlington & Missouri River Railway as a telegraph operator and station agent. He was assigned to different points in Nebraska until 1890, and was appointed the first traveling freight agent west of the Missouri River for that corporation. His headquarters were at Lincoln, Nebraska, two years. He was then transferred to Cheyenne, Wyoming, as terminal agent and general agent, and remained on duty with that railroad for twelve years. During that time he had full charge of several departments, handling freight, passenger and other traffic and had supervision of the telegraph lines.

On leaving the service of the Burlington Railway in 1903, Mr. Holliday engaged in the mercantile business for two years in Cheyenne, and in 1905 moved to Billings. Since then he has developed one of the leading agencies for real estate and fire insurance in Southeastern Montana, his business offices being in the Belknap Block. He is a property owner, owning a number of buildings and dwellings and a modern home, an eleven-room modern house at 119 North Thirty-second Street. Mr. Holliday is an independent republican in politics, without any official record, and is affiliated with the Christian Science Church.

At Riverton, Nebraska, April 30, 1886, he married Miss Maude Elliott. She was born at Knoxville, Iowa, and died at Billings September 21, 1915. Mr. Holliday has two children, his son, Clarence, who graduated from high school at Cheyenne, Wyoming, is a leading business man of Cheyenne, Wyoming, owning a large storage, dray, ice and coal business. The daughter, Frankie M., is the wife of J. W. Bellrose, of Billings. Mr. Bellrose is associated in business with Mr. Holliday.

N. B. SMITH is well known to the live stock dealers of Montana as deputy state veterinarian. He was formerly in the Federal service with the Bureau of Animal Industry, and has been active in the work of his profession for more than a quarter of a century.

Dr. Smith was born at Van Wert, Ohio, September 3, 1868, of English ancestry, but of a family that has been in America since colonial times. His ancestors first settled in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, George W. Smith, was born at Basil, Ohio, in 1816, and spent most of his life at Basil and Van Wert. He was a millwright by trade, and was also one of the builders of the Ohio Canal. He lived retired at Baltimore, Ohio, where he died in 1892. His wife was Elizabeth Reese, a native of Ohio who died at Baltimore.

Amos Smith, father of Dr. Smith, was born at Basil, Ohio, in 1841, and has spent all his life there with the exception of one year in Nebraska. He has had various business interests, operated flour and saw mills and also doing much contract work. He is now retired. Amos Smith is quite well known in Billings, where he has spent four summers. He is an honored veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1861 in the Seventeenth Ohio Infantry. He was color bearer of his regiment and was all through the trouble, participating in such notable battles as Shiloh, Gettysburg, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, siege of Vicksburg, and with Sherman on the march to the sea. He has been a republican for over fifty years, and for the past sixteen years has served on the election board, and religiously he is a Methodist. Amos Smith married Flora Mumaugh, who was born in Van Wert, Ohio, in 1847. They have six children, Edward Sherman, who was a machinist and was struck by lightning in South Dakota June 14, 1893; N. B.; Mary Elizabeth, who is unmarried and living with her parents;

William M., a physician and veterinary who was in the Government service when he died at Cincinnati, Ohio, January 29, 1919; Walter C., living on a ranch near Billings; and Grace Henrietta, the wife of Vernon D. Johnson, a civil engineer living at Elkton, Virginia.

N. B. Smith was educated in the public schools in Ohio, and found employment at home until he was twenty-nine years of age. In the meantime, in 1893, he graduated from the Ohio State University with the degree D. V. M., and for seven years had a busy practice in his home community. In 1894, the year after his graduation, he was appointed a member of the State Board of Examiners for veterinarian by Governor McKinley, serving two years, the short term, and was then reappointed for the long term of six years by Governor Bushnell.

Doctor Smith resigned from this position to enter the Bureau of Animal Industry in 1900. His services with that branch of the Federal Government required his presence at Kansas City, Missouri, where he represented the bureau in the packing houses. In 1902 he was transferred to Billings, and in 1907 was transferred to the stock yards at Omaha and did field work for the bureau until June, 1914. At that date he resigned to become deputy state veterinarian at Billings. For a number of years he has also carried on a large private practice, and has completely equipped offices and stables at 202 North Twenty-fourth Street. Doctor Smith also owns a fine irrigated ranch of 160 acres six miles west of Billings. His modern home is at 2411 Second Avenue, North.

Doctor Smith is a republican, a member of the Methodist Church, and is affiliated with Basil Lodge No. 111, Knights of Pythias, in Ohio.

May 28, 1909, at Kansas City, Missouri, he married Miss Anna North. She was born at Kansas City and was educated there. She is the daughter of James O. North, who was born in Kentucky in 1836, lived in his native state to the age of twenty-one, and at the beginning of the Civil war joined the Confederate Army and was all through the period of hostilities as a bugler in a regiment under the command of General Joe Shelby. He died at Kansas City October 6, 1910. He was a democrat and a Baptist in religion. Mr. North married Mollie Julia Clause, who was born in Missouri in 1860, and is still living near Holt in that state. Doctor and Mrs. Smith have one daughter, Mary Elizabeth, born September 2, 1914.

Eliot W. Keene. A true type of the energetic, public-spirited and enterprising business men who have contributed largely toward the growth and advancement of the industrial and mercantile interests of their home city is Eliot W. Keene, of Billings, a widely known and successful shoe merchant and automobile dealer. A son of G. S. Keene, he was born in Gallatin, Daviess County, Missouri, July 25, 1876, of English lineage, his immigrant ancestor having come from England to America in colonial times, settling in Virginia. His grandfather, George Keene, a prominent physician and surgeon, and a veteran of the Mexican war, spent his entire life in Kentucky, dying in Louisville prior to 1876. He married a Miss Ballard, a beautiful Kentucky maiden.

G. S. Keene was born in 1843 in Louisville, Kentucky, and was there reared and educated. Migrating to Missouri in early manhood, he bought a tract of wild land, and with toilsome perseverance, laboring in winter's cold and summer's heat, he placed it under a good state of cultivation, enduring at first the usual hardships, dangers and difficulties of pioneer life. Coming from there to Montana in 1910, he bought a ranch near Billings, his land adjoining Broadwater Avenue, a valuable piece of property which he still owns, although he has lived retired from the activities of business since 1916, his home being in Billings. Politically he invariably casts his ballot with the democratic party. He married Lavina Hubbard, who was born in Daviess County, Missouri, in 1849, and into the household thus established nine children were born, including: Olivia, wife of Charles D. Wynne, of Bozeman, Montana, a painter and decorator; Laura, who married O. M. McCarty, of Billings, a teamster; Worth, a rancher residing five miles west of Billings; Eliot W., the subject of this sketch; May, wife of Simon Shackelford, an agriculturist living on his ranch five miles west of Billings; Love, living with her parents, is the widow of Lawrence Cushman, who was killed in 1918 in an auto accident at Logan, Montana; Hattie married H. O. Hyatt, assistant manager of the Great Western Sugar Company at Lovell, Wyoming; and Georgia, wife of Oscar White, a machinist in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, with his home in Livingston, Montana.

Receiving his preliminary training in the rural schools of his native county, Eliot W. Keene completed his early education at the Gallatin High School. Reared to agricultural pursuits, he remained on the home farm until nineteen years old, when he made a trip to Yellowstone National Park. Returning by way of the Yellowstone River, he walked from the river over the trail to Bozeman, Montana, where, with the Nelson Story Milling Company, he learned the trade of a carpenter and millwright, serving an apprenticeship of two years. Coming to Billings in 1899, Mr. Keene followed the carpenter's trade two years, and was subsequently associated with the Billings Brewing Company four years. Being then under the administration of W. B. George, appointed street commissioner, he filled the office for two years. During that time the foundation for the Billings City Hall was made, one of the men employed by Mr. Keene in the work having been Tom Stout, who made his first appearance as a workman in Montana at that time.

Mr. Keene was afterward employed as a contractor and builder until 1913, in that industry carrying on an extensive business. He constructed a part of the large building belonging to the Billings Brewery; the J. R. Scott Building; the Raedemaker Building on Broadway; fourteen fine residences in Billings, in the meantime moving fourteen times, as he assumed possession of each house as soon as it was completed, and had to move as he disposed of each; and various other of the more important buildings of the city. In 1913, forming a partnership with L. E. Garrison, he established the Keene-Garrison Shoe Store, it being the largest and most up-to-date store of the kind in Montana, and still owns a half interest in the business. During the same year Mr. Keene embarked in the automobile trade, being agent for the Cadillac car for a year, but since that time has handled the Oldsmobile cars. The Montana Oldsmobile Service Station and salesroom is located at 112 North Twenty-ninth Street, where courteous and prompt attention are given each and every patron. Mr. Keene is president of the firm, and as sales agent covers a territory embracing the whole of Montana and Northern Wyoming. Along the Rim Rock, adjoining Billings, Mr. Keene has a beautiful home, which with its attractive surroundings makes one of the most valuable and desirable estates in the vicinity.

Mr. Keene married in 1901, in Billings, Miss Teresa Blackford, who was graduated from the high school in Shelby County, Missouri. Her parents, Andrew and Mary (Thomas) Blackford, are residents of Billings, her father being a retired agriculturist. Mr. and Mrs. Keene have six children, namely: Ellsworth, born March 25, 1902, is now, in 1919, a sophomore at the Saint Thomas and Saint Paul College, a military school; Frances, born in 1904, attends the Billings High School; August, born in 1907; Merry Nell, born in 1909; Ruth, born in 1910; and Catherine, born in 1915. Politically Mr. Keene advocates the principles of the democratic party. Socially he belongs to the Billings Midland Empire Club, and fraternally he is an ex-member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and member of the Modern Woodmen of America, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

CHESTER R. INGLE. A worthy representative of the Yellowstone County bar, Chester R. Ingle, of Billings, possesses a large measure of genuine talent, a distinctive personality, and a legal knowledge and skill that have brought him success in his professional career and won him an honored position among his fellowmen, both as a man and as a lawyer. A son of John H. Ingle, he was born at Burt, Iowa, May 4, 1880, on the paternal side being of pure Dutch ancestry, the founder of the Ingle family in America having come from Holland to this country, while on the maternal side he is of Irish descent.

Born in Virginia in 1854, John H. Ingle was a small child when his parents removed to Tennessee, where he was brought up and educated, as a boy and youth being well drilled in the many branches of agriculture. Realizing that more favorable opportunities for improving and advancing one's financial condition were offered young men of industry and ability in the West, he made his way in early manhood to Iowa, settling in Burt, Kossuth County, where he subsequently bought land, and in addition to carrying on general farming most profitably was for many years successfully engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1891 he removed with his family to Guymon, Oklahoma, and is still residing in that place, being one of the foremost farmers and stockmen of Texas County. He is an independent democrat in politics, but takes no active part in public matters. He married Mary McChesney, who was born in Troy, New York, in 1859, and of their union five children have been born, as follows: Guy, a farmer, resides in Liberal, Kansas; Chester R.; Roy of Omaha, Nebraska, is associated with an automobile company as machinist; Olive, wife of William Brown, a garage owner in Wichita, Kansas; and Ruth, living with her parents.

Accompanying his parents to Kansas in childhood, Chester R. Ingle acquired his rudimentary education in the public schools, in 1898 being graduated from the high school at Liberal, Kansas. Ambitious then to further advance his knowledge of books, he attended the normal school at Stockton, Kansas, and in 1904 was graduated from Campbell University at Holton, Kansas, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Immediately locating at Liberal, Kansas, he opened a law office, and during the seven years he remained in that place built up an excellent practice, at the same time establishing a wide reputation for legal ability and skill. Going to Bremerton, Washington, in 1911, he was there successfully engaged in his professional work for two years. In 1913, hoping to make a permanent location in some wide-awake city, Mr. Ingle came to Montana, settling in Billings, with his office at Room 2, Belknap Building, and his residence at 1141 Miles Avenue.

A formidable opponent in any cause, be it civil or criminal, Mr. Ingle labors unweariedly in the interests of his clients, and his efforts have been generously rewarded, his practice having became extensive. A man of good financial foresight, Mr. Ingle has made judicious investments, among his other landed holdings being a valuable ranch of 600 acres situated twelve miles northwest of Billings, which he wisely devotes to the raising of grain, in his agricultural experiments meeting with gratifying results. He is a stanch republican in his political views, and while a resident of Bremerton, Washington, served as city attorney.

In 1907, at Stockton, Kansas, Mr. Ingle was united in marriage with Miss Beth Bartholomew, a daughter of Elan and Rachel (Montgomery) Bartholomew, of Stockton. Her father, Mr. Bartholomew, is a botanist of national reputation, and his son Albert, who has an equal knowledge of that science that treats of plants, is professor of botany at the University of Wisconsin in Madison. Mr. and Mrs. Ingle have one child, Chester, born January 30, 1911.

FRANK VON ESCHEN, manager of the Billings branch of the Ryan Grocery Company, is one of the most enterprising and reliable young business men of Yellowstone County, where he is most well and favorably known. He was born at Shelby, Iowa, March 25, 1886, a son of F. Von Eschen, born in Switzerland in 1847. He died at Shelby, Iowa, in 1895, having been brought in his boyhood by his parents to the United States. Settlement was made in Wisconsin, and there he was reared, but after his marriage he moved to Shelby, Iowa, and continued farming the remainder of his life. The Lutheran Church had in him an earnest and steadfast member. F. Von Eschen was married to a lady whose first name was Rosa, and they had the following children: George, who resides at Shelby, Iowa, where he is engaged in merchandising; Florian, who is a professor of Willamette College of Salem, Oregon; Edward, who is a manufacturer of operating tables for physicians, resides at Kirksville, Missouri; Ben, who is a farmer of Shelby, Iowa; Aaron, who is also a farmer of Shelby, Iowa; and Frank, who was the youngest.

Frank Von Eschen attended the public schools of Shelby, Iowa, and was graduated from its high school in 1904, following which he took a commercial course at Boyles Business College at Omaha, Nebraska. He then entered the employ of the Pacific Express Company at Omaha, leaving it at the expiration of a year to go with Adams & Kelley, wholesale sash and door, of Omaha, with which he remained for another year. In 1907 Mr. Von Eschen came to Billings, and was first employed by Yegen Brothers, Incorporated, as stenographer and general office worker. After a year he represented this company on the road, but a year later returned to the office. In 1914 G. W. Ryan bought the wholesale grocery department of Yegen Brothers, and Mr. Von Eschen went with him as an office employe. So efficient did he prove himself that in 1916 he was made manager of the Billings branch, and the development of this department since he has taken charge of it justifies the confidence displayed in him by Mr. Ryan. The offices of this branch are located at No. 2816 Minnesota Avenue, and the headquarters of the company, operating as the Ryan Grocery Company, are also at Billings. Other firms associated with this company are the Ryan Mercantile Company, of Great Falls, Montana; and the Ryan Havre Company, at Havre, Montana. Mr. Von Eschen is an independent republican. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. So-, cially he is a member of the Masonic Club and the Midland Empire Club of Billings. He owns his modern residence at No. 230 Yellowstone Avenue.

In 1907 Mr. Von Eschen was married at Corning, Iowa, to Miss Anna Van Pelt, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Van Pelt, of Corning. Mr. Van Pelt is a retired farmer of that city. Mrs. Von Eschen is a graduate of the Corning High School, and a lady of delightful personality. Mr. and Mrs. Von Eschen have the following children: Harry L., who was born in 1908; Maurine, who was born in 1910; Kenneth, who was born in 1913; and Dorothy, who was born in 1915.

WALTER R. MOVIUS. A prominent and prosperous business man of Billings, full of push and vim, Walter R. Movius, junior member of the firm of Ryerson & Movius, Incorporated, real estate and insurance agents, is an industrious and diligent worker, allowing nothing to escape his observation that will in any way tend to advance the interests of his firm or his patrons, and although young in years is making steady progress along the pathway of success. A native of North Dakota, he was born at Lidgerwood November 19, 1890, of German lineage.

William R. Movius, his father, was born in Germany in 1850. Immigrating to the United States at the age of sixteen years, he first made his home at Yellow Banks, Minnesota, where for a time he was variously employed. When ready to start in life for himself he bought land in that vicinity, and with true pioneer grit and labor redeemed a farm from the wilderness. In addition to his labors as an agriculturist he was also there engaged for a number of years in mercantile pursuits. Opening a general store at Bigstone City, South Dakota, in 1875, he managed it successfully for fifteen years. Making a change of residence and business in 1890, he moved to Lidgerwood, North Dakota, where he operated a flour mill until 1917. Coming in that year to Montana, he has since lived retired from business activities at his home in Billings. He is identified with the democratic ranks in politics, is a faithful and valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and belongs to the Free and Accepted Order of Masons.

William R. Movius married Marcella J. Murray, who was born in Minnesota in 1861, and to them eight children have been born, as follows: Arthur J., a well known physician and surgeon of Billings; Winfred D., a manufacturer of flour at Lidgerwood, North Dakota; Marcella, wife of N. J. Shields, M. D., a prominent physician and surgeon of San Luis Obispo, California; Pearl D. married Arthur Rosenkranz, of Lidgerwood, North Dakota, an electrician; Rex M., a resident of Plentywood, Montana, is treasurer of Sheridan County; Walter R., with whom this brief sketch is chiefly concerned; Harold E., of Billings, is associated with the Billings Laundry Company; and Margaret, wife of Herman Warren, of Mobile, Alabama, a railway employe.

Receiving his preliminary education in Lidgerwood, North Dakota, Walter R. Movius was graduated from its high school with the class of 1908. Subsequently entering the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Illinois, he was there graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1912. While there he joined the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity, with which he is still affiliated. In 1912, in order to better fit himself for a business life, Mr. Movius attended the Mankato Commercial College, at Mankato, Minnesota, continuing his studies there for a year. Establishing himself then at Plentywood, Montana, he was employed in the recorder's office for a year, and was afterward deputy county treasurer of Sheridan County and deputy assessor until April 1, 1915, performing the duties thus devolving upon him in a highly satisfactory manner.

Coming very soon after that date to Billings, Mr. Movius was field and office man for the Guaranty Investment Company for a period of eighteen months. Forming a partnership then with Mr. Lloyd H. Ryerson, under the firm name of Ryerson & Movius, he embarked in the real estate and insurance business, and in his undertakings has met with well merited success. The firm, which was incorporated March 1, 1918, handles city properties and farm lands, having its full share of all the business of that kind carried on in Yellowstone County, its offices being located at 2905 Montana Avenue. The officers are men of great enterprise and energy, Lloyd H. Ryerson being president, while Mr. Movius is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Movius is likewise secretary and treasurer of the Billings Fuel & Feed Company, and president of the Billings Real Estate Board, offices for which he is amply qualified, and which he is filling to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. He is a democrat in politics, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Billings Midland Club. He has an attractive home at 246 Wyoming Avenue, and there takes pleasure in extending its hospitalities to the many friends of himself and wife.

On June 21, 1915, at Plentywood, Montana, Mr. Movius married Ruth E., daughter of I. A. and Emily (Denny) Oakes, residents of Plentywood, where Mr. Oakes is serving as postmaster. Mrs. Movius was educated in Idaho, being graduated from the Boise High School. Mr. and Mrs. Movius have one child, Ruth Marie, born May 22, 1916.

LENORD L. WORTHINGTON. Sincerity and trustworthiness are characteristics of Leonard L. Worthington, secretary and assistant manager of Yegen Brothers, Incorporated, of Billings, and his steady advance in the business world is because of them and his constructive work in every position he has held. He was born at Odell, Nebraska, October 23, 1882, a son of Eli Worthington. The birth of Eli Worthington occurred in Pennsylvania in 1850, and his death at Long Beach, California, in December, 1918. After being reared in his native state Eli Worthington came as far west as Iowa, and after a brief stay in that state came on to Nebraska, homesteading at Odell, where he was a pioneer. He later established himself as a merchant at Odell, and in 1888 went to Beatrice, Nebraska, where he conducted a meat market until his retirement from business cares in 1910, at which time he established his residence at Long Beach, California, and there rounded out his useful life. Stanch in his support of republican principles and candidates, he never cared for political preferment, but did his duty as a citizen and upright man. In the creed and teachings of Christian Science he found his religious ideals. Eli Worthington was married to Hulda Jane Parks, born in Pennsylvania in 1853. She survives her husband and makes her home at Billings. Their children were as follows: Hattie May, who died at Billings in 1905; Maude, who married L. H. Bostwick, receiving and shipping clerk for Yegen Brothers, Incorporated, lives at Billings, Montana; L. L., whose name heads their review; Frank R., who was accidentally killed by a fire engine in 1913, while a member of the Maverick Hose Company of volunteer firemen of Billings; and Joseph, who is bookkeeper and receiving teller for Yegen Brothers, Incorporated.

L. L. Worthington attended the common schools of Beatrice, Nebraska, and completed the junior year of the high school of that city, when, in 1900, he left school to become self-supporting in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with which he remained for six years, during that time being located at Beatrice. He then came to Billings, Montana, arriving in this city February 10, 1902, and was chief clerk in the local freight office at this point until the consolidation of the roads here, at which time he was made transfer clerk in the joint freight office, so continuing until March, 1905, when he was made claim clerk in the local office for the same railroads at Omaha, Nebraska. In July, 1906, Mr. Worthington returned to Billings and began his connection with Yegen Brothers, Incorporated, as a clerk. It was not long until his capabilities received due appreciation by his promotion to the position of head bookkeeper in 1907. Mr. Worthington is a man who is never content with doing merely what is regarded as the duties of a position, but reaches out to learn others, and added responsibilities were given him in 1910, when he was made credit man. In this latter position he displayed such sound judgment and proved himself so excellent a judge of character that in July, 1915, he was made secretary of the company and assistant manager, and as such he is adding to his reputation as an efficient business man. He is a stalwart republican. Like his father, he is a Christian Scientist. His fraternal affiliations are with the Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He also belongs to the Billings Midland Empire Club, the Billings Golf and Country Club, and the Billings Rotary Club. For some time he has been secretary of the Stroup Hardware Company of Billings, and stands very high in the estimation of that house. Mr. Worthington owns his comfortable modern residence at No. 615 North Thirtieth Street.

On November 15, 1905, Mr. Worthington was married at Beatrice, Nebraska, to Miss Mary Ellen La Salle, a daughter of LeRoy F. and Martha La Salle. Mr. La Salle died at Beatrice, but his widow survives him and makes her home in that city. He was a prominent stockman for a number of years, and interested in the industrial life of Beatrice. Mrs. Worthington is a graduate of the Beatrice High School, and a lady of admitted charm of manner. Mr. and Mrs. Worthington have the following children: La Salle, who was born October 22, 1906; Bonita, who was born April 4, 1908; and Max, who was born October 7, 1909.

Bert G. Brockway, a resident of Montana since 1901, has played several successful roles, as farmer, rancher, banker, as head of one of the largest real estate organizations in Montana and as present representative of Billings in the State Legislature.

Mr. Brockway was born at Vicksburg, Michigan, April 19, 1874, a son of George and Hattie M. (Williams) Brockway. His grandfather was a native of New York state and a pioneer in Southern Michigan, spending his life on a farm near Vicksburg. George Brockway was born in Kalamazoo County, Michigan, in 1852, was a farmer in that state, and died near Vicksburg in 1876, when Bert G. Brockway was two years old. The latter was one of two children, his older brother, William A. Brockway, being also associated in the real estate business at Billings. His mother, who resides in Billings, was born in Indiana in 1845, and after the death of her first husband became the wife of Webster J. Crane, a veteran of the Union army and also living at Billings. They have one child, Merle E., at home.

Bert G. Brockway received his early education in the public schools of Vicksburg, Michigan, and Anita, Iowa, attending high school in the latter place. He also took a course in the Normal School at Atlantic, Iowa. Leaving school at the age of nineteen, he took up the practical work of farming in Cass County, Iowa, and was thus engaged until the fall of 1896. He then went back to the scenes of his early childhood at Kalamazoo, Michigan, and for three years was engaged in the dairy business, and also was engaged in the coal and wood retail business. Coming to Billings in the spring of 1901, Mr. Brockway spent a season as cowboy on the stock ranch of Joe Sims, and then returned to the vicinity of Billings and located on an irrigated farm in the Yellowstone Valley west of Laurel. With the energy characteristic of him he prosecuted his business of farmer there for six years, and then engaged in the mercantile business at Laurel, organizing the Laurel Trading Company and also the Citizens National Bank, which he served as vice president. Disposing of his interests at Laurel in 1911, he permanently identified himself with Billings and has since looked after some valuable farming interests in addition to his active business as a real estate man.

Mr. Brockway is president of the Brockway Real Estate Company, Incorporated, with offices at 2710½ First Avenue, North, in Billings. This is one of the largest firms in the state and its transactions in 1916 included the sale of 69,943 acres, with a total money value of $1,018,895.23. The other members of the firm are William A. Brockway, vice president; Roy C. Kimmel, secretary and treasurer, and Ora J. Brockway, trustee.

Mr. Brockway has not achieved success in business at a sacrifice of the duties and responsibilities of good citizenship. He is president of the Billings Deaconess Hospital Association, a trustee of the Billings Chamber of Commerce, and trustee of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was elected on the republican ticket to the State Legislature in 1918, and during the sixteenth session of the legislature was chairman of the committee of townships and counties, and a member of the appropriation committee, the committee on live stock and public ranges and the agricultural committee. Mr. Brockway affiliates with the Congregational Church and with Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Laurel Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America.

September 4, 1895, at Atlantic, Iowa, he married Viaretta Shoup, a native of Cass County, that state. They are the parents of five children: Marie, who is a graduate of the Billings High School, and finished her education in the State University at Missoula, is the wife of J. Frank Cox, Jr., associated with the Brockway Real Estate Company at Billings; Ethel M., a graduate of the Billings High School and now a student in the State University at Missoula; Ina, a graduate in 1919 of the Billings High School; Hattie, a freshman in the local high school; and Faye, a student in the Billings grammar school.

Thomas C. Armitage, postmaster of Billings, came to Montana on the tide of the construction forces of the Northern Pacific Railway. There is hardly a phase of the development of Billings with which he is not personally acquainted, though his chief interests in Montana for many years have been identified with farming and live stock ranching. Altogether he has played a notable part in the citizenship of the state.

He was born in Monroe, Michigan, July 20, 1859, a son of George W. and Eliza (Cole) Armitage. The Armitage family is of original Irish stock and were early settlers in New York state. Mr. Armitage's mother, who is still living at Monroe, Michigan, where she was born, represents in one line the noted pioneer Kentucky family of Disbrow.

E. M. Adams

George W. Armitage grew up in New York state, and when a young man went to Monroe, Michigan, where he followed merchandising until his death. In politics he was a republican, and a very active member of the Presbyterian Church.

Thomas C. Armitage acquired his education in the public schools of Monroe, graduating from high school, and at the age of sixteen took up railroad service, working for a railroad company at New Orleans about one year. He then became connected with the Santa Fe Company, working in Kansas, also in St. Louis, Missouri, and first joined the forces of the Northern Pacific in the superintendent's office at Brainerd, Minnesota. He was there four years, and as a member of the construction department arrived at Miles City, Montana, in 1881. He spent the winter there and in the spring of 1882 came to Billings and was one of the few settlers of that year who are still alive and residents of the city. In 1883 he continued with the construction forces of the Northern Pacific in building the National Park branch from Livingston, and helped construct the branch line from Superior to Ashland, Wisconsin, then the Phillipsburg branch to Montana, the Marysville branch and other branch lines. In 1890 he was appointed the first agent of the Northern Pacific at Marysville, and held that office three years.

Almost as soon as he came to Montana in 1882 Mr. Armitage took up a tract of government land near Billings, joining the town on the west. In 1893, on leaving the railroad service, he settled on the ranch and still owns and operates it and made it his home until 1914. He was appointed postmaster of Billings in 1913, and on taking over the office moved his home into the city. He was appointed by President Wilson and in 1918 was reappointed for another term of four years. He is a man of thorough business ability and has conducted the office in a way satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. Armitage was also elected a member of the Legislature in 1907, serving during the fifth session. He is a member of the Congregational Church. His modern home, built in 1915, is at 227 Wyoming Street.

Mr. Armitage married at Drummond, Montana, in 1887, Miss Julia Whiteside, daughter of Andrew J. and Mary Whiteside, the latter still living at Port Angeles, Washington. Her father was a pioneer farmer in Deer Lodge County, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Armitage are the parents of five children: Sydney C., a graduate of the Billings High School and now in the oil business in Kansas; George T., who graduated from high school and from the State University at Missoula, is a first lieutenant in the National Army and was with the American contingent in Siberia; John Kenneth, a gradute of high school, is an employe of the Yellowstone Bank of Billings; Harriet and Florence, the two younger children, are high school students. Sydney C. was a lieutenant in the artillery, and at the time of the armistice was stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, from which place he soon after received his discharge. John Kenneth was in the National Army at Camp Lewis for nearly one year and received his discharge in February, 1919.

E. M. Adams, M. D. During the first twenty-five years of his life Dr. Adams did little else than attend school and acquire the thorough academic and professional training which has served him so well in his real work as a physician and surgeon. Dr. Adams came to Red Lodge, Montana, ten years ago and is regarded as one of the most competent surgeons in his part of the state.

Dr. Adams' family history belongs to New England, and his ancestors were of the sturdy and thrifty people typical of New England character. He was born at East Swanzey, New Hampshire, August 7, 1882. His paternal ancestry goes back to an early date in the Massachusetts colony, and a number of generations back his ancestry corresponded to that from which descended in another branch the statesman who twice filled the chair of President of the United States. His grandfather, Albert Adams, was born in 1808 and spent most of his life as a farmer at Rindge, New Hampshire, where he died of pneumonia in 1875. His wife, Mary P. Adams, was born in 1811 and died of apoplexy at Rindge in 1884. John B. Adams, father of Dr. Adams, was born at Rindge August 12, 1842, and spent most of his life in that state. He was a farmer, lumberman and lumber dealer and successively made his home at Rindge, East Jeffrey, East Swanzey and Hancock. He died at Hancock December 11, 1909. He was a democrat, very active and influential in local affairs, and filled the office of commissioner of Hillsboro County, was a member of the school board several times, and supervisor of highways. He was also identified with the Grange. John B. Adams married Mary J. Woodbury, who was born at Winchendon, Massachusetts, November 11, 1850, and is now living at Hancock, New Hampshire. Her parents were Samuel D. and Jerusha D. Woodbury. Her father was born December 9, 1816, was a farmer and merchant at Winchendon, Massachusetts, and died there of dysentery August 23, 1899. His wife was born July 22, 1820, and spent her last years with her daughter, Mrs. John B. Adams, and died at Hancock January 9, 1916. The children of John B. Adams and wife were: George A., an attorney at Salamanca, New York; Fred Albert, a fruit grower at Dublin, New Hampshire; J. H. Adams, who is head bookkeeper for the Moxie Nerve Food Company at Boston, Massachusetts; Dr. E. M. Adams; Ernest L., a merchant at Hancock, New Hampshire; Charles E., who is in the engineering department of the American Expeditionary Forces; and R. W., who lives on the farm with his mother at Hancock.

Dr. E. M. Adams attended public school at East Swansey, spent one year in high school at Hancock and four years in Cushing Academy at Ashburnham, Massachusetts. He was graduated there in 1903, and during the following year did post-graduate work in the Dean Academy at Franklin, Massachusetts. In the fall of 1904 he entered the University of Cincinnati, where he spent one year in the general academic and medical preparatory courses and in the fall of 1905 began the regular work of the medical department, completing his course and graduating M. D. in 1909. During 1908-09 he was interne in the German Deaconess Hospital at Cincinnati. Dr. Adams has membership in several college and medical fraternities, including the Phi Delta Theta, Theta Nu Epsilon and the Nu Sigma Nu.

He arrived at Red Lodge, Montana, June 9, 1909, and from that date to the present has been engaged in a general medical and surgical practice, though more and more his services are required in the special field of surgery. Some years ago he established a private hospital for the greater convenience of his clients, and its patients come from Montana and Wyoming. Since 1916 he has been health officer and secretary of the Board of Health of Carbon County and holds similar positions in the City of Red Lodge. He is also company physician for the Northwestern Improvement Company and is a member of the County and State Medical societies and the American Medical Association. His offices are in the Church Building on Broadway.

Dr. Adams is a democrat in politics and is affiliated with Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Red Lodge Aerie No. 742, Fraternal Order of Eagles, Red Lodge Chapter, Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and Red Lodge Camp of Woodmen of the World. Besides his modern home at 301 North Hauser Avenue, he has a ranch of 320 acres on Shane Ridge. In 1919 he completed his private hospital on South Hauser Avenue. This hospital has twenty-five rooms and is equipped with every device known to the modern hospital.

August 31, 1910, at Red Lodge, Dr. Adams married Miss Mary E. Edwards, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel T. Edwards. Her mother is deceased. Her father is a retired farmer at Clinton, Missouri. Mrs. Adams is a graduate of the State Normal School of Missouri.

S. W. Matlock, serving his third term as sheriff of Yellowstone County, is a Montana pioneer, having been a resident of Billings and vicinity for over twenty-one years. He has all the virile qualities associated with the true westerner, is a man of resolute purpose, and has a reputation for utmost reliability in the performance of everything he undertakes.

Mr. Matlock was born near Pattonsburg, Missouri, March 7, 1872. His ancestors came from Scotland to the United States in colonial times. His grandfather, James Matlock, was a pioneer in Northwestern Missouri and died in Ray County many years ago. Ray County, Missouri, was a part of the old Platte purchase, and the Matlocks were among the first to settle there. James Matlock, father of Sheriff Matlock, was born in Ray County in 1835. He spent most of his life as a farmer in Daviess County, in the same section of Missouri, and died there in 1894. He was a democrat in political affiliation. James Matlock married Fredonia Gordon, who was born in Kentucky in 1846 and is now living near Pattonsburg, in Daviess County. She was the mother of a large family of children, named briefly as follows: George, a farmer at Twin Falls, Idaho; Benjamin, a farmer in Daviess County, Missouri; Mary, living with her mother; S. W. Matlock; Wood, a farmer at Ainsley, Nebraska; Tillie, wife of Ed White, a farmer in Kansas; Belle, who died in 1911 at Terry, Montana, wife of Henry Kincaid; Leah, wife of D. Ingalls, of Perry; Lizzie, who is the present wife of Henry Kincaid, a dairyman and farmer at Perry, Montana; and Addie, wife of John Way, a farmer at Perry.

S. W. Matlock grew up on his father's farm in Daviess County, Missouri, attended the rural schools, and acquired a practical knowledge of farming and cattle feeding. In 1888 he came to Montana, spending one season on a ranch near Billings and then worked in the coal and wood business in the City of Billings for a year and had many experiences and occupations, serving four years as superintendent of the Big Ditch in Yellowstone County. For three years he was a member of the Billings police force, for two years was deputy state humane officer, and has all the experience and other qualifications of the capable and trustworthy public official. He served as deputy sheriff under James Webb in 1907-08. Mr. Matlock was elected sheriff of Yellowstone County in 1914, and was re-elected in 1916 and 1918.

He has acquired a considerable stake in the agricultural life of Montana, owning a farm of three hundred and twenty acres at Broadview and another of similar acreage at Pompey's Pillar. Mr. Matlock, who is unmarried, is affiliated with Billings Star Lodge of Odd Fellows and Billings Camp of the Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a democrat.

Cornelius S. Nelson is editor and proprietor of the Plentywood Herald, the pioneer newspaper of Sheridan County and the first paper published in the Big Muddy Valley. For twelve years the Herald has been the chief medium for publicity and home news in this section of the state, and it is properly regarded as one of the most valuable of pioneer institutions.

Mr. Nelson, whose early experiences were farming and banking before he came to Montana, was born at Hendrum, Minnesota, March 12, 1876. He is a son of Sybert and Barbo (Moen) Nelson, the former a native of Bergen and the latter of Valders, Norway. They were members of Norwegian families of farmers, and both were urged by American friends to cast in their lot with the new world. Mrs. Nelson's transportation was paid by some friends on this side, while Mr. Nelson paid his own steerage passage. They met and were married in Fillmore County, Minnesota. Sybert Nelson served his apprenticeship as a blacksmith in the old country and followed that trade throughout his active life. He also accepted the opportunity in Minnesota to acquire cheap land, and became interested in farming, owning some developed farms. He retired after gaining his financial independence. He early took out citizenship papers, and cast his first presidental ballot for General Grant and was ever afterward identified with the republican party. At one time he served as an alderman of his home town in Minnesota. He and his wife were members of the Lutheran Church. Their children were: Maria, who married A. M. Eckmann and died at Hendrum, Minnesota; Cornelius S.; Theodore S., a banker; and Anton, a farmer at Hendrum, Minnesota; Julia, wife of F. G. Johnson, of Scobey, Montana; Martin, of Plentywood; and Amanda, wife of A. G. Ueland, of Outlook, Montana.

Cornelius Nelson lived on a farm to the age of seventeen, and during that time knew what it was to work hard and strenuously at manual labor. He attended country schools, also Concordia College at Moorehead, Minnesota, and graduated in 1900 from the Illinois Normal School at Dixon. He also spent two years at the University of Minnesota. Before coming to Montana he saw a great deal of the Middle Western country. At Guthrie, Oklahoma, he was appointed and served two years as deputy sheriff under Sheriff Carpenter. On leaving Oklahoma he returned North, and for three years was at Crosby and Ambrose, North Dakota, serving as assistant cashier of banks in those towns.

He came to Plentywood in July, 1908, and his purpose in coming was to establish a paper. For several months he was busy making arrangements to that end, and opened his office and issued his first edition of the Herald on Octobr 23, 1908. His first editorial announced it as a republican weekly and devoted particularly to rural development and homesteaders' news and similar interests. Naturally the paper did not receive the heartiest welcome from the ranchers, who had long enjoyed the freedom of the plains and had exploited the local resources to their own advantage. However, by the publication of a fair and clean paper he made friends of ranchers and homesteaders alike, and his policy and management have altogether resulted in a great deal of practical good to the entire locality.

One of Mr. Nelson's first acts on coming to Montana was to file on a homestead. Luckily this homestead adjoins the townsite, and its situation is such as to make it available for townsite purposes when the need for "a greater Plentywood" becomes apparent. Mr. Nelson resides on the homestead, his home being within the limits of Plentywood.

His early political training was as a republican, and in 1900 he cast his first presidential ballot for Major McKinley. He has always regularly supported the republican nominees. His paper has been the official city paper of Plentywood ever since the incorporation of the town. Mr. Nelson was made a Mason while at Guthrie, Oklahoma, and is now affiliated with Plentywood Lodge of that order.

At Crosby, North Dakota, July 29, 1908, he married Miss Anna Thoreson. She was born at Brandon, Minnesota, in August, 1877. Her father, Chris Thoreson, was born in Norway, came to the United States in young manhood, and married at Brandon, Minnesota, a lady of German birth. Chris Thoreson is a hardware and implement merchant at Mohall, North Dakota. His children included Mrs. Nelson; Lena, wife of A. A. Burke, of Greenbush, Minnesota; Mrs. Homer McKenzie, of St. Cloud, Minnesota; Mrs. George Keup, of Columbus, North Dakota; John and William, of Sherwood, North Dakota; Bennie, of Carpio, North Dakota; Emma, a teacher at Havre, Montana; and Gladys, of Mohall, North Dakota.

Mrs. Nelson completed her education in the St. Cloud Normal School, and taught for several years in Minnesota. She first met Mr. Nelson while proving up a homestead at Crosby, North Dakota. She has done much to insure the success of the Herald at Plentywood and at times has carried some of the local work of the office. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nelson were earnest in their support of war movements, Mrs. Nelson serving as local chairman of the Red Cross Chapter. They were reared as Lutherans but now affiliate with the Congregational Church at Plentywood.

W. M. Bradford. The Bradfords of Livingston, Montana, are a branch of one of the oldest families in American history. Their ancestry goes back to the original Mayflower pilgrims, one of the leaders in which noted band was Governor Bradford. This particular branch of the family were among the earliest settlers in the old Northwestern Territory, later the State of Ohio, and their particular talent has apparently been chiefly mechanical, since nearly all the members of the family in Montana have followed constructive lines. W. M. Bradford, of that family, is a veteran railroad man, a carpenter by trade, and for a number of years has been supervisor of the bridge and building department of the Northern Pacific Railway at Livingston.

His grandfather, Charles Otis Bradford, was born in 1799 in what three years later became the State of Ohio. He spent his life in Ohio as a farmer and died in Hancock County in 1839. He married Jane Sparr, who was born in Ohio in 1797 and died at Schuyler, Nebraska, in 1891. C. O. Bradford, father of W. M. Bradford, was born in Hancock County, Ohio, April 3, 1839, and during his early life there followed farming. In 1866 he moved to Tipton County, Indiana, and there became a blacksmith and wagon maker. In 1873 he moved to Schuyler, Colfax County, Nebraska, and was a carpenter and builder. Since 1905 his home has been at Livingston, Montana, and though now eighty years of age he is still working as a carpenter for the Northern Pacific Railway. A republican in politics, he has been honored with local offices and is a very active member of the Methodist Church. In 1863 he enlisted in Company A of the 47th Ohio Infantry and served throughout the remainder of the war, taking part in Sherman's campaign around Atlanta and the march to the sea. The wife of this veteran soldier was Sarah J. Cornwall, who was born in Hancock County, Ohio, in 1842. She died in September, 1919, in Lima, Ohio. The first of their children, Winslow, died when twelve years of age. Willis C., the second, is bridge and building foreman for the Northern Pacific at Livingston. W. M. Bradford is the next in age. C. Edward is a Burlington Railway engineer, living at Sheridan, Wyoming. Robert is a contractor and builder at Livingston. S. D. is a bridge and building foreman for the Northern Pacific at Livingston. William Oliver is a contractor and builder at Valparaiso, Nebraska. Ollie is the wife of Edgar Fusselman, a clerk in the bridge and building department under W. M. Bradford.

W. M. Bradford was born July 5, 1867, while his parents were living in Tipton County, Indiana. He had just reached school age when they moved to Nebraska, and he graduated from the high school at Schuyler in 1888. His active career covers a period of thirty years. Until 1896 he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, beginning as a carpenter, and finally was made foreman of the bridge and building department. In 1896 he joined the Northern Pacific at Livingston, again was carpenter for two years, was then made bridge and building clerk, from that was promoted to bridge and building foreman, and from 1912 has been supervisor of the bridge and building department with offices in the Northern Pacific Building on Park Street. In his present position he has widely extended responsibilities, handling an average of 150 men and looking after all the work assigned to his department over a stretch of approximately 700 miles of the Northern Pacific line.

Mr. Bradford is also well known as a Livingston citizen, having served two years as a member of the City Council, while in 1915 he was appointed and served two years as mayor. His administration was a very progressive one and is remembered for several important improvements, including the installation of a garbage system, the paving of streets and the installation of an ornamental lighting system. Mr. Bradford is a republican, is a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was formerly identified with the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. He is owner of a modern home at 102 South F Street.

In Schuyler, Nebraska, Mr. Bradford married Miss Alice Shaw, born in Nebraska, from which union two children were born. The oldest was Louis, who, while employed as a brakeman with the Great Northern Railway, was killed at Cutbank at the age of nineteen. The second of the family, Helen, lives at Seattle, Washington, where her husband is a hoisting engineer. Mrs. Bradford died in 1894. In 1899 Mr. Bradford married Miss Florence Roup, who was born in Iowa. The two children by this union are Harry and Ruth, the former a junior in the Park County High School and the latter in grammar school.

Robert B. Bradford, a brother of W. M. Bradford, supervisor of the bridge and building department of the Northern Pacific Railway, is, like other members of the family, a carpenter by trade, and has built up an extensive business as a general contractor at Livingston.

He was born in Tipton County, Indiana, April 12, 1872, son of C. O. Bradford, now a resident of Livingston. Robert B. Bradford left the public schools of Schuyler, Nebraska, at the age of sixteen and then worked steadily at the carpenter's trade. He did some contracting while at Schuyler and in August, 1900, came to Livingston, Montana, and has been active as a building contractor ever since. Some of the chief business blocks and private residences of Livingston have been constructed by his skillful and expert organization. For five years he had charge of a carpenter shop under the bridges and building department of the Northern Pacific. A few examples of his work in Livingston are the Ebert Apartment, the Park Hospital, the Golden Rule Department Store, the garage of the United Motors Company, the residences of John Seaman, S. O. Brady, C. S. Hefferlin and many others.

Mr. Bradford is a republican, a Methodist, is affiliated with the Elks, Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America, and also belongs to the Carpenters' Union. He is regarded as one of the most loyal and public spirited citizens of Livingston.

In 1895, at Schuyler, Nebraska, Mr. Bradford, married Miss Cora Spidle, daughter of George and Jane (Morgan) Spidle, now retired farmers of Schuyler. Mr. and Mrs. Bradford have three children: Lorren, a student in the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, and George Theron and Virgil, both students in the public schools at Livingston.

Lewis Terwilliger. Until about five years ago Lewis Terwilliger was known in several cities and communities of Montana as a successful educator. He had taken up teaching probably with the intention of making it his life work in his native state of Michigan, and after coming to Montana he was teacher, principal and school superintendent for a number of years. After ten years of service as principal of the Park County High School he resigned to take up business, and now has a prosperous abstract and real estate business at Livingston, is mayor of that city, is interested in several industrial corporations, and is one of the best known Masons and Knights of Pythias in Montana.

Mr. Terwilliger was born in Clinton County, Michigan, August 1, 1869. His paternal ancestors came originally from Holland and were identified with the colonial settlement of New York. His grandfather, Tiras Terwilliger, was born in New York State in 1809, and afterward moved with his family to Michigan and was a pioneer settler in the central part of that state. He died on his farm in Montcalm County, Michigan, in 1889. His wife was Abigail Sprague, also a native of New York. Homer Terwilliger, father of the Livingston business man, was born in New York State in 1841 and died in Clinton County, Michigan, in 1905. He was quite young when he went to Michigan with his parents, and after his marriage spent his life as a farmer in Clinton County. In 1861 he became a Union soldier, a member of the 8th Michigan Infantry, and was all through the war, being four times wounded in battle and spending six months in a rebel prison. He was in the battles of Antietam and the Wilderness, and operated with Burnside's Division around Knoxville, Tennessee. Politically he was a republican and was a very devout Methodist. Homer Terwilliger married Lucinda Lewis, who was born in Michigan in 1846 and died in Clinton County, that state, in 1896. Lewis is the oldest of their three children. The other two both live in Michigan, Lee being a blacksmith at Crystal, while Asahel is a farmer in Montcalm County.

Lewis Terwilliger received his primary education in the rural schools of his native county, graduated from the high school at Maple Rapids in 1887, and in 1890 graduated in the normal and scientific departments of Ferris Institute at Big Rapids. In the meantime and afterward he put in about seven years as a teacher in Michigan, being assistant principal at Maple Rapids two years, principal at Eagle Harbor three years and principal of the Stambaugh schools two years.

Mr. Terwilliger came to Montana in 1895, was principal of schools at Townsend one year, assistant superintendent at Butte one year and three years principal of the city schools at Boulder. He then helped organize the Jefferson County High School, and remained as its principal three years. In 1903 he accepted the responsibilities of principal of the Park County High School at Livingston, and when he resigned ten years later it was to identify himself permanently with that city as a business man. For one year he was connected with the First State Bank, and has since built up an organization of his own, handling abstracts and real estate, his transactions covering a large part of Southern Montana. His offices are at 123 South Main Street. Evidently Mr. Terwilliger is a thorough business man, and has been more successful financially than most men who devote a large part of their time to teaching. He owns a grain and stock ranch of six hundred and forty acres two and a half miles southwest of Wilsall, also has a modern residence at 209 South Sixth Street in Livingston, and is secretary of the Yellowstone Valley Land and Irrigation Company and a director in the Livingston Marble and Granite Works.

Mr. Terwilliger was elected mayor of Livingston in April, 1919, for a term of two years. He is a republican in politics. His Masonic affiliations are with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of which he is past master; Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Mason, of which he is past high priest; St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, of which he is past eminent commander; Orient Chapter No. 6 of the Eastern Star, and is past grand patron of the State of Montana, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and Livingston Consistory No. 1. In 1919 he received the 33rd degree, the highest degree in Masonry. He is past chancellor commander of Yellowstone Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, at Livingston, and as master of arms of the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias is in line for the office of grand chancellor of the Grand Lodge of the state. He is past exalted ruler of Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks and is a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce and the Livingston Commercial Club.

In 1896, at Reed City, Michigan, Mr. Terwilliger married Miss Mary Bennett. Her father, Charles Bennett, is deceased and her mother now lives at Salt Lake City, Utah. Mrs. Terwilliger before her marriage was a teacher in Michigan. She took kindergarten training at the Ferris Institute in Big Rapids. Mr. and Mrs. Terwilliger have two children: Vena, a graduate of the Park County High School and a teacher in Park County, and Homer, a graduate of the county high school and now associated with his father in business.

Samuel Mott Souders, M. D. Dr. Souders became a resident of Red Lodge January 19, 1901. He had recently graduated in medicine and came to the Northwest highly recommended for his abilities and talents. He came to Red Lodge as assistant surgeon for the Northwestern Improvement Company and later was appointed chief surgeon, though in the meantime he has built up a large general medical and surgical practice. Dr. Souders gave Red Lodge a splendid hospital, a four-story modern hospital building which he erected on Broadway, opposite the postoffice. He owns and directs this institution, and it has facilities for the accommodation of from thirty to fifty patients. These patients have been received from all the Northwestern states, including Montana, Wyoming, Dakotas and Idaho.

Dr. Souders, who has therefore filled an important place in the citizenship of Carbon County for the past eighteen years, was born at Beavertown, Ohio, May 5, 1873. His original ancestors in the paternal line came out of Germany to America about the period of the Revolutionary war, locating in Virginia. His grandfather, John Souders, was born at Alexandria, Virginia, in 1800 and moved from his native state to Ohio, where he followed farming. He served as a soldier in the war with Mexico in 1846-47. He died at Circleville, Ohio, in 1881. His wife bore the maiden name of Ann Slater. She was born in Virginia and died in Circleville, Ohio.

Dr. Souders' father was an honored physician and spent his entire life in Ohio. For more than half a century he practiced medicine and surgery at Dean in that state. He was born at Circleville in 1833 and died at Dean in 1917. He took much interest in local affairs, filling various offices, and in politics was a prohibitionist. During the Civil war he was a surgeon in the Union army. His church membership was English Lutheran. Dr. Samuel Souders married Jennie O'Neill, who was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, in 1844 and died at Dayton, Ohio, in August, 1917. Her mother was a cousin of General Sherman. Dr. Samuel Souders and wife had a family of four children. Minnie, the oldest, has been with the American Red Cross in overseas work, and in the spring of 1919 was still in Italy on duty with that organization. She is the widow of E. W. Darst, who was a prominent minister of the Christian Church and at one time was pastor of large churches in Boston, Massachusetts, Chicago, Illinois, and Berkeley, California. The second child is Maud, wife of Professor John Heiss, Professor of Modern Languages at Purdue University in Lafayette, Indiana. Dr. Souders is third in age, while Myrtle, the youngest, is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music at Cincinnati and is instructor in music at Dayton, Ohio.

Samuel Mott Souders acquired his early education in the public schools of Dean, attended the Dayton High School, a preparatory school at Springfield, Ohio, and in 1893 graduated with the A. B. degree from Wittenberg College at Springfield. The following four years he spent as principal of the high school in Van Buren Township of Montgomery County, Ohio. He then entered the University of Cincinnati and completed the work of the Medical College in 1900. He is a member of the Greek letter fraternity Beta Theta Pi and the Omega Upsilon Phi medical fraternity. Dr. Souders is a thoroughly progressive and advanced man in his profession and spent every summer from 1901 to 1917 in postgraduate work. The University of Wittenberg conferred upon him the degree A. M. in 1917. He has also attended surgical clinics in Philadelphia, New York City, Cincinnati and Chicago. After graduating Dr. Souders was interne of the Jewish Hospital of Cincinnati until he came out to Montana. He has served as health officer of Carbon County and the City of Red Lodge and is an active member of the Carbon County Medical Society, being its president, of the Yellowstone Valley Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He also belongs to the Volunteer Medical Corps of the United States. Dr. Souders has acquired some valuable property since coming to Montana. One is an irrigated ranch of 148 acres on Rock Creek near Red Lodge. He also has 640 acres of deeded land on Dry Creek and owns an eighth interest in 1,600 acres where the Empire Gas and Fuel Company have been drilling for gas, and also a third interest in a ranch of 200 acres devoted to fruit culture at Fromberg.

Dr. Souders is a republican, was reared in the Lutheran Church and now affiliates with the Episcopal Church at Red Lodge and is a vestryman. He is a member of the Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Carbon Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Dr. Souders married Miss Margaret Jones on December 25, 1901, at Vernon, Texas. Her mother is still living at Vernon. Her father, the late Thomas Jones, was a stockman, merchant and townsite promoter at Vernon, was one of the leading pioneers of Wilbarger County, Texas, served as sheriff of that county, and organized and promoted several townsites in the Red River Valley. Dr. and Mrs. Souders have three children: Mott, Jr., born December 10, 1905; Margaret Elizabeth, born January 12, 1911; and Helen Jeanette, born May 14, 1912.

B. Thorwald Krohne is active head of the real estate business developed by his late honored father, Charles O. Krohne, who came to Livingston thirty years ago and by his business energy and public spirited devotion to the city's best interests is one of the men who deserve longest memory among the upbuilders of this part of the state. The business is now conducted by B. T. and C. E. Krohne under the title of C. O. Krohne Sons.

Charles O. Krohne was born in Sweden in 1863. He died at Livingston August 8, 1917. He was reared and married in his native country and there learned the trade of machinist. On coming to the United States in 1885 he settled in Minneapolis, where he continued work at his trade. In 1889 he moved to Livingston, and shortly afterward gave up his mechanical vocation and established and eventually built up one of the leading real estate and insurance organizations of Southern Montana. He made his business a source of direct benefit to the broader prosperity of Livingston and the surrounding territory and was always diligent in working for the city's welfare. He was a man of charitable instincts and gave liberally of his means and personal influence to objects and causes outside the average man's interest. He served as public administrator for Park County several times. He was a republican, a member of the English Lutheran Church and affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Charles O. Krohne married Tekla Johnson, who was born in Sweden and is a resident of Livingston.

The successors of the honored father are his two sons, B. Thorwald and C. E. B. Thorwald Krohne was born at Minneapolis March 8, 1888, but has spent practically all his life at Livingston. He attended the public schools, was a student in the State College at Bozeman until 1908, and the following year attended Phelps Business College, also at Bozeman. He then took an active part in the business of his father, also farmed, and since the death of his father has handled the interests both in town and in the country. His offices are at 116 East Callender Street. Mr. Krohne owns a ranch of 700 acres in the Yellowstone Canyon, a place of forty-four acres adjoining Livingston, and 320 acres north of town. He is unmarried, is a republican, a member of the Lutheran Church, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks No. 246. His home is a modern residence at 327 South H Street.

CHARLES S. HEFFERLIN came to Montana in 1882 with the Northern Pacific Railway. A few years later he graduated from railroading, and began the work with which his name is destined to be long associated in Livingston, town builder and business developer. He has probably done more to develop the business section of Livingston than any other individual, and is also a local banker of more than thirty years of successful experience.

He was born in Easton, Leavenworth County, Kansas, February 5, 1857. His father, Martin A. Hefferlin, was born in the Province of Loraine, France, and on coming to this country lived at St. Louis, later at Weston, Missouri, and finally at Wyandotte, Kansas. For many years he was a merchant. In politics he was a democrat. He died at Wyandotte in 1875. Martin A. Hefferlin married Louise Ann Humphrey, who was born in Ohio in 1835 and died at Livingston, Montana, in March, 1901. Several of their sons have become well known in Montana. The oldest child, M. A. Hefferlin, was a railroad clerk and died at Wyandotte, Kansas, at the age of twenty-seven. O. M. Hefferlin was an early day merchant at Livingston, where he died in 1918. Charles S. is the third in age. H. D. Hefferlin is proprietor of the Albemarle Hotel at Livingston. William N. was for many years a merchant and is now employed as a machinist in the Northern Pacific shops at Livingston. Ida M., the only daughter, is a resident of Livingston, widow of John M. Coyan, a former merchant of that city. J. W. Hefferlin, the youngest son, is a real estate broker in Livingston.

Charles S. Hefferlin graduated from the Wyandotte High School in 1872. For three years following he worked in the local postoffice and then became chief clerk in the Wyandotte office of the Kansas Pacific Railroad. Subsequently he was with the Kansas Pacific at Ellis, Kansas, spending three years there and about three years in Denver, Colorado. In 1882 he became cashier of the Northern Pacific Railroad at Billings, soon afterward was sent to Custer, and in 1883 arrived at Livingston. He remained with the Northern Pacific five years longer, and having in the meantime taken full measure of the present and prospective advantages of Livingston proceeded to put his ideas and plans into effective execution. In 1884 he built the Hefferlin Block, one of the first of many building improvements which now constitute him probably the largest property owner in Park County. In 1882 he built the Merchants Bank Opera House Building, and the following year organized the banking institution, which for thirty years has been owned and conducted by him and is at once one of the oldest and most conservative and successful banking institutions in Southern Montana. He started the bank with a capital of $25,000, while today it has $100,000 capital and is patronized by many of the leading business men and business corporations of the state. This bank in 1900 opened the first distinct department for small savings depositors in Livingston.

In 1882 Mr. Hefferlin built the Hefferlin Opera House, and in later years the Auditorium Block, the Callender Block, Electric Block, Holly Block, and he built and equipped the Livingston Flour Mills in 1898. Fully a score of business structures in Livingston have been built and owned by him. He was one of the organizers and principal promoters of the Electric Hot Springs Company to develop the resources of the Corwin Hot Springs as a popular health resort.

Mr. Hefferlin has given much of his time and means to promote the best interests of his home community. For the past four years he has served as chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Park County. He was a member of the Eighth Session of the Legislature from Park County and is a former member of the City Council and Board of Education. He is active in the Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club, and is a former member of the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Hefferlin has a ranch of 400 acres on the Mission, and at the present time is owner of twenty-five store and business buildings in the heart of Livingston. He also has a modern home at 220 South Yellowstone Street.

October 13, 1887, at Livingston, he married Miss Florence M. Holliday. She was born at Winterset, Iowa, daughter of Samuel L. Holliday, who became well known in Montana as a pioneer merchant, rancher and stockman. He died at Livingston in 1917. Mr. and Mrs. Hefferlin have two children: Charles H., a graduate of the Park County High School, is now cashier of the Merchants Bank, having been associated with his father in that institution for several years. Marie, the only daughter, is still at home.

WARD HIGLEY NYE. An educator of exceptional gifts and experience, Ward Higley Nye was called from a position as superintendent of one of the finest school systems in Ohio to the superintendency of the city schools of Billings, and in that work has fulfilled all the expectations entertained of his ability as a school administrator. His influence as an educator is not confined to Billings, since he is a member of two of the most important organizations affecting the state school system, the State Board of Education and the State Text Book Committee.

Mr. Nye was born at Windsor in Ashtabula County, Ohio, May 24, 1872. His paternal ancestors were originally from Denmark, going from there to England, and thence coming to Massachusetts in colonial times. His grandfather, Hezekiah Nye, was a Connecticut Yankee, born in 1823, and when a young man went to the Western Reserve of Ohio and established his home in Ashtabula County. He was a farmer and died at Orwell, Ohio, in 1884. He married Mary Baldwin, a native of Ohio.

Frank Nye, father of the Montana educator, was born in Ashtabula County in 1849 and has spent his active life as a farmer in that county. He is now living retired at Orwell. He is a republican and an Odd Fellow. His wife, Frances Higley, was born at Hartsgrove in Ashtabula County in 1851. They had two sons, Ward H. and Aymer. The latter resigned in 1919 as postmaster of Orwell to resume his active business career.

Ward H. Nye attended the rural schools of Ashtabula County, was graduated in 1893 from the New Lime Institute at New Lyme, Ohio, spent two years in Western Reserve University at Cleveland, paying his way by teaching in the city night schools, and in 1901 graduated A. B. from Oberlin College in Oberlin, Ohio. In the intervals of his busy career as a teacher he has taken post-graduate work at Harvard University.

Mr. Nye began teaching when seventeen years of age in one of the country districts of Ashtabula County. He continued that work for two years while advancing his own education, spent one year as a teacher in New Lime Institute, for two years was principal of the village school at North Bloomfield, Ohio, and after graduating from college was for two years principal of the Oberlin High School, for one year principal of the high school at Urbana, Ohio, and before coming to Montana was for five years superintendent of schools of the City of

T. J. Benson

Oberlin. He was elected superintendent of schools at Billings in 1908 and for over ten years has been in charge of the city school system. Superintendent Nye has under his supervision twelve schools, a staff of 120 teachers, while the scholarship enrollment is 4,000.

He has been a member of the State Text Book Committee of Montana for seven years, and for eight years a member of the State Board of Education, having first been appointed by Governor Norris and reappointed by Governor Stewart. He is a member of the Montana State Teachers Association and the National Education Association, and is active in the Billings Midland Club, which incorporates the Chamber of Commerce. Politically he is independent and is a member of the Congregational Church. He has active fraternal affiliations with the Masonic Order in Ohio, including membership in Hartsgrove Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Urbana Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Elyria Commandery, Knights Templar, and Al Koran Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Cleveland.

July 2, 1895, at New Lyme, Ohio, Mr. Nye married Annie Belle Rathbone, daughter of Dr. A. G. and Priscilla (Watson) Rathbone. Her mother is still living at New Lyme, Ohio. Her father spent his active life as a physician and surgeon in that Ohio village. Mr. and Mrs. Nye are the parents of two sons, Paul, born June 24, 1896, spent three years in the State Agricultural College at Bozeman and is now in the real estate business at Billings, and Howard, born February 6, 1905, is a pupil in the public schools.

Andrew Lewis Guthrie. Much of the history of the community of Reed Point in Stillwater County revolves around the name and personality of Andrew Lewis Guthrie, the pioneer merchant there, formerly postmaster, and for many years active as a rancher there and elsewhere in Montana.

Mr. Guthrie, a Kentuckian by birth, has been a resident of Montana for nearly thirty years. He was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, March 28, 1866. His paternal ancestors were colonial settlers in Virginia from Scotland. His father, Stephen A. Guthrie, was born in Clinton County, Kentucky, in 1834 and died in that county in 1906. He spent his life as a farmer, was a democrat, gave much attention to his church duties as a Methodist, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Martha J. Southerland, who was born in Wayne County, Kentucky, in 1835, and died in Clinton County March 16, 1890. Most of their large family of children, eleven in number, have lived in Kentucky. However, Aaron, the oldest, went to Texas and was a farmer there until his death. Margaret died in Clinton County, as did also her husband, J. S. Bell, a merchant. Marshall was a Wayne County, Kentucky, farmer and died there. J. Thomas is a farmer in Clinton County. Abijah died in childhood. The sixth in age is Andrew Lewis. Robert also became a well known Montana resident, was a farmer, and was serving as sheriff of Stillwater County when he died at Columbus in 1914. Allen S. is the other of the three brothers who are residents of Montana, and he is a stockman in Sweetgrass county. Viola is the wife of Cicero Owens, of Wayne County, Kentucky. Laura lives in Clinton County in her native state, widow of Carter Stephenson, who was a merchant. Zelma is the wife of Cecil Harrison, a farmer in the State of Washington.

Andrew L. Guthrie attended rural schools in Clinton County, Kentucky, and lived on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years of age. On coming to Montana in 1890 he had some employment at Big Timber, but late in the same year went to Lewistown and spent four years as an employe of B. C. White. He then returned to the Big Timber district and was for ten years in the sheep business there.

Mr. Guthrie then homesteaded ten miles southeast of Reed Point, and he still owns that quarter section. Many of his interests, however, have been closely identified with Reed Point, where he owns a hundred lots on the townsite and in 1906 established the pioneer general store. This was a small stock of goods, but Mr. Guthrie was a popular as well as capable merchant and his business has grown and prospered until it is one of the leading stores in Stillwater County. He also owns the building in which it is conducted and a large garage and a residence.

Mr. Guthrie served as postmaster of Reed Point for nine years under the Roosevelt administration. However, he is a democrat in politics. He is affiliated with Reed Point Lodge of Masons, and also with the Odd Fellows.

In 1899, at Bozeman, Montana, he married Miss Sophia Brumfield, daughter of James and Luthena (Patten) Brumfield. Her mother is living at Reed Point and her father was a farmer and died near Bozeman. Mrs. Guthrie is the present postmaster of Reed Point. To their marriage were born seven children: Vinton L., manager of his father's garage; Robert, Alice and Arthur, all attending public schools; Lucile, Gail and Rex Pershing, the babies of the family.

Theodore J. Benson, M. D. No profession has more eminent men connected with it than that devoted to the practice of medicine and the safeguarding of the nation's health, and Montana has its fair share of these practitioners, who not only are an honor to their calling, but also to their country, for without exception they are excellent men and worthy citizens. One of the best examples of this class is Dr. Theodore J. Benson, physician and surgeon, who is engaged in an active practice at Fromberg.

Doctor Benson was born at Northfield, Minnesota, July 29, 1873, a son of Olaf Benson and his wife, Bessie (Johnson) Benson, and grandson of John Johnson, born in Sweden. John Johnson died near Redwing, Minnesota, soon after coming to the United States, at a period antedating the birth of Doctor Benson. Olaf Benson was also born in Sweden in 1828, and he died at Northfield, Minnesota, in 1914. Reared in Sweden, he there learned the blacksmithing trade, and after coming to the United States in the early '50s, at which time he located at Northfield, Minnesota, he continued to work at it, being the pioneer blacksmith of that region. Having served in the Swedish army, he was a trained soldier, and when the Civil war broke out he volunteered, but was not called into the service. Having come to the United States in search of personal liberty, from the time he secured his naturalization papers he voted the republican ticket, finding in the principles of that party the epitome of his own views. The Lutheran Church held his membership and had his support until his death. His widow survives him and makes her home at Northfield, Minnesota. Mrs. Benson was born in Sweden in 1841. Their children were as follows: Nelson, who resides at Michigan, North Dakota, is a druggist; Amanda, who married Ebenezer Bevins, resides at Minot, North Dakota; Anna, who married Frank S. Stone, an insurance agent, resides at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Doctor Theodore J., who was the fourth in order of birth; Ella, who married John Schumm, a merchant tailor, resides at Northfield, Minnesota; and Oscar, who is conducting the homestead near Northfield, Minnesota.

Theodore J. Benson attended the rural schools of Rice County, Minnesota, and was graduated from the Northfield High School in 1895, following which he was engaged in farming in Rice County and at the same time continued studying, having decided to become a physician, and subsequently matriculated in the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, from which he was graduated in 1904, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, having earned all of the money necessary for his courses. Doctor Benson is a close student and annually attends clinics at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Rochester, New York, so as to keep abreast of his profession, especially in surgery, in which he specializes. During 1904 he was interne in the Swedish Hospital at Minneapolis and during 1905 was engaged in practice in that city. In 1906 he came to Fromberg, Montana, and has the distinction of being the pioneer of his profession in this locality. He owns his office building and modern residence on Montana Avenue, Fromberg. In addition to his city property Doctor Benson owns a ranch of 140 acres of land near Fromberg. Independent in his political views, he has served as Mayor of Fromberg and is now on the school board. He affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of Fromberg Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Fromberg Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1908 Doctor Benson was married at Billings, Montana, to Miss Iva Cliff, a daughter of Moses and Harriet (Smith) Cliff, of Ingram, Wisconsin, where Mr. Cliff is a merchant. Mrs. Benson was a graduate of the high school of Glenwood, Wisconsin, and the Ashbury Training School for Nurses, having been a registered nurse prior to her marriage. She died February 6, 1918. Doctor and Mrs. Benson had the following children: William Cliff, who was born September 24, 1909; Anton John, who was born May 8, 1911; and Theodora, born December 5, 1915.

Arie W. DeGroot since coming to Montana from North Dakota has directed most of his energy to banking, and for several years has been cashier and manager of what is now the Stillwater Valley National Bank at Absarokee.

Mr. DeGroot was born at Three Oaks, Michigan, September 29, 1884. His father, Gerrit DeGroot, was born in Holland in 1840, and married Margaret Sweinenberg, who was born in the same country in 1843. They came to America in 1866 and settled at Three Oaks, Michigan. Many thousands of Dutch people have colonized in Michigan, but Gerrit DeGroot was the first Hollander to locate in the locality of Three Oaks. He spent the rest of his life as a farmer there and died in 1910, and his widow is still living at Three Oaks. He was a republican and an active member of the Dutch Reformed Church. Their children were: Anna, unmarried and living with her mother; Jennie, wife of Joseph A. Baker, who is a foreman in the Clark Equipment Company at Buchanan, Michigan; Minnie, wife of Abram Sikkenga, of Kalamazoo, Michigan; Alexander, a farmer at York, North Dakota; Johanna, who died at Three Oaks at the age of thirty-nine; Gerrit, a salesman of electrical goods at Detroit, Michigan; Arthur, a farmer at Three Oaks; and Arie W.

Arie W. DeGroot attended public school at Three Oaks, graduating from high school in 1901, and completed his sophomore year in Kalamazoo College. After two years of work on the home farm he went out to York, North Dakota, in 1905, farmed there one year and for two years was deputy county treasurer of Benson County. Mr. DeGroot came to Montana in 1908, and for a year his principal headquarters were at Glasgow. He then entered the Columbus State Bank at Columbus as bookkeeper, and after nine months had attained such efficiency that he was given the post of assistant cashier of the Bank of Absarokee and for two years was manager of that institution. On resigning he spent three years as representative of the Oregon Mortgage Company at Three Forks, Montana, looking after their farm loans. He then returned to Absarokee and has since been manager and cashier of the Stillwater Valley National Bank. O. H. Hovda established this bank as a private institution in 1909. It became the Stillwater Valley State Bank in 1915 and in 1917 the Stillwater Valley National Bank. F. E. Runner, a prominent rancher of the Stillwater Valley, is president, H. N. Howland is vice president, with Mr. DeGroot filling the office of cashier and responsible manager. The bank has a capital of $25,000 and has earned surplus and profits of $10,000.

Mr. DeGroot is also half owner in a ranch of 320 acres fifteen miles northwest of Absarokee, and has a modern home in town. He is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Stillwater Lodge No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Columbus, and Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

He married at Columbus in 1913 Miss Lillian Jacobs, a daughter of M. A. and Anna (Cornell) Jacobs, the latter now deceased. Her father is a property owner and proprietor of the Monumental Works at Columbus. Mrs. DeGroot is a graduate of the Montana State College at Bozeman. They have two children: Duncan, born February 5, 1914, and Frances, born April 26, 1915.

Ernest A. Logan. Through practically all of his business life Mr. Logan has been identified with the Red Lodge State Bank, of which he is cashier and a director. He finished his education at Red Lodge, and at the age of twenty-one was appointed clerk of the City School Board and served continuously for fourteen years, until he resigned in April, 1919. He is one of the younger business men carrying the chief responsibilities in the van of progress.

He was born at Van Meter, Iowa, May 8, 1884. The Logan family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Alexander Logan, was born in Ohio in 1836 and was a carpenter and contractor, a business he followed for many years at Van Meter, Iowa. In the fall of 1898 he located at Gebo, Montana, where he continued to follow his business until his death in 1898. Thus three generations of the Logan family have been identified with Montana. Alexander Logan was a Union soldier during the Civil war. He married Hulda Adams, who was born in Ohio and died at Gebo, Montana.

J. M. Logan, father of Ernest A., was born in Ohio in August, 1860, but was reared and married in Iowa, where he took up his father's business as a carpenter and contractor. From Van Meter in that state he moved to Bridger, Montana, in April, 1898, and in 1901 located at Red Lodge. Practically every large and important piece of building construction in Red Lodge was handled by him and his organization. He continued to make his home at Red Lodge until his death. He died at Billings April 18, 1916, while on his way to the Hot Springs at Thermopolis, Wyoming. He served several terms as alderman in Red Lodge, and for a number of years was a member of the School Board, was a republican and an active supporter of the Christian Church. J. M. Logan married Wessie Ritchey who was born in Iowa in 1866 and is now living at Billings. She is the mother of five sons: Hubert D., a carpenter and builder at Twin Falls, Idaho; Ernest A.; Kline R., who is employed by the Northwestern Improvement Company at Red Lodge; Jack M., who went overseas with the Army of Occupation and after the armistice became superintendent of the army school at Coblenz, Germany; Harold F., who was also overseas as a sergeant in the Medical Corps.

Ernest A. Logan began his education in the public schools of Iowa and graduated from the Red Lodge High School in 1906. For one year he was employed by the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and then accepted a clerkship in the Red Lodge State Bank. Later he was promoted to assistant cashier and since 1914 has been cashier of the bank and a stockholder and director. He is secretary of the Carbon Building and Loan Association, is independent in politics, a member of the Christian Church, Star in the West Lodge No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Red Lodge Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America, the local aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Eastern Star. Mr. Logan resides at 217 Nutting Avenue. He also has some property interests near Chicago, Illinois.

At Chicago June 8, 1910, he married Miss Mabelle I. Shane, daughter of M. S. and Fannie (Rumary) Shane. Her parents are residents of Lombard, Illinois, her father being a retired salesman. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Logan are Ernest A., Jr., born September 30, 1912; Norman R., born April 30, 1915; and Mabelle I., born June 15, 1917.

VARD SMITH. Conspicuous in the roll of names of men who have conferred honor upon the legal profession in Montana is that of Vard Smith, of Livingston. He has a great versatility of talents, and exactness and thoroughness characterize all his attainments and work. He is regarded by all who know him well as an attorney of superior force and ability. In all the relations of life he has so met his responsibilities as to win the sincere respect of all with whom he has come in contact.

Vard Smith is the scion of one of the sterling old families of this section of the country, his father, John T. Smith, being one of the strongest lawyers and most eminent citizens of the state. John T. Smith, who retired from active participation in business on December 31, 1916, sold his ranches here on April 16, 1919, and will hereafter make his permanent home in San Diego, California, though he expects to return to Livingston during the summer months. The following fitting tribute to this grand old man appeared in the Big Timber Pioneer in May, 1919:

Announcement is made from Livingston that the Hon. John T. Smith, dean of the Eastern Montana Bar Association, has quit—not retired, just quit. The finale came last week, when all that he possessed in the agricultural line—horses, cattle, machinery, etc.—went under the hammer to the highest bidder.

Nearly thirty years ago John T. Smith, with about six foot six of muscular angularity, landed in Livingston, swung his shingle to the breeze and began to expound the doctrines of Blackstone and Kent. He did well. Fortune did not smile upon him; he just embraced fortune. For years he handled Northern Pacific town lots and agricultural lands, and here and there gathered in a quarter, a half or a whole section of land in what is now the famous Shields River Valley, at not to exceed $2.50 an acre. He saw the future possibility and grabbed it. In time he branched out in an agricultural way and, as the late Judge Henry said in introducing him at a press banquet, became a lawyer among farmers and a farmer among lawyers.

Time, however, sang its requiem. Three years ago he realized that he was gradually being horned away from the legal feed trough by young blood. With a foresight that had carried him through days of adversity he gathered the main horner into the fold, formed the firm of Smith, Gibson & Smith, and retired to the ranch. Law to him was a memory, but interest in public affairs never lagged. . . .

But it is ended. The Livingston daily announces that the Hon. John T. has sold his 3,700 acres of land for $20 per acre. . . . He has also disposed of his personal holdings at fancy prices and will hereafter spend the summers in Livingston and the winters in California.

And so begins the closing chapter in the meteoric career of one of the grand old men of Montana. Hereafter it will be just the Hon. John T. Smith, not a lawyer among farmers, or a farmer among lawyers; just plain John T. Smith—full of years, wit, satire, eloquence and red-blooded Americanism; a lawyer among lawyers; a farmer among farmers; an orator among orators; a prince among princes; a man among men.

Vard Smith was born at Butler, Missouri, on May 10, 1885, and came with his father to Livingston when but a boy. Here he received his elementary education, graduating from the Park County High School in 1904. Having determined to make the practice of law his life work, he then entered the law department of the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, where he studied two years. While there he became a member of the Greek letter fraternities, Alpha Tau Omega and Phi Delta Phi. He was admitted to the bar in 1908 and has since applied himself assiduously to the practice of his profession at Livingston. He was first admitted to the firm of Smith, Gibson & Smith, of which his father was the senior member, and since the latter's retirement the firm has been known as Gibson & Smith, the senior member of the present firm being Fred L. Gibson, who is referred to specifically elsewhere in this work. Mr. Smith applies himself to both the criminal and civil branches of legal practice and has met with splendid success. He is dignifying and honoring his profession by his able services and is today numbered among the leaders of a bar noted for the high order of its talent.

Politically Mr. Smith is a democrat and has given faithful allegiance to his party. In 1912-13 he served as county attorney. He is a member of the Park County Bar Association, the Montana State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in Livingston Lodge No. 32; Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons; St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, and the Eastern Montana Consistory of the Scottish Rite, thirty-second degree.

On December 20, 1916, at Livingston, Vard Smith was married to Carolyn Davis, daughter of W. E. and Martha (Valentine) Davis, the former of whom is a successful contractor and builder at Livingston. Mrs. Smith is a graduate of the Park County High School and is a lady of many estimable qualities, a popular member of the social circles in which she moves. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith has been born one child, John Davis, born September 26, 1918.

ARTHUR J. HUFFER first saw Livingston more than thirty years ago, worked as a ranch hand in that section of Montana for a time, and later homesteaded and developed a ranch and farm and is still extensively interested in ranching in Southern Montana. His chief business for the past three or four years has been a garage at Livingston, an extensive business conducted under the name Huffer Garage and Motor Company.

Mr. Huffer was born in Bedfordshire, England, December 2, 1871. His father, William Huffer, was born in England in 1816 and died at Sussex in 1899, spending all his life in his native country, and his business was that of merchant. He was a member of the Church of England. His wife, Mary, was born in 1822 and died in Sussex in 1885. Arthur was the fifth in a family of six children and the only one in America. The fourth, a daughter, is deceased, and the others, Frederick, Elizabeth, Charles and Samuel, are all living in England.

Arthur J. Huffer had the equivalent of a high school education in Sussex, England. He left school at the age of seventeen and in 1888 arrived at Livingston, Montana. For two years he rode the range as a cowboy. He then went to the mining district of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and operated an air compressor there a year, until the big strike demoralized the industry of that locality. Returning to Livingston, he homesteaded 160 acres twelve miles east of Livingston, and lived on that for ten years. Subsequently he moved his ranching headquarters to Mission Creek and continued there until 1916. He still owns 360 acres of irrigated land on Mission Creek.

On coming to Livingston in 1916 Mr. Huffer engaged in the garage business at the corner of Main and Clark streets with W. D. Stevens as partner. His partnership continued until 1919. In June of the present year the handsome and well equipped garage was completed, covering floor space of 100x140 feet, one of the largest institutions of its kind in the state. The Huffer Garage & Motor Company is now incorporated with Lon T. Swan, president; William L. Klipstein, vice president; A. J. Huffer, manager and treasurer; and George W. Root, secretary. It does a general garage business, affording storage for individual cars and also a general livery service. They handle supplies of accessories and are local distributors for the Stearns, Knight and Oakland cars and the International trucks.

Mr. Huffer is a member of the City Council of Livingston. Politically he is a republican, and is a member of fraternal bodies and civic organizations including Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, Livingston Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Zephyr Camp No. 151, Woodmen of the World, Tourist Homestead Brotherhood of American Yeomen, Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club and the Railway Club of Livingston.

Mr. Huffer's modern home is at 328 South E Street. He married at Livingston in December, 1907, Mrs. Catherine L. Hodges. She was born in Ireland.

LON T. SWAN, who is president of the Huffer Garage & Motor Company at Livingston, has for years been a factor in improving the strain of cattle in Southern Montana, is an extensive ranch owner and Hereford breeder, and member of an old established family in Montana.

He was born at Navarre, Ohio, July 25, 1868. His paternal ancestors came originally from the Netherlands and settled in Pennsylvania. His father, Enos Swan, was born in Ohio in 1836, was reared in that state, was married in Indiana, and in 1861 joined an Indiana three months' regiment and afterward reenlisted with an Ohio Regiment and was all through the war. He was in the battles of Shiloh, Vicksburg, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, and for a short time was a prisoner. Several years after the war he brought his family to Montana and was a contractor in the vicinity of Manhattan, in Gallatin County. For one year he was also on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. In 1876 he moved to Chico and founded a butcher and packing establishment. In 1879 he went to his ranch on Trail Creek, and in 1882 moved to Portland, Oregon, where for twenty-six years he was a member of the police force and was then in the real estate business. He died at Portland in 1917. He was a Grand Army man and very active as a republican. Enos Swan married Mary Jones, born in Indiana in 1839 and now living at Chico, Montana. Viola, the oldest of her children, is the wife of Andrew Dahlberg, a farmer at Portland, Oregon. Lon is the second in age. Edward is owner of a garage and engineer in the mines at Butte. Grace is the wife of Richard Devoe, a rancher near Emigrant.

Lon T. Swan lived on his father's ranch to the age of thirteen, and after that was a cowboy riding the ranges in Park County. At the age of twenty he began ranching for himself in Park County. For a number of years he has been raising grain on his property south of Livingston, and has also been interested in the production of high grade cattle. In 1914 he formed a partnership with George J. Allen for raising high grade stock, and that partnership continued until Mr. Allen retired on account of age. At the present time Mr. Swan specializes in pure bred Hereford cattle. He has a fine herd of these white faced cattle on his ranch of twelve hundred acres eleven miles south of Livingston. Allen & Swan formerly owned thirty-five hundred acres, but sold it in February, 1919.

Mr. Swan owns a town home at 111 South Sixth Street. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club at Livingston, is a republican, and is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons; Livingston Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks, Silver Tip Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1888, at Livingston, he married Miss Edna McLaughlin, a daughter of H. E. and Margaret (Benjamin) McLaughlin. Her parents are now deceased. Her father was a railroad contractor in Montana and afterward a rancher. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Swan: Leonard, a student in the Park County High School, and Donald and Albert, both grammar school students.

C. R. RYAN. The leading business interests of the thriving Western cities are largely in the hands of men still in the very prime of life and in possession of their youthful enthusiasms and capabilities for hard work and long hours. The opportunities of these centers in a country still in the process of development are of such a nature as to attract to them the very best of the youth of our land, and as a result there is an alertness and quickness of perception not to be found in the older communities. Men in the West acquire wealth before old age overtakes them, and consequently they are still venturesome enough to avail themselves of openings more mature business men, restrained by conservatism, might let pass, and so they and their communities benefit. Laurel, Montana, is one of these thriving cities which is growing by leaps and bounds and which reflects in its progress the character of the men who are doing business in its midst. A man who has developed with the city and assisted in its advance very materially is C. R. Ryan, sole proprietor of the Laurel Creamery, whose products have a ready sale throughout Yellowstone and Carbon counties.

C. R. Ryan comes of good old Irish stock, his paternal grandfather, Michael Ryan, having been born in the Emerald Isle, from whence he came in young manhood to Ontario, Canada, and there became a prosperous merchant, dying before the birth of his grandson, C. R. Ryan, which occurred in Saginaw County, Michigan, July 21, 1885, to which locality his father M. H. Ryan, had come in young manhood from Ontario, Canada, where he was born in 1861. M. H. Ryan was a blacksmith by trade, and is now serving as sheriff of Midland County, Michigan, where he has resided for a number of years, being elected by a large majority on the republican ticket. He is a Mason and Modern Woodman, and a very prominent man in his community. The mother of C. R. Ryan bore the maiden name of Clara Hankin, and she was born at Saginaw, Michigan. She and her husband had but one child.

C. R. Ryan was reared at Saginaw, Michigan, attending the schools of that city and the High School of Freeland, Michigan, following which he became a student of the Agricultural College at Lansing, Michigan, where he took a special course in butter making. After completing his training in that respect Mr. Ryan traveled in the West, visiting Colorado, Nevada, Utah and Montana, and finding in the state last named the conditions he desired he engaged with the Billings Creamery, at Billings, Montana, in 1908, remaining there until 1913, when he came to Laurel, buying an interest in the Laurel Creamery. In 1915 he became the sole proprietor, and now owns the business and the building on Main Street in which the plant is located. He manufactures butter and ice cream of superior quality, and takes a pride in keeping his products up to the high standard he has raised. Mr. Ryan also owns his convenient modern residence in Laurel, and all of his interests are centered in this city, so that he takes an active and forceful part in the work of the Commercial Club, of which he is a member. He has served as a member of the City Council, and is independent in his political views.

On June 6, 1911, Mr. Ryan was united in marriage with Miss Rilla Sanford at Midland, Michigan. She is a daughter of Ward V. and Nellie (O'Donnell) Sanford, the mother being a sister of I. D. O'Donnell of Billings, Montana. Ward V. Sanford was a grain buyer and owned an elevator at Freeland, Michigan, where he died in 1912, his widow surviving him and maintaining her residence at Freeland. Mrs. Ryan is a graduate of the University of Michigan. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ryan are as follows: Ward S., who was born August 31, 1912, and Jean, who was born August 28, 1914.

Lewis C. Babcock is president of the Yellowstone National Bank of Billings and is a young banker and business man in every way worthy of the responsibilities and honors achieved by his father, the late Albert L. Babcock, of whom he is the only son and child.

A Montanan whose services figured largely in the history of Billings for over thirty-five years, the late Albert L. Babcock was one of the fortunate men of the Northwest, but his fortune consisted not alone in what he could personally enjoy but in achievements and institutions which are permanent and which still remain as part of the solid business fabric of Billings and vicinity.

Albert L. Babcock was born at Albany, New York, December 22, 1851, a son of William C. and Julia (Lawrence) Babcock, also natives of New York State. Albert L. Babcock was reared in New York, worked on his father's little farm, attended district school, and served an apprenticeship from the age of fourteen in a country printing office. He also clerked in a country store, and the family having in the meantime moved to Illinois in 1873 he joined his capital with that of a friend and established the grocery firm of Babcock & Lobdell at Pontiac. He was one of the proprietors of a successful business in Illinois until 1882.

Mr. Babcock in the latter year identified himself with the young city of Billings, and he and A. W. Miles established the pioneer hardware house of Babcock & Miles. This grew into a large and important establishment, corresponding to the growth of Billings and the development of the surrounding territory. In 1892 the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company was organized and in 1902 the business was sold to the Billings Hardware Company. Later Mr. Babcock organized the Babcock-Frazer Company, and was its president.

The late Mr. Babcock was one of the men who organized the Yellowstone National Bank in May, 1891. This institution succeeded the Bank of Billings, which had been in existence five years. Colonel Babcock was the first vice president of the bank and in 1893 became president, an office he held until his death on July 6, 1918.

His enterprise touched and stimulated the business life of Billings at many points. In 1895 he erected the Yellowstone Valley Flouring Mill, which was later incorporated as the Billings Milling Company, with Mr. Babcock as president, the plant being sold in 1910 to a milling company of Minneapolis. In 1895 he erected the Billings Opera House and was its manager until 1906. During 1907 he built the Babcock Office and Theater, one of the finest business blocks in the state, and including a beautifully appointed theater. He organized the Billings Telephone Company in 1895, and was president of the company until the plant was sold to the Bell Telephone interests.

A. L. Babcock was a tower of strength to the republican party of Montana, though politics was only incidental to his exceedingly busy career. He was chairman of the County Central Committee of Yellowstone County, was chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the county from 1885 to 1889, and was the first senator from Yellowstone County elected after the admission of Montana to statehood in 1889. He was a member of the Lower House from 1892 to 1894, and was in the Senate from 1894 to 1898. He served with the rank of colonel on the staff of several governors. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce and was prominent in fraternal organizations, including Ashlar Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery, Knights Templar, of which he was one of the organizers; Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He served as grand commander of the Knights Templar of Montana in 1894. He was the first exalted ruler of the Billings Lodge of Elks.

September 12, 1877, A. L. Babcock married Miss Antoinette Packer, of Pontiac, Illinois. She was born in New York State in 1852 and is still living at Billings.

Lewis C. Babcock was born at Pontiac, Illinois, in 1878, and was four years old when his parents came to Montana. He attended the public schools of Billings, in 1892 entered the Montana Military School at Deer Lodge, and in 1895 became a student in the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota. He graduated in June, 1899, from this splendid school as captain of Company A, the senior company of the academy, having risen from the ranks through the various grades of corporal, sergeant, first lieutenant to captain. Mr. Babcock finished his education by two years in the University of Chicago, and in 1901 returned to Billings and entered the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company. In 1903 he became identified with the Yellowstone National Bank, beginning in the collection department, later was bookkeeper, then cashier, and in 1908 was promoted to vice president, and after the death of his father was made president. The Yellowstone National Bank at the beginning of 1919 entered a beautiful new home, a bank building of classic architecture and of commodious and modern arrangement. The bank is the oldest in Yellowstone County, with resources and capital equal to those of any bank in the state.

Mr. Babcock is also associated with many other interests formerly handled by his father. He is secretary and treasurer of the Babcock-Selvidge Company, a prominent real estate firm. He is a trustee and secretary and treasurer of the Midland Club, is an independent in politics, is affiliated with the Episcopal Church and is a member of Ashlar Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine and Billings Lodge of Elks.

In January, 1901, at Chicago, Lewis Babcock married Miss Josephine Twyman, daughter of Joseph and Caroline S. (Stevens) Twyman. Her father, now deceased, was an artist. Her mother is living at Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Babcock have two children, Lawrence Twyman, born August 30, 1906, and Caroline Antoinette, born May 26, 1913.

C. M. Kutzner has developed a successful business as a wholesale lumber broker at Billings. His experience in the lumber business may be said to have covered his entire life, since he grew up in the atmosphere of the lumber woods of Wisconsin, and his father and grandfather before him were lumbermen all the way from the woods to the finished products.

Mr. Kutzner was born at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, March 10, 1886. His father, F. G. Kutzner, was born in Germany in 1837, and about 1847 his parents came to Canada and in 1851 settled in Wisconsin. The grandfather was a worker in the lumber woods of Wisconsin and died at Eau Claire. F. G. Kutzner early acquired efficiency in the lumber business, was a scaler and grader, and followed all branches of the lumber business. He died at San Diego, California, in 1914. His first vote as an American citizen was cast for Abraham Lincoln at the beginning of the Civil war. He was an active member of the Congregational Church and affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On January 17, 1871, at Kilbourn, Wisconsin, F. G. Kutzner married Addaline C. Hubbard, who is still living at San Diego. She was born in 1849 on the state line between Illinois and Wisconsin. Besides C. M. Kutzner the only other living child is Dorothy C., wife of H. F. Kates, a mail carrier in San Diego.

C. M. Kutzner acquired a public school education at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, graduating from high school in 1904. He then became an office boy with the John S. Owen Lumber Company at Eau Claire, and was with the firm for three years. After learning stenography in night school he was made assistant bookkeeper. For eight months he was a stenographer with the Northwest Paper Company at Cloquet, Minnesota, then for five years was stenographer in the offices of the Cloquet Lumber Company, and came to the Northwest and spent three years with the Dover Lumber Company at Dover, Idaho. Mr. Kutzner has been established at Billings since 1915, and his offices as a wholesale lumber broker are in the Security Building.

He is unmarried, is a republican, a member of the Congregational Church, and is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with the United Commercial Travelers.

E. H. Kuykendall is a lawyer of successful experience, with abilities that have won him a large practice and good position in the bar of several states, but since locating at Billings has given his time to the development and maintenance of the Billings Business College, one of the finest schools of its kind in the Northwest.

Mr. Kuykendall was born at Mount Vernon, Illinois, June 6, 1876, and descends from a family that originated in Holland and were colonial settlers in New York. His father, James A. Kuykendall, was born at Mount Vernon, Illinois, in 1841 and spent his active life as a farmer in that state. He is now living retired at Illiopolis, Illinois. He is a democrat, has been honored with several township offices, is a leading member in the Baptist Church and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. James A. Kuykendall married Elizabeth Ralph, who was born at Madison, Indiana, in 1847 and died at Mount Pulaski, Illinois, in 1915. They had a family of seven children: Adolphus, a railway section foreman living in Illinois; Frank, a farmer at Illiopolis; John, a Nebraska farmer; E. H. Kuykendall, the fourth in age; Carrie, wife of Fred Cheek, a railway employe at Mount Pulaski, Illinois; Maggie, wife of C. R. Reed, a farmer near Racine, Wisconsin; and Stella, a resident of Oklahoma.

E. H. Kuykendall attended the country schools of Sangamon County, Illinois, and graduated LL. B. from the law department of the Illinois Wesleyan University in 1898. For three years he practiced law at North Bend, Nebraska, and then went to Oklahoma Territory and for eight years was connected with the bar of Muskogee. He also practiced for a time at Pittsburg, Kansas, and in 1915 came to Billings and bought the Billings Business College. This college, of which Mr. Kuykendall is president, was established in 1910 by Miss Frances Miller. Mrs. Kuykendall is secretary and treasurer of the college and the vice president is J. F. Farrell. The college has handsome quarters on the second floor of the new Yellowstone National Bank Building, and its facilities are in every way in keeping with its splendid environment. The students come from the states of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wyoming, eighteen states altogether being represented in the student body.

Mr. Kuykendall is a republican in politics, a member of the Congregational Church, and is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery, Knights Templar, and Billings Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

He married at Muskogee, Oklahoma, in 1912 Miss Hallie Gearhart, a native of Kansas. They have one daughter, Ruth, born June 13, 1918.

Henry J. Calhoun had the first automobile owned by any resident of Columbus. He was a pioneer liveryman in that city, and when the automobile became popular he naturally gravitated into the garage business and today owns and operates one of the most popular establishments of that kind in the Yellowstone Valley.

Mr. Calhoun was born near Penn Yan in Yates

H. K. Caldwell

County, New York, November 15, 1866, and comes of a family especially well known in the State of Iowa, where he grew up and where he lived until he came to Montana. The Calhouns were colonial settlers in New York. Mr. Calhoun's grandfather, Charles C. Calhoun, was born in New York State, was a farmer there in pioneer times, and later followed his son to Iowa and died in Calhoun County, that state, at the advanced age of ninety-nine years, nine months and eight days.

Calhoun County, Iowa, was named in honor of its pioneer settler, Charles Calhoun, who was born in Yates County, New York, in 1839 and died at Lake City, Iowa, in 1904. He had been a farmer in his native county, but after his marriage he moved out to Iowa and because of his early settlement and his popularity and prominence in that locality the county was given his name. He followed farming in Calhoun County until he retired to Lake City. Politically he was a republican. His wife was Obera Moore, who was born in New York in 1841 and died in Calhoun County, Iowa, in 1879. She was the mother of the following children: Emma, who died at the age of twenty-four in Lake City, Iowa; Mary, who died at the age of ten years; John, a farmer in Calhoun County, Iowa; Ida, wife of S. B. Zane, a real estate broker of Lake City; Abbie, who since the death of her husband, John Wingerson, has rented their farm and lives at Lake City; and George, who was a farmer and railroad man and died at Lake City at the age of forty.

Henry J. Calhoun grew up on his father's farm in Iowa, and attended the rural schools through the eighth grade. He possessed some of the pioneer instincts of his father and at the age of fifteen, in the spring of 1882, he left the old farm and came out to the far Northwest, the Yellowstone Valley of Montana. He was soon working as a cow puncher, and as a cowboy he rode the ranges for fifteen years. In 1896 he established the pioneer livery stable at Columbus, and for twenty years was in partnership with W. P. Adams. In 1913 he opened his garage and is today proprietor of a thoroughly equipped establishment, the building for which was erected in 1917 and stands diagonally opposite the Stockmen's National Bank. The garage is a two-story building 50 by 140 feet.

Mr. Calhoun served as a member of the City Council of Columbus for the last ten years. He is also an active member of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, is a democrat and in religion a Catholic. Besides his garage business he owns two dwelling houses and his own modern home and has two ranches of 320 acres on Shane Creek. Consequently he has prospered since coming to Montana and is a thoroughly enthusiastic Montana citizen.

In 1892, at Columbus, he married Miss Mary Lavelle, daughter of Patrick and Margaret (O'Brien) Lavelle. Her father was one of the pioneer business men of Columbus. Mr. and Mrs. Calhoun have five children and two of the sons responded patriotically to the demands of the country at war and were soldiers. The oldest child, Celia, died when six years old. John, who was born March 1, 1895, was educated in the public schools of Columbus, has been associated with his father in business, and on April 1, 1918, enlisted and was sent to train with the Aviation Corps, first at San Antonio, Texas, then in Arkansas, and finally at Wilbur Wright field at Dayton, Ohio. He was mustered out February 12, 1919. The second son, Bernard, born February 15, 1898, is a graduate of the Columbus High School, spent four years in the University of Minnesota, and a year before graduating from the law department he joined the Medical Corps and saw service at Camp Grant, Illinois. He is a young man of brilliant mind and has undoubtedly a splendid future. The two youngest children are Francis, born in 1907, and Ruth, born in 1909, both at home and attending public school at Columbus.

Mose Little. As superintendent of the Main Range Mine in the East Butte district, Mose Little is actively and prosperously identified with one of the more important industries of Montana, economists telling us that mining is one of the three chief sources of all the wealth in the world, the others being agriculture and fisheries. A son of Joseph Little, he was born October 1, 1871, on the Isle of Man, the home of his ancestors for many years.

The birth of Joseph Little occurred on the Isle of Man in 1849. He was a sailor during his earlier years, but turned his attention to mining after leaving the sea. Immigrating to the United States in 1886, he located at Central City, Colorado, and was engaged in mining pursuits in that vicinity for twenty years. Returning then to the Isle of Man, he has since resided there, being retired from active pursuits. While in Colorado he supported the principles of the republican party. Religiously he is a member of the Church of England, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Quane, spent her entire life on the Isle of Man, her birth occurring in 1845 and her death in 1880. Four children were born of their union, as follows: Mose, of whom we write; David, who served in France for two years during the World war, being mustered out in 1919; George, of whom all trace is lost; and Joseph, of Seattle, Washington.

Completing his early education in the public schools of Colorado, Mose Little began life for himself as an underground miner in Colorado. Coming to Butte, Montana, in 1893, he worked as a common miner two years, being in the employ of John A. Leggat, and the ensuing five years was with the Heinze Mining Company. For four years thereafter he was successfully engaged in business on his own account, leasing mines and prospecting, and was later with the North Butte Mining Company as a miner until 1912. In that year he became associated with the Pilot Butte Mining Company, which was merged into the Tuolumne Company, under the name of the Main Range Mine. On March 1, 1919, Mr. Little accepted his present position as its superintendent, and in its management is very successful, the 125 miners in his employ being well acquainted with the work required of them.

Mr. Little married in Anaconda, Montana, in 1897, Miss Annie Gill, a daughter of Thomas and Annie Gill, neither of whom are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Little have three children, namely: Edward, a stationary engineer; Mary, a graduate of the Butte Business College, is a stenographer for the Montana Electric Company; and Montana, attending the public schools. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Little are valued members of the Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Little is a stanch republican. Fraternally he is a member of Moriah Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Butte; of Butte Consistory; and of Butte Camp No. 153, Woodmen of the World. Mr. and Mrs. Little have an attractive residence at 735 East Mercury Street, East Butte, the latchstring being ever out to their friends and acquaintances.

J. M. Freeman. America is the land of opportunity, and provided a man possess the requisite qualities no limit is placed upon the success to which he may attain. With the development of the Western States new fields of endeavor have been opened up, and to them have come not only men of unusual capabilities from the East, but also those from other countries. J. M. Freeman, general manager and vice president of the Montana Coal and Iron Company, with headquarters at Billings, is a man who has developed with this section, and was brought here from England by his parents. J. M. Freeman was born at Wigan, England, December 12, 1889, a son of William Freeman, who was also born at Wigan, England, in 1857, where he was reared and where he worked as a coal operator. In the pursuit of his calling he visited the United States twice, and then decided to locate permanently in this country, coming here for the last time in 1894 and settling at Red Lodge, Montana, where he was engaged in coal mining until his retirement. He still resides at Red Lodge. At one time William Freeman served in the English army. He was married to Mary A. Robinson, born in England in 1856, and their children are as follows: William R., who is a superintendent of mines owned by the Montana Coal and Iron Company; Anna, who married William Beadle, a farmer in the vicinity of Roberts, Montana; Jennie, who married William Shepard, a ranchman in the vicinity of Roberts, Montana; Helen, who married H. A. Simmons, county attorney of Red Lodge, Montana; T. H., a master mechanic at Washoe, Montana; J. M., whose name heads this review; Florence, who married R. W. Wadsworth, of Bear Creek, Montana; Miss R. L., who is a stenographer for the above mentioned company; Ethel, who married J. V. Williams, of Washoe, Montana; and Edith, who is at home.

As he was only a small child when his parents brought him to Montana, J. M. Freeman has been reared in this state, and attended the common schools, also for one year attended the Butte High School and for two years was a student of the Red Lodge High School, leaving in 1905 to engage with a sub-contractor on Government work for a year. In 1907 he formed connections with the Montana Coal and Iron Company, which he still maintains, beginning as a clerk, and as he learned the details of the business being successively promoted until in 1913 he was made general manager, and a little later was elected vice president. The headquarters of the company are at Billings, and Thomas M. Kearney is its executive head. The mines are located at Washoe, Montana, with a capacity of 1,500 tons per day, and the company has another mine at Foster Gulch, one mile south of Bear Creek, Mr. Freeman having supervision over all the mines and the 400 men employed in working them. The coal produced is a high grade semi-bituminous quality.

In 1913 Mr. Freeman was married at Red Lodge, Montana, to Miss Anna C. Flaherty, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Flaherty, of Red Lodge, where Mr. Flaherty is engaged as a coal operator. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman have three children, namely: Anna C., who was born in January, 1915; George F., who was born in April, 1916, and Evelyn M., who was born in May, 1919. Mr. Freeman is independent in his political views. A practical man, he understands every detail of his work, and is able to give to it an intelligent and sympathetic supervision, impossible in one who had not grown up in the company.

Walter B. Innes. Though only a few years resident in the state, Walter B. Innes is known all over Montana on account of the services he rendered during the war as district fuel administrator, with full and complete charge of the production and distribution of coal in twelve northern counties of Wyoming and all of Montana. It was volunteer work—Mr. Innes was not even a "dollar a year man." It took most of his time from his private business, and there was endless executive detail to tax his energies and patience.

The success of the fuel administration as a whole was due to the policy of selecting practical coal men for its administration. Mr. Innes knows the coal business from the standpoint of a number of years' successful experience. In a short time he has built up a thriving wholesale coal business at Billings, and since 1918 has been secretary of the Western Coal Producers' Association.

Mr. Innes was born at Alameda, California, September 13, 1887, a son of Alexander and Susan Beecher (Hartwick) Innes. His mother was of the same family as Henry Ward Beecher and that distinguished connection. His grandfather, Mitchell Innes, was a native of Scotland and brought his family to Ontario, Canada, in pioneer times, spending the rest of his life in that province. Alexander Innes, who was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1832, came with his parents to America in young manhood, and in 1850 crossed the continent to California. He was a miner and later a farmer and dairyman, owning a large amount of land. He lived at Alameda, where he died in 1900. He had served as city recorder, was a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church and a Mason. His widow, now living at Alameda, was born in New York State in 1855. Their children numbered six: George A., a lumberman, died in Southern California, aged forty-two; C. E., in the wholesale jewelry business, died at Los Angeles at thirty-four; Sarah, who died at San Rafael, California, aged thirty; Arthur G., a dairyman at Alameda; and Walter and Warren, twin brothers, the latter in the lumber and shingle business at Eureka, California.

Walter B. Innes after completing his junior year in the Alameda High School spent three years in British Columbia and acquired a knowledge of the lumber business all the way from the stump to the counting room. He then traveled over California as a lumber salesman, and came to Montana in March, 1914, joining the Nelson Coal Company at Great Falls. This company made him its sales manager at Billings in June, 1918, though for the greater part of that year his time was taken up with his duties as district representative of the fuel administration. March 1, 1919, he engaged in the wholesale coal business for himself under the name W. B. Innes & Company, with offices in the Electric Building. He is general sales agent for the Foster Bear Creek coal.

Mr. Innes is a republican voter, is affiliated with the Methodist Church and is a member of Oak Grove Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, in California. His home is at 120 North Thirtieth Street, Billings. June 23, 1917, at Great Falls, he married Miss Margaret Clark. Her mother, Mrs. Mary E. Clark, is a resident of Great Falls.

Warren A. Dedrick. Every year is bringing into increased prominence the work of Warren A. Dedrick as a Montana architect. Examples of his professional skill are found in many of the cities and towns of the state, and several large structures in Billings, where he has his home and headquarters, were planned and the building work supervised by him.

Mr. Dedrick is a son of D. W. Dedrick, a prominent building contractor of Montana. His father was born in Texas in 1854, grandson of the founder of the family in America, who came from England. D. W. Dedrick spent his boyhood days in Texas, Missouri and Colorado, and in 1898 located at Missoula, Montana, and in the following year came to Billings. He has developed a large business as a contractor and builder and erected many of the business and residence structures at Billings and elsewhere. He is independent in politics, is affiliated with Billings Star Lodge of Odd Fellows, Billings Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America, and is one of the leading business men of the city. D. W. Dedrick married Emma Underwood, who was born in Jeffersonville, Indiana, in 1858. They had four children. Bertha, who died at Billings in 1903, was the wife of Albert Carrier, now a merchant at Big Timber, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Carrier had two children, Fred being a rancher at Big Timber and married and the father of one child, Albert, and Lawrence, still at home. Charles E. Dedrick was a merchant and died at Billings in 1913, and by his marriage to Eleanor Hutton, who is still living at Billings, left one child, Dorothy, who died in 1917. The third in age is Warren A. Dedrick. The youngest, Henry, a resident of Tacoma, Washington, served as a sergeant in the National Army and was mustered out in February, 1919.

Warren A. Dedrick acquired his education in the public school of Billings, graduating from high school in 1908. He was born at Hot Springs, South Dakota, May 3, 1891, and has lived in Montana since early childhood. After leaving high school he learned architecture by work in an architect's office and also studied the art in the University of Michigan, where he graduated in 1914 with the certificate of architecture. While at university he became a member of the Kappa Beta Psi Greek letter fraternity. Mr. Dedrick opened his office at Billings in 1914, and has been engaged in the general practice of his profession five years. Some of the best examples of his work are to be found in public school buildings. He also drew the plans for the Midland Fair Association buildings and grounds; was architect for the Losekemp Memorial Building for the Polytechnic Institute at Billings; for the Court House at Stillwater, Montana; the high schools at Hardin and Chouteau, Montana, and Worland and Greybull, Wyoming, and has also done considerable other work in Wyoming. He is a member of the City of Billings Park Board.

Mr. Dedrick's offices are in the Securities Building and his modern home is at 941 North Thirty-first Street. He is independent in politics and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and with Billings Star Lodge No. 41 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

March 23, 1915, at Billings, he married Miss Lila F. Rhoads, daughter of Dr. John and Catherine (Works) Rhoads, the latter now deceased. Her father is a farmer near Laurel, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Dedrick have two children, Warren A., Jr., born August 13, 1916, and Adena, born October 30, 1918.

Sam Fefferman is a citizen whose career is a credit to America and its institutions and government. He came to this country a young lad, barefoot, without money, with many other handicaps, and in achieving success has never lost sight of his obligations and patriotic duties. He was one of the men who contributed most generously in proportion to his resources to the cause of the great war, and he did that modestly and always with a sense of his boundless obligation to the country which made him what he is and never with a feeling that he had overpaid his debt.

Mr. Fefferman, who has built up a large and prosperous business as a dealer in hides, wool, fur and metals at Billings, was born at Poduloesky, Russia, September 23, 1885. His father, Manual Fefferman, was born in the same locality in 1849, and lived there until his death in 1897. He was a farmer and later a cattle dealer, was well educated, and an active member of the Jewish faith. His wife, Esther Learn, was born in Russia in 1851 and is living at Billings. Pessie, the oldest of her children, resides in Cleveland, Ohio, widow of Albert Kaufman, who was a teacher in Russia, came to the United States in 1884, followed merchandising and died at Minneapolis in 1902. Eva, living at Minneapolis, is the widow of Isador Lawn, a merchant tailor of that city who died in 1919. Adolph is a merchant at Chicago and Morris is in the mercantile business at Great Falls, Montana.

Sam Fefferman, youngest of his father's children, came to the United States with his widowed mother in 1897. He was then twelve years of age. While in Minneapolis he attended night school and made his living by peddling papers and doing other work. He acquired a practical English education and since the age of sixteen his experience has been in the fur business. He worked one year for Gordon & Ferguson, furriers, at Minneapolis. Coming to Billings in 1902, he began on an exceedingly modest scale as a dealer in hides, fur, wool and metal, and has made his the chief enterprise of the kind in Southeastern Montana, his trading connections covering a radius of fully 800 miles around Billings. He has his business headquarters at Twenty-sixth Street and Minneapolis Avenue, and is sole owner and proprietor, having eighteen people in his employ.

Mr. Fefferman is prominent in the Hebrew Synagogue at Billings, is a member of the B'Nai B'Rith, was treasurer for two years, in 1917-18, until the growth of his business compelled him to give up this office, and is still an official in the order. He is a republican in politics. His modern home is at 707 North Twenty-fifth Street. Mr. Fefferman married at Billings in 1907 Miss Annie Samuel. Her parents came from Russia and her mother is now living in Canada. Her father was in the cotton business and died in 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Fefferman have two children, Rosie, born July 10, 1913, and Addie, born October 22, 1916.

Edward M. Sybert, secretary and general manager of the A. W. Miles Lumber & Coal Company, has been actively associated as a right hand man with Mr. Miles at Livingston for nearly twenty-five years. His steadfast devotion to business, his good judgment, his vision and his executive control have been responsible for the success of many broad laid plans by the Montana capitalist.

Mr. Sybert was born at West Monterey, Pennsylvania, December 12, 1862, and comes of a family of long lived ancestors. His father, Jacob Sybert, was born at West Monterey in 1834, spent his active life there as a merchant, and is now living retired at the age of eighty-five. He is a democrat in politics and has served as justice of the peace. He is a Methodist in religion and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Jacob Sybert married Mary Jane Coe, who was born at West Monterey in 1838 and is now past eighty years of age. In a family of nine children Edward M. was the fourth and the only one in the Northwest, most of the others living not far from the scenes of their childhood. Albert, the oldest, and Perry, the second son, are oil well drillers and producers, the former still at Monterey and the latter at Williamstown, West Virginia. Daniel, the third in age, is an oil well contractor at Mars, Pennsylvania. Samuel, the next younger than Edward, is an oil operator living at Cleveland, Harry is an oil well contractor at Clarksburg, West Virginia, Merton owns a moving picture show at Moundsville, West Virginia, Oscar is also in the motion picture business at Marietta, Ohio, and the youngest of the family, Della, is the wife of John McCarty, who is in the automobile business at Detroit.

Edward M. Sybert finished his education at the Grove City College in Western Pennsylvania, and at the age of sixteen began teaching in his home district. He was a teacher there for seven years. Seeking the larger opportunities of the West, he went to Leadville, Colorado, in 1887, but in June of the same year arrived in Montana and joined his uncle, G. M. Coe, in the Shields River Valley. From 1893 to 1896 Mr. Sybert was an employe of the Albemarle Hotel at Livingston, being manager when he resigned. He became associated with A. W. Miles as bookkeeper in the spring of 1897, and since that date there has been no division or break in his steady allegiance and devotion to the business of his employer and associate. When the A. W. Miles Company was incorporated in 1901 he was made secretary and treasurer, and for a time had general oversight over the business management of this general mercantile organization. In 1903 he became manager of the lumber department, and when in January, 1914, the lumber and coal business was separated and incorporated as the A. W. Miles Lumber & Coal Company Mr. Sybert withdrew from the older corporation to become general manager and secretary of the lumber and coal company. He is the man chiefly responsible for the broadening and extension of the service of this corporation.

While always busy Mr. Sybert has answered many calls to outside interests. From 1899 until 1916 he was clerk of the Livingston School Board, has also been a member of the City Council, and has long been prominent in fraternal circles. He is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, Orient Chapter No. 6 of the Eastern Star, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Scottish Rite Consistory, and has filled offices in practically all the Masonic bodies at Livingston. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, the Elks and the lumbermen's organization, the Hoo Hoos.

In 1892, while living in the Shields River Valley, Mr. Sybert married Miss Margaret E. Johnson. They are the parents of two daughters. Myrtle Edna, the older, is the wife of Hon. Don D. Delaney, a resident of Chicago. Mr. Delaney was formerly private secretary to Alschuler and Baker, judges of the Court of Appeals of the United States, and is now privately practicing law. He served as a first lieutenant in the World war. Florence Madeline, the younger daughter, is in the senior class of the Park County High School.

OWEN J. THOMAS. Montana as a great agricultural state furnishes a great volume of business to the manufacturer of agricultural implements and machinery, and practically all the standard companies have representation here through local sales agencies or branch houses. There is probably no grain district in the state where the J. I. Case Threshing Machines are unknown. The principal distributing agency for these machines, which have been a standard of perfection with threshermen for two generations, is at Billings. The manager of the branch house at that point is Owen J. Thomas, who has had a long and active experience in the farm implement business both as a salesman and collection manager.

Mr. Thomas was born at Lime Springs, Iowa, August 19, 1876. His father, H. W. Thomas, was born at Menibridge, Wales, June 24, 1847, grew up at his native town and married there, and in 1872 came to the United States and settled at Utica, New York. The following year he located on a farm at Lime Springs, Iowa, and is now living there retired. For many years he has been a man of prominence in his locality, holding township offices and in every way using his influence for local betterment. He is a republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church. H. W. Thomas married Elizabeth Jones, who was born October 13, 1847, at Llangaffo, Wales. Owen J. Thomas was fourth in age in a family of eight children, all of whom have done exceedingly well in life. The oldest child, W. H. Thomas, is a judge of the Appellate Court of the State of California, with home at Los Angeles; L. R. Thomas is a contractor and builder at McIntyre, Iowa; H. H. Thomas is in the real estate business at Los Angeles; Elizabeth A. is the wife of W. R. Jones, a large property owner and real estate man at Lime Springs, Iowa; Margaret is the wife of George H. Thomas, a railway conductor on the Soo Line Railroad, living at Hankinson, North Dakota; R. H. Thomas is assistant sales manager with the Standard Oil Company at Fargo, North Dakota; and Jennie, the youngest, is the wife of Tom Michaelson, agent for the Soo Line Railroad at Nacoma, North Dakota.

Owen J. Thomas acquired his education in the public schools of Lime Springs, graduating from high school in 1893. His experience in the implement business covers practically a quarter of a century, beginning with a local implement house at Lime Springs. A year later he went to the home office of the Plano Manufacturing Company at West Pullman, Illinois, starting as a mechanic in the construction of mowers and binders and eventually being promoted to assistant inspector of all the work of the factory. In the spring of 1899 the company sent him to eighteen different states, looking after calamity cases. During 1901-02 he was with the Deering Harvester Company of Chicago, being located in that city in 1901 and as salesman in Iowa and North Dakota during 1902. In 1903 occurred the consolidation of a large group of implement manufacturers, including the Osborne Harvester Company, the Wardin-Bushnell-Glesner Harvester Company, the Milwaukee Harvester Company, Deering Harvester Company and the McCormick Harvester Company into the International Harvester Company. Mr. Thomas remained with this organization as collector from 1903 until February 28, 1904, when he joined the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company's organization.

His first work as a salesman was with the Fargo branch, covering Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana. June 19, 1906, he was promoted to manager of the collection department at Fargo, handling collections in Minnesota, North Dakota, and in Montana to Billings on the Northern Pacific and to Malta on the Great Northern Railway. The last stage in his promotion occurred in December, 1912, when he was moved to Billings and was made manager of the branch, which standing alone is a business of great magnitude and one of the important assets of the commercial district of Billings. The plant and offices are at 2203-2217 Montana Avenue, and forty employes are under the supervision of Mr. Thomas, who has full charge of both the sales and collection departments.

While essentially a business man, with no aspirations for political preferment, Mr. Thomas has actually exercised a large and beneficent influence in the affairs of several communities. At Billings he is a member of the school board and chairman of the finance committee. Since coming to Montana he has been urged to run for several prominent offices, including that of mayor of Billings and governor of the state. Politically he is a republican. He is one of the prominent members of the First Presbyterian Church, being an elder. He is past chancellor commander of Billings Lodge No. 58, Knights of Pythias, a member of the United Commercial Travelers, is affiliated with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Billings Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and the Eastern Star Lodge. He is also a trustee of the Rotary Club, is president of the Billings City Club and a former member and trustee of the Chamber of Commerce. For two years he was a director of the American Bank and Trust Company of Billings, and is now vice president of the Midland Empire Fair Association and is vice president of the Deaconess Hospital. As a Presbyterian layman he is on the executive commission of the Presbyterian Board of the State of Montana and was a commissioner from Yellowstone Presbytery to the General Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, in 1918. He is treasurer of the anti-saloon league of this state, was a member of the recruiting board of the Young Men's Christian Association for the states of Montana and Wyoming during the World war, and is now a director of the local Young Men's Christian Association. Out of eight western states he was selected one of five in February, 1919, to manage the Young Men's Christian Association work in France, but had to decline the honor. His wife shares with him in his prominence as a church worker.

Mr. Thomas and family reside at 308 North Thirty-third Street. He married at Jamestown, North Dakota, September 16, 1903, Miss Eunice Pauline Somsen, daughter of John and Antonia (Grooteboer) Somsen. Her parents live on a farm at Jamestown, North Dakota. Mrs. Thomas is a graduate of the Lime Springs High School. They have three children: Elizabeth Merle, born July 21, 1904; Mildred Josephine, born June 29, 1910; and Margaret Antonia, born May 26, 1916.

HARRY ALLEN STEVENS has become a factor in the enterprise of the new town of Rapelje as manager of the local business of the McCaul Webster Elevator Company of Minneapolis.

Mr. Stevens was born at Anoka, Minnesota, June 30, 1894. His maternal ancestors came from England to New York in colonial times and were pioneers in the State of Maine. His father, Henry B. Stevens, was born in Maine in 1845 and married in that state Augusta Barker, who was born in Maine in 1854. Henry B. Stevens moved out to Minnesota about 1880 and for a number of years was in the contracting business at Anoka, where he died in 1918. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Methodist Church. His widow is still living at Anoka. She was the mother of five children: Cora, who is the principal of schools at South Tacoma, Washington; William F., connected with the Soo Line Railroad as a contractor; Mrs. Nanna Johnson, who died at Minneapolis in 1917, wife of a railroad man of that city; Harry Allen; and David, a harness maker by trade, who lives with his mother at Anoka.

Harry A. Stevens graduated from the high school of Anoka in 1912, and he spent one year as a teacher in South Dakota. For eight months he was connected with the General Electric Company at Coon Rapids, near Minneapolis. His home has been in Montana since 1914, when he located at Broadview, spent a short time in a general merchandise store and then established the Broadview Independent with N. D. Sherman, and was its editor for about six months. He sold his interest to Mr. Sherman and then joined the McCaul-Webster Elevator Company at Broadview as bookkeeper of the local branch. Later he was promoted to yard manager and in 1918 was sent to Rapelje to take the management of the business. The business at Rapelje consists of handling lumber and hardware. The main offices are at Minneapolis and there are twenty-six branches in Montana, and trade relations cover the states of North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska.

Mr. Stevens is a member of the Rapelje Commercial Club, is affiliated with Rapelje Lodge of Masons, and is a Methodist and democrat. April 18, 1915, he married at Broadview Miss Rachel Dunton, daughter of Abram and Luzerne (Lovelace) Dunton. Her parents live on a ranch near Rapelje.

MAURICE J. BREEN. While prepared at the university for the legal profession, Maurice J. Breen has never practiced law except in handling his own interests, and has been primarily a banker. He was one of the organizers and is president of the First National Bank of Bridger.

Mr. Breen was born at Edina in Northeast Missouri May 13, 1875. His parents, John and Margaret (McMahon) Breen, were born in Ireland and came to the United States in 1868, first locating at Boston. The father was a tanner by trade, but in this country always followed farming. He died in 1914 and his wife in 1883. Maurice Breen has four brothers and four sisters living: John, district manager of the Montana Oil Company at Great Falls; Henry, in the hardware and implement business at Ghent, Minnesota; Jerry, a student in the University of Minnesota; James, attending St. Thomas College at St. Paul; Mary, wife of W. C. Ahern, of Taunton, Minnesota; Nellie, unmarried, at home; Sadie, a school teacher at Amiret, Minnesota; and Bessie, who is attending school at St. Paul.

When Maurice J. Breen was five years old his parents left their farm in Missouri and moved to Chicago and soon afterwards went out to the plains of Minnesota. Maurice J. Breen acquired his early education at Marshall, Minnesota, graduating from high school and later entered the law department of the University of Minnesota, graduating in 1901. After graduation he engaged in the grain and banking business at Macoun, Saskatchewan, where he had charge of a bank as cashier from 1901 to 1910. He then returned to Minneapolis and until 1914 was engaged in the real estate business in that city. Mr. Breen came to Montana in 1914, had charge of a real estate and insurance business at Laurel for a time, and since 1915 has been a resident of Bridger. Associated with the late Col. A. L. Babcock, J. W. Chapman and J. O. Higham, he established the First National Bank of Bridger with a capital of $25,000. It now has a surplus of $5,000, and the bank is a member of the Federal Reserve system.

Mr. Breen is a democrat in politics but has never been an aspirant for office. His parents were Catholics, he was reared in that faith and his family give the church dutiful allegiance. Mr. Breen married in 1909 Katherine Ahern, a daughter of Garret and Katherine (Brown) Ahern, of Taunton, Minnesota. Her father was a farmer in Minnesota and died in 1896. Her mother is still living on the home farm. Mr. and Mrs. Breen have four children: Mary, born in 1910; Margaret, born in 1912; Katherine, born in 1913; and John, born in 1916.

JACOB P. MADSEN, mayor of Fromberg, Montana, and one of the most thoroughly progressive executives in the state, is a man of sterling characteristics and fearlessness of action. He was born near Copenhagen, Denmark, November 24, 1873, a son of Mas Sorensen, also born near Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1826 and died in that same vicinity in January, 1902. A carpenter and builder, he did an extensive business and was a pensioner of the Government on account of having been severely wounded upon three occasions while serving his country as a soldier during the war between Germany and Denmark during 1848-50. He was a lifelong member of the Lutheran Church. The maiden name of his wife was Karen Jacobsen, and she was born in Denmark in 1834, and died near Copenhagen in 1896. Their children were as follows: Soren, who became a miner in Australia, died in that country when forty-three years old; Mari died unmarried in Denmark at the age of forty-six years; Rudolph, who is a farmer near Fromberg; Caroline, who married Peter Madsen, a member of the Omaha police force, died in 1913; Jacobin, who is unmarried, lives in California; and Jacob P., whose name heads this review.

Jacob P. Madsen attended the public schools of his native land and learned the trade of a cabinetmaker. In 1891, seeking for better opportunities, he came to the United States, his objective point being Billings, Montana. After his arrival, he homesteaded 160 acres of land near Fromberg, living on his land until he proved it, and then in 1912 he sold it and came to Fromberg, where he established himself in a livery, dray and automobile business, being the sole proprietor, with offices on Main Street, and feed barns on the same thoroughfare. Mr. Madsen owns the building in which his business is located and also a warehouse and his handsome modern residence.

A stanch republican, Mr. Madsen was the successful candidate of his party for mayor of Fromberg in 1918 for a term of two years. Very patriotic, he had passed by the city council a law forbidding during the period of the war the use of the German and Austrian languages in public places in Fromberg, and saw that it was rigidly enforced. He is an able official and takes a great pride in his city, having in view some important improvement if reconstruction conditions permit of their being commenced. Well known as a Mason, he belongs to Roman Eagle Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Fromberg.

In 1893 Mr. Madsen was married at Billings, Montana, to Miss Christine Larsen, born in Denmark, who died at Fromberg in 1905, having borne her husband five children, namely: Carrie, who married Ben Parker, died at Fromberg in 1918, but he survives and is a carpenter of Fromberg; Myrtle, who married Cliff Malon, a carpenter of Fromberg; Hazel, who married Mark Lovelady, now connected with the oil refinery at Greybull, Wyoming; Otto, who enlisted for service during the great war in January, 1918, is now with the American Expeditionary Forces in France; and Edith, who is at home. Mr. Madsen was married in 1912 to Mrs. Carrie Derving, who was born in Tennessee. There are no children by this second marriage.

J. HERMAN WOLCOTT. Among the representative business men of Southern Montana the name of J. Herman Wolcott should be mentioned. As proprietor of one of the largest and most complete stores of his section of Park County, he has carried on the various departments of his enterprise with that discretion, foresight and energy which are sure to find their natural sequence in success. Having always been a hard worker, a good manager and a man of conservative habits, and being fortunately situated in a thriving new community, it is no wonder that he has won the position that he today enjoys in the business world. He came to this section of the country amid comparatively pioneer conditions and has lived to see wonderful changes take place in this section of the great Treasure State, always lending such aid as he could in the work of upbuilding this section, whose interests he has at heart.

J. Herman Wolcott is descended from good old English stock, the family having been founded in America by Henry Wolcott, who came here in colonial days and located in Connecticut. Among his descendants was Emery P. Wolcott, a native of New York State and the grandfather of J. Herman Wolcott. He lived his life and died in his native state. Among his children was Samuel P. Wolcott, father of J. Herman, and who was born in Oneida, New York, in 1816, and who died at Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1906. He was reared and educated in Oneida and for a time lived in Steuben County, New York, where he farmed and followed the vocation of a blacksmith. He went to Rome, New York, and learned the trade of toolmaking, but later moved to Warsaw, that state, where he again took up the dual occupation of farming and blacksmithing. In 1870 Mr. Wolcott moved to Nashua, Iowa, and farmed, but a year later he went to West Union, Minnesota, making the then long trip over the old "Jim Hill trail" with wagons. In that section of Minnesota Mr. Wolcott became a pioneer farmer and remained there nearly two decades. In 1890 he retired from active labors and came to Livingston, Montana, to live. Shortly afterward he went to California and for awhile lived in the Soldiers' Home, but finally came back to Minnesota, making his home at Minneapolis until his death.

Samuel P. Wolcott was an ardent republican in politics and took an active part in local public affairs in the various places where he lived. In Todd County, Minnesota, he was supervisor and member of the Town Council. He was a member and active supporter of the Congregational Church and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Wolcott was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1864 in the Fifty-Fourth Regiment of New York Engineers, with which he served for one year.

Mr. Wolcott married Harriet T. Marshall, who was born in Wyoming County, New York, in 1826, and died at West Union, Minnesota, in 1889. To this worthy couple were born the following children: Ormus P., who was formerly a railroad man, is now retired and lives at St. Paul, Minnesota; Helen P., who now resides in Wyoming, is the widow of Thomas R. Rosier, late a farmer and inventor, of Minnesota; Horace, who died at West Union, Minnesota, at the age of twenty-eight years, was a farmer and lived at home with his parents; Henry J. is a contractor and builder at Livingston, Montana; Edward, who died in 1904, was a farmer and merchant at Moline, Illinois; Harriet T. is the wife of George T. Collins, a coal dealer in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Marcus Minor is also in the coal business at Minneapolis; Marion E. is the wife of Herbert E. Jones, court stenographer at Hamilton, Montana; and J. Herman, the immediate subject of this review.

J. Herman Wolcott was born at Warsaw, Wyoming County, New York, on October 14, 1866. In early youth he accompanied his parents on their removals to Iowa and Minnesota, and in Todd

J. Herman Walcott

County of the latter state he received his education, attending the high school at Sauk Center. In 1888 Mr. Wolcott came to Livingston, Montana, and entered the employ of A. W. Miles, hardware dealer, subsequently becoming manager of the Miles Company, with which he was identified for a number of years, becoming a stockholder in the company. In 1912 Mr. Wolcott came to Clyde Park as manager of the new store acquired by A. W. Miles, and under his administration the business rapidly grew to immense proportions. In 1914 Mr. Wolcott disposed of his stock in the Miles Company and then he and the Bliler Brothers bought the business, which was then conducted under the title of the Wolcott-Bliler Company. In 1919 Mr. Wolcott bought the Bliler interests in the business and is now the sole owner. He has developed it into a department store, than which no better can be found in this section of the state. He carried a large and well selected stock and, because of the courteous treatment, prompt service and high quality of goods sold a phenomenal trade has been built up, drawing from a radius of twenty miles or more. In addition to his store Mr. Wolcott is also the owner of a fine ranch of 640 acres of irrigated land located about three miles southwest of Clyde Park. He is also a stockholder and a director in the First State Bank of Clyde Park and in many ways has given practical demonstration of the faith he has in the Shields River Valley, one of the most favored sections of the great Treasure State.

Politically Mr. Wolcott is a republican and has been honored by his fellow citizens in his election as alderman from the first ward and as mayor of his city, to which latter office he was chosen in 1918. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and fraternally is identified with Clyde Park Lodge No. 64, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and with Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. At Livingston he has membership in the Railway Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Wolcott has been married three times. In 1895, at Livingston, he was married to May F. Nesbit, of Allegheny, Pennsylvania. To this union were born the following children: Winfield, born April 6, 1898, is a second lieutenant in the United States marine service, having graduated from the training school at Quantico, Virginia, on June 15, 1919; Margaret, born April 3, 1903, is a sophomore in the Clyde Park High School. Mrs. May Wolcott died in 1904, at Livingston, and in 1906 Mr. Wolcott married, at Glenwood, Minnesota, Mattie E. Shaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Shaw, the former of whom is a retired farmer at Sauk Center, Minnesota, his wife having died. To Mr. Wolcott's second union the following children were born: Marion, May 30, 1907; Josephine, May 14, 1908, and Dorothy, May 20, 1910. Mrs. Mattie Wolcott died at Clyde Park on July 21, 1915, and on September 30, 1917, Mr. Wolcott was married to Mrs. Eleda L. (Felsted) Parks. She is the daughter of Theodore and Mary (Johnson) Felsted, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Felsted was a machinist at Winona, Minnesota.

In all his relations with his fellow men Mr. Wolcott has been upright and conscientious, gentlemanly, considerate and courteous in his personal and social contact, and he has earned the enviable standing which he enjoys in the community. The qualities of keen discrimination, sound judgment and executive ability have entered very largely into his makeup and are contributing elements to the splendid success which has come to him.

ROBERT C. CARDELL. One of the biggest industries in Billings, Montana, is the manufacture of gas by the Billings Gas Company, for domestic and industrial consumption. One of the founders and the vice president and manager of this corporation is Robert C. Cardell. Mr. Cardell is a business man of long experience, excels as an executive and organizer, and who is responsible with others for the Billings Gas Company, organized in 1912, and also the organization known as the Montana Sash and Door Company, of which he is secretary.

Mr. Cardell was born at Malcolm in Poweshiek County, Iowa, July 21, 1879, a son of Leander and Emma L. (Chapman) Cardell. His father, born in Vermont in 1835, was a California gold seeker in the early days, going around the Horn. He was on the Pacific Coast three years, then returned East, and soon afterward became a pioneer settler in Poweshiek County, Iowa. In 1880 he moved to Dallas County in the same state, and was in the real estate and loan business until 1895, when he retired. He served as a member of the Iowa Legislature. He was a republican, a member of the Congregational Church, and his death occurred in 1907. Robert C. Cardell and his sister, Florence, wife of J. R. Swearingen, president of the Montana Sash and Door Company, are the only survivors of five children, the others dying in infancy.

Mr. Cardell attended school at Perry, Iowa, was a student at Stetson University and the University of Michigan, and in 1900 at the age of twenty-one, was a member of the partnership firm of John R. Swearingen and Company at Perry, Iowa, lumber dealers.

In 1903 he became traveling salesman for the Huttig Manufacturing Company of Muscatine, Iowa. This firm did a large business in the manufacture of sash, doors and mill work. Mr. Cardell acquired stock in the company, and in 1906 was one of the members of the firm selected to extend the business into the Northwest. He was assistant manager of the branch at Billings. Mr. Cardell helped organize the Montana Sash and Door Company on February 1, 1911, and has since been its secretary. The size and scope of this business may be understood from the fact that it is capitalized at $500,000. When Mr. Cardell came to Billings in 1906 to assist in establishing the western branch of the Huttig Manufacturing Company he also organized the Cardell Lumber and Coal Company and the Cardell Ridge Lumber Company, of which companies he was president.

In April, 1915, Mr. Cardell severed his active connections with both the Montana Sash and Door Company and the Cardell Ridge Lumber Company to take the active management of the Billings Gas Company, of which he had previously been a director.

During the critical years of development that followed there were periods when the prospects were far from rosy, but with a steadily increasing volume of business and after trebling the capacity of the gas works the Billings Gas Company has emerged as one of the city's leading manufacturing institutions.

These enterprises obviously make heavy demands upon his time and energies. However, he is an interested student and member of various Masonic bodies, including Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar; Scottish Rite Consistory at Butte; and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is affiliated with Billings Lodge of Elks and in politics is a republican.

April 10, 1906, the same year he came to Montana, he married Miss Florence Penfield, a native of Iowa. They have two children: Mary and Robert Leander.

JOHN R. DAVIS has been a factor in the Broadview community of Yellowstone County for over ten years, has a ranch ten miles west of Broadview and is also serving as county commissioner.

He was born at Fort Edward, Washington County, New York, February 6, 1873. His paternal ancestors came from Wales and were colonial settlers in Vermont. His grandfather, Milo Davis, was born in Vermont in 1815 and was an early day lumber operator in Warren County, New York, near Bolton, but spent his last years at Fort Edward, retired, where he died in 1911. He married a Miss Shedd, a native of Vermont, who also died at Fort Edward, New York. Samuel L. Davis, father of John R., was born at Bolton in Warren County, New York, in 1841, was reared and married in that county and was connected with the same line of business as his father. For a time he lived at Fort Edward as agent for a lumber company, in 1882 removed to Indian Lake, New York, where he engaged in the lumber business, and is now living retired at Indian Lake. He served several years as assessor of Hamilton County, New York, and also as justice of the peace and in other township offices. He is a republican and in 1861 enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-second New York Infantry and was all through the Civil war. He is a member of the Baptist Church and the Odd Fellows fraternity. Samuel L. Davis married Jane E. Bolton. She was born in Sheffield, England, in 1841 and died at Indian Lake, New York, in January, 1917. Mattie, the oldest of three children, is the wife of Nelson St. Marie, a merchant at Indian Lake, New York. The other two are John R. and Francis S., both residents of Broadview, Montana, the latter also a farmer.

John R. Davis graduated from the high school of Fort Edward, New York, in 1888. From that time until he came West in 1906 he was employed in the lumber business with his father. He spent two years on a farm in South Dakota and in 1908 came to the Broadview community of Montana, where he homesteaded 160 acres. Later he owned 480 acres but sold half a section of this in April, 1919. One hundred and sixty acres he retained as his home ranch, ten miles west of Broadview, and it is highly developed as a farm. Since its organization in 1915 Mr. Davis has been president of the Farmers Elevator Company in Broadview.

Mr. Davis was elected county commissioner of Stillwater County for the six year term in 1916. He is affiliated with Stillwater Lodge No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Elks, and is a member of Britton, South Dakota Lodge of Odd Fellows, having joined that order at Johnsburg in Warren County, New York.

September 21, 1910, at Billings, he married Miss Marietta Thayer, daughter of Dewitt and Florence Thayer. Her parents are farmers at Britton, South Dakota, and Mrs. Davis is a graduate of the high school there. To their marriage were born five children: Geneva, born July 29, 1912; Florence, born September 5, 1913; Montana, born September 19, 1914, and died October October 17, 1915; Lois, born May 15, 1916; and Irene, born November 26, 1917.

JOHN NORMILE is an old time Montana resident, has been in the state thirty years, was a rancher and cattle man for many years in Carbon County, and is now proprietor of the only hardware and lumber business in Boyd, a town in which he has been much interested for several years.

Mr. Normile was born at Cleveland, Ohio, June 29, 1869. His father, Michael Normile, was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1844, and came to the United States about 1863. For several years he was employed as an engineer by the Standard Oil Company at Cleveland. In 1875 he moved to Northeast Missouri, and for about forty years was a farmer in the vicinity of Edina, but is now living retired in that town. He is a democrat and a Catholic. He married Elizabeth Scanlon, who was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1852. She died at Edina, Missouri, in 1911. John is the oldest of a large family of children, and a brief record of the others is as follows: Kate, who died at the age of eighteen; Elizabeth, living with her father at Edina; James, a confectioner at Seattle, Washington; Joseph, who died at the age of eight years; Michael, who is an under sheriff of Carbon County and lives at Red Lodge; Mamie, a trained nurse at St. Louis, Missouri; Charles, a farmer at Edina; Levena, a stenographer employed at St. Louis; Leo, a farmer at Boyd, Montana, and Frank, who was an American soldier and participated in the great Battle of Argonne Forest and returned to the United States in 1919.

John Normile was about six years old when his parents moved to Knox County, Missouri, and he attended rural schools there and lived on his father's farm to the age of eighteen. On coming to Montana in 1888 he was employed one year on a farm near old Gallatin. For six months he was on railroad construction work at Cheney, Washington, and for three years worked in a sawmill at Bozeman, Montana. In 1892 he came to the Crow Indian Reservation in Carbon County, homesteaded 160 acres, proved it up and made it his home for twelve years before he sold it. There he started in the cattle business and up to 1910 he grazed his cattle over a large range and was one of the prominent livestock men of Carbon County.

Mr. Normile bought a general merchandise store at Boyd in 1910, but sold it after three years. He established his present business in 1915, the only hardware and lumber establishment in Boyd. Besides his business property he owns a residence in Boyd, and an irrigated ranch of 160 acres three miles east of Joliet, and another quarter section three miles southwest of Boyd.

Mr. Normile has always acted as a democrat in politics. During 1905-08 he served as assessor of Carbon County. He is a Catholic, and a member of Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus. He has been a factor in financial affairs of Boyd, being director and vice president of the Boyd State Bank and is a stockholder in the United States National Bank of Red Lodge.

Mr. Normile married at Billings, February 21, 1910, Miss Agnes Ross. Her mother is Mrs. Mary Ross of Red Lodge. For six years Mrs. Normile was superintendent of the schools of Carbon County and is known to hundreds of Montana residents for her capable work in education.

GEORGE EDWARD SNELL. An eminently useful and esteemed citizen of Yellowstone County, George Edward Snell, of Billings, is not only an able representative of the legal profession, having a large law practice, but as an extensive landholder is actively associated with the agricultural interests of county and state. His far-reaching activities during the recent World war, especially in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association drives, were most effective, their success in many instances having been largely due to his business ability, judgment and tact. A son of George Amos Snell, he was born August 1, 1879, in Pekin, Oswego County, New York, of honored English ancestry, being a lineal descendant, many generations removed, from one Willebrod Snell, a life-long resident of England, who discovered the refraction of light, thus making possible spectacles and optical instruments, and who likewise won the distinction of being the first to measure the world by triangulation.

J. W. Forwin,

Thomas Snell, the immigrant ancestor of that branch of the Snell family to which the subject of this sketch belongs, came from England to Connecticut about 1665, settling at West Bridgewater, where he became one of the largest landowners of that vicinity. The maiden name of his wife was Martha Harris. Frederick Snell, grandfather of George Edward Snell, a veteran of the War of 1812 and a lifelong resident of New York State, was born in the Mohawk Valley and died in Oswego, New York.

George Amos Snell was born August 14, 1848, in Jefferson County, New York, and was there reared and educated. An agriculturalist, he became interested in dairy products, and for many years was widely known as a cheese buyer. A stanch republican in politics, he was active in local affairs, and served several terms as justice of the peace. He was a man of strong religious tendencies, and a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death, which occurred at his home in Pekin, New York, in 1881, was a loss not only to his family and friends, but to the community in which he lived. He married, July 24, 1870, in Oswego County, New York, Etta Eliza Brown, whose birth occurred in Richland, New York, April 24, 1854. She survived him, and in 1885 married for her second husband Clark C. Loomis, and removed from Orwell, New York, to a farm in Delaware County, Iowa. Mr. Loomis died the following year, in 1886, and Mrs. Loomis is now living in Manchester, Iowa.

Receiving the rudiments of his education in Manchester, Iowa, George Edward Snell was graduated from its high school in 1899, and subsequently taught school in Delaware County, Iowa, a year, after which he served as principal of the graded school in Manchester, Iowa, for a year. Going to Ann Arbor, Michigan, in 1902, he studied for a year in the literary department of the University of Michigan. In the fall of 1903 Mr. Snell located in Montana, and for two years thereafter was superintendent of the schools at Deer Lodge. Desirous of entering the legal profession, he studied law in the office of Edward Sharmikow in the meantime attending school for two summers at the University of Michigan, where he passed the freshman and junior law credits, and later took the senior course, being there graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in the class of 1906. Coming directly to Billings, Mr. Snell accepted the position of assistant principal of the local high school, and in 1907 he was elected principal of the same school, and in that capacity met with decided success. In 1908 Mr. Snell began his professional career, and is now numbered among the leading attorneys of Billings, as head of the well-known firm of Snell & Arnott, having built up an extensive and lucrative patronage, his offices being at Nos. 310-312-314 Securities Building.

Special mention should here be made of the efficient work Mr. Snell accomplished during the war as an active and loyal member of the Young Men's Christian Association. Devoted to the cause for which our men were so heroically fighting, he labored unselfishly and untiringly during each drive of the organization with which he was so prominently identified, in the first drive serving as chairman of that branch of it that included five counties. In October, 1918, at the request of the officials of the National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Snell went to San Francisco to assume charge of the personnel department of the Western Department of the National War Work Department Council. During the six months that he retained that position Mr. Snell had supervision of the recruiting of all men sent overseas by the association, and also of all association secretaries placed in the home camps of the Western Military Division, which included not only eight states, but Honolulu.

Mr. Snell possesses excellent financial ability, and through wise investments has acquired interests in 6,000 acres of good Montana ranch lands, and owns a pleasant modernly constructed residence at 310 Clark Avenue. Politically he is a stanch republican, and has rendered the city acceptable service as alderman. Religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church, which he has served as trustee. He is also a member, vice president and one of the directors of the Young Men's Christian Association of Billings, and a member of the state committee of that organization. He likewise belongs to the Billings Golf and Country Club, which he has served as director. Fraternally he is a member of Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Billings; of Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; of Billings Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar; of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and of Billings Consistory. He also belongs to Billings Star Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and to Billings Camp, Woodmen of the World.

On June 24, 1906, at Tarkio, Missouri, Mr. Snell was united in marriage with Miss Jessie Gray Arnott, a graduate of Tarkio College. Her father, George Arnott, Sr., a retired ranchman, is now living in Billings, Montana, with his good wife, whose maiden name was Susie Gray. Mr. and Mrs. Snell are the parents of two children, George Donald, born October 13, 1909, and James Le Roy, born February 12, 1911.

JOHN W. CORWIN is the pioneer merchant of Park City and has long been prominent in business, banking and political affairs in Stillwater County.

Mr. Corwin was born at Cantril, Iowa, August 20, 1875. Corwin is a noted name in American history, particularly because of the record of Tom Corwin, one of the most conspicuous men in Ohio politics in ante-bellum times, and congressman and twice governor of that state. He was an uncle of the father of John W. Corwin. The Corwins came out of England in colonial times, were pioneers in Kentucky, and from that state four brothers of the name moved to Ohio. B. W. Corwin, father of the Montana merchant, was born at Lebanon in Warren County, Ohio, in 1842. After his marriage in his native town he moved to Iowa, settling near Cantril, where he died in 1876. He spent all his life as a farmer. Politically he was a republican and in 1861 he enlisted in the Forty-Second Ohio Heavy Artillery and saw four years of active service, coming out of the war with the rank of lieutenant. His wife was Mary Tufts, who was born at Lebanon in Warren County, Ohio, in 1847 and died at Milton, Iowa, in 1904. Their children were: Hattie, wife of C. E. Drake, a retired farmer living at Bloomfield, Iowa; Winnie, who died at the age of nineteen years; J. E., who is a manufacturer of silos at Des Moines, Iowa; Frank E., a physician and surgeon at Anaheim, California, who married Belle Tharp; and John W.

John W. Corwin was one year old when his father died. He attended public school at Milton, Iowa, going from the high school to the Highland Park Pharmacy School at Des Moines, Iowa. For a year he had charge of a drug business at Bonaparte, Iowa, and then engaged in the drug business with his brother, Dr. Frank E. Corwin, for 2½ years at Kinross, Iowa.

Mr. Corwin came to Montana in the fall of 1899 and at once identified himself with the little town of Park City. He established his mercantile business there January 1, 1900, and it is the oldest business of the kind in that part of Stillwater County, and during the time of extensive live stock operations in the Lake Basin country to the north supplied that trade for a distance of thirty miles. The store, which handles drugs in addition to general merchandise, is on the corner of Main and Clark streets. Mr. Corwin owns the controlling interest in both the store and the building, and also has a modern home in Park City and business property at Rapelje and some real estate at Columbus, Montana. He is vice president of the Farmers State Bank at Wheat Basin, a director of the Park City State Bank, and a director of the First National Bank of Rapelje.

A republican in politics, Mr. Corwin was elected a member of the Legislature in 1913, when Stillwater County was created, being its first representative. He was re-elected in 1914 and served as a member of the committees on federal relations, horticulture, railroads and transportation, sanitary affairs and townships and counties, also as a member of the special typewriter committee. It was on this committee that he rendered the state perhaps the best financial service by urging the adoption of his committee's report to rent typewriters for use during the session instead of buying them, as had been the custom. Between sessions the twenty-five to thirty new machines would disappear and a like number was to be purchased at the beginning of each session. It is estimated that a continuation of this policy is saving the state about $3,000 at each session of the Legislature. Realizing the danger to public health of the old time, careless methods of dispensing drugs and poison in the state, he drafted, introduced and secured the passage of House Bill No. 191, an act to regulate the manufacture and sale of drugs and medicine in the State of Montana. While the bill was in the interest of the public welfare, the druggists over the state saw the need of such legislation and gave it their hearty endorsement. In recognition of his service in the interest of the profession of pharmacy, he was elected president of the Montana State Druggist Association in 1915, and as a representative of that body attended a meeting of the National Association of Retail Druggists held at Indianapolis, Indiana, the following year.

He is affiliated with Corinthian Lodge of Masons at Laurel, with Billings Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, also with Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Laurel Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and Park City Lodge, Knights of the Maccabees.

At Kinross, Iowa, February 27, 1898, Mr. Corwin married Miss Minnie Powell, daughter of Benjamin and Catherine (Spain) Powell, both now deceased. Her father was a farmer and an early settler of Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Corwin had two children: Frank P., who died when twelve years old, and Genevieve M., who was born May 28, 1902, and is in the third year of high school at Park City.

MACOMB B. GRAY. The men whose names are enrolled among those who have developed the business interests of Montana are almost without exception possessed of unusual capabilities which they have devoted to the expansion of the concerns with which they have connected themselves. The competition in the West is of too strenuous a nature to permit of any leisure class among those who hope to accomplish something worth while. The opportunities are unlimited, but hard work and a thorough knowledge of the industry under consideration are required to raise a business above the dead level of mediocrity. Therefore when any man does succeed in placing his house among the reliable and prosperous ones of any live western city, he has furnished incontrovertible proof that he possesses those characteristics enumerated above. The whole career of Macomb B. Gray, vice president and manager of the Gray Seed Company of Billings, Montana, from the time he entered the business arena until today has been one series of successive advancements, each one giving him additional responsibilities and dignity. At present his company is one of the leading ones in this line in the city, and its territory is international.

Macomb B. Gray was born at Cape Vincent, New York, August 12, 1863, a son of Edwin and Eleanor (Wood) Gray. The Gray family was founded in the American colonies by Andrew Gray, who came from the north of Ireland to what later became New York State in 1737, his family being of Scotch-Irish extraction. One of his descendants, Adam Gray, the grandfather of Macomb B. Gray, was born in Montgomery County, New York, and died at Cape Vincent, New York, before his grandson was born. During the War of 1812 he served his country as an officer with gallant bravery. Early in life he was engaged in mercantile pursuits, but later on in life was a farmer. His wife, who was the grandmother of Macomb B. Gray, bore the maiden name of Margaret Loucks, and was born in New York State.

Edwin Gray, the father, was born at St. Johnsville, Montgomery County, New York, in 1821, and he died at Cape Vincent, New York, in 1899. He was reared in his native place, but after his marriage at Cape Vincent he located there and that continued his home as long as he lived. The farm which he bought and conducted during all of his succeeding active years still remains in the family and is the home of his widow. The farm was purchased from the grandfather, Andrew Gray. A democrat in politics, he exercised his right of suffrage, but did not care to assume the responsibilities of public office, although he was very prominent in local affairs, and was called "Squire." For many years he was a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Cape Vincent. The maiden name of his wife was Eleanor Wood, and she was born in Montgomery County, New York, in 1824. Their children were as follows: Adam, who died at the age of sixty-three years on the home farm; Mary, who married James Rector, and lives at Point Peninsula, Jefferson County, New York, her husband, who was a farmer, being deceased, having during his lifetime taken a prominent part in politics as a republican; Margaret, who married Joseph Bates, a farmer, resides at Cape Vincent, Jefferson County, New York; Evelyn, who married Campbell Bates, a brother of Joseph Bates, lives at Cape Vincent, New York, her husband having retired from his former agricultural pursuits; Frances, who is unmarried, lives with her mother on the old farm; Edwin, who was a railroad conductor, was killed when he was forty years old in a railroad accident between Tacoma and Seattle, Washington; Macomb B., whose name heads this review; and Elizabeth, who married Fred Pond, a farmer and extensive stock dealer of Cape Vincent, New York.

Macomb B. Gray was reared at Cape Vincent and after he had completed his studies in its public schools he was prepared for college, and then entering Cornell University of New York State in 1882 he took the full course and was graduated therefrom in 1886, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He belongs to the Greek letter fraternity Delta Kappa Epsilon. For the first year subsequent to his leaving college Mr. Gray was engaged in teaching school in the military academy at Atlanta, Georgia, but left the educational field to embark in the seed business at Cape Vincent, under the name of the Macomb Gray Company, which was afterward merged into the Cape Vincent Seed Company, of which he was vice president and manager until 1901, when he sold his interest and, going to Port Huron, Michigan, established the McMorran, Gray Seed Company, directing its operations for nine years as treasurer and manager. Once more he disposed of his interests, and in 1910 came to Billings, Montana, and for one year was associated with the Northrup King Company of Minneapolis, Minnesota, whose Billings representative he was, resigning to go into the seed business on his own account. In 1917 Mr. Gray incorporated the Gray Seed Company, which has the following officials: I. D. O'Donnell, president; Macomb B. Gray, vice president and manager; and S. D. MacDonald, secretary and treasurer. The offices and plant are located on Montana Avenue and Twenty-first Street, North. This company sells seeds all over the United States, Canada and even in foreign countries.

In 1894 Mr. Gray was united in marriage at Detroit, Michigan, to Miss Frances Millen, a daughter of Capt. James and Mary (Iselin) Millen, the former of whom died at Detroit, his widow still surviving him and making her home at Detroit. He was a captain of a steamer on the Great Lakes during his younger days, but later in life became manager of freight and passenger lines on these same bodies of water. Mr. and Mrs. Gray have two daughters, namely: Marie, who was graduated from the Billings High School, is at home, and Dorothy, who is also at home, was graduated from Cornell University of New York State and is a landscape gardener. She belongs to the Greek letter fraternity Chi Omega. The family residence is at No. 918 North Thirty-first Street. Mr. Gray is an independent democrat. A Mason in good standing, he belongs to Cape Vincent Lodge No. 293, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. The Billings Chamber of Commerce and the Billings Club also holds his membership. Big of brain and warm of heart, Mr. Gray is a man who impresses his personality upon all with whom he is associated, and wins and retains friendships in no ordinary degree. Under his able management his company has expanded very considerably, and is justly accounted one of the concerns which give to Billings much of its present prestige.

PHIL GREIN, president of the Billings Brewing Company of Billings, Montana, is one of the substantial men of this part of the state, whose sound judgment and singleness of purpose cause him to be regarded as one in whom implicit trust may be placed. He was born at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Germany, July 22, 1863, a son of John Philip Grein. The father was born near Frankfurt, Germany in 1830, and he died at Frankfurt in 1882, having devoted his active years to agricultural pursuits. Like all of his countrymen, John Philip Grein gave his land the usual military service, and also rendered it valuable aid as a civilian during the Franco-Prussian war in 1870, having charge of shipping all of the beef into France for the use of the German army during its occupancy of French soil. The Lutheran Church held his membership. His wife before marriage was Lena Fach, and she was born in Germany in 1831, where she spent her life and died in 1915. Their children were as follows: Bertha, who is unmarried and lives at Jugenheim, Germany; Hedwick, who married M. L. Herse, a photographer, and lives in Germany; Phil, whose name heads this review; Fritz, who is a hotel proprietor of Jugenheim, Germany; and Catherine, who married B. Herff, a member of a fertilizing firm, and lives at Chicago, Illinois.

Phil Grein was reared in Germany and educated in its public schools, which he left when seventeen years old to begin an apprenticeship to the brewing trade. In 1881 he came to the United States, and spent his first year in this country at St. Louis, Missouri, where he worked at his trade. Leaving there, he went to Miles City, Montana, in 1882, and was engaged in various activities in this state for several years, among which was working as a cow boy. In 1884 he went to Butte, Montana, to engage with the Centennial Brewing Company as a driver of one of their wagons, rising successively to the positions of collector, solicitor and then general manager, and remaining with that concern for fifteen years. During November, 1899, Mr. Grein came to Billings, and began at once to erect the plant and offices of the Billings Brewing Company at the corner of Twenty-fourth Street and Montana Avenue. The present officers of this large corporation are as follows: Phil Grein, president; J. Jacobson, vice president; and Arthur Trennery, secretary. This company is incorporated, and is the only brewery in Southeastern Montana, supplying the trade as far as Beach, North Dakota, and Livingston, Montana. Formerly Mr. Grein was a stockholder and director of the Farmers and Traders Bank of Billings, and he founded the Chrystal Ice and Fuel Company of Billings, but sold his interests in 1918. He owns a 280 acre ranch 3½ miles north of Billings, where he raises milk and Shorthorn cattle and blooded stock of all kinds. This ranch is operated as a fancy stock ranch, the grain grown on it being used for feeding purposes. The Grein residence at 115 North Twenty-second Street is a modern one and the property of Mr. Grein.

In 1897 Mr. Grein was united in marriage with Miss Amanda Benson at Butte, Montana. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Benson, the former of whom was a farmer of Minnesota, but is now deceased, his wife having also passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Grein have no children. In politics Mr. Grein is an independent democrat, and he has served as a member of the Billings City Council. He belongs to Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Billings Eagle Eyrie No. 274, Faternal Order of Eagles, and the Sons of Hermann. In him the Lutheran Church has a consistent member and he contributes generously towards its support. Ever since coming to Billings Mr. Grein has had the good of the community at heart and has exerted himself to advance its best interests.

FLEMING WELLINGTON ROBB. The secret of the rapid development of Billings lies in the fact that so many of its leading citizens belong to the younger class of business men, who have not yet lost their enthusiasm for their work, nor become satisfied with what they have accomplished. In seeking to realize their ambitions these alert and aggressive young men are giving an impetus to all branches of activity that cannot help but develop their city and attract to it outside capital. One of these representative boosters for a "greater Billings" is Fleming Wellington Robb, actively engaged in the farm loan business.

The Robb family is of English origin and dates back in this country to colonial days, when the progenitor of the American branch located in Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, also Fleming Wellington Robb, was born in the Keystone state, in the vicinity of Muncy, in 1800, and he died at Union, Nebraska, in 1882. Animated by the same spirit of adventure which brought his ancestor to the American colonies from England, the elder Fleming Wellington Robb went to Nebraska at an early day in the history of that state and became one of the pioneer homesteaders of Otoe County, where he acquired 200 acres of land. This farm is now worth $50,000 and is still in the family, the advance in value not only proving the good judgment exercised by the grandfather in his selection of location, but also that he and his descendants knew how to develop land to its fullest extent. With the formation of the republican party he gave its principles his support and voted its ticket the remainder of his life. Early confirmed in the faith of the Episcopal Church, he gave it his earnest support, and assisted in founding a church of that denomination in Otoe County. He married Ellen W. Montgomery, born in Pennsylvania in 1810, and she died near Union, Nebraska in 1892. Their only living child, W. H. M. Robb, is the father of Fleming W. Robb of this review.

W. H. M. Robb was born in Pennsylvania in 1861, and when he was still a lad his parents took him to Nebraska, where he was reared and taught farming by his father. Subsequently he conducted a grain business and owned several elevators, but sold and engaged in farming until 1916, when he moved to Union, Nebraska, where he has resumed his grain operations upon a somewhat extensive scale. He has rendered his state considerable service, as he was steward of the penitentiary at Lincoln, Nebraska, for four years, and also of the Insane Asylum at Norfolk, Nebraska, for two years. Taught from early youth the principles enunciated by the republican party, he has adhered to them all of his mature years. He has also followed in his father's footsteps in religion and is a conscientious member of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. The maiden name of his wife was Jessie Walbridge, and she was born in Wisconsin in 1861. Their children are as follows: Caroline A., who is unmarried and resides with her parents; Hugh M., who is a farmer of Union, Nebraska; and Fleming Wellington Robb.

The birth of Fleming Wellington Robb occurred in Otoe County, Nebraska, July 2, 1884, and he was reared there, attending its rural schools until he became a student of the Omaha, Nebraska, High School, leaving it after two years, when nineteen years of age. Mr. Robb then gained a practical knowledge of the fundamentals of commercial life in the Farmers & Merchants Bank at Verdon, Nebraska, where he was assistant cashier for three years. His efficiency and knowledge of the business then gained him promotion to the position of cashier and he held it for four years. In 1912 he came to Billings Bench, Montana, and for a year was engaged in farming, in this way gaining an insight into agricultural conditions in this region which has been of value to him in his present business, which he established at Billings in 1913, with offices at 402 Electric Building, and of which he is the sole proprietor. In addition to making loans on farm properties Mr. Robb buys and sells ranches, and has won the confidence of his community by his scrupulously honest methods and public-spirited service. Mr. Robb has demonstrated his faith in the future of Billings by investing in city property, owning his comfortable modern residence, which he erected in 1918. He is a republican. An Odd Fellow, Mr. Robb belongs to Verdon Lodge No. 289 of that order. The Billings Episcopal Church holds his membership and receives his generous support.

In 1907 Mr. Robb was married at Elmwood, Nebraska, to Miss Bess M. Tyson, a daughter of L. A. and Jennie (Alton) Tyson. Mr. Tyson is one of the leading druggists of Elmwood, and a man who is held in high esteem by his associates. Mrs. Robb is a graduate of the Plattsmouth High School of Plattmouth, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Robb have two children, namely: Jane, who was born September 30, 1912, and John, who was born June 1, 1915. Mr. Robb is a man who stands very high in Billings, and deserves to do so for he is a tender husband, watchful father, kindly friend, liberal patron of religious and benevolent movements, a wise business advisor and stainless gentleman, whose praiseworthy exertions are directed at all times towards a betterment of existing conditions and a raising of moral standards.

HENRY C. CRIPPEN. While it is a recognized fact that many of the men of this country who have come before the public as successful legislators and eminent statesmen have at one time or other been connected with the practice of the law, it has not yet been decided whether this is due to the arduous training necessary for entrance into his learned profession, or the natural bringing before the electors of one who has to grapple with problems of general interest. No matter which decision is reached, the fact remains that these men of the law do make intelligent and efficient representatives of the will of the people, and that upon them devolves much of the work of making the laws. One of the distinguished members of the bar of Montana, who has already served his district in the State Assembly with dignified capability, is Henry C. Crippen of Billings.

Henry C. Crippen was born on the prairie near Winnebago, Minnesota, February 5, 1872, a son of Samuel P. Crippen. The Crippen family originated in Holland, from whence the founders of the American branch came to this country when it was still an English colony, locating in Pennsylvania. Commingled with the good old Dutch stock is that from England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, through intermarriage, in Mr. Crippen the Scotch-Irish traits predominating. Samuel P. Crippen was born in Indiana in 1839, but was taken when a boy to the vicinity of Davenport, Illinois, and there reared. In young manhood he went to Minnesota, and located at Minneapolis at a time when the future metropolis was represented by two cabins on the Minneapolis side of the river. Later he went to Winnebago, Minnesota, where he was a pioneer and homesteader, being engaged in farming all of his active years, but is now retired and living at Janesville, Minnesota. During the Civil war he enlisted in 1863 as a member of the Minnesota Cavalry, and was in Sibley's Expedition against the Indians. After a service of two years and four months he was honorably discharged. After going to Minnesota Samuel P. Crippen was married to Lydia Cheney, born in St. Lawrence County, New York, in 1845, and she died at Janesville, Minnesota in 1885. Their children were as follows: Walter, who is the first born; Benjamin, who is deceased; William, who is also deceased; Henry C.; and

Chas G. Fichelm

Mary, who married a Mr. Charter and lives at St. Paul, Minnesota.

Henry C. Crippen attended the public schools of Minnesota, and was graduated from the Mankato State Normal School of Mankato, Minnesota, in 1893, following which he engaged in teaching school, and was a superintendent of schools in his native state for six years. He then became a student of the legal department of the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, and was graduated therefrom in 1901, with the degree of Doctor of Law. During that same year Mr. Crippen came to Billings, and has since then carried on a general civil and criminal practice, which has expanded until he has during recent years been connected with some of the most important jurisprudence of the state. A stalwart republican, he was the logical candidate of his party as assemblyman, and was elected to the Thirteenth Session, 1912-1913, and during that period was instrumental in securing the passage of some very important legislation and served on several committees. Professionally he belongs to the Yellowstone County Bar Association and the State Bar Association. His fraternal connections are with Billings Star Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Billings Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Billings Lodge, Loyal Order of Moose. Since their organization he has been an honored member of the Midland and Billings clubs. He owns a pleasant modern home at No. 620 North Twenty-second Street. His offices are located at 406-408 Power Building.

In 1904 Mr. Crippen was married at Billings to Miss Gertrude Dunham, born in Minnesota, and a graduate of the Mankato State Normal School. Prior to her marriage she was a teacher in the city schools of Minneapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Crippen have three children, namely: Clay, who was born May 19, 1905; Bruce, who was born February 19, 1908; and Gertrude Elizabeth, who was born November 21, 1917. Mrs. Crippen is a descendant of John Dunham, who left England by stealth and sailed on the historic Mayflower under the assumed name of Goodman, resuming his own after he reached the safe haven of the new world. Through an ancestor, Thomas Standish, a Revolutionary soldier, Mrs. Crippen owes her membership in the Daughters of the Revolution. He was a direct descendant of Miles Standish.

Mr. Crippen is one who knows the larger world and is at home in it, meeting its problems with ease and understanding, and he is of the timber which makes national statesmen. His service has been genuine, broad and for the public benefit, and there is no doubt but that he will be called upon to assume advancing responsibilities and dignity, his constituents knowing that if he does so their interests will be represented in a manner distinctly successful and creditable.

CHARLES C. WILHELM. No community can reach its full growth without the services of a real estate man who is experienced in the business of handling property. As is well known, the founders of a town do not include in the original survey all of the land destined to be used for building purposes, as this would make the initial taxes too heavy. They lay out a few blocks, relying upon other promoters for additions. After several of these have been laid out, oftentimes by the original owners themselves, the work of developing other suburbs devolves on the alert realty men, who not only do the actual work of surveying, building and otherwise improving, but educate the public in the desirability of owning homes in the outlying districts where the comforts of urban life can be secured as well as those of open space, fresh air and cleanly living conditions. The real estate history of Billings is much the same as that of any other community of its age and extent, and one of the men who has aided in its expansion within the past few years is Charles C. Wilhelm, sole proprietor of the realty firm of Charles C. Wilhelm Company.

The founder of the Wilhelm family in America was the grandfather of Charles C. Wilhelm, who came to this country from Germany and became a pioneer of Muscatine, Iowa, where he worked at his trade of cabinetmaking until his death in that city. His son, L. Wilhelm, father of Charles C. Wilhelm, was born at Muscatine, Iowa, in 1858, and was there reared. In young manhood he went to Mapleton, Iowa, being one of its pioneers, and established himself in the mercantile business. He became prominent in the Presbyterian Church of that city, of which he was a member and generous supporter. The Masonic fraternity has long had him as a member. In politics he is a democrat. After coming to Mapleton Mr. Wilhelm was married to Minnie Bradfield, born at Cherokee, Iowa, in 1860, and died at Mapleton in 1907. Their children were as follows: Charles C., who is the eldest; Lula, who married Arthur Williams, a farmer of Mount Pleasant; Maude, who married Louie Williams, a brother of Arthur Williams, lives in Iowa on a farm; Fred, who is a railroad employe, lives at Traer, Kansas; Louie, who died at the age of fourteen years; and Erne, who is a sergeant in the aviation branch of the United States army, is stationed at Middletown, Pennsylvania. At present L. Wilhelm is living at Los Angeles, California, having retired from active participation in business life in 1918.

Charles C. Wilhelm attended the grammar and high schools of Mapleton, Iowa, and was graduated from the latter in 1905. In 1906 he came to Billings, and for five years was employed in the post office, and then in 1911 embarked in his present business, under the name of the Charles C. Wilhelm Company. He handles city property and ranches within a radius of fifty miles from Billings, and does a very large business. In 1912 Mr. Wilhelm helped to survey the Bull Mountain country in the Pompey's Pillar District, comprising twelve fractional townships. He is a democrat. The Congregational Church holds his membership. Fraternally he belongs to Algeria Temple, Ancient and Accepted Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Lodge, Knights of Pythias; Billings Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Billings Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. The Billings Club affords him social relaxation. A man of means, Mr. Wilhelm owns a comfortable modern residence at 420 Yellowstone Avenue, Billings, and four ranches, 480 acres near Shepherd, two 320-acre farms near Pompey's Pillar, and 120 acres near Huntley, all of which are used for growing grain and stock.

In 1914 Mr. Wilhelm was married to Miss Marion E. Bell, a daughter of Fred and Florence (Marsh) Bell, the ceremony being performed at Billings. Mr. and Mrs. Bell are now residents of Washburn, Wisconsin, where Mr. Bell is clerk of the District Court. Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm have three children, John, who was born March 5, 1916, and Ruth, who was born January 26, 1918, and Charles, born December 9, 1919. Mr. Wilhelm has evinced such ability in his handling of property that he has influenced his competitors and has raised the standards in this line of activity. His judgment with reference to realty values is recognized to be that of an expert, and he is often called upon to decide in matters relating to the settlement of claims based on an advance in property. Both he and Mrs. Wilhelm are very popular, and have gathered about them a congenial social circle, entertaining their friends upon numerous occasions at their pleasant home, and enjoying in their turn the hospitality of others. Mr. Wilhelm's reputation for good sense and unblemished honor is unquestioned, and all of his operations are strikingly characterized by resolute assurance and good judgment.

HON. HARRY A. VAGG, a prosperous merchant of Saco, has been connected with the development of this neighborhood since 1893, and is one of the early settlers of the Milk River Valley country. Honors have been conferred upon him and he had the distinction of being the first man to represent this district in the Upper House of the State Assembly, and is also a bank president.

The birth of Harry A. Vagg took place in Somersetshire, England, December 14, 1868, he being a son of William and Susan (Manley) Vagg. They had two sons and two daughters in their family, of whom Harry A. was the eldest, the others being as follows: Frank M., who joined his brother and was in business with him at Saco until his death in November, 1918, when he left a widow and three children; Miss Annie A., who is a resident of Cardiff, Wales, where her widowed mother is now living; and Mrs. Clara J. Smith, who is also a resident of Cardiff. William Vagg died when Harry A. Vagg was only nine years old. The family was in humble circumstances, depending entirely upon the father's wages for support.

Harry A. Vagg was attending the English public schools when his father died, but his widowed mother, struggling with the problem of caring for her four little ones could not afford to give him many opportunities, and when an uncle, James Vagg of Lockport, New York, offered to take the lad, she sent him on the long voyage to the United States in the charge of some friends who were crossing at that time. This was in May, 1879. After reaching his uncle Harry A. Vagg remained with him for five years and completed his schooling and assisted in farm work. Upon leaving Lockport he came into the far west, his first stopping place being Niagara, North Dakota. He had no definite plans, simply came out to a region which he felt was replete with opportunities, and subsequent events prove that he was right with regard to the country and his own capabilities. For two years he worked on a farm in the vicinity of Niagara, but he had not come into the west with the intention of continuing a farm hand, and eagerly embraced the opportunity when it arrived of engaging with the construction work on the Great Northern Railroad, which brought him into Montana in April, 1887. He was one of the general laborers as far as Fort Benton, and then was made foreman of the section work at Glasgow, and remained there as such for five years. Leaving railroad work, he established himself as a merchant at Saco.

Mr. Vagg opened a new building at Saco in 1893, his being the first business building in the place, and put in a general stock of goods. He has continued to keep this his main interest, although he has been connected with a number of other enterprises. Some years after he came to Saco he entered a homestead almost adjoining the town site, and he is still holding it. For a time, with Dan Garrison, he was also in the sheep business, but later sold his interests.

During the time Mr. Vagg has been a resident of Saco it has grown from a hamlet containing one store to a little city of 600 people, and he has served it as a member of the city council, still continuing in that office. It was in Valley County when he first came here, although previous to this, while he was living at Glasgow, he had helped in creating Valley County from part of Dawson, and later on he was one of the men prominent in having the new county of Phillips created, and was the first to be elected from it to the Montana Senate.

Mr. Vagg encouraged the creation and building up of the banking facilities at Saco, taking stock in the First National Bank, of which he was made vice president at its organization, and later investing in stock of the Farmers & Merchants Bank when it was organized, August 16, 1916. He was made president of the latter institution, and still holds that responsible position. He helped to organize the Saco Creamery, which served the dairy interests of this region until it was destroyed by fire, and he was a stockholder of the Saco Hotel, also destroyed by fire. The first postmaster of Saco, he held the office for six years, and from 1905 to 1909 he was United States land commissioner, and did the work of filing much of the land in the Saco country during that period.

About 1890 Mr. Vagg took out his citizen papers at Glasgow, Montana, and allied himself with the republican party, his first presidential vote being cast for Benjamin Harrison in 1892, and he has voted for republican candidates ever since, save in 1912, when he supported the progressive republican candidate, Theodore Roosevelt. He was chairman of the Progressive Republican County Central Committee of that year, and prior to that served as state central committeeman for Valley County in the regular republican organization. Mr. Vagg was elected a representative for Valley County as a member of the Eighth General Assembly, presided over by Speaker White, and was on the judiciary committee and the ones on printing, engrossment and insurance. He served one term and attended two special sessions. His next experience came when he was elected to the Upper House on the republican ticket, and served during the Fourteenth Session under Lieutenant Governor McDowell. This was a democratic Senate and he only served one session. During that period Mr. Vagg was on the committees pertaining to military affairs, irrigation and water rights, immigration and apportionment and representation.

Entering the Masonic order, Mr. Vagg was made a Mason at Glasgow, Montana, in 1895, but later demitted to Saco Lodge No. 94, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is now past master. He took the Chapter and Commandery degrees at Helena, later demitting to Glasgow Chapter and Commandery, and he also belongs to Livingston Consistory and Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine.

In the war work of Saco Mr. Vagg took his customary place among the energetic workers of this region, gave a large monthly subscription to the Red Cross, and was on the committees of all the Liberty Loan drives, as well as one of the heavy buyers of the bonds of each issue.

On June 28, 1897, Mr. Vagg was united in marriage with Miss Bettie Wilson at Saco, Montana. Mrs. Vagg was born in Minnesota during the '70s, a daughter of Charles Wilson. She was educated in the public schools of Minnesota, and reared on her father's farm, being the eldest of his three children, the others being as follows: Mrs. S. C. Small, of Glasgow, Montana; and Edgar Wilson, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Vagg have the following children: Roland M., who completed his educational training with courses at Shattuck Military Academy and Great Falls Commercial College, is associated in business with his father; and Vivian F., who attended Saint Mary's Hall at Faribault, Minnesota, and the Great Falls Commercial College, is at home.

Mr. Vagg is a man of the people, who sympathizes with their needs, and understands their requirements. Never having possessed himself of the benefits of proper education and training, and being forced to earn his own living from an early age, he has developed great mental resourcefulness, and responded in wonderful measure to the demand made upon him in every direction. His every act is characterized by a flaming sincerity, and he is not easily deceived in men or misled in measures. He is a natural leader of men, and has long been an inspiration to the people of his community for activities of the best sort.

R. E. Carr. Each successive year brings an increase in the business written by the standard life insurance companies of the country as a result of the vigorous educational campaigns carried on among the people through the press and special literature. The average man has been awakened to the necessity of providing for the future of his family and for his own old age, and invests to the limit of his resources in life insurance, if he is of even the ordinary intellectual caliber. This realization of the responsibilities resting upon him during the most productive years of his life has come about through the efforts of the insurance representatives, and for that reason they have been selected with great care, due attention being paid to their capabilities along this line. Some of the most efficient salesmen in the country are now devoting themselves exclusively to selling life insurance, and one who has attained state-wide popularity in this branch of activity is R. E. Carr, agency manager of the Bidlake-Honey Life Insurance Company for the State of Montana, with headquarters at Billings.

R. E. Carr was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, February 13, 1892, a son of Robert Carr, now residing at St. Paul. Robert Carr was born at Newcastle, England, in 1857, where he was reared and married. In 1879 he left England, going direct to St. Paul, Minnesota, after landing in the United States, and was one of the early merchants of that city, taking part in its civic affairs as an independent voter. He is a consistent member of the Episcopal Church, having formerly been a member of the Church of England. In 1879 Robert Carr was married to Mary Purvis, born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, in 1861, and they became the parents of the following children: J. G., who is district sales manager of the Vim Motor Truck Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and R. E., whose name heads this review.

After he had been graduated from the graded schools of St. Paul R. E. Carr learned the fundamentals of commercial life at St. Paul's Business College, from which he was graduated in 1911, following which he entered the Commercial State Bank of St. Paul as assistant cashier, and held that position for three years. He then became traveling auditor for the Northern Pacific Railroad, and during 1917 and 1918 covered the State of Montana for that company. In the latter year Mr. Carr was appointed agency manager for the Bidlake-Honey agency for the Northwestern Life Insurance Company of Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the State of Montana, with offices at 315 Hart-Albin Building, Billings. Mr. Carr manages the office and handles the field men for Montana, and has eight field men under his supervision, and he supervises approximately 100 agents throughout the state.

On April 18, 1918, Mr. Carr was united in marriage with Miss Amy Bidlake, and on April 17, 1919, they became the parents of a daughter, Sybil. Mrs. Carr is a daughter of John and Amy Bidlake, who live at No. 116 Broadwater Avenue, Billings. Mr. Bidlake is senior member of the Bidlake-Honey Agency. Mr. and Mrs. Carr own a beautiful home at No. 412 Lewis Avenue, Billings, where they delight in gathering their friends about them. Like his father, Mr. Carr prefers to exercise his own judgment in casting his vote, and is independent in his political views. A member of the Episcopal Church, he renders his parish valuable service as choirmaster, the choir being in magnificent condition under his efficient management. A man of great abilities, he possesses the enthusiasm of youth, and yet has already had years of responsible experience which enables him to judge men and control them in such a manner as to avoid unnecessary friction, and yet bring forth the most productive results. Although new in this line of business, he has already proven his fitness for it, and has a great future before him in developing the business of his aggressive company.

Lucius Allison Nutting. One of the most representative men of Laurel and Yellowstone counties is Lucius Allison Nutting, whose varied talents have been developed through his own individual efforts, and his business triumphs engineered through his sagacity and sound judgment. He has been associated with some of the most constructive work of this section, and has made a name known all over the country as a breeder of Shorthorn cattle. He was born in Doniphan County, Kansas, July 1, 1858, a son of Lucius Nutting, and comes of one of the oldest families in the country, being a lineal descendant of John Nutting, born in England, who founded the family in the new world. His name appears on a record in the Massachusetts colony under date of August 28, 1650, as being then united in marriage with Sarah, a daughter of Stephen Eggleson (Eggleston). John Nutting and his wife lived in Woburn, Massachusetts, and had three children born in that place, namely: John, James and Mary. They then moved to Chelmsford, now Westford, Massachusetts. In 1661 they went to Groton, Massachusetts, and in 1663 John Nutting was chosen selectman, being again elected to that important office October 15, 1669. In 1668 he was chosen constable. A man of ample means and a large land owner, he was a leader of men, both in material things and those of a spiritual nature, as he was very religious. During 1676 he was conspicuous in a fight his community made against an attack by the hostile Indians and was one of four killed.

Lucius Nutting, father of Lucius A. Nutting, was born in Massachusetts in 1820, a son of Bryant Nutting, also a native of Massachusetts, who died in the vicinity of Springfield, that state, at a date antedating the birth of his grandson, of whom we write. Growing up in his native state, Lucius Nutting came West to Illinois in young manhood, and was there married. A physician and surgeon by profession, he was engaged in an active practice in that state, but was drawn from it by the gold excitement of 1849, and crossing the plains spent a year in California, but returned to Illinois and resumed his practice. Later he went to Crescent City, Iowa, where he built and conducted a saw-mill. In 1857 he went still farther west, locating in Doniphan County, Kansas, there erecting another saw-mill, and, buying a farm, lived on it until 1878. In 1879 he went to Arizona, but after a year in that state returned to Doniphan County and was engaged in the drug business at Leona, Kansas. The year 1880 saw his entry into Montana, as he spent its summer at Bozeman, and in 1881 homesteaded at Laurel, a claim of 160 acres and a timber claim of 160 acres more. One of these farms he sold, but the other one forms a portion of his estate now owned by his heirs. In 1895 he returned to Bozeman, where he remained until his death in 1903. A republican of the most pronounced type, he was a leader in his party, and served as commissioner of Yellowstone County for six years. For years a member of the Presbyterian Church, he was very active in it, and held all of the lay offices connected with the conduct of its affairs. His wife bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Allison, and she was born in Pennsylvania in 1819 and died at Bozeman in 1901. Their children were as follows: Julia, who married Bryant Cowan, formerly a well known breeder of Shorthorn cattle in Missouri, is now connected with the Shorthorn Breeders' Association in a literary capacity, and lives at Santa Monica, California; Wilder, who is a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, resides at Three Forks, Montana; Lucius A., whose name heads this review; William B., who resides at Red Lodge, Montana, where he is engaged in the banking business; Lilly E., who died at Santa Monica, California; and Roy H., who is retired, lives at Eureka, California.

Lucius A. Nutting attended the rural schools of Doniphan County, Kansas, which at that day offered but limited educational advantages, but being determined to improve his mind Mr. Nutting through reading, travel, observation and other means of acquiring culture has become one of the best informed men in his part of the state. When he was twenty years of age he began to be self supporting, at that time going to Tombstone, Arizona, and after a short stay traveling on through Arizona, Nevada, Utah and Idaho. He helped in the construction of the railroad from Corinne, Utah, into Montana during the fall of 1879. Following that he was a cowboy and bull whacker until he located at Laurel and homesteaded 160 acres of land. That original farm has grown until he now owns 800 acres of irrigated land in the vicinity of Laurel, and an interest in 1,600 acres of dry ranch land. Mr. Nutting is a breeder of Shorthorn cattle, and his methods and successes in this branch of agriculture have gained him more than a local reputation. He also raises grain and is equally successful in this line. His handsome residence on Alder Street is owned by him, and he also owns considerable city property. A portion of his farm was included in the town site of Laurel, and he sold 135 acres of land to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

In 1909 Mr. Nutting became interested in the Fromberg Brick and Tile Company, buying the controlling interest in 1913 and taking upon himself the management of the company. Under his aggressive policies the affairs of the company have been put in fine condition, and the capacity of the plant is taxed to fill the orders for high grade brick and tile from Billings and Southern Montana and Northern Wyoming. The yards are located at Fromberg, Montana, and have a capacity of 40,000 brick per day. Mr. Nutting was one of the organizers of the Citizens National Bank of Laurel, of which he was the first president, continuing in that office for 2½ years, when he sold his interest.

A democrat through conviction, he early was accorded the leadership of his party in this district, and was elected a representative to the State Assembly from Yellowstone County in 1914, serving as a member of the Fourteenth Session. During that period he was chairman of the federal relations committee and a member of the committees on irrigation and water rights and agriculture, as well as others of considerable importance, and introduced the drainage law bill, now on the statute books, to secure the passage of which necessitated an immense amount of work on the part of Mr. Nutting. A booster of Laurel in every sense, Mr. Nutting takes a very active part in the Commercial Club, and has been instrumental in bringing outside capital to the city and interesting a sufficient number to secure their location here. Fraternally he belongs to Laurel Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1891 Mr. Nutting was married at Red Lodge, Montana, to Miss Lilly Ellis, born at San Francisco, California, but educated at Newark, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Nutting became the parents of the following children: Ruth, who was graduated from the University of Montana, at Missoula, with the degree of Bachelor of Art, is residing with her parents; and Bryant, who was graduated from the Laurel High School, is associated with his father in business.

R. C. Battey, manager of the Billings branch of the International Harvester Company at Billings, Montana, furnishes another example in his career of the rewards attainable through the exercise of perseverance, industry and well-defined and worthy ambition, combined with a policy including the demonstration of integrity and fidelity. From the outset of his business life he has been identified with the great concern of which he is now a representative, and has worked his way up from a humble capacity, making the most of his opportunities, and expanding and growing with the expansion and development of the concern.

Mr. Battey was born in Shelby County, Iowa, January 21, 1879, a son of George and Louisa Fisher (Cooper) Battey. The family of which he is a member originated in England, and during the seventeenth century was founded in America by Sampson Battey, who took up his residence in Jamestown, Rhode Island. In that state, at Foster, Maj. Silas Battey, grandfather of R. C., was born in 1815. He was reared and married in his native city, but became a pioneer into Bureau County, Illinois, where during the remainder of his life he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Sheffield, and died at that place in 1895. He fought bravely as a soldier during the Mexican war and rose to the rank of major.

George Battey, father of R. C. Battey, was born at Foster, Rhode Island, in 1837, and was reared in his native place where he obtained a public school education. He was still a young man when he moved with his parents to Bureau County, Illinois, and for a time was associated with his father in the cultivation of the soil near Sheffield. In 1864 he enlisted in the One Hundred Thirty-ninth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for participation in the war between the states, and continued as a member of that regiment until receiving his honorable discharge at the close of hostilities. Mr. Battey remained as a resident of Illinois until 1877, in which year he made removal to Shelby County, Iowa, where he first settled on a farm. Later, however, his interest was attracted to the grain business, and subsequently he became a banker and an influential citizen of his community, having a private banking house at Portsmouth, Iowa. In 1913 he removed from that place, retiring from active pursuits, and took up his residence at Oakes, North Dakota, where his death occurred on October 1, 1915. While a resident of Portsmouth he took an active and constructive part in civic affairs, and served as mayor and in other capacities, in which he displayed marked public spirit and splendid executive ability. He was a member of the Masons. In 1861 Mr. Battey married Louisa Fisher Cooper, who was born in 1841 in Connecticut, and died at Bismarck, North Dakota, in 1915, and they became the parents of the following children: H. V., a successful practicing attorney of Council Bluffs, Iowa; F. S., engaged in the general merchandise business at Brampton, North Dakota; R. C., of this notice; and George, who is engaged in the pursuits of farming in the vicinity of Straubville, North Dakota.

R. C. Battey received his literary education in the public schools of Portsmouth, following this by a course in a commercial college at Council Bluffs, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1894. He then returned to his home, where he remained until 1899, the year which marked the beginning of his connection with his present concern. Mr. Battey was content to enter into the life which this concern offered for the advancement of ambitious and determined young men, and as a start took a position which paid him a salary of $30.00 per month. Gradual promotion followed, and Mr. Battey was soon doing responsible office work, eventually becoming cashier of the Council Bluffs branch of the business. From this position, in order that he might thoroughly learn the business, he was sent out on the road as a traveling representative, and in 1904 was transferred to Minot, North Dakota, where he was made assistant manager of that branch of the International Harvester Company in 1908. Two years later Mr. Battey was transferred to the branch at Bismarck, in the capacity of manager, a position which he retained until 1917, the year in which he assumed his duties as manager of the Billings branch, with offices at the corner of South Broadway and Minnesota Avenue. The territory of the Billings branch of the International Harvester Company includes Central Montana and Northern Wyoming. Mr. Battey has the confidence of his company and the sincere esteem of his co-workers, and in business circles generally maintains an excellent reputation and standing. In political matters he maintains an independent stand. While he has not been an office seeker in public life, he has always discharged the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and during his residence at Bismarck, North Dakota, served efficiently for six years in the capacity of city commissioner. His religious faith is that of the Roman Catholic Church, and he is a member of the Knights of Columbus, being affiliated with Bismarck Council. Also he holds membership in the United Commercial Travelers, in Bismarck Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and in the Billings Midland Club. In addition to his pleasant modern residence at 306 Clark Avenue, he is the owner of valuable ranches in Eastern Montana.

Mr. Battey was married February 23, 1914, at St. Paul, Minnesota, to Miss Edith V. Russell, daughter of P. H. and Mary Russell, residents of Trail City, South Dakota, where Mr. Russell is proprietor of the Trail City Hotel. Mrs. Battey is a graduate of the Minot (North Dakota) High School. She and her husband are the parents of one child: R. C., Jr., born February 28, 1915, at Billings.

ALFRED C. CARLSON is superintendent of the city schools of Red Lodge and is an educator of long and prominent experience in the Northwest. He did his first school work twenty-five years ago, and has always been thoroughly progressive in educational affairs, seeking every opportunity to improve his own abilities, and his energies and ideals have been reflected in the very good condition of the Red Lodge schools today. He has been at the head of the public schools of Red Lodge for the last eleven years.

Mr. Carlson was born at Marine Mills, Minnesota, December 15, 1869, a son of J. C. and Christina Carlson. His father was born in Germany in 1824, and lived there until 1859, when he came to the United States and settled at Marine Mills, Minnesota, being a pioneer in that territory. Not long afterward he joined the noted Seventh Minnesota Regiment of Infantry, and was in all the engagements of that regiment in the northwest and in the center of the conflicting area of the Civil war. He was wounded at Gettysburg, and was a soldier for 3½ years. He then returned to Marine Mills and lived there until his death in 1916. He was an old-school republican in politics and a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was born in Illinois in 1826 and died at Marine Mills in 1918. Alfred C. is the youngest of their four children. The oldest was Augustus, who was a farmer at Big Lake, Washington County, Minnesota, and was drowned at the age of twenty-six. Caroline, the second child, is the wife of August Lundquist, who is assessor of Washington County, and has his home in Marine Mills. John, the other son, is a farmer at Marine Mills.

Alfred C. Carlson as a boy attended the rural schools of Washington County, Minnesota, and graduated from high school at Stillwater. His collegiate work was done in Gustavus Adolphus College at St. Peter, Minnesota, where he received his A. B. degree in 1890, at the age of twenty-one. Later, in the intervals of teaching he attended Yale University, taking post-graduate courses there for three years and was awarded his Master of Arts degree by that old institution of higher learning in 1905. In the meantime he had taught one year in his native town of Marine Mills, was principal of the schools of Stanton, Iowa, a year and for four years held the Chair of English in his alma mater at St. Peter. He was elected and served three years as superintendent of the schools of Cannon Falls, Minnesota, and spent another three years as superintendent of the schools of Eureka, Utah. His next work in the educational field was as superintendent at Weiser, Idaho. He resigned his work there at the end of three years and spent the following year developing a ranch near Weiser. He still owns that property and it is now a fruit growing proposition.

Mr. Carlson came to Red Lodge in 1909, and has completed his eleventh consecutive year as superintendent of schools. The schools have made notable progress under his supervision. Red Lodge now has six schools, a staff of thirty-one teachers, and a student enrollment of 1,200. Mr. Carlson is a member of the National Education Association, the Montana State Teachers' Association, he is a liberal democrat, a vestryman of the Episcopal Church at Red Lodge, is affiliated with Oriental Lodge No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is scribe of Carbon Chapter No. 20, Royal Arch Masons, and a former member of the Odd Fellows.

His home is at 321 North Word Avenue. He married Miss May Hennings at Willmar, Minnesota, in 1902. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Hennings, are retired residents of Willmar and her father is a veteran of the Civil war. Mrs. Carlson is a graduate of the Willmar High School and of the Normal School at St. Cloud, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson have had two children: The older, Margaret, died at the age of nine years. Their son is James H., born May 29, 1918.

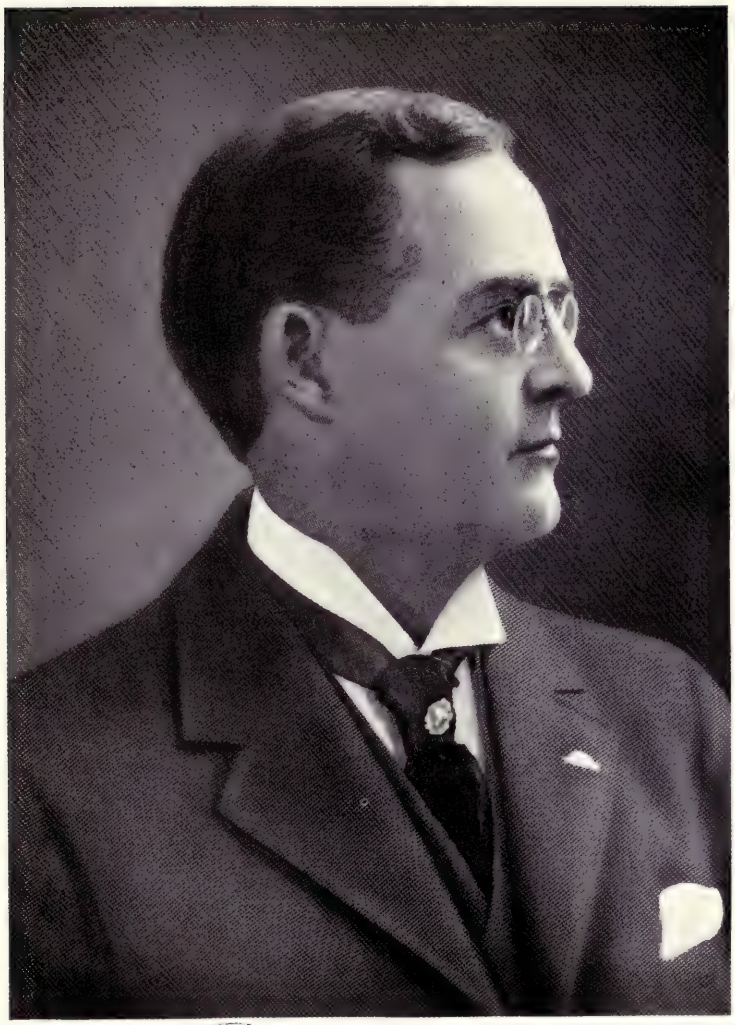
ARTHUR W. MILES. The commonplace citizen who makes himself useful to the world and achieves a fair degree of success by adhering to the old rule and principle of concentrating his efforts along one line finds it difficult to appreciate the enormous spread of influences and activities of such a man as Arthur W. Miles of Livingston. While the phrase is often applied to many lesser men, Mr. Miles is really a "man of affairs" and of affairs of importance when taken individually and in the aggregate comprising a vast range of interests that directly affect the welfare and the progress of Montana. One of the first three merchants of Livingston, he has always been a merchant, built up the great department store of A. W. Miles Company, founded the A. W. Miles Lumber & Coal Company, was responsible for one of the oldest organizations handling and caring for the tourist traffic in the Yellowstone National Park, and has also been a brick manufacturer, lumberman, farmer, livestock raiser, banker, has helped build and develop new towns, create new industrial and agricultural opportunities, and has also sat as a potent figure in the Legislature and at one time was acting governor of the state.

Arthur W. Miles is a nephew of the late Gen. Nelson A. Miles, one of the most distinguished military figures of the United States. He was born at Westminster, Massachusetts, June 20, 1859, a son of Daniel C. and Mary Jane (Puffer) Miles. The Miles family goes back to the colonial settlement of America. Arthur W. Miles was the fourth in a family of five children. The oldest, Josie M., is the wife of M. M. Parker, a professor in the University of Southern California, living at Pasadena. George M., the oldest brother, is a banker and capitalist at Miles City, Montana. Herbert J. is a retired accountant and auditor living at Pasadena, California. The youngest, Gertrude, died at the age of sixteen years in Westminster, Massachusetts.

Arthur W. Miles graduated in 1878 from the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Massachusetts. He then taught a term of school and in 1879 he accepted a position as paymaster's clerk in the regular army. He served one year at Santa Fe, New Mexico, and was then promoted and transferred to Fort Keogh, Montana, where he began his duties in October, 1880. He witnessed the surrender in the winter of 1880 of Sitting Bull and Rain in the Face, which was during the period when the buffalo roamed the plains. Mr. Miles therefore identified himself with Montana at an important transition period in the history of the territory, after the work of the earliest pioneers had been accomplished, and just as the building of railroads and the clearing of hostile Indians and wild buffalo from the prairies opened up the real industrial and commercial opportunities of the Treasure State. After two and a half years with the Government he resigned, for a few months was engaged in the hardware business near the present site of Billings, moved to that town when it was established and erected the first store building in it, and in 1882 formed the firm of Babcock & Miles, in partnership with A. L. Babcock. They opened a store at Clark City, which shortly afterward became Livingston, and Mr. Miles was one of the three first men to engage in business in the new town. He was also a member of the Vigilantes Committee, which endeavored to keep law and order in the unorganized community. In the meantime he and his partners opened branch stores at Gardner, Big Timber and Red Lodge, but from the first Mr. Miles' enterprise has been centered at Livingston. He has been one of the chief men to build up and give that city its business facilities. In 1889 he built the Miles Block, one of the finest buildings in the state up to that time. It was destroyed by fire in 1914. He also erected the Postoffice Block, in which is located the Park Hotel, of which he is the founder, the Garnier-Miles Block, and in 1916 completed the Strand Theater, which when it was opened was characterized as the finest picture theater in Montana. The A. W. Miles Company, which represents the culmination of Mr. Miles' experience as a merchant, is an immense organization, capitalized at $300,000, and conducts a store furnishing a complete mercantile service in dry goods, groceries, clothing, farm implements, and is housed in one of the most modern store buildings in the Northwest. A separate corporation, and in a degree supplementing the service of the A. W. Miles Company, is the A. W. Miles Lumber & Coal Company, which was separately incorporated in January, 1914. In 1917 Mr. Miles was also the man chiefly responsible for the establishment of the Northwestern National Bank of Livingston, was its first president, and is now director and chairman of its Board of Directors. Mr. Miles is also president of the Yellowstone Park Camping Company, successors to the Wylie Permanent Camping Company, a business which has been in existence for thirty years, and which handles an enormous tourist business through the National Park every year. The company has four permanent camps in the park.

The above is only a suggestive outline of Mr. Miles' many and varied business activities, a complete account of which would read like a catalogue of the commercial progress of Southern Montana. Mr. Miles has been an active republican, served as the first mayor of Livingston, and in November, 1905, was elected a member of the State Senate. During the four years in that office he was president of the Senate and in the absence of Governor Norris was acting governor. He has served on many public administrative boards, is active in the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of Livingston, and fraternally is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Livingston Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, and Zephyr Camp No. 151, Woodmen of the World.

December 19, 1885, Mr. Miles married Miss Idella M. Draper, a native of Holliston, Massachusetts, and a daughter of W. H. and Sarah L. (Perry) Draper The oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Miles is Louise Gertrude, who finished her education at Carlton College, Minnesota, and in November, 1910, became the wife of Thomas E. Mitchell. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell now reside at Los Angeles. Mr. Mitchell is a mining engineer and just recently returned after four years of service in a technical capacity for an English syndicate in the mines of Burma, India. Daniel Nelson, the only living son, is a graduate of Amherst College with the class of 1912, and a member of the Chi Psi college fraternity. He is now the active manager of his father's business, the A. W. Miles Company at Livingston. He married in 1914 Esther Tervoll, of San Francisco,



A. W. Miles

Adena Josephine, the second daughter, is a graduate of Mount Vernon Seminary at Washington, D. C., and in 1915 became the wife of Charles Wright, Jr., a lawyer of Detroit, Michigan. The youngest, Perry D. Miles, died when one year old.

WALTER E. RYNIKER. Justly numbered with the aggressive business men of Billings, Walter E. Ryniker is well known outside his own city as vice president and manager of the Ryniker-Winter Sheet Metal Works and vice president of the Ryniker-Winter Hardware Company. He was born at Quincy, Illinois, May 25, 1885, a son of Samuel Ryniker and grandson of Ubrich Ryniker, born at Schunznach, Aargan, Switzerland, in 1800, and there died in 1876. He was married to Marie Hittpolt, who was born in 1806 in the same village as her husband, and there she passed away in 1850. Samuel Ryniker was born at Schunznach, Aargan, Switzerland, June 7, 1845, and he died at Quincy, Illinois, October 13, 1892. After being reared in his native place Samuel Ryniker came to the United States and located at Quincy, Illinois, where for many years he carried on a merchant tailoring business. He was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. On October 4, 1880, Samuel Ryniker was married to Magdaline Stauterman, born near Quincy, August 29, 1853, and she died July 5, 1905, at Quincy. Their children were as follows: Alfred Samuel, who was born August 14, 1881, is connected with the Ryniker-Winter Hardware Company and lives at Billings; Ella Pauline, who was born March 31, 1883, died April 24, 1913; Walter E., whose name heads this review; Cora Melinda, who was born February 14, 1887, married H. H. Winter, president of the Ryniker-Winter Hardware Company of Billings; Milton Edwin, who was born June 18, 1889, is a resident of Los Angeles, California, and was mustered out of the aviation branch of the United States army in Texas as a lieutenant; Chester Arthur, who was born March 18, 1891, is a railroad mail clerk and a resident of Quincy; and Samuel Wesley, who was born June 15, 1893, is a resident of New Orleans, Louisiana, and during the great war served in France as a member of the aviation branch of the service. The father of these children had been previously married, being united on October 7, 1869, to Louise Freistein, of St. Louis, Missouri, who was born May 24, 1851, and died June 27, 1880. By this marriage he had three children, namely: Emma Frederica, who was born February 21, 1873, is married and lives on her husband's ranch at Clearwater, Nebraska; Matilda Emily, who was born November 26, 1874, is unmarried and resides at Quincy; and Emelia, who was born May 19, 1877, died February 12, 1882.

After completing the eighth grade of the public schools when fourteen years of age Walter E. Ryniker entered the employ of a dry goods firm at Quincy, but eighteen months later commenced learning the sheet metal trade. After completing his trade he took a commercial course at the Gem City Business College. For a year subsequent to that he worked at his trade at Chicago, Illinois, and then came to Billings in 1908, and he and Mr. Winter bought the sheet metal plant established by Cedergren Brothers at No. 109 North Twenty-sixth Street. Since then the business has grown to large proportions and the immense plant is located at No. 115 North Twenty-fifth Street. The officers of the company are as follows: H. H. Winter, president, and W. E. Ryniker, vice president and manager. Mr. Ryniker is also vice president of the Ryniker-Winter Hardware Company. His handsome modern residence is at No. 406 Yellowstone Avenue. In politics Mr. Ryniker is an independent. He belongs to the Congregational Church. Well known in Masonry and belongs to Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, having been raised at Quincy, Illinois. He also belongs to Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Yellowstone Council No. 363, United Commercial Travelers, and the Billings Midland Club.

On February 10, 1913, Mr. Ryniker was married at Billings to Miss Adelene Berenice Cowen, a daughter of H. S. and Harriet (Payne) Cowen. Mr. Cowen was a druggist of Beardstown, Illinois, where he died, but Mrs. Cowen survives and makes her home at Beardstown. Mr. and Mrs. Ryniker have two children, namely: Walter Henry, who was born June 15, 1914, and Harriet Ella, who was born June 6, 1918. Both Mr. Ryniker and Mr. Winter are held in the highest esteem in this part of the state, and at Billings they are regarded as valuable assets to the city's commercial and industrial importance.

JOHN M. S. STILES, manager of the Billings branch of the Nichols and Shepard Company, and owner of one of the valuable ranches near Shelby, Montana, is justly numbered among the worth-while men of the state. He was born at Banfield, Michigan, on his father's farm, April 1, 1888, a son of David C. Stiles, now residing one-half a mile outside of Banfield, Michigan. David C. Stiles was born in Southern Michigan, and has spent all of his mature years on his present farm, being actively engaged in conducting it and dealing in stock. A prominent man of his community, he has often been elected to township offices, but he is independent in his political views. The Methodist Episcopal Church has in him a valued member. David C. Stiles was married to Mary A. Kipp, born in Barry County, Michigan, near Banfield, in 1868, and they became the parents of the following children: Floyd E., who is a veterinary surgeon of Battle Creek, Michigan; John M. S., whose name heads this review; Fred T., who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Banfield, Michigan; Vern, who died at the age of two years; Karl A., who is living on the farm with his parents; and Leah Lucille, who is at home.

John M. S. Stiles was reared on the farm and sent to the local schools of Barry County. Later he was a student of the Battle Creek High School, and the Michigan Business and Normal College, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1911. The previous year he had taken a course in the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing, Michigan. On June 6, 1911, he began his connection with his present firm as filing clerk and mail carrier in the home office at Battle Creek, and was successively promoted until in 1914 he was sent to Billings, Montana, as cashier of the branch at this place. The following year he was made manager of the branch, and has so continued ever since. The Nichols and Shepard Company are builders of threshing machines, and in addition to the home office and plant at Battle Creek, Michigan, have twelve branches. The branch at Billings handles all the business for Montana, and the office and warehouse are located opposite the Union Depot. In addition to the large warehouse for storing the machines there is a well equipped repair shop, and an immense amount of re-building of the machines is done here. A large and complete stock of supplies is carried and Mr. Stiles has under his supervision nine employes. He resides at 1115 North Thirty-first Street, but owns a ranch of 160 acres four miles north of Shelby, Toole County, Montana, which is devoted to grain growing. Like his father, Mr. Stiles reserves the right to cast his vote independent of party ties. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. On November 18, 1918, Mr. Stiles was united in marriage with Miss Ruby M. Wareham at Columbus, Montana. Mrs. Stiles was born in Nebraska. Mr. Stiles' rise with his company is assuredly because of his fidelity to the trusts reposed in him, and his ability to grasp the details of the business, and his success is deserved.

WILLIAM PARKHURST LADD. In the field of grain dealing and brokerage there are few men in Montana who have come as rapidly to the forefront in recent years as has William Parkhurst Ladd, whose operations are now centered at Billings. Still a young man, he has displayed such initiative, resource, knowledge of the trade and its condition and foresight in the transaction of large deals that he has attained an enviable position and reputation in grain circles and among traders and operators.

Mr. Ladd was born at White Oak Springs, Wisconsin, August 21, 1875, a son of George R. and Mary Ellen (Skewis) Ladd, and a member of a family which, originating in England, was founded in Massachusetts during colonial times. George R. Ladd was born in Massachusetts in 1851, but as a youth was taken to Wisconsin, where he was educated and reared, and where for some years he was a resident of the Town of Shellsburg. In 1881 he removed to Lyon County, Iowa, where he engaged in farming and rose to a high place in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, who elevated him to the office of county treasurer, a trust which he was holding at the time of his death, which occurred at Rock Rapids, Iowa, April 3, 1914. He was a stanch democrat in his political allegiance, and an active and generous supporter of the Congregational Church, in which he was a director and deacon. Mr. Ladd married Mary Ellen Skewis, who was born in 1852, at Shellsburg, Wisconsin, and survives her husband as a resident of Rock Rapids, Iowa. They became the parents of seven children, as follows: Clarence, engaged in the hardware business at Inwood, Iowa; Carrie, the wife of C. L. Jones, an attorney at Parker, South Dakota; William Parkhurst, of this notice; Allie W., who is unmarried and makes her home with her mother; Ben, who conducts a grain elevator at Billings for his brother William P.; Jennie, the wife of R. S. Towne, a farmer of the vicinity of Sisters, Oregon; and Earl, an automobile agent and the owner of a garage at Rock Rapids, Iowa.

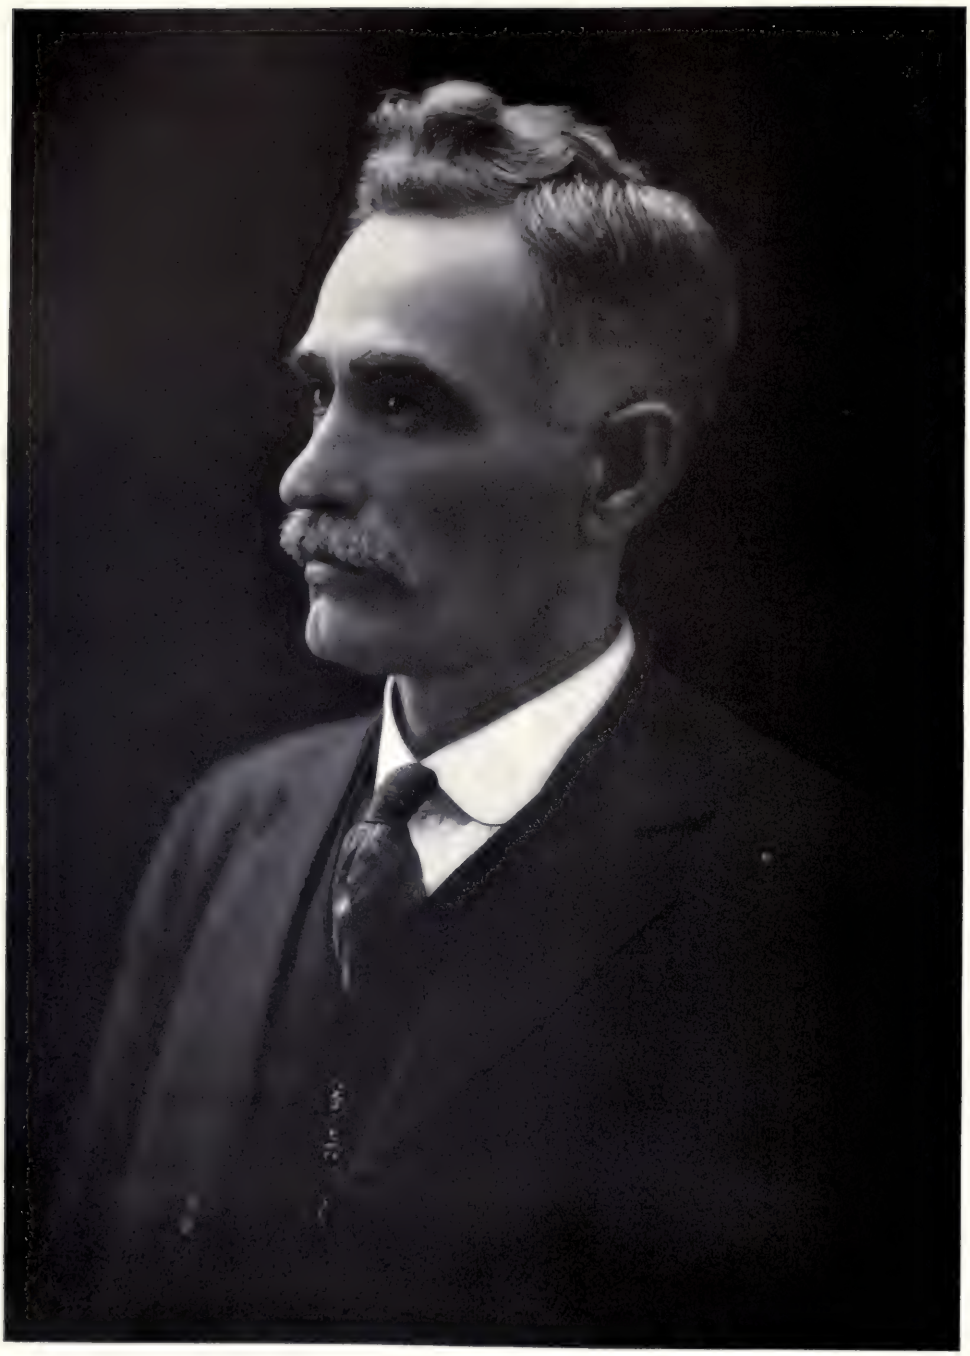
William Parkhurst Ladd received his education in the public schools of Inwood, Iowa, and upon the completion of his studies embarked immediately upon the career in which he has met with such notable success. His initial experience, where he received his introduction to the grain business, was at Inwood. From Inwood he went to Presho, South Dakota, as manager of an elevator, and after three years made his way to Montana, arriving, in 1912, at Roundup, where he purchased an elevator. This he continued to conduct successfully for two years, after which he sold it profitably and began soliciting for the H. Poehler Company, grain commission merchants of Minneapolis, being the representative of that concern for Montana. This is a large and important concern with branch houses at Duluth, Minnesota, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and Chicago, Illinois. Mr. Ladd is also a partner, with F. A. Cousins, in a grain and seeds brokerage business, a successful concern in the management of which his ability has played an important part in gaining prosperity. In 1917 Mr Ladd was the main organizer of the Treasure State Grain and Seed Company of Montana, having as partners A. E. Platz and Tom Clapper, and owning elevators at Red Lodge, Fox, Boyd, Roberts and Combs. He continued as president and directing head of this enterprise until selling out in July, 1918, to the Montana and Dakota Elevator Company. Mr. Ladd maintains offices at 202 Electric Building, and owns a modern residence at No. 1109 North Thirty-first Street.

In 1900, at Inwood, Iowa, Mr. Ladd was united in marriage with Miss Olive Albertson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Albertson, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former, a retired farmer, makes his home with his children. Two children have blessed this union: Harold, born in 1901, and Allie Anita, born in 1905, both of whom are attending school. Mr. and Mrs. Ladd are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and have been active in church work, Mr. Ladd being a member of the pastoral supply committee and of the board of directors. He is a republican in his political allegiance, and his fraternal affiliation is with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons. He also holds membership in the Billings Midland Club and has several other social and civic connections of importance.

JOHN DUNN, who is postmaster of Red Lodge, first knew this country from the standpoint of a cowboy, worked on ranch and range for a number of years, later developed extensive cattle and landed interests of his own, and has long been prominent in business and public affairs in Carbon County.

He was born at St. Louis, Missouri, February 2, 1862. His father, John Dunn, Sr., was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1827, came to the United States in 1843, and after a few years in New York moved to Franklin County, Missouri, in 1846. He was a farmer and in 1863 transferred his home to Franklin County, Missouri, where he lived until his death in 1908. He was a democrat and a Catholic and served as a soldier in the Civil war. His wife, Margaret Coffey, was born in New York State in 1828 and died in Franklin County, Missouri, in 1916. She was the mother of eight children: Margaret, Ellen, and Mary, the three oldest daughters, are still living in Franklin County. The next in age is John. Richard is likewise a pioneer Montanan, coming to Madison County, Montana, in 1882 and since 1893 has lived at Silesia. Thomas lives on the old homestead in Franklin County, Missouri, Frank is a physician and surgeon in Missouri. The youngest of the family, Cassie, lives with her brother Thomas.

Mr. John Dunn attended rural schools in Franklin County and a business college at St. Louis, and his home was on his father's farm until he was nineteen. He came out to Montana in 1881. His first destination was Virginia City. He soon entered the service of the noted stockmen Elling and Buford as a cowboy, and remained one of their efficient and trusted employes for eleven years. From 1883 to 1888 he handled the cattle in Madison County and from 1888 to 1892 brought them to the Crow Reservation. Mr. Dunn took up land at Silesia in Carbon County in 1894 and for the next twenty-four years was an independent rancher and cattle operator and acquired extensive interests both in Wyoming and Montana. He sold his cattle in 1918. He has been a resident of Red Lodge since 1806.



C. K. Clyman

His location at Red Lodge was due primarily to his election as sheriff of Carbon County in 1895. He was re-elected in 1897 and was incumbent of the office four years, 1896-1900. He was appointed to his present duties as postmaster of Red Lodge in May, 1916. He also served as alderman for six years. Mr. Dunn is a democrat, is affiliated with Red Lodge Camp, Woodmen of the World, and is a member of the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce. His home is at 279 North Platt Avenue. He married Miss Nellie E. Oliver in Madison County, Montana, in 1889. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. James F. Oliver, the former a retired farmer of Red Lodge and the latter now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Dunn have four children: Mary, who is a graduate of the high school at Red Lodge and attended the Billings Business College, is now the wife of J. H. Linquist, a rancher near Red Lodge; Frank, who lives on a farm near Silesia; John, who was born October 16, 1899, and is now taking post-graduate work in the high school of Red Lodge; and Margaret, born October 11, 1902, attending the University of Missoula.

Edgar W. Logan. Holding distinction as senior member of the firm of Logan & Mullison, pioneers in the glass business in the Northwest and the only firm in Montana carrying a complete line of this commodity, Edgar W. Logan has not only taken a leading part in business affairs since locating at Billings, in 1909, but has also risen to prominence and influence in civic affairs. When he entered business it was as a contractor, but he soon recognized the opportunity open in the field of glass dealing, and the result was the founding of the concern of which he is now the head.

Edgar W. Logan was born in Dallas County, Iowa, September 23, 1870, a son of Alexander M. and Hulda A. (Adams) Logan, and a member of a family of English-Irish origin which was founded in Virginia in colonial times. Alexander M. Logan was born in 1832, in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and as a young man went to Illinois, where he was married, later going to Dallas County, Iowa, which was his home at the breaking out of the Civil war. Mr. Logan enlisted in the Union army, becoming a member of the Thirty-ninth Regiment, Iowa Volunteer Infantry, with which he fought valiantly until a severe wound caused his disability and consequent honorable discharge in 1863, following which he returned to Iowa and resumed his activities in the field of contracting and building. He became a forceful influence in republican politics, was deputy sheriff of Dallas County for several years, and eventually was elected mayor of Van Meter, Iowa, where he also served as a member of the school board and was active in other ways in municipal matters. He was also an active supporter of the Christian Church and took a keen interest in the work of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which fraternity he joined young, and of which he was at one time one of the oldest members in the State of Iowa. He never really fully recovered from the effects of his wound, and in 1898, in poor health, retired from active affairs and came to Montana, where his death occurred during the same year at Gebo. Mr. Logan married Hulda A. Adams, who was born in 1838, in Ohio, and she died in 1901, at Gebo, Montana. There were two sons born to this worthy couple: John M., a contractor and builder, who died at Billings at the age of fifty-six years; and Edgar W., of this notice.

Edgar W. Logan attended the public schools of Van Meter, Iowa, and after his graduation from the high school there in 1887 entered Western College, Toledo, Iowa, where he pursued a course of two years. Following this he was placed in charge of the commerical department of that institution, a position in which he passed four years, and in 1898 came to Montana and located at Red Lodge, where he taught school for one year. Mr. Logan went then to Gebo, where he taught the first school in Clark's Fork Valley for one year, and eventually embarked in the contracting business. He was engaged in this line of activity when he came to Billings in 1909, and continued to carry on contracting and building for about two years. During this time he had come more and more into contact with the glass business, and in 1911 his plans were completed and he became one of the founders of the firm of Logan and Mullison, wholesale and retail glass dealers, and, as before noted, the only firm in Montana which carries a complete line of all kinds of glass. Entire absence of competition in their field must not be taken as the reason for their success, for the partners are men of sterling ability who would have succeeded undoubtedly in any line to which they applied themselves. Their establishment is located at No. 2614 Montana Avenue, where they own their own fine brick structure, and their trade extends for a radius of 300 miles. Mr. Logan has established himself firmly in public confidence and in the esteem of his associates in the business world, while as a citizen he has performed every duty in a conscientious manner. His business duties are heavy and exacting, but he has found the time, inclination and ability to act in the capacity of police commissioner, a post which he holds at the present time, and in which he has done much to make Billings a law-abiding and well-governed city. Politically he is affiliated with the republican party. His fraternal connections are with Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena. He owns an attractive modern residence at No. 137 Terry Avenue.

Mr. Logan was married in 1892 at Des Moines, Iowa, to Mary A. Bailey, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William A. Bailey. To this union there have been born two children: Bessie, who is the wife of Tracy Slusser, a fruit grower of Oregon, and Edmond, who is attending high school.

Cyrus K. Wyman. During more than thirty years of residence in Montana Cyrus K. Wyman has been a lumberman, an official of the National Forestry Service, and since retiring from the office of forest supervisor at Dillon he has fulfilled the duties of sheriff of Beaverhead County. He is therefore one of the best known men in that section of the state.

Mr. Wyman was born at Whitefield, Maine, March 29, 1867, and is a member of an old and prominent colonial family of the Pine Tree State. He represents the sixth generation of the family in Maine. The Wymans were originally English, from which country three brothers immigrated to America, two locating at Boston or vicinity, and the other in Maine. Mr. Wyman's grandfather, Ambrose Hartswell Wyman, was born at China, Maine, in 1806, and spent his life as a farmer in China or vicinity. He died at Vasselboro in 1896. His wife was a Miss Toby, also a lifelong resident of Maine. Alphonso Wyman, father of Cyrus K., is also a well known Montanan, for many years having made his home at Phillipsburg. He was born at China, Maine, in 1843, and as a youth served in the quartermaster's department of the Union army during the Civil war. After his marriage at China, Maine, he lived in Whitefield, where he followed the business of farmer and lumber contractor. He came to Montana in 1881, and took charge of the McClellan mine in the McClellan Gulch. In 1884 he moved to Granite Mountain and resumed his former occupation as a lumberman. His home has been at Phillipsburg since 1886. He operated a saw mill and was one of the leading lumbermen of that section until he retired in 1914. He has voted as a republican from the time of the Civil war and for many years has been an active member of the Masonic fraternity. Alphonso Wyman married Elizabeth King, who was born in Whitefield, Maine, in 1845, and died at Phillipsburg, Montana, in 1902. Their children were six in number: Hattie J., wife of Manville Moody, a carpenter and builder living at Providence, Rhode Island; Cyrus K.; Henry S., a rancher on Rock Creek in Granite County, Montana; Forest A., a miner at Phillipsburg; Annie C., who died in 1910, at Bend, Oregon, where her husband, Charles Boyd, operates a meat market; and Edna, wife of William Hunt, a rancher in Arizona.

Cyrus K. Wyman acquired his education in the public schools of Whitefield, Maine. He remained in his native state for several years after his father came to Montana, but came to Phillipsburg in 1887, a few months before Montana became a state. He worked with his father in the lumber business until 1889 and then became a miner in Granite County. He had those qualities which caused men to favor him in a political way, and for two years he served as deputy sheriff, as constable for eight years and stock inspector two years. Mr. Wyman as a resident of Maine and Montana acquired a thoroughly practical experience in every phase of the lumber business. It was this experience which inclined him to service with the National Forest Bureau. In 1905 he became assistant forest ranger in Granite County and a year later was promoted to forest ranger, and three months later to forest supervisor. For ten years he held that office at Dillon, beginning in March, 1906. Mr. Wyman was elected sheriff of Beaverhead County in 1916 and re-elected in 1918 is now in his second term. He is a republican and in politics and is affiliated with Apollo Lodge No. 15, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1898, at Damariscotta, Maine, he married Miss Alice Hall, a daughter of Randall and Lucy Hall. Her mother now resides at Wiscassett, Maine, where her father was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Wyman have one daughter, Thelma, born March 1, 1902.

Charles N. Skillman. Apart from the fact that he was born in New York State and spent several years as a youth in New England, Charles N. Skillman has spent his entire life in the Northwest, in the territories and states of Minnesota, Dakotas and Montana. He came to Montana more than forty years ago. He knew many of the old time characters of the territory, and has filled in his years with varied activities as a rancher, merchant, real estate operator and public official. He is one of the earliest settlers and has been one of the men most prominently identified with the upbuilding of Big Timber and surrounding district.

He was born at German, Chenango County, New York, April 14, 1855. His paternal ancestors came from Holland, while his mother's family were English. His father, Francis Martin Skillman, was born on Long Island, New York, in 1814, was reared and married there, and at the age of twenty-five moved to a farm in Chenango County. In addition to the cultivation of his acres he was a licensed local preacher of the Methodist Church and he filled practically all the township offices in Chenango County. In 1856 he led his family in another move out to the western frontier, locating at Mazeppa in Minnesota Territory. Here he broke and developed some of the virgin soil of the farm and again became prominent in local affairs. He was a member of the First State Legislature of Minnesota, representing Wabasha County. He also held local offices. He was a steadfast republican from the organization of the party until his death. The last three years of his life he spent retired at Minneapolis, where he died in 1887. Francis M. Skillman married Julia Ann Chappell, who was born in New York State in 1816 and died near Mazeppa, Minnesota, in 1879. Several of their sons were soldiers and officers in the Civil war. Evander, the oldest, was with the Third Minnesota Regiment of Infantry, re-enlisted and served through the war and in 1894 came to Montana and was a well known rancher. He died at Livingston in 1917. Milon, the second of the family, is a retired farmer at Portland, Oregon, and he served two years in Company G of Hatcher's Battalion of Cavalry in the Civil war. Elsie lives at Portland, widow of Thomas F. Sturdevant, who was a merchant. Franklin, living retired on his fruit farm at Portland, was a first lieutenant in the Third Minnesota Infantry and re-enlisted and went through the entire war. Philip was a second lieutenant in the same Minnesota regiment, and is still practicing law at Olympia, Washington. Sellie lives at Portland, widow of Stephen Lont, who was a rancher. Ida died at the age of twenty years at Mazeppa. William was a merchant and died at Portland, Oregon, in 1917. Charles N. is the ninth of this large family. His younger brother, James, is living retired at Portland, and the youngest is Nellie, a widow living at Portland.

Charles N. Skillman was too young to recall any of the incidents of the family removal to Minnesota Territory. As a boy he attended school at Red Wing in that state, and completed his education at the age of sixteen. For three years he learned the trade and worked as a map mounter at Hartford, Connecticut. He then went back to Mazeppa, Minnesota, lived there four years, and for five years was a rancher and cattleman at Ipswich, South Dakota. In 1887 he came to Livingston, Montana, and for three years was employed by G. H. Carver, a merchant of that town. He joined the new community of Big Timber in 1890 and took up ranching. From 1891 to 1893 he was also associated with the Big Timber Mercantile Company. Through all the years, however, his chief activity has been ranching. He has bought and sold land both on his own account and for others and since 1895 has done a thriving real estate business, with offices on McLeod Street in Big Timber. He owns a ranch of 200 acres on the Boulder River in Sweetgrass County, has eighty acres of irrigated land a half mile west of Big Timber, and has another place of 320 acres at Hunters Hot Springs in Park County. His land is devoted to grain and cattle.

Probably from his father Mr. Skillman inherited a tendency toward politics and public affairs. He has always been a leader in every community where he has lived. While in South Dakota he served as mayor of Ipswich three years, for three years was county commissioner of Edmunds County and for three years deputy sheriff. Upon the organization of Sweetgrass County he was appointed, in February, 1895, clerk of the court and was regularly elected to that office in 1896 and held it for six years. As a public official Mr. Skillman is doubtless best known as a United States commissioner, an appointment he received in 1895, and it has been continuous for over twenty years. He is a steadfast republican in politics. He has also served on the school board of Big Timber, and is affiliated with Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, and was formerly a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and Fraternal Order of Eagles.

On November 7, 1877, at Rochester, Minnesota, he married Miss Julia A. Prescott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Prescott, both now deceased. Her father was a rancher and active in republican politics. Mr. Skillman has two sons, Roy and Guy F. Roy has a fruit ranch at Afton, Virginia, and is also a licensed pharmacist. Guy is a rancher and stock man at Big Timber and agent for the Continental Oil Company.

E. R. Price. Incorporated in 1917, the Price-Moffett Company, investment bankers, has become one of the largest and most important concerns of its kind in Montana and in the handling of livestock, farm and ranch loans, and the buying and selling of cattle, has eclipsed the majority of its older competitors. The founder of this business, and its present president, E. R. Price, is still a young man as years go but has behind him a great wealth and experience garnered through participation in financial affairs in various communities of this and other states. At Billings, to which city he came in 1907, he has established a substantial reputation as a capable banker with sound backing and important connections.

Mr. Price was born near Liberty, Clay County, Missouri, September 11, 1887, a son of William R. and Kate (Dudley) Price. The family was founded in that county by the grandfather of Mr. Price, a native of Virginia, who pioneered into Clay County during Indian days and was a slaveholder of the old regime. William R. Price was born in Clay County, Missouri, in 1824, and there passed the greater part of his life. He passed through an important era of the state's history, being a farmer in territorial days and subsequently witnessing the distressing times which marked slavery and the Civil war, but maintained his residence in Clay County until 1891, when he moved to Mexico, Missouri, and engaged in stock buying. Later he retired from active pursuits and resided quietly at his home until his death in January, 1913. Mr. Price's experiences were many and varied. When gold was discovered in California he was one of those lured by the promise of easy and sudden wealth, in search of which he became a "forty-niner" and crossed the plains. After a period of prospecting he engaged for a time in the cattle business and remained two years, then returning to Missouri. Later he again went to California, where he remained twelve years, but eventually returned to his old home in time to enlist in the Union army toward the close of the Civil war, in which he served six months. He was a stanch republican in his political belief. Mr. Price married Miss Kate Dudley, who was born in 1846, near Lexington, Kentucky, and died at Mexico, Missouri, in 1915, and they became the parents of four children: Virginia, who is the wife of R. W. Luckey, of Houston, Texas; James D., a traveling salesman, who died at Mexico, Missouri, at the age of twenty-seven years; Elizabeth J., unmarried, a school teacher of St. Louis, Missouri; and E. R., of this notice.

E. R. Price was educated in the rural schools of Audrain County, Missouri, and after his graduation from the high school at Mexico, Missouri, in 1905, operated his father's farm for a period of two years. He was next employed in a bank at Mexico for one year as bookkeeper, and in 1907 first came to Billings, where he entered the First National Bank in the same capacity and for the same period of time. Subsequently he went to Columbus, Montana, as assistant cashier of the Columbus State Bank, but a year later returned to Billings at the organization of the Merchants National Bank at this place. He became note and exchange teller in the credit department, acting in this capacity one year, and then resigned his position to assist in the organization of the Farmers and Traders State Bank, of which he became cashier. In the following year he was elected cashier, and held that position until the bank was consolidated with the Billings State Bank and the Bank of Billings as the American Bank and Trust Company, in 1914. He was the cashier of this institution until February, 1915, at which time he resigned, feeling the need of an extended rest due to overwork. He then engaged in the loan and livestock business on his own account and in 1917 incorporated his present business, under the firm style of the Price-Moffett Company, with offices at No. 2716 First Avenue, North, in the Securities Building. The officers of this concern are: E. R. Price, president; J. K. Moffett, vice president; P. A. Heath, secretary and treasurer. The business is really conducted as an investment banking enterprise, handling livestock, farm and ranch loans and buying and selling cattle extensively, and is one of the largest of its kind in Montana, having handled some of the largest loans in the state. Mr. Price is a republican, but not a politician, and belongs to the Billings Midland Club and the Billings Rotary Club. He is fraternally affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; and Aldemar Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar. His home is at No. 121 North Thirty-fifth Street.

In October, 1912, at Mexico, Missouri, Mr. Price was married to Miss Eliza Gibbs, daughter of C. R. and Mary B. (Buckner) Gibbs, of Mexico, Missouri, where Mr. Gibbs is connected with the Meyer Brothers Drug Company of St. Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Price are the parents of one child, Mary Katherine, born April 14, 1916.

Albert Patrick O'Leary, M. D. The professional services of Doctor O'Leary as physician and surgeon has been given to Big Timber since 1906. The only hospital advantages enjoyed by Sweetgrass County have been established and developed by Doctor O'Leary, and this well equipped private hospital is only one of many services by which his name is held in honor in that section of the state.

Doctor O'Leary was born at Flint, Michigan, August 26, 1870, and is a graduate of the University of Michigan, department of medicine and surgery. The previous generations of his family lived in County Cork, Ireland. His grandfather, Cornelius O'Leary, spent his life as a farmer there and died when about thirty-seven years of age. He was a man of prominence in his locality and during the Irish famines of 1845 and 1849 was appointed distributing officer. He married a Miss Williams, who was of pure Welsh ancestry.

Their son John C. O'Leary has long been prominent as a rancher both in Montana and Oregon. He was born in County Cork, at Millstreet, in 1832, and lived in his native land until he was sixteen years of age. On coming to the United States he settled in Michigan, where he was connected with the pioneer lumber industry. At one time he was superintendent of a large lumber plant owned by Governor Crapo of Michigan. In 1877 he moved to The Dalles, Oregon, and engaged in the sheep business. From there in 1899 he moved his headquarters to Idaho and continued cattle and stock ranching until 1907, when he came to Carbon County, Montana, and is now living at Edgar in that county. He has extended ranch interests in both Carbon and Sweetgrass counties, owning 640 acres in his home place and also has 1,000 acre ranch in Grass Valley, Oregon. Politically he is a republican, is a member of the Catholic Church and is a third degree Knight of Columbus, affiliated with Livingston Council. The wife of this veteran rancher bore the maiden name of Alice M. Vernon, and was born at Avon, New York, in 1845. Doctor O'Leary is the second of their seven children, and his twin brother, Alfred, died at the age of five years. Another son, Charles, died when three years old. The oldest of the family is John Vernon, engaged in the mining business at Butte. Mollie is the wife of A. F. Rice, manager and one of the owners of the Butte Business College. Frank was a government buyer of horses during the war. Edith G. is a talented teacher of expression and oratory now connected with the Junior High School at Butte.

Doctor O'Leary was about seven years old when his parents moved to Oregon, and he acquired his early education in public and private schools at The Dalles, and in 1892 graduated from the Wasco Independent Academy and Normal School. He finished his course and received his M. D. degree from the University of Michigan in 1898. One year he spent as interne in a hospital at Portland, Oregon, and has always kept up with the advances in his profession, particularly in surgery, in which he specializes. He attended the Chicago Polyclinic in 1915. He began practice at Butte in 1899 and for two years had the chief responsibilities in controlling the smallpox epidemic. Later he spent two years at Boulder Hot Springs and Alhambra Hot Springs, practiced at Billings six months, and in 1906 located at Big Timber, where he has been busily engaged in a general practice. He built his hospital in 1911 and is sole owner and proprietor. This hospital, the only one in Sweetgrass County, is located at McLeod Street and Fourth Avenue, and has accommodations for ten patients. Its facilities have frequently been taxed, and patients come from as far as sixty miles away. Doctor O'Leary is a member of the State and District Medical Societies, and is county health officer of Sweetgrass County.

He served as a member of the city council of Big Timber in 1917-18-19, is a republican, a Catholic, and a former member of the Knights of Columbus at Butte. He is associated with his father in the ownership of 1,000 acres of ranch land in the Grass Valley of Oregon, and he individually owns 280 acres in Carbon County. Doctor O'Leary is unmarried.

Roscoe G. Martin has recently identified himself with the business community of Red Lodge, is the undertaker for the town and most of the surrounding community, and is also serving as county coroner of Carbon County.

He was born at Colorado Springs, Colorado, September 14, 1894, a son of Robert M. and Hannah (Foster) Martin. His father, who was born in Kansas in 1857, was reared in that state, married at Topeka, and then removed to Colorado Springs, where he became captain of the city police force. He died at Colorado Springs in 1899. He was a republican in politics. His wife, who was born at Alberta, Kansas, in 1863, is now living at Berkeley, California. She is the mother of two children, Mabel and Roscoe. The former resides with her mother and is a graduate of the University of California at Berkeley.

Roscoe G. Martin was only five years old when his father died. He attended school principally at Long Beach, California, completing the junior year in the high school there in 1913. For 2½ years he was employed in the Long Beach postoffice. He first came to Red Lodge in 1915, working for six months with the local elevator company. Then after a visit back to California for three months he bought R. B. Mooney's undertaking business, the only establishment of its kind in Red Lodge. He has the equipment and a highly organized service with headquarters at 22 North Broadway. Mr. Martin was elected coroner of Carbon County in 1916 and was re-elected in 1918. He is a republican, a member of Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534 of the Elks and of the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce. He married Miss Evangeline Budas at Red Lodge in 1915. They have one child, Jovita, born October 28, 1916.

Albert Budas, father of Mrs. Martin, was a pioneer merchant at Red Lodge, and has been active in business and civic affairs there for over thirty years. He was born at Tornio, Sweden, in 1865, a son of Henry and Eva (Rukkola) Budas. His father was born in the same locality of Sweden in 1833 and spent his life in that country as a miller, dying in 1868. He had also served in the Swedish army. His wife was born in 1837 and died in 1873. Albert and Herman were their two sons, the latter dying at the age of nineteen. Albert Budas had a public school education in his native land and in 1884 came to the United States, spending a few months at New York Mills in Minnesota and in 1885 going to Butte, Montana, where he worked in the mines for three years. On coming to Red Lodge he engaged in the mercantile business, but since 1909 has conducted the leading fire insurance and real estate agency.

He has been prominent in local affairs, is a republican, has served on the City Council of Red Lodge and in November, 1918, was elected member of the Sixteenth Session of the State Legislature. In the following session he was chairman of the irrigated water rights committee and member of the committees on mining, public morals and public utilities. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Bear Tooth Lodge of Elks, and is president of the Roberts State Bank of Red Lodge.

Mr. Budas married Miss Katie O'Connor in 1895. Her father, James O'Conner, was a Pennsylvania coal miner. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Budas are Evangeline and Albert, Jr.

Ernest T. Eaton. One of the most cultured and accomplished educators of the Northwest, endowed with rare ability and a strong personality, Ernest T. Eaton, of Billings, financial director of the Billings Polytechnic Institute, is thoroughly public spirited and progressive, and ever found among the leaders of any movement with which he becomes associated. A native of New England, he was born at Atkinson, Maine, September 11, 1877, a son of Capt. Thomas O. Eaton, and a descendant of John Eaton, who immigrated from England to Haverhill, Massachusetts, in 1638, and whose grandson, Johnathan Eaton, settled in Maine, becoming the progenitor of the Eatons of that state.

Thomas O. Eaton, now a respected resident of Polytechnic, Montana, was born in 1841, in Sebec, Maine, and was reared and educated in his native state. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the First Maine Artillery, which guarded Washington, District of Columbia, during the next two years. Subsequently accompanying his regiment to the scene of action, he took an active part in the battles of Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, North Anna and Petersburg, in the latter engagement being severely wounded. For a number of years after the close of the war he was employed in tilling the soil in the vicinity of Charleston and Foxcroft, Maine, served as captain of the State Militia, and occupied many other positions of trust in the life of his community. In 1886 he moved to Iowa, where he was engaged in the live stock and meat business at Earlville and Manchester, Iowa, until 1904. He moved to Deer Lodge, Montana, in 1904, when his sons re-established the College of Montana. He remained there four years. He located at Billings in 1908 and bought a ranch joining what was later to be the Polytechnic farm and campus. Here he still lives, watching and aiding in the development of the great institution his sons are building. He is a faithful member of the Congregational Church, liberally contributing towards its support; a staunch old line republican in politics, and a Mason.

C. J. Murphey

His wife, whose maiden name was Delia Bolster, was born in Foxcroft, Maine, in 1843. She was educated in Foxcroft Academy and taught school for a number of terms, marrying Captain Eaton in 1865. She died at her home in Polytechnic, Montana, in October, 1917, their married life having covered a period of fifty-two years. Their children were Lewis T., educational director of the Billings Polytechnic Institute; Ernest T., the subject of this sketch; a daughter, Alice D., who died at Deer Lodge, Montana, in 1904; and a son, Volney, who died in 1887.

As a boy and youth Ernest T. Eaton attended the public schools of Maine and Iowa, and in 1897 was graduated from Lenox College at Hopkinton, Iowa, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and three years later, in 1900, was there honored with the degree of Master of Science. He attended the University of Iowa, 1898 and 1899, graduating with the class of '99, with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. In the fall of 1899 Mr. Eaton was engaged in newspaper work, and in the spring of 1900 became a teacher in Oak Park High School, Des Moines, Iowa. Later in the year he was elected principal of the school, and in 1901 became superintendent of schools in the Oak Park District. While teaching he studied law and completed two years of a law course. In 1902 he was elected superintendent of the schools at Deer Lodge, Montana, and during the three years that he was thus employed established at Deer Lodge the Powell County High School, of which he was the first principal. He served as principal of this high school for four years, resigning January 1, to become financial director of the College of Montana, of which his brother, Lewis T. Eaton, was then president. The two brothers reorganized, rebuilt and endowed that pioneer Montana institution.

They went to Billings in the summer of 1908 and organized the Billings Polytechnic Institute, Ernest T. becoming financial director, an office for which he is admirably qualified, and Mr. Lewis T. Eaton becoming educational director. Under the management of these gifted brothers the institution has grown with surprising rapidity, having already given diplomas to 150 Montana and Wyoming boys and girls, while 126 of its boys took part in the recent war, eight of them sacrificing their lives for their country.

The school is finely located three miles north of Billings, and with its faculty of eighteen members is doing notable work, admitting students without examination, giving them educational advantages from the lower grades to the junior year in college, its standards being accepted by state schools and eastern institutions of learning. Mr. Eaton has been very active and successful as financial director of the institute, having been largely instrumental in securing from friends in the East funds amounting to $300,000, and as business manager has wisely expended this sum in the construction of the many beautiful buildings connected with the institute, including Science Hall, Kimball Hall, Prescott Commons, the Losekamp Memorial Building, a fine gymnasium and the shop building. A Young Men's Christian Association building will soon be completed, and work commenced on Harwood Girls Dormitory, the funds for which are already available.

A stalwart republican in politics, Mr. Eaton takes an active and intelligent interest in public affairs, and is rendering his fellow citizens valuable service in the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1916 and re-elected in 1918, representing Yellowstone County. Prominent in the work devolving upon him in that capacity Mr. Eaton is chairman of the committee on education, and is a member of various other important committees, including that of affairs of cities, state institutions and public buildings, fairs and expositions, public morals, charities and reform. True to the religious faith in which he was reared, he is an active member of the Congregational Church. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

At Deer Lodge, Montana, in the autumn of 1911, Mr. Eaton married Miss Augusta Valiton, a daughter of Judge Henry G. and Mary Rae Valiton, pioneer residents of Montana. Judge Valiton was mayor of Butte, Montana, two terms during his residence in that city, and is now serving as justice of the peace at Deer Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton have no children.

They have a beautiful suburban home planned especially for the pleasure and entertainment of the Polytechnic faculty and students. It is situated just west of the Polytechnic. Mr. Eaton, in addition to his duties as financial director and business manager of the Polytechnic, has taken much interest in the production of pure seed and in the raising of fruit. He has served for five years on the State Fair Advisory Board as the member from Yellowstone County and has had much to do with the Agricultural and Horticultural Exhibits at both the State and Midland Empire fairs. His selection of vegetables, corn, grain and apples have carried off many premiums at these and other fairs.

Charles Francis Murphy. The men having charge of the conduct of the large interests of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad are without exception especially fitted for the positions they occupy, and through their knowledge of men and railroad work, all parties concerned benefit. One of these alert, responsible and effective executives of this road is Charles Francis Murphy, superintendent of the company, and one of its most valued men. He was born at Caledonia, Minnesota, May 4, 1861, a son of John Murphy. John Murphy was born in County Cork, Ireland, March 4, 1813, and died at Elkton, South Dakota, February 1, 1892. Reared in Ireland, he left that country in 1837 and came to the United States, first selecting Boston, Massachusetts, as his place of residence, where he was employed in a tan yard. In 1857 he came as far west as Caledonia, Minnesota, and until 1878 was there engaged in farming, but then left it for Elkton, South Dakota, where he lived in retirement until death claimed him. A democrat and Roman Catholic, he lived up to his beliefs. On February 1, 1840, he was married at Boston, Massachusetts, to Johanna Ford, born in County Cork, Ireland, on February 22, 1819. She died at Elkton, South Dakota on September 1, 1896. Their children were as follows: Johanna, who was born on July 4, 1841, died at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1857; William H., who was born December 21, 1842, is city assessor of Brookings, South Dakota; Margaret, who was born March 22, 1846, died at Elkton, South Dakota, in 1880, as the wife of Nicholas Murphy, a veteran of the war between the states, and a retired railroad man still residing at Elkton; John, who was born, July 10, 1848, was a railroad man, and died at Great Falls, Montana, in 1907; Mary Ann, who was born, January 6, 1851, is the widow of John A. Flynn, formerly a jeweler of Wells, Minnesota, where Mrs. Flynn is still residing; Edward, who was born, August 9, 1853, is a retired farmer of Elkton, South Dakota; Ellen, who was born, September 10, 1855, died at Great Falls, Montana, November 6, 1916, as the wife of John Fogerty, formerly a railroad man, but now also deceased; Matthew, who was born February 4, 1858, lives at Bowman, North Dakota, where he is engaged in grain and stock raising; and Charles Francis, who was the youngest of this large family.

Charles Francis Murphy was reared on his father's farm at Caledonia, Minnesota, and attended the public schools of the neighborhood until he was eighteen years old, at which time he left home and entered the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad as a section hand and remained in the track department for two years. Coming west to South Dakota, he spent three years as deputy sheriff and deputy United States marshal, with headquarters at Huron, but at the end of that time returned to the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, this time as a brakeman and held that position with the road for two years, and then in October, 1889, he came to Glendive and until 1894 was with the Northern Pacific Railroad as brakeman, switchman and conductor. Mr. Murphy then made another change and was made yard master of the Great Northern Railroad at Butte, Montana, holding that position until 1896. In the latter year he entered the employ of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad Company as yard master, and served as such at Anaconda for two and one-half years. Mr. Murphy then returned to the Great Northern road for four and one-half years, during that period being yard master at Great Falls, Montana, when he was made trainmaster, and after two years, assistant superintendent. In 1909 he was elected mayor of Great Falls, and served as such for two years, and at the same time operated a real estate business. In the fall of 1911 he reassumed the duties of yard master for the Great Northern road at Grand Forks, North Dakota, but a month later was offered the position of superintendent of the transportation department of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, which he accepted and held for two years, when his services received further recognition by his promotion to the superintendency of the road on December 1, 1913, which position he still holds, his offices being in the general office building of his road on West Commercial Avenue, Anaconda. A democrat, in addition to being mayor of Great Falls he was also a member of the City Council of that city for three consecutive terms, or six years. Bred in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church, he has embraced it as his own. He belongs to the Rotary and Commercial clubs, and to Anaconda Lodge No. 239, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Order of Railroad Conductors. Mr. Murphy owns his residence at No. 708 Hickory Street, Anaconda, and a 160 acre ranch on Pondera River, in the county of that name, Montana.

In 1896 Mr. Murphy was married at Huron, South Dakota, to Miss Mary Coddington, a daughter of Maurice and Annie (Reynolds) Coddington. Mr. Coddington died at Great Falls, Montana, after having had various experiences as a pioneer. In 1849 he was one of the gold seekers who crossed the plains to California, later going to South Dakota and becoming one of the pioneer butchers of Huron, and finally locating at Great Falls, Montana. Mrs. Coddington lives with Mr. and Mrs. Murphy. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy became the parents of five children, namely: Raymond, who was born August 20, 1897, was graduated from the Anaconda High School, and then became a student of the University of Minnesota, but on May 3, 1917, he enlisted in the United States Navy for service during the great war, and is now a first class pharmacist mate in the medical department of the transport service and is on his twelfth trip; Clyde Francis, who was born on October 3, 1899, left the Anaconda High School during his senior year to enlist as pharmacist mate in the United States Navy, and is now on the destroyer Breeze, at Newport News, Virginia, having made nine round trips to Europe; Eugene, who was born on February 4, 1902, is attending the Anaconda High School; Marie, who was born on September 7, 1904, is also attending the Anaconda High School; and Irene, who was born on February 7, 1907.

A clean-minded, considerate, dependable man, Mr. Murphy is a decided addition to any community in which he takes up his place of residence. Having spent practically all of his mature years in the railroad business, and worked up through the different positions, he understands conditions as only a practical man can, and is thus enabled to deal with the problems of his department wisely, fairly and expeditiously, and while he gives to his duties the full attention their importance demand, his men know that in him they have a friend and fellow worker.

CHARLES W. CAMPBELL. Since coming to Montana eight years ago Charles W. Campbell has found his talents and services as a lawyer appreciated and in great demand in connection with a large general practice. Mr. Campbell is a member of the Big Timber bar, and as one of the younger men of the community his interests in business and civic affairs are steadily growing.

Mr. Campbell was born at Hamburg, Iowa, October 6, 1885, but spent most of his early life in Nebraska. The Campbells were a Scotch family. His father, James W. Campbell, was born in Ohio in 1856, was reared in the State of Missouri, was married and followed farming near Hamburg, Iowa, and in 1890 moved to Fullerton, Nebraska. He still lives there and has been greatly prospered as a farmer, owning 320 acres in Nebraska, and has a property of 320 acres in Montana four miles southeast of Willow Creek. He is an independent democrat in politics, a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Modern Woodmen of America.

James W. Campbell married Anna Wages, who was born in Galesburg, Illinois, in 1869. Charles W. Campbell is the older of two children, his sister, Thelma, being still a school girl.

He was educated in the public schools of Nance County, Nebraska, graduating from the high school at Fullerton in 1903, at the age of eighteen. He is also an alumnus of the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, where he finished his classical course and received his A. B. degree in 1907, and was awarded his LL. B. degree by the law department in 1910. While at university he was a member of Alpha Tau Omega social fraternity and the Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity. On leaving university Mr. Campbell spent a period in the employ of the United States forestry service at Steamboat Springs, Colorado, where he remained until November 20, 1910. The spring of the following year found him at Livingston, Montana, and the following July he located at Big Timber and was soon immersed in a busy general civil and criminal practice. He has his offices in the Brownlee Building on McLeod Street. Mr. Campbell has served as city attorney of Big Timber, is a stockholder in the Scandinavian-American Bank and has a partnership interest in a ranch on the Boulder River.

Mr. Campbell, who is unmarried, is a republican in politics, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, and Big Timber Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

THE NATIONAL PARK BANK. This is not only one of the oldest banks of the state, but its integrity and service have made it notable as a banking organization. It is successor to the first banking house at Livingston, established as the Bank of Livingston, a private institution in 1882 by H. W. Mund. The business grew and prospered, and in 1886 was housed in a substantial building of its own. In that year the bank was reorganized, and it was chartered as a national bank in December, 1886. The capital stock at the beginning was $50,000, and the first directors were W. R. Stebbins, W. M. Wright, H. W. Mund, George T. Chambers, C. S. Hefferlin, A. L. Love and E. Goughnour. In 1890 the capital was increased to its present figures, $100,000. Nearly thirty years later, in 1919, the bank showed a surplus of $100,000, with undivided profits of nearly $270,000. At that time the deposits aggregated over $3,000,000, and the total assets are more than $3,500,000. It is estimated that during its existence the bank has paid out more than $1,500,000 in interest to depositors. At the time of the first Liberty Loan the National Park Bank subscribed $100,000, and no other bank in the state supported that loan more liberally. In 1917 among the 7,000 and more National banks in the country the National Park Bank stood 117 in the roll of honor and first in the State of Montana. The bank is the United States depository for the Postal Savings Fund.

Its present officers are J. C. Vilas, president; D. A. McCaw, vice president; F. A. Krieger, vice president; D. J. Fitzgerald, cashier. Other directors are Fred L. Gibson, L. M. Miles, J. M. Seaman.

WILL B. SHORE, M. D. As a physician and surgeon Doctor Shore has had an interesting and varied experience in the Northwest for over fifteen years, and for the past five years has been one of the leading men of his profession at Red Lodge.

He was born at Mount Vernon, Indiana, May 3, 1877. His grandfather was born in North Carolina in 1809 and became an early settler in Southern Indiana, where he cleared up land and made a farm. He was a farmer the rest of his life and died at Mohawk, Indiana, in 1889. J. L. Shore, father of Doctor Shore, was born at Mohawk in 1854, and left there in early manhood and located at Mount Vernon, Indiana, where he married and where he was for a time agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railway and also in the lumber business. He retired from business in 1909 and has since lived at Spokane, Washington. He is a democrat in politics, a Mason and for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church. J. L. Shore married Sue Beauchamp, who was born in Union County, Kentucky, in 1856.

Doctor Shore, only child of his parents, attended the public schools of Mount Vernon, Indiana, graduated from high school at Peoria, Illinois, in 1895, and did his undergraduate medical work in the University Medical College at Kansas City, Missouri. He finished the four year course there in 1903. He was a member of the Esculapian Society of that institution. Since then besides his individual experience he has taken post-graduate work, attending surgical and general medical courses in the New York Polyclinic in 1907 and doing special work in surgery and genito-urinology at the University of Louisville in 1908. Doctor Shore came to the Northwest in 1903, passing the State Board examination at Spokane, Washington, and practicing there one year. He was also surgeon of a steamship plying between Seattle and Alaska. In 1904 he passed the examination of the State Board of Montana and for one year practiced at Whitefish, where he was contract surgeon while the railroad was being constructed. After a few months in Carson City, Nevada, he established his home in Gardiner, Montana, in 1905, and was in practice there for eight years. The following summer he spent at Cody, Wyoming, and in the winter of 1914 came to Red Lodge, where he has enjoyed a thriving general medical and surgical practice. During one year of the war he was on the local examining board. He was then commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps and was sent to the Medical Officers Training Camp at Camp Riley, Kansas. He received his honorable discharge November 29, 1918, a few days after the signing of the armistice. January 1, 1919, Doctor Shore established a hospital at Red Lodge, and its facilities have been availed of by his patients not only from Montana but Wyoming. His offices are at 17 South Broadway.

Doctor Shore resigned his position as city health officer of Red Lodge when he entered the army service. He is a member of the County and State Medical societies and the American Medical Association, is a Presbyterian, belongs to the Red Lodge Chamber of Commerce and in politics is a republican.

January 3, 1917, at Red Lodge, he married Miss Myrbith Franklin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Franklin of Helena, Montana. Her father is a mine owner.

REV. JOSEPH BLAERE is a native of Belgium, was educated for the priesthood in the famous University of Louvain, and the field of his practical labors as a missionary priest and pastor have been entirely in Montana, where he has served devotedly and successfully for over twenty years. He is now pastor of St. Mary's Church at Livingston.

He was born at Oedelem in West Flanders, Belgium, October 22, 1874, the third in a family of five children and the only one to come to America. His father, Henry Blaere, was born in 1836 and died in 1887, spending his life in West Flanders as a teacher and instructor of schools. The mother, Sadonia Costenoble, also spent her life in West Flanders, and died eight years after the birth of Father Joseph Blaere.

The latter acquired his early education in the government schools of his birthplace, spent six years in classical studies in the College of St. Amadeus at Courdray, for two years was a student of philosophy in Roulers Seminary, and finished with a four years' theological course in the American Seminary at Louvain. He was ordained a priest in April, 1897, and almost immediately set out for the scene of his future labors in America.

For one year he was assistant pastor of the Sacred Heart Cathedral at Helena. In 1898 he became assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Parish at Butte, remaining there two years, and then became parish priest of Our Lady of Lourdes at Marysville. His next regular assignment was as pastor of Sacred Heart at Miles City, where he remained eight months, and in 1902 came to what seems his permanent field of labor, Livingston, as pastor of St. Mary's Parish. The boundaries of this parish are coincident with those of Park County. It is one of the old parishes of the Catholic Church in Montana, but under no pastor has it enjoyed so much material and spiritual growth and advancement as under Father Blaere. He has built a number of churches as a missionary priest, and his most notable addition to the parish at Livingston is a handsome parochial school, finished in 1914. The buildings at Livingston comprise the church, parsonage and parochial school.

Father Blaere is a member of Livingston Council No. 1274, Knights of Columbus, is a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters, and belongs to the Livingston Chamber of Commerce.

Morris P. Monberg was the responsible factor in giving Livingston City and Park County one of its best industries, the Park County Creamery, and Mr. Monberg is an expert butter maker and received his early training in the greatest butter making country in the world, Denmark.

He was born near Vejle, Denmark, July 13, 1887. His father, Martin Monberg, was born in the same country in 1850 and was in the Danish armies in the struggle against German oppression during the '60s. He spent his active career as a farmer and for sixteen years held an office corresponding in America to sheriff. He was a member of the Lutheran Church. He died in Denmark in 1915. His wife was Sorine Mourison, who was born in Denmark in 1857 and is still living in the old home community. Morris P. was the second in a family of five children. Mary, the oldest, is the wife of Paul Sorensen, a stone mason in Denmark; Marinus lives with his mother on the home farm; Lawrence and Alfred, twin brothers, are still in school in Denmark.

Morris P. Monberg was educated in the public schools of his native community, graduating from high school in 1905. Farm reared and trained, he has known the dairy industry as practiced in Denmark from almost his infancy. For one term he took instructions in a dairy school in Denmark. He became head butter maker in a creamery at Vejle and for 2½ years held a similar position with the Kilde Velde Creamery Company in his native country. After coming to America in 1910 Mr. Monberg spent two terms in an American dairy school. He followed his trade three months at Mankato, Minnesota, was at Arco in that state two years, spent two years in San Francisco, and in 1914 came to Livingston, Montana. The Park County Creamery was built in the summer of 1914, and the first butter was manufactured on the 15th of August. At first it was a stock company, but Mr. Monberg is now sole proprietor. From the first he has presided over the butter making activities of the creamery, and is responsible for its fine record. The Park County Creamery has frequently produced butter with a score of 94, and its exhibits have won prizes in various dairy shows. The creamery has done much to stimulate the dairy industry, and furnishes a direct market for the farmers of Park, Sweetgrass and Gallatin counties. The creamery is a modern plant, with every facility for the manufacture of butter, ice cream and cheese. Its products have a ready sale in local markets, also in Butte, Helena and Anaconda, and some of the surplus has been shipped to Chicago.

Mr. Monberg is a live citizen and has been highly gratified with the success which has attended his efforts since coming to America. He owns a ranch of 160 acres in Wyoming, and is a director in the Livingston Ice and Cold Storage Company. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club at Livingston, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, and Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks. He is a member of the English Lutheran Church and politically is an independent republican.

On April 5, 1913, in San Francisco, he married Miss Caroline Jorgensen. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Jorgensen, live in Denmark, her father being a horse trainer. Mr. and Mrs. Monberg have one daughter, Juanita, born July 4, 1918.

Edward Alexander Stiefel. As the demand for only sound banking institutions increases, and the value of such concerns to their communities is being more and more appreciated, the character of the men who administer their affairs receives closer attention, and when these men have been proven efficient and worthy, confidence in their financial institutions is increased. The influence of a sound, conservative banking house is wide and its practical results far reaching. Without such an institution in its midst, no community can hope to take its proper place among its sister cities. Therefore it may be truthfully said that the growth and development of any town or city depends largely upon its banks and their quality, and this means the sagacity and integrity of the men who stand at their head. One of the sound financial institutions of Montana is the Farmers Bank of Belgrade, which has benefited for years by the wise, conservative and efficient executive direction of Edward Alexander Stiefel, its president. Not only is Mr. Stiefel prominent in this connection, but in various other ways, particularly through his identification as treasurer and manager with the Belgrade Company, Ltd., one of the leading department stores of Southern Montana and the largest enterprise of its kind in Gallatin County.

Edward Alexander Stiefel was born at Baltimore, Maryland, April 11, 1867, a son of Edward W. Stiefel, who was born in 1825, in Germany. As a young man the father immigrated to the United States, first locating for a short time in Pennsylvania and then removing to Baltimore, Maryland, in which city he was married, and where he was a member of the Home Guards during the Civil war. He was an all-around business man and successful in his undertakings, which had principally to do with mining, in which he was greatly interested. A democrat in politics, he stood high in the councils and confidence of his party and served as a member of the Board of Commissioners of Baltimore County for a number of terms. Mr. Stiefel was a faithful member of the Lutheran Church and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity for many years, being one of its old and honored members at the time of his death at Baltimore in 1903. Mr. Stiefel married Miss Jane Holtzman, who was born in Maryland, in 1840, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Sophia T., residing with her brother Edward A., widow of Charles Beerstecher, who was an attorney in Michigan and California and died in the latter state; Dora, who resides at Baltimore, Maryland, widow of the late D. S. Blair, who was first an educator and for the last fifteen years of his life was employed in the United States Customs Service; A. W., a plumber, who died at Baltimore in 1894; Jane, who died young; Edward Alexander; and Minna, who died single at Baltimore at the age of thirty years.

Edward A. Stiefel was educated in the public schools of Baltimore, and when he left high school at the early age of fifteen years began learning telegraphy. After a period spent with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in Maryland, he transferred his services to the Southern Pacific Railroad, in California, Utah and Colorado, and in 1895 came to Helena, Montana, in the traffic department of that road. Leaving Helena in 1900 Mr. Stiefel came to Belgrade to become manager of the Belgrade Company, Ltd., a position which he holds today, in addition to discharging the duties of treasurer, and also owns considerable stock in this enterprise, which, as before noted, is the largest department store in Gallatin County and one of the largest of Southern Montana. This business was primarily established in a small way, but under wise, capable and energetic management its growth has been phenomenal and its achievements form a new page in the business history of this growing section of the state. The officers of this concern are: President, T. C. Power, of Helena; vice president, C. B. Power, Helena; secretary, G. J. Joyce, Helena; treasurer and general manager, E. A. Stiefel, Belgrade. The massive structure housing this great and constantly-growing enterprise is situated on the corner of Northern Pacific Avenue and Broadway Street, and is the main business block of Belgrade, with floor space 125 by 130 feet, two stories in height, the upper story being let for office purposes.

In addition to the above Mr. Stiefel has numerous other interests of large importance. He is a director in the Montana Life Insurance Company, owns a modern residence on Weaver Street and three other residence properties at Belgrade, and also has a ranch of 1,280 acres, situated twelve miles west of this city. As a banker he is president of the Farmers Bank of Belgrade, which was established in 1916 as a state bank, and is situated on Broadway Street. The officers of this institution are: President, E. A. Stiefel; vice president, M. W. Penwell; and cashier, M. C. Smiley. The capital of this institution is $50,000, and its surplus and profits, $12,000, while its deposits amount to $200,000. Mr. Stiefel is acknowledged to be a man of marked financial capacity, conservative, shrewd, far-seeing and extremely careful of his depositors' interests, a man of sterling honesty, unquestioned ability and high ideals. Possessed of energy and public spirit, he has at various times been connected with civic matters of importance, and has been a member of the City Council. At this time he belongs to the board of trustees of the Gallatin County High School at Bozeman and is a member of the board of directors of the Gallatin County Fair Association. Faithful in every relation of life, he has risen from small beginnings to an enviable position, and in doing so has left a record of success secured fairly and without animosity.

WILLIAM HRUZA came to Montana thirty-five years ago. As one of the builders of the City of Livingston the people of that community have always called him, with an accent of esteem and admiration, "Bill" Hruza. He gave to Livingston a splendid industry for the manufacture of meat products, and his ability in that line returned him the modest fortune which in later years he has used to develop extensive private interests as a livestock man and rancher, though still a resident of the City of Livingston.

Mr. Hruza was born in Bohemia, Austria, June 25, 1859. His father, Thomas Hruza, was born in the same country in 1821, and twice served with the Austrian armies in some of the Central European wars. He fought in 1848 against Germania and again in 1866 against Prussia. He was proprietor of a cafe in his native country and in 1877 came to the United States and was in business at North Bend, Nebraska, until his death in 1905. In the matter of politics he was identified with the democratic party and was a member of the Catholic Church. In Bohemia he married Barbara Novak, who was born in 1828 and died at North Bend, Nebraska, in 1905, at the age of seventy-seven. Frank, the oldest of their children, was a butcher and died at North Bend, Nebraska, at the age of fifty-six. William was the second in age. Adolph became an attorney and died at North Bend at the age of thirty-five.

Mr. Hruza received a common school education in his native land, and also had expert training there at the butcher's trade. After coming to this country he lived for a time at North Bend, Nebraska, worked at his trade, and from there went to Denver and resumed his trade in that then great mining metropolis for three years. He also spent a period at Omaha, where he had valuable experience in one of the largest packing industries of that city.

Mr. Hruza came to Livingston in 1884 and traveled by stage route through the Black Hills district. He reached Livingston without money and had to give a practical demonstration of his skill as a butcher before he was accepted as an employe by the pioneer Livingston meat man, S. L. Holliday. Then for nine years he worked for Mr. Holliday and for another firm, at the end of which time he embarked his modest capital and his individual skill in a business of his own on South Main Street. He established the Cold Storage Market, and in connection built near Livingston a model killing and packing plant, where he introduced facilities for the slaughter and preparation of many thousands of pounds of beef, pork, mutton and other meat products every week. This business grew and prospered and it continued under the personal direction and ownership of Mr. Hruza until 1915, when he sold out. In the meantime and since he has been identified with the production of meat on the hoof, and today owns two ranches. One consists of 720 acres a mile from Livingston on Flushman Creek, and he also has a ranch of 1,100 acres seven miles from Livingston. He is a director of the First State Bank of Livingston, and owns a beautiful modern home at 315 West Callender Street.

Mr. Hruza is a republican and during the nineties served a term on the city council. He is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks, and has been active in the Commercial Club. He is also a member of Zephyr Camp No. 151, Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Hruza has had an ideal domestic life, and his three children are young people who have given good accounts of themselves. In 1883, at North Bend, Nebraska, he married Miss Mary Kunes, daughter of James and Anna Kunes. Her father was a pioneer rancher in Nebraska and is now deceased, her mother living at Morris Bluffs in that state. Minnie, the oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Hruza is a talented vocal and instrumental musician, a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music, and is the wife of Henry Jandruw. Mr. Jandruw is a railroad engineer, and he and his wife have their home on Yellowstone Street in Livingston. Ada, the second daughter, was her father's bookkeeper for several years and is now the wife of Charles Reber, their home being on the Hruza ranch. John, their only son, lives with his parents and is assistant cashier of the First State Bank.

EDWARD H. MOORMAN. In the following paragraphs are briefly outlined the leading facts and characteristics in the career of a gentleman who combines in his makeup the elements of the practical man of affairs and the energy of the public-spirited citizen, and all who come within range of his influence are profuse in their praise of his admirable qualities. The high regard in which he is held by all classes indicates the possession of attributes and characteristics that fully entitle him to the respect and consideration of his fellow men.

Edward H. Moorman, secretary and treasurer and assistant general manager of the Yellowstone Park Camping Company, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, December 18, 1875, and is the son of John B. and Mary (Ernst) Moorman. The father was born in Germany in 1830, and two years later was brought by his parents to the United States. They located in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was reared, married and spent the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1894. During his active years he was one of the best known newspaper men in Cincinnati, having served for ten years as general superintendent of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, and for thirty-five years in a like capacity with the Cincinnati Volksblatt, in which he was a stockholder and which at that time was one of the leading papers printed in the German language in the United States. In politics he was a republican and in religious belief was a Catholic. Mrs. Mary Moorman was born in 1839 in Cincinnati, and died there in 1899. To this worthy couple were born the following children: G. L., who is connected with the American Book Company at Cincinnati; Edward H., the next in order of birth; Fred; Ernst, who operates an automobile dray line in Cincinnati; Alfred, also of Cincinnati.

Edward H. Moorman received his education in the public schools of Cincinnati, and at the age of fifteen years he entered the office of the Mosler Safe and Lock Company, with whom he remained for two years. During the following six years he was employed by the Globe Iron Roofing and Corrugating Company. In 1900 Mr. Moorman came to Bozeman, Montana, and entered the employ of the Wylie Permanent Camping Company in the capacity of camp manager. He was later promoted to the position of auditor of the company. In December, 1916, the company was reorganized as the Yellowstone Park Camping Company, Mr. Moorman continuing with the new company as auditor and also becoming its treasurer. In May, 1919, the Yellowstone Park Camping Company changed ownership and under the consequent reorganization Mr. Moorman became secretary and treasurer and assistant general manager, responsible positions which he is still satisfactorily filling. The other officers of the company are as follows: President A. W. Miles; vice president and general manager, Howard H. Hays. The company is incorporated and has its principal offices at Livingston.

For many years the Yellowstone National Park has been the most popular of America's vacation spots, hence its popular title of "The Nation's Playground." One of the most important elements contributing to the enjoyment of the thousands of visitors who come here for an outing has been the system of camps, which has been maintained here through the years for nearly three decades. Approximately 50 per cent of visitors to the park prefer the camping life, which is made easy, comfortable and safe under the management of the Yellowstone Park Camping Company. This company undoubtedly provides pleasure seekers with the greatest vacation at the lowest cost offered anywhere in America. Wonderful scenery, startling phenomena, fishing unequalled anywhere, gorgeous flowers and trees, hundreds of animals, including elk, deer and bear, and the purest water and most invigorating air, combine to make Yellowstone Park a natural vacation spot, but, in addition, the hand of man offers such inducements to visitors as comfortable and safe automobile rides through wild canyons and over mountain peaks, splendid cuisine, restful beds, bath-houses and every other comfort and pleasure-giving device that can be assembled here for the entertainment of visitors. The kitchens and dining halls of the company are revelations in camp conveniences and sanitation. A laundry is maintained in each camp; mountain water from ice-cold springs is piped to all camps and milch cows supply fresh cream and butter daily. Natural hot springs furnish water for bathing purposes and if visitors suffer from over enjoyment doctors and nurses are provided to bring them back to a normal condition. Mr. Moorman has had a large part in the perfecting of the system under which the camps are now conducted, and has thus in a definite way contributed to the enjoyment of thousands who have come to Wonderland for rest and recuperation.

Politically Mr. Moorman is an independent republican, though he does not take an active part in public affairs. Fraternally he is a member of Bozeman Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a member of the Livingston Chamber of Commerce. In January, 1919, he sold his splendid ranch of 1,600 acres and now occupies a comfortable home on South Fifth Street, Livingston.

In 1909 Mr. Moorman was married to Gertrude Clark, the daughter of Robert and Mary (Rule) Clark, who reside near Shelbyville, Indiana. To them has been born one child, Helen Louise, born on May 27, 1910. In every phase of activity to which he has applied himself, Mr. Moorman has demonstrated ability of high order, and his fine personal qaulities have won for him a large circle of friends.

WILLIAM C. BUSCHE. No city is greater than the sum of its energies and enthusiasm derived from its best citizenship. The peculiar power and prestige of Livingston has been enhanced by the presence there of many men of great force, resourcefulness and varied executive talents. One of these is William C. Busche, who built up and is proprietor of the largest bakery establishment in the Yellowstone Valley, and from the success of his own business has radiated his energies far and wide as a city builder. To his bakery products he gave the trade name "Best Yet," and that title has become one of the main city slogans.

Mr. Busche is not only a master baker but a master business man and citizen. He was born at Bremen, Germany, August 5, 1875. His father, Conrad Busche, was born in the same free city of Germany in 1841 and died there in 1893. He spent all his active life as a baker. During the Franco-Prussian war in 1870-71 he was a German soldier. He was also a member of the Lutheran Church. His wife was Johanna Schulenberg, who was born in Bremen in 1845 and died in that city also in the year 1893. William C. was the oldest of their children. Mary is the wife of Henry Roevekamp, secretary for a large corporation of cotton spinners at Bremen. Minnie is also married and living in Bremen. Herman is manager of the German-American Oil Company at Munich, Germany.

William C. Busche was educated in private schools and at the age of thirteen began a thorough apprenticeship at the baker's trade under his father. In 1891, when sixteen years old, he came to the United States and the following two years worked steadily at his trade in the bakery of Regan Brothers at Minneapolis. His father's death called him home and until he was twenty-one years of age he ran the business and was guardian of the estate. When the estate was settled he returned to Minneapolis and rejoined Regan Brothers for two years. Mr. Busche acquired the bulk of his extensive knowledge of the northwestern country while a traveling representative for the Northwestern Bakers Supply Company of Minneapolis. He covered all the territory between Minneapolis and the states of Washington and Oregon, and in that time made personal acquaintance and gained the confidence and esteem of nearly all the retail bakers in this territory.

In 1907 Mr. Busche bought a small bakery in Livingston from B. A. Hicks. He had the advantage of not only knowing the baker's art but also all the most perfect facilities and appliances for increasing the quality and quantity of the baking business, and at the same time he has improved his plant until without question it ranks first among the bakeries of Southeastern Montana. He has installed all the labor saving devices and also the facilities to safeguard the sanitary quality of his products. From his plant on South Second Street the bread and other products go to supply a large and generous demand in a territory 100 miles north, east, south and west, and a large proportion of the homes of Livingston for years have known no other "staff of life," than the "Best Yet" bread.

On coming to Livingston Mr. Busche at once identified himself with the civic and business organizations. While president of the old Commercial Club he was chiefly instrumental in organizing the Park Creamery, one of the institutions of which Livingston is now most proud. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, is a past exalted ruler of Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks and a member of Yellowstone Lodge No. 10 of the Knights of Pythias. For the past seven years he has served as trustee and financial secretary of the English Lutheran Church. Politically he is a non-partisan.

At Spokane, Washington, in 1904, he married Miss Bessie C. Rudolf, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Rudolf. Her parents are now deceased. Her father was a pioneer baker at Spokane. Mr. and Mrs. Busche have three children: Rudolf, born September 16, 1906; Edward, born April 15, 1910; and Mary Louise, born April 19, 1916.

WILLIAM SWORDER. It is a well attested maxim that the greatness of the state lies not in the machinery of the government, or even in its institutions, but in the sterling qualities of its individual citizens, in their capacity for high and useful effort and unselfish endeavor and their devotion to the public good. To this class belongs William Sworder, who for more than a dozen years has honored Livingston by his citizenship. Although an American by adoption only, he has been most loyal to its institutions, and his example has been worthy of emulation.

William Sworder was born near Hertford, England, on May 10, 1869, and is the son of William and Ellen (Cooper) Sworder. The father was born near Hertford in 1843 and died there in 1917, having spent his entire life in that vicinity. He followed the vocation of farming, but retired in 1902. He was a conservative in politics and served as alderman of Hertford. He was a member of the Church of England and was a Freemason of the thirty-second degree. He served in the English Volunteer Cavalry and in many ways was a useful man. His wife was born in 1840, near Hertford, and she died there in 1899. To this worthy couple were born the following children: Helen, who is still unmarried and resides at Hertford; the subject of this sketch was next in the order of birth; Annie resides at Hertford; John Cooper lives at Hitchin, England; Mary lives at Hertford; Charles is a traveling salesman and lives in London, England; Rose is a nurse in the British Government service in the Island of Ceylon.

William Sworder received his education in the public schools of Hertford and then learned the trade of carpenter. Desiring a field of larger opportunities, in March, 1887, he came to the United States, locating first at Adrian, Minnesota, where for five years he engaged in farming. He then returned to his former vocation until 1899, when he went to Ulen, Minnesota, and again went to farming. Two years later he went to Twin Valley, Minnesota, and worked as a carpenter and builder until June, 1906, when he came to Livingston and has since been actively engaged in business here, first as a contractor and builder, but since that time as a cabinet maker and woodworker. He owns a good building on South B Street and is thoroughly prepared for any kind of a job in the way of wood work, nothing being too intricate for him to handle. Mr. Sworder's experience has led him through every department of his work, the results of which speak for themselves. He is also a stockholder in the Park Milling Company of Livingston. In civic affairs he has taken the same keen interest that has made for his success in business endeavors, and he occupies an enviable position among the business men of his city.

In February, 1893, at Adrian, Minnesota, Mr. Sworder was married to Jennie McNeely, who was born in New York City, and to them have been born the following children: Jennie Ellen, who is the wife of G. C. Bussard, a painter and decorator at Strawn, Illinois; Hazel Alvina, the wife of F. H. Goodson, a fireman on the Northern Pacific Railroad; William Lester, who enlisted in December, 1917, in the United States Navy, in which he is a first-class fireman, and has had four trips overseas; Stanley Charles is in the signal service of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Politically Mr. Sworder is an independent democrat, taking a keen interest in passing public events, and gives his support to those men and measures which in his judgment will best advance the best interests of the people. His fraternal relations are with Livingston Lodge No. 559, Loyal Order of Moose, and Livingston Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, which he has served as vice chancellor. The prosperity which is the legitimate result of earnest effort is today his, and he enjoys the confidence and respect of the entire community.

SAMUEL JAMES CROUCH. The interests of Gallatin are being well conserved by the county's representative in the Lower House of the State Assembly, Samuel James Crouch, who is also a well known figure in financial circles, as he is cashier of the sound banking house of Three Forks, the First National Bank. He is a man of unusual capabilities, and although in the very prime of life, has become experienced in dealing with human nature, so that his judgments are sound and seldom at fault. He was born near Three Forks, Montana, December 9, 1877, a son of C. L. Crouch, born in Montgomery County, Missouri, in 1839. There he was reared and lived until 1863, when he came west to Broadwater County, Montana, and homesteaded 160 acres of land. A practical farmer, he increased his holdings until he now owns 1,000 acres located three miles north of Three Forks, across the county line, and is numbered among the most successful ranchmen of this region. Politically he is a democrat. His fraternal connections are with the Masonic order. C. L. Crouch was married to Angeline Tate, born in Missouri in 1853, and died on the ranch in 1884, having borne her husband the following children: Elizabeth, who married a Mr. Haskell, lives with her father; Samuel James, who was the second in order of birth; William T., who lives on a ranch near his father's property; Stella, who died at the age of twelve years; and Clara, who died in infancy.

Samuel James Crouch was reared on the ranch and attended the schools of Gallatin County, the Montana State College, and was graduated in a business course in 1897. Completing his educational training, Mr. Crouch returned to his father's ranch and was there engaged in stock raising until 1902, when he began farming on his own account on a ranch adjacent to that of his father, containing 160 acres that he still owns, as well as other ranches in Jefferson, Broadwater and Gallatin counties, amounting to about 2,500 acres in all. In 1913 Mr. Crouch located permanently at Three Forks, and became cashier of its First National Bank, which position he still holds, and he is also interested to a considerable extent in some valuable mining properties.

A democrat, he early began to take an active part in politics, and was elected to the State Assembly as the representative of Broadwater County and served in the Eleventh and Twelfth sessions, having been elected to succeed himself. In 1918 he was returned to the State Assembly as the representative of Gallatin County, and served in the Sixteenth Session. During the time he was in the Legislature he served on the new counties, privilege and election, banks and banking and other important committees; and he also introduced the bill creating Pershing County, which was defeated. In every way he has served the best interests of his constituents, and is recognized as an able and broad minded man, and one who can be relied upon to work for constructive measures. Since coming to Three Forks Mr. Crouch has been very active in civic matters, serving in the City Council for two terms, and has been a forceful factor in the Chamber of Commerce, of which he was the first president. While still living in Broadwater County, he was on the school board of the Jefferson River District, and did much to raise the educational standards in that locality. He is now serving as president of the Sacajawea Club and is a member of the Elks Lodge. Very little of moment is undertaken without he is consulted, as his fellow citizens recognize that he is able and willing to exert himself in behalf of his community, and are glad to avail themselves of his valuable services.

On April 27, 1916, Mr. Crouch was married to Gertrude Edna Boomer at Long Beach, California. She is a daughter of Robert H. and Melissa (De Ormand) Boomer, now residents of Logan, Montana, although formerly Mr. Boomer was a farmer in the region about Bozeman, and it was on this property that Mrs. Crouch was born. Mr. and Mrs. Crouch have no children. Mr. Crouch's services to his district are not completed, for the future looms large with economic problems such men as he will be called upon to solve. During the past few years he has reached an understanding of the needs of his constituency directly and surely, and his associates recognize and admire his views, which are convincing in their simplicity and integrity, so that he is liable to be called upon to assume responsibilities of increasing importance as time passes.

Ralph Rowland Ege, a graduate civil engineer, has spent his active career as an expert in motor mechanics and has developed one of the largest and most complete organizations of its kind in Southern Montana, known as the United Motor Corporation of Livingston, of which he is president.

Mr. Ege was born on a farm in Whiteside County, Illinois, December 13, 1891. His father, William L. Ege, spent all his life in Illinois as a farmer and died in Whiteside County in 1895. He was a republican and a Methodist. The mother, Viola Rowland, was born in Illinois in 1867 and is now living with her two children at Livingston. Her daughter is Hazel H., wife of William A. Ortmeyer, treasurer of the United Motors Corporation of Livingston.

Ralph R. Ege, the only son, received his first advantages in the rural schools of Whiteside County, Illinois, and afterward attended Cornell Academy and Cornell College at Mt. Vernon, Iowa. He graduated with the degrees Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering in 1913, and the following year received his Master's degree in Civil Engineering. In 1914 he came to Montana and at Wilsall established the Shields Valley Garage. One year later he organized the Ege Motor Company of Wilsall, Livingston and Bozeman, and was its manager until January 12, 1917. He lived at Wilsall until May 1, 1916, and since then has made his home at Livingston. On January 12, 1917, he organized the United Motors Corporation for the purpose of doing a general garage business and handling the sales in local Montana territory for the Buick and Cadillac cars and the G. M. C. and Master trucks. The offices, salesroom and garage at Livingston are at 209-211 South Second Street. Mr. Ege is president of the corporation, F. M. Foerschler is vice president, W. A. Ortmeyer is treasurer, and Vard Smith secretary.

Mr. Ege is a stockholder in the Northwestern National Bank at Livingston and the Farmers Exchange of Wilsall and personally is interested in Montana agriculture, owning a farm of 160 acres in the Shields Valley. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Railway Club of Livingston, is a Mason, with affiliations in Mount Vernon Lodge in Iowa, and a member of Livingston Consistory of the Scottish Rite and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also a member of the Order of Elks. Politically he is independent and non-partisan, and is a member of the Methodist Church, a faith in which he was reared. Mr. Ege resides in the Park Hotel.

Samuel E. Leard, M. D. In the quarter of a century since he came to Livingston Dr. Leard has builded wisely and well his professional reputation and prestige. The recognition accorded him by his large private clientage as a competent and skillful physician and surgeon has gradually extended over many sections of the state. For the past fourteen years he has served as city health officer of Livingston, and in 1919 was appointed county health officer of Park County. For two years he was head physician of the state organization of the Modern Woodmen of America, and in 1911 was elected president of the State Health Officers' Association.

Doctor Leard was born in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, at Middlesex, October 5, 1864, but grew up in Illinois and came to Montana when about thirty years of age. His grandfather and great-grandfather bore the name Thomas. They were from County Down, Ireland, where grandfather Thomas was born in 1784. The great-grandfather brought his family to America in 1802 and was a pioneer of Western Pennsylvania, homesteading land in Armstrong County, where his son Thomas spent his life as a farmer and died in 1874, at the advanced age of ninety. Doctor Leard's father was also named Thomas and was born in Armstrong County in 1824. He spent his early life there as a farmer and after 1875 lived on a farm near Prairie City, Illinois, where he died in 1893. He was a republican in politics and a member of the Presbyterian Church, a faith he inherited from a long line of ancestors. He married Isabel Kiskadden, who was born in Butler County, Pennsylvania, in 1839, and died at Holdrege in Western Nebraska in 1912. Doctor Leard is the third of their five children. Hattie, the oldest, is the wife of William Martin, a farmer at Holdrege, Nebraska; William F. was a farmer and died at Prairie City, Illinois, at the age of fifty; Laura died in infancy; and Sadie Blanche is the wife of John McDonald, a beet sugar grower at Longmont, Colorado.

Samuel E. Leard was eleven years old when his parents moved to Illinois, and he finished his early education in country schools at Prairie City. He is a graduate of both the Knox Academy and Knox College at Galesburg, Illinois, taking the Bachelor of Science degree in 1889. The following four years he spent in the Chicago Medical College, graduating in 1893, and in the same year receiving the Master of Science degree from his alma mater at Galesburg. Doctor Leard did special work in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat at the Chicago Post-Graduate Medical School in 1904. While at Knox College he had four years of military training under Lieutenant, afterward Colonel Edwards. For three years he was also a member of the Second Montana Regiment of the Montana Militia. Soon after the beginning of the war against Germany Doctor Leard gave up his profession temporarily at Livingston and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps on August 4, 1917. He served with the army in the training camp at Chickamauga Park, Georgia. His earlier military training stood him in good stead and made him one of the useful members of the Medical Corps. He was mustered out December 1, 1918.

After graduating from Medical School Doctor Leard practiced at Omaha and in the fall of 1895 came to Livingston and embarked upon his career as a general physician and surgeon. His offices are in the Garnier-Miles Block. For ten years he served as county coroner, being elected five consecutive times. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies, the American Medical Association, is affiliated with Livingston Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, the Livingston Chamber of Commerce, is a member of the Congregational Church and is a republican.

He formerly owned some ranch properties but sold them in 1917. His residence is a modern home at 317 South Yellowstone Street. Doctor Leard married at Warren, Pennsylvania, in 1893, Margaret A. Newmaker, daughter of John W. and Sarah (Story) Newmaker, both now deceased. Her father was a furniture manufacturer and lumber dealer in Western Pennsylvania. Doctor and Mrs. Leard have one son, Thomas Clyde. In July, 1917, he joined the Second Montana Regiment and was mustered into the United States service in the One Hundred and Sixty-Third Regiment and was on duty with the Coast Artillery at New York until mustered out in September, 1918. He is now an employe of the Northern Pacific Railway in Idaho.

W. L. Kearns. Among the individuals of the class that may be called progressive in Southern Montana is W. L. Kearns, cashier of the Yegen Bank at Gardiner. His record is the account of a life which is uneventful, indeed, as far as stirring incident or startling adventure is concerned, yet is distinguished by the most substantial qualities of character. Like his father before him, his life history exhibits a career of virtuous private industry, performed with moderation and crowned with success. It is the record of a well balanced mental and moral constitution, strongly marked by those traits of character which are of such essential value in such a state of society as exists in this country.

W. L. Kearns was born in Adair County, Iowa, on May 22, 1888, the son of George L. and Elizabeth (Lynam) Kearns. George L. Kearns, who now resides in Vermilion, South Dakota, was born in 1864 in Scott County, Iowa, and was there reared and educated. He has been a life-long farmer and has been successful in his vocation. In 1901 he removed from Iowa to Delmont, South Dakota, where he remained until 1911, when he located in Vermilion. He is a democrat in his political belief. His wife was born in Scott County, Iowa, in 1867. She has borne her husband the following children: W. L., the immediate subject of this brief review; Owen, who is a farmer at Vermilion, South Dakota; Kathleen is at home with her parents; Keith, who died on April 4, 1919, was a ranch foreman near Gardiner; George, who enlisted in the United States Army in 1917, was sent overseas and served in the Army of Occupation; Lillian is a student in the public schools at Vermilion.

W. L. Kearns received his elementary education in the rural schools of South Dakota, attending the high school through the junior year. Then, in 1907, he attended the Capital City Commercial College at Des Moines, Iowa, upon the completion of which training he entered the Delmont State Bank at Delmont, South Dakota, as bookkeeper. Six months later he went to the Citizens State Bank at Armour, South Dakota, in the same capacity, from which he was later promoted to the position of assistant cashier. Three years later he accepted the same position with the Armour State Bank, where he remained eighteen months. In 1914 he went to Corwin Springs, Montana, and during the following two seasons he ran the hotel there for C. S. Hefferlin. Then for a time he engaged in farming, but on December 10, 1917, he came to Gardiner and entered upon his duties as cashier of the Yegen Brothers Bank, a position which he is still occupying. This bank, which is capitalized at $20,000, is situated on Main Street, and has for its president Chris Yegen, and for its vice president Peter Yegen. It is one of the strong and reliable financial institutions of this section and enjoys the confidence of the community. Mr. Kearns has demonstrated business and executive qualities of a high order and enjoys the warm regard of all who come in contact with him.

In addition to his banking duties Mr. Kearns is secretary of the Gardiner Light and Water Company, and he unhesitatingly gives his support to every measure looking to the advancement of Gardiner in any way. Politically he supports the democratic party.

In 1909, at Delmont, South Dakota, Mr. Kearns married June Baker, the daughter of W. S. and Ida (Austin) Baker, who now reside in Los Angeles, California, though Mr. Baker was formerly a farmer in South Dakota. Mrs. Kearns received a good education, having been a student in the South Dakota Normal School. Mr. and Mrs. Kearns have two children, Marjorie, born March 12, 1918, and Lois June, born October 18, 1919.

There are found in Mr. Kearns a reiteration of those sturdy qualities which characterized the pioneers of the great Central West, among whom was numbered the subject's paternal grandfather, Lawrence Kearns, who was among the true pioneers of Iowa and who, after an honorable career as a tiller of the soil, died at Stuart, Iowa, in 1909. The descendants of these people are now reaping the fruitage of their labors and they occupy a secure place in our country's history.

C. V. Brown. For fully twenty years Mr. Brown has given his whole energies, thought, study and enthusiasm to school teaching and school administration. He taught in his native State of Michigan for a number of years, but since graduating from the University of Michigan his work has been in Montana. He is principal of the Park County High School at Livingston.

Mr. Brown was born at Monroe, Michigan, November 18, 1878. He is of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, James R. Brown, was born near Edinburg, Scotland, in 1809, was a shoemaker by trade, and on coming to America settled at Delhi, New York, where he followed his trade for a number of years. He died at Mount Pleasant, Michigan, in 1904, at the venerable age of ninety-five. He married in New York State Margaret Muir, a native of Scotland. Robert Brown, father of C. V. Brown, was born at Delhi, New York, in 1841, was reared and married in his native village, and taught school there for a time. In 1876 he moved to a farm at Monroe, Michigan, and in 1880 to Mount Pleasant, that state. He was a Michigan farmer, and in 1900 accepted a post with the Indian Bureau as an agricultural expert among the Indians of New Mexico. While thus employed he died at Santa Rosa in 1901. He had represented Isabella County in the Michigan Legislature in 1895. He was a steadfast republican in politics, and very devout in his membership in the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Odd Fellows. Robert Brown married Jean V. Russell, who was born at Walton, New York, and is living in Mount Pleasant, Michigan. Of her three children C. V. Brown is the youngest. The other two, both living at Mount Pleasant, Michigan, are James A., a farmer, and May Estelle, a teacher.

C. V. Brown attended the rural schools of Isabella County, Michigan, and took both the preparatory and regular courses in the Central Michigan Normal at Mount Pleasant, graduating with a state certificate in 1899. For three years he was a teacher in the graded schools at Menominee, Michigan. In the fall of 1902 he returned to Mount Pleasant and for one year was employed as a critic teacher in the normal school. He then resumed his studies there for a year, and in 1904 was granted a life teacher's certificate. One year following he taught in the high school at Albion, Michigan, and for four years was superintendent of schools at Grass Lake. In the meantime he attended summer sessions at the University of Michigan and beginning in the fall of 1909 took a full year's work with residence at Ann Arbor. After another year as superintendent of schools at Ovid, Michigan, he re-entered the university in the summer and received his A. B. degree in August, 1911.

Mr. Brown was for four years principal of the Sweetgrass County High School in Montana at Big Timber, and in July, 1915, was called to his present post at Livingston as principal of the Park County High School. Under his supervision are a staff of fourteen teachers, while the enrollment of the high school is 280. The new high school building was constructed in 1917-18 at the corner of Callender and Fifth streets.

Mr. Brown is prominent in educational and also in local civic affairs. He is a member of the Montana State Teachers Association, the National Educational Association, the Association of Secondary School Principals, and is chairman of the Montana Interscholastic Athletic Association. He is a director in the Livingston Rotary Club, a member of the Railway Club, is a trustee in the Congregational Church, is a republican, and is affiliated with Excelsior Lodge No. 116, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Grasslake, Michigan. Mr. Brown owns a farm in Mecosta County in his native state.

In 1906, at Grand Rapids, Michigan, he married Miss Estella C. Schneider, daughter of Henry and Frederika (Schroeder) Schneider. Her father is a wholesale lumber merchant and with his wife resides in Grand Rapids. Mrs. Brown is a graduate of the Michigan State Normal at Ypsilanti. They are the parents of two children: Virginia Louise, born September 6, 1907, and Clifford V., Jr., born February 15, 1917.

John D. Hirst. In recent years many of the transactions by which city and farm properties have exchanged hands in Eastern Montana have been accomplished through the medium of John D. Hirst, a well known real estate man of Billings. Mr. Hirst knows Montana thoroughly, having been a homesteader and having developed a farm from a wilderness condition.

His life has been a busy one, most of it spent in the West. He was born at Grafton, West Virginia, June 12, 1875. His maternal great-grandfather was Jasper Everhart, and he and his wife, Mary, called Polly, were both natives of Germany. Mr. Hirst's paternal great-grandfather was John Hirst, a native of England. His grandfather was Daniel Hirst, born in Devonshire, England, and with a brother crossed the ocean to America. The two were separated at New York City and he never saw his brother again. He moved to Virginia, was a teacher and surveyor, and spent the rest of his life in the Old Dominion. Francis M. Hirst, father of John D., was born in Loudoun County, Virginia, January 1, 1839. He grew up in his native county, moved to West Virginia, where he married and lived until 1878 and then went to the western frontier in Nebraska, homesteading, in 1882, 160 acres at Central City, near what was then Lone Tree on the Platte River. He was a carpenter in early life, for seventeen years was an engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and after moving to Nebraska developed his claim and lived on the homestead until his death on March 19, 1910. Though a native of Virginia, he was a strong Union man and voted the republican ticket practically from the beginning of the party. In 1861 he joined a regiment of calvalry, the 22nd Pennsylvania Cavalry, "Ringold Cavalry," all of the members of which furnished their own equipment and horses. This regiment played a notable part in the war and his own record was that of the regiment in seventy-two engagements. He was in the battle of Five Forks, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Gettysburg and was with General Sheridan at the battle of Winchester. Francis Hirst had three horses shot from under him and was twice wounded. His service was practically from the beginning to the end of the war, comprising four years, six months, twenty-one days. He was for many years a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was a very zealous churchman. He was a Baptist, served as deacon, and was church clerk and treasurer for many years. He was identified with the Masonic fraternity and in political affairs was a leader, being honored with several county offices. He was road commissioner for many years. After the war he railroaded for ten years and then for three years was a stationary engineer. He married in West Virginia Elizabeth C. Sinsel, who was born at Grafton in that state. She died at Central City, Nebraska, at the age of fifty-two, on December 9, 1895. Three of their children died young and the others to reach mature years are: Edward S., born November 11, 1865, a farmer at Archer, Nebraska; William F., born March 23, 1869, who for a number of years has been traveling agent and manager for the State of Iowa of the Dayton Computing Scale Company, his home being at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Ernest H., born September 28, 1870, a farmer at Baker, Montana; John D.; Ada M., born May 14, 1877, wife of Jesse Kerr, a prominent farmer, miller and owner of the telephone exchange at Hurd's Field, North Dakota; James A., born September 29, 1879, living on the old home farm at Archer, Nebraska; Delilah B., born August 10, 1884, wife of Frank L. Cushman, a farmer at Broadview, Montana.

John D. Hirst was a small child when his parents moved to Nebraska, and he grew up on his father's farm, attending school at Archer and Central City, including the high school of the latter place. He was also a student in the Baptist College at Grand Island, Nebraska, and on leaving that institute in 1897, for three years worked at the photography trade. Next, as a representative of the Standard Oil Company, he established a business at Wood River, Nebraska, and developed a large patronage. He came to Montana in 1909, filing on a homestead at Broadview and proving it up. He lived on his 160 acre farm there until November, 1916, when he removed to Billings and entered the real estate business, handling city properties and farms. While living on his homestead he was president of the school board and was instrumental in building the consolidated school "Progressive No. 32." His offices are in 2620 First Avenue, North, and he owns a modern residence at 23 Burlington Avenue.

Mr. Hirst is an independent republican, a member of the Baptist Church, belongs to the Masonic Club, has been a member of The Highlanders for eighteen years, and is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

At Wood River, Nebraska, November 11, 1903, he married Miss Jessie E. McDaniels. She is a member of one of the earliest families of the State of Nebraska. Her great-grandfather McDaniels was a native of Scotland, and was rated as a lumber king in this country. He died about 1845 at Rising Sun, Indiana. Madison McDaniels, grandfather of Mrs. Hirst, was born October 27, 1812, at Pierpoint Manor, New York. For many years he was a traveling salesman for a firm at Watertown, New York, also operated a big hotel in that city, but salesmanship was his chief vocation. He died at Plattsburg, Missouri, May 12, 1871. October 12, 1834, he married Permilla Graves, who was born March 11, 1810, and died February 2, 1872, at Plattsburg, Missouri.

James Nelson McDaniels, father of Mrs. Hirst, was born January 18, 1841, at Ellisburg, New York, and was attending school at Union Academy at Bellville in his native state when the Civil war broke out. In 1861 he joined as a private in Company C of the 110th Regiment, New York Infantry, and was with General Banks and in General Emery's Division in 1862 in the Fort Donelson, Pittsburg Landing and other battles in that section. Taken ill, he was discharged from hospital, but in September, 1864, re-enlisted and joined Company H, 185th New York Infantry, serving as corporal and being promoted to sergeant for efficiency and bravery in battle. Besides those mentioned some of the other battles in which he participated were Port Hudson, First Hatchers Run, 1863, Weldon Roads, Watkins Farm, Second Hatchers Run in 1864, Gravelly Run, Five Forks in 1865, Quaker Roads, Church Roads Crossing, and at Appomattox at the final surrender in April, 1865. He also participated in the Grand Review at Washington. On September 11, 1867, in New York, he married Hattie A. Porter, of Watertown. Her father was Gould M. Porter, a Methodist minister, who was born March 29, 1802, and died February 14, 1880. Gould Porter married on March 7, 1827, Ruth E. Sowle. She was born October 21, 1804, and died November 23, 1857. Her father, Robert Sowle, was born in Massachusetts November 3, 1767, a son of Joseph Sowle, who was descended from George Sowle of the Mayflower Pilgrims of 1620. Joseph Sowle married Charity Tripp, and his son Job married Lillis Allen, a sister of Gen. Ethan Allen, one of the heroic figures of the Revolutionary war. Two of the sons of Joseph Sowle were sharpshooters in the Revolutionary war.

In 1872 James N. McDaniels moved to Plattsburg, Missouri, and in September of the same year moved to Hall County, Nebraska, and homesteaded 160 acres at Cameron. He lived there until November, 1892, when he moved to Wood River, Nebraska, and he died April 24, 1896. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. At the close of the war he was offered a lieutenancy, but at that time was sick of war and thinking only of home, he did not tarry long enough to receive his papers. He was a member of the Good Templars. He had owned a farm at Boylston, New York. Mrs. Hirst's mother was born near Watertown, New York, February 24, 1846. There were three children in the McDaniels family: Allie E., born August 9, 1868, wife of Charles Cox, living in Billings, Montana; Ida, born July 17, 1870, and died at the age of twenty-four; and Mrs. Hirst, who was educated in the public schools of Wood River, Nebraska, and for some time before her marriage was a teacher of music. Mr. and Mrs. Hirst have three children: James Marion, born May 23, 1907; Harriet Elizabeth, born November 11, 1911; and Wilbur Dean, born August 27, 1913.

CHARLES CURTIS SIMONSON. Of the men of Billings who have fought their way from humble positions to stations of trust and importance in the business life of their community, one whose career should be encouraging to young men just entering the battle of business life is Charles Curtis Simonson, manager of the Billings district of the Montana Power Company. Mr. Simonson was born at Anoka, Minnesota, April 24, 1877, a son of Nelson and Helen (Anderson) Simonson.

Nelson Simonson was born in 1849, at Christiana, Norway, where his early training included attendance at the public schools, service in the Norwegian army and the mastering of the trade of millwright. He was married in his native land to Helen Anderson, and in 1871 they immigrated to the United States, first locating at Anoka, Minnesota, where Mr. Simonson followed his trade until 1896, then removing to Brainerd. He has now been retired for some years and is accounted one of the substantial men of his community. Politically he is a republican, but politics have played little part in his life, as he has only desired to be a good citizen and an industrious business man. Mrs. Simonson died at Anoka, Minnesota, in 1887, the mother of three children: Julia, who died at the age of seven years; Charles Curtis; and Harvey L., who is in the United States Army in France.

Charles Curtis Simonson attended the public schools of Anoka, Minnesota, and after his graduation from the high school there with the class of 1895 attended the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, for one year. Like many young men just entering life's arena, he was at first undecided as to the proper course to pursue, and for a time drifted from one occupation to another, never finding his own particular vocation. Eventually, however, he attached himself to the electrical business, and this shaped the course of his entire subsequent career. At St. Paul he was employed by several concerns in humble capacities, and when he located at Butte, Montana, in 1897, it was at the bottom of the ladder in the service of the company which preceded the Montana Power Company. He was forced to make his own way, to merit each promotion, and to thoroughly learn the duties of each position as advancement came to him, and his persistence and faithfulness, coupled with real ability, finally won him the post of manager of the Livingston (Montana) branch of the company. A short time later he was transferred to a more responsible position at Lewistown, where he remained for six years, and in 1916 was made manager of the big branch at Billings, where he has since continued. He is accounted one of the most thoroughly informed and efficient men in his line in the state, and this is all the more creditable in that he is self taught. The offices of the Montana Power Company are situated in the Electric Building, a five-story reinforced concrete structure of the mushroom construction type, one of the main business buildings of Southeastern Montana, Mr. Simonson's offices occupying the entire first floor and basement. This company supplies from this branch power for the district including Hunters, Hot Springs, Big Timber, Reed Point, Columbus, Park City, Laurel, Joliet, Fromberg, Bridger and Billings. Under Mr. Simonson's supervision there are seventy regular employes. Mr. Simonson's home is in the Wreford Apartments, at Second Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, North, where he occupies suite No. 9. He is a republican, but has confined his political activities to the casting of his ballot, although he has been an active citizen in promoting good movements in each of the communities in which he has resided. Particularly was this so at Lewistown, which city he did much to assist in its development, contributing in various ways to its welfare. It was Mr. Simonson who built the Bank Electric Building, a four-story office structure, composed of concrete, of the Turner system of mushroom construction, with brick curtain walls. At Billings he has also shown a keen interest in civic movements and public-spirited enterprises, and is an active member of the Billings Rotary Club, in addition to which he holds membership in the Billings Club and the Billings Midland Club, as well as Butte Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has various business connections and is a director in the American Bank and Trust Company.

Mr. Simonson was married September 16, 1907, at Butte, Montana, to Katherine Hyatt, daughter of Mrs. Mary A. Hyatt, who resides with Mr. and Mrs. Simonson. There are no children.

W. A. Hall. The true measure of individual success is determined by what one has accomplished, and so, judged by this standard, there is eminent propriety in including within this volume a brief record of the career of W. A. Hall, a successful merchant and leading citizen of Gardiner. Mr. Hall is a native son of Missouri, and since he came to Montana has taken an intelligent interest in the promotion of her best interests and today he enjoys an enviable position in the community.

W. A. Hall was born in Missouri on April 30, 1861, and remained in his native state until attaining his majority, when he came to Montana and settled in Paradise Valley, near the banks of the Yellowstone River, where he operated a ranch. A short time later he moved to Electric, this state, remaining there until 1892, when he bought a general store in Cinnabar. He was fairly successful in the mercantile business, but the moving of the railroad destroyed the mercantile importance of that place, and, as a matter of self-preservation, he followed the railroad to Gardiner, where he established the leading department store. This enterprise has been successful from its inception and is now operated by Mr. Hall's sons, Arthur W., Earl H., Warren E. and James Raymond. Mr. Hall divides his time between Gardiner and Belgrade, having near the latter place a 400 acre ranch all cultivated and under irrigation. Large quantities of fine hay are produced and Mr. Hall is giving special attention to the raising of pure-bred live stock, including Oxford sheep, draft horses, driving horses and saddle ponies. The ranch is one of the best equipped in this part of the state and Mr. Hall takes a justifiable pride in the animals which leave his hands. He also owns the large store building on Park Street, Gardiner, a splendid modern residence there, four other dwellings and two large warehouses, as well as other real estate. He is a man of keen and far-sighted judgment, whose business interests have been handled with skill, and he is today numbered among the successful business men of this section of the state.

Politically W. A. Hall is a stanch democrat, while his religious membership is with the Church of Christ, Scientist. Fraternally he belongs to Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Eastern Montana Consistory of the Scottish Rite (thirty-second degree) Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena, and to Livingston Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias. He was also a charter member of Old Faithful Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Aldridge.

W. A. Hall was united in marriage to Lula F. Brown, who was born in Missouri in 1871, and to them have been born the following children: Arthur W., Earl H., Warren E. and James Raymond.

Arthur W. Hall was born at Emigrant, Montana, on January 24, 1888, and is the son of W. A. and Lula F. (Brown) Hall. He received his elementary education in the public and high schools of Bozeman, Montana, and then attended the Montana State College at Bozeman, followed by a course in the Phelps Commercial College in the same city. He thus left school at the age of twenty-one years well equipped to enter upon a business career. He has from the beginning been his father's assistant in the store at Gardiner and on the ranch, and has had a large part in the development of the business.

W. A. HALL

He is secretary of the W. A. Hall Company and is indefatigable in his business habits.

Arthur W. Hall is a democrat in his political alignment and has taken an active part in fraternal affairs, being a member of the same Masonic bodies as his father, as well as the Gardiner Aerie No. 669, Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is a member of the Gardiner Band, one of the best in this portion of the state, and in other ways shows a commendable interest in local public affairs.

In 1909, at Gardiner, Mr. Hall married Lillian L. Black, the daughter of Fountain and Josephine Black, the former of whom now lives at Belgrade, on the W. A. Hall ranch. The mother is deceased.

Earl H. Hall was born at Emigrant, Montana, on July 9, 1889. He attended the public schools of Livingston and Bozeman, and was then a student in the preparatory department of the State College at Bozeman. Since nineteen years of age he has been connected with his father's extensive interests, being now treasurer of the W. A. Hall Company. He is a democrat in his political faith, and is a member of the Livingston Masonic Lodge and the Eastern Montana Consistory of the Scottish Rite. He, too, is an active member of the local band, playing a cornet.

Earl H. Hall married Bertha E. McLeod at Bozeman in 1909, and they have one child, Earl Harold, born on July 8, 1913. Mrs. Hall is the daughter of John and Jennie (Williams) McLeod, the former of whom is deceased and the latter resides in Portland, Oregon. John McLeod was a pioneer rancher in Gallatin County, Montana, and held several offices of public trust and responsibility, having served as representative to the Legislature and as clerk of the courts. In early civic affairs of that county he was an important factor.

Warren E. Hall was born on September 11, 1895, and received his public school education in the schools of Livingston and Bozeman. He is a graduate of the Phelps Commercial College, and is now devoting the greater part of his time to his father's ranch. On October 1, 1919, he married Miss Margaret Hodgson, of Gooding, Idaho. On December 11, 1917, he enlisted in the United States Army and was sent to Camp Fremont, California. He was promoted to the rank of quartermaster sergeant and was mustered out of the service on January 11, 1919. He belongs to the same Masonic bodies as does his father. He possesses splendid personal qualities and is well liked by all who know him.

James Raymond Hall, who was born on November 7, 1900, is a student in the high school at Bozeman.

S. Arne Erickson is a civil engineer by profession. He received his technical training and had an extended experience in Europe before coming to America. For the past fifteen years he has been on the civil engineering staff of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Mr. Erickson was born in the famous city of Trondhjem, Norway, August 29, 1879. His father, Emil Gerard, was born in 1844 and spent all his life in Trondhjem, where he died in 1902. He was a banker, had served in the Norwegian army and was a member of the Lutheran Church. He married Johanna Jackwitz, who was born in 1849 and died in 1901, her life being spent in Trondhjem. Einar, the oldest of their children, is a merchant at Bergen, Norway, while S. Arne is the second in age. Haakon is a physician and surgeon at Christiania, Norway. Fridtjof is a ship building engineer at Trondhjem. Edward T., an American citizen, enlisted at the beginning of the war with Germany and was among the first to go overseas. He became a captain of infantry, was severely wounded three times, and in the spring of 1919 was still in hospital recovering from his wounds. Thorleif, the youngest of the family, is a pharmacist in Norway.

S. Arne Erickson attended the public schools of his native city and is a graduate of the Polytechnic Institute there in 1898, having taken the full civil engineering course. He also served a year in the Norwegian military establishment, and had professional experience for two years at Christiania, two years at Zurich, Switzerland, and a year and a half in Copenhagen, Denmark. Mr. Erickson arrived in New York City in 1904 and after a few weeks in St. Paul came to Livingston in August, 1904. In October of that year he was put on the staff of the Northern Pacific Railway Company as an engineer and has devoted his time to those duties ever since. His offices are opposite the main station of the railroad in Livingston.

Mr. Erickson, who is unmarried, is a member of the American Association of Engineers and is president of the Railway Club of Livingston. He is a republican and is affiliated with Livingston Lodge No. 246 of the Elks. His home is at 103 North Fifth Street.

Walter B. White. Although a resident of Livingston but a comparatively short time, the name of Walter B. White has already become well known to the citizens of Park County, where he has assumed a leading place in the profession of undertaking. He has deemed it a rare privilege to minister to the needs of the people in their hours of greatest distress and has conscientiously and ably gone about his work in a manner that has won both the confidence and universal esteem of all classes.

Walter B. White is descended from a long line of sterling Scotch ancestry, his paternal grandfather having emigrated from the lands of hills and heather to Pennsylvania, locating at Prompton, where he was engaged as a farmer and stock raiser. He probably met with foul play, for he was never heard from after starting from home to market with a large herd of cattle. One of his sons was George D. White, who was born on July 20, 1864, at Prompton, Pennsylvania. He was reared there and later located at Carbondale, that state, where he conducted one of the first barber shops. In 1895 he moved to Paterson, New Jersey, where he served as superintendent of a silk manufactory, in which he was financially interested. In 1911 he was transferred to the mill at Carbondale, Pennsylvania, and in 1917 went to Essington, Pennsylvania, and joined the Westinghouse Company. Two years later he went to Charleston, South Carolina, where he now resides. His religious membership is with the Presbyterian Church, while in politics he is a republican and was honored with local offices while a resident of Carbondale. In 1887, at Carbondale, Pennsylvania, George D. White married Elizabeth Boyd, who died in 1903 at Paterson, New Jersey. To them were born five children, namely: Lillian is the wife of Albert Dary, who is superintendent of a machine shop at Shelton, Connecticut; Walter B.; Harold, who died at Carbondale at the age of twenty-one years, was an appointee to and about to enter the Annapolis Naval Academy; Marion is a stenographer for the Birmingham Foundry Company at Shelton, Connecticut; Jessie is attending school at Shelton.

Walter B. White was born at Carbondale, Pennsylvania, July 16, 1892. He received his education in the public schools at Paterson, New Jersey, attending the high school two years. In 1905 he was apprenticed to the machinist trade, serving four years, and then was employed for a similar period in the shops of the Delaware & Hudson Railway. Then, seized with the spirit of the wanderlust, he went from place to place, working at his trade in Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maine, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, Nevada, Colorado, North Dakota and Illinois. In 1913 he came to Montana and for two years and three months was employed in the Northern Pacific Railroad shops at Livingston. Not satisfied with that line of work, Mr. White in 1915 went to Philadelphia and entered the Eckels College of Embalming and Sanitary Science, where he graduated the following year. Then followed two years of valuable experience with the noted undertaking firm of J. Lewis Good & Son of Philadelphia. He then returned to Livingston and on November 1, 1918, engaged in the same line of work. On April 7, 1919, he bought out James W. Whitfield, at that time the leading undertaker there, and he is now considered one of the leading funeral directors of this section of the state. In connection with his office is a chapel, where funeral services may be conducted when desired, and in every way he is equipped to satisfactorily attend to the needs of his patrons.

Politically Mr. White is a republican and takes an intelligent interest in local public affairs. From December, 1918, to May 5, 1919, he served as deputy county coroner, since which time he has served acceptably as coroner. His religious membership is with the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is a member of Livingston Lodge No. 32, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Livingston Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, and St. Bernard Commandery No. 6, Knights Templar, Carbondale (Pennsylvania) Camp, Woodmen of the World, Livingston Lodge No. 559, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and National Park Lodge No. 168, International Association of Machinists.

Mr. White was married on August 14, 1914, at Livingston, Montana, to Willie Bassett, the daughter of J. T. and Mary (Williams) Bassett. The latter is deceased, but the father now resides at Marshall, Texas. Mrs. White is a graduate of the Yellowstone Business College at Livingston.

Col. George W. Morse. In the history of every commonwealth there are records of the lives of men which stand forth from those of the majority because of the forceful influence toward constructive citizenship these same men exerted, and their efforts in behalf of the development of their local communities and the state. Among these, none is more worthy of permanent preservation than that relative to Col. George W. Morse, now living retired at Drummond, for he is one of the pioneers of Montana, and one of its most honored citizens.

Colonel Morse was born at Whitefield, Lincoln County, Maine, December 2, 1838, a son of Daniel Morse who was born in England in 1788 and died at Whitefield, Maine, in 1863. Daniel Morse came to the United States in young manhood and bought a farm in the Town of Whitefield, although he followed the seas all of his active life, or until he was stricken with paralysis fifteen years prior to his death. He had just returned from a voyage, and was employing his leisure time in building a barn, and becoming overheated, unwisely bathed his feet in the water from a cold spring. As a result, he was paralyzed. While following a seafaring life he was in the employ of Billy Gray, owner of some ninety vessels, and the largest maritime man of his day. In politics Daniel Morse was a Whig. A very religious man, he early became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and continued firm in its faith until his death. He married Mary Norris, who was born in the Town of Whitefield in 1796, died in the Township of Whitefield in 1886. Their children were as follows: John, who came to Montana in 1869, located at Philipsburg, where he died in 1914, aged seventy-eight years, after having conducted a feed store for a number of years; James, who died in the Town of Whitefield when about forty years of age, was a very prominent man, having been a successful merchant, sheriff of Lincoln County and warden of the penitentiary; Daniel, who was a farmer died in the Town of Whitefield, when sixty years old; Hester, who died in the Town of Whitefield when thirty years old; Mary, who died in the Town of Bradley, Penobscot County, Maine, in 1917; and Colonel Morse, who was the second in order of birth.

Colonel Morse attended the rural schools of Lincoln County, Maine, and grew up on his father's farm, where he remained until he was fourteen years old, at which time he began working on the Penobscot River in a sawmill, receiving $13 per month for his services, which amount was turned over to his mother who was left with a large family to support as well as care for her paralyzed husband. He continued to work in the sawmill during the summer and attend school in the winter until 1856, when with $36 as his capital, he started West, and reached Stillwater, Minnesota, where for four years he was engaged in lumbering on the Saint Croix River. Leaving Minnesota, Colonel Morse went to Louisiana, and for a year was engaged in work on the Texas & Shreveport Railroad. The westward trend of empire then took him to Pike's Peak and he was engaged in prospecting and mining in its vicinity for four years. It was during 1862 that Colonel Morse first entered Montana, coming at that time to the present site of Deer Lodge, and prospected for a short time, and he was also engaged in mining for wages at Orafino, Idaho, and also leased ground for himself. He then went to Auburn, Oregon, and mined for wages and dug a ditch for the Oregon Navigation Company, earning quite an amount of money in the four months he was thus employed. Leaving Oregon, he returned to Idaho and until 1865 was engaged in prospecting and mining with considerable success. In 1865 he came back to Montana and for a short time was engaged in mining at Bear Gulch, from whence he went to Helena and found gold in paying quantities on Indian Creek. His next prospecting was done at Mercer, Montana, and then for five years he was engaged in gold mining on Elk Creek with marked success. Colonel Morse then went to Utah and buying 600 head of cattle drove them to Rock Creek, Montana, and for the subsequent seven years was engaged in ranching and cattle raising, but then sold at a profit. While he was thus engaged he did business upon an extensive scale, selling 1,200 head of cattle at one time. He then bought a ranch at New Chicago, Montana, and erected a house on it in which he lived until 1914. This ranch comprised 2,200 acres, and on it he raised cattle to such an extent that they consumed 1,200 ton of hay annually. In 1914 he retired and coming to Drummond, built a fine residence which, in conjunction with 320 acres of land he sold in 1919 for $65,000. A whig, with the organization of the republican party he espoused its principles and has held to them ever since. He was presidential elector and cast Montana's first electoral vote for President Harrison. Colonel Morse was delegate at the Chicago Convention in 1912 which nominated Roosevelt. For two terms he served old Deerlodge County as county commissioner, and later held the same office for Granite County. Fraternally Colonel Morse belongs to Ruby Lodge No. 36, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons;

G. W. Moore

Deer Lodge Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Saint Omar Commandery, Knights Templar of Missoula; and is a charter member of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana. He was elected president of the Montana Society of Pioneers in 1915. Colonel Morse has always been interested in the growth of Drummond and is a heavy stockholder in the Drummond State Bank.

In 1868 Colonel Morse was married at Ogden, Utah, to Miss Nettie Milliken, a daughter of Edward Milliken, a native of Elsworth, Maine, formerly a miner of Montana, but now deceased. Colonel and Mrs. Morse became the parents of the following children: George A., who operates a grain elevator at Drummond; and Averill, whose sketch appears below. Colonel Morse is a member of the Pioneer Society of Montana and served as its president for one year. Genial in his nature, Colonel Morse is typical of the hardy prospector of his day, through whose endurance, perseverance and optimism the great west was explored and thrown open to settlers. Great of brain and big of heart, he has ever been ready to assist others less fortunate than he, and no history of Montana would be complete without an extended mention of this fine citizen and upright man.

Averill P. Morse, cashier of the Mission State Bank of St. Ignatius, was born at New Chicago, Montana, January 7, 1882, a son of Colonel Morse, and attended the public schools of his native place, and the State University of Montana, from which he was graduated after a three years' course in 1902. Mr. Morse then went to Spokane, Washington, and took a year's course in a business college, following which he took a position in an office at Columbia Falls, Montana, and held it for four years. In 1907 Mr. Morse located at Drummond and entered upon a mercantile career, conducting a large establishment until 1913, when he sold, and coming to St. Ignatius took the position of cashier of the Mission State Bank, which he has since held. The bank was established in 1913 as a state institution, and Mr. Morse's associates in the bank are George H. Beck, president, and Joseph Grenier, Jr., vice president. The capital stock of the bank is $20,000, its surplus is $4,000, and its deposits average $200,000. Like his father Mr. Morse is a republican.

In 1907 Mr. Morse was married at Columbia Falls to Miss Florence Snyder a daughter of D. A. and Pauline Snyder. Mr. Snyder was a farmer, but is now deceased, and his widow, surviving him, lives at Spokane, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Morse have a daughter, Verna, who was born July 5, 1913.

J. R. KAISERMAN. Specific mention is made of several of the worthy citizens of Livingston within the pages of this work, citizens who have figured in the growth and development of this favored locality and whose interests are identified with its every phase of progress, each contributing in his sphere of action to the well-being of the community in which he resides and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Among this number is he whose name appears above, a gentleman who, as manager of one of the most important public utility plants in this section of the state, occupies a place of large relative importance in the community.

J. R. Kaiserman, manager for the Montana Power Company at Livingston, was born at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on February 20, 1884, and is the son of John and Julia (Raithel) Kaiserman, both of whom were natives of Germany. John Kaiserman was born in 1858 and came to the United States in about 1876, locating at Peoria, Illinois. Later he removed to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where until 1896 he was successfully engaged in the meat and provision business. He then removed to Richland Center, Wisconsin, where he conducted a general merchandise, meat and provision store until his retirement in 1915. He still resides in Richland Center. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and of the Masonic fraternity. The subject's mother was born in 1859 and became the mother of seven children, namely: Louisa, who is the wife of William Hagen, a hardware merchant at Marshall, Minnesota; J. R., the next in order of birth; Bertha, who died in childhood; John, Jr., who was associated in business with his father at Richland Center, and later succeeded to the entire ownership of the store, and died at the age of twenty-seven years; Frederick, who died in infancy; Hilda, the wife of Horace Burnham, who conducts a lumber business at Richland Center. He enlisted in 1918 for service, took special work in the Rockefeller Institute and was assigned to the Medical Corps, being sent to Norfolk, Virginia, where he remained until mustered out in May, 1919. Gretchen is a teacher in the high school at Mazomanie, Wisconsin.

J. R. Kaiserman received his elementary education in the public schools of Milwaukee and Richland Center. Then, having decided to pursue a technical course, he entered the Armour Institute of Technology at Chicago. Upon the conclusion of his studies in that famous institution, in 1903, he came to Big Timber, Montana, and entered the employ of the Big Timber Electric Light and Power Company, of which he became manager in 1905. Four years later that company was absorbed by the Montana Power Company and Mr. Kaiserman was retained as manager, a position of large responsibility. Subsequently, in 1916 he was transferred to Livingston and placed in charge of the Montana Power Company's branch at this place, a place he is still filling to the entire satisfaction of the company and of its patrons. This company supplies light, heat and power to the entire city of Livingston, and is thus probably the most important public utility plant in the community. The Northern Pacific Railroad Shops are also supplied with light and power which is derived from the large and well equipped generating station at Livingston, where a large number of men are under Mr. Kaiserman's direction.

Politically Mr. Kaiserman has always been affiliated with the republican party and has taken a keen interest in public affairs, especially as pertaining to community interests. He rendered appreciated service as mayor of Big Timber in 1913-15, and since coming to Livingston has become prominently identified with the important commercial life of the city, being now a director of the Chamber of Commerce and a member of the Commercial Club. His religious membership is with the English Lutheran Church, while fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to Lodge No. 246, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which he is now going through the official chairs.

In June, 1909, at Billings, Montana, Mr. Kaiserman married Sebrah Clark, the daughter of E. O. and Lena B. (Baker) Clark. E. O. Clark was numbered among the leading citizens of Sweetgrass County, where he was successful as stockman and merchant, and of which county he served as treasurer. His wife came to Big Timber as a pioneer and took active part in the development of that locality, in various ways contributing to the cultural advancement of the community. It was largely through her instrumentality that the library project was started and she served as librarian from its organization until 1917. She is now assistant librarian of the library at Livingston, but intends eventually to return to her former home at Big Timber. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Kaiserman had received special training as a nurse. To her union to Mr. Kaiserman have been born four children, namely: E. Clark, born May 25, 1910; John R., June 25, 1911; Maximilian, April 5, 1915; and J. Louis, July 8, 1918.

Although modest and unassuming, Mr. Kaiserman possesses a strong and vigorous personality, being in the best sense of the term a leader of men and well fitted to manage important enterprises. He and his wife have won a host of warm personal friends in the city of their adoption.

LAWRENCE W. STEELE, who is favorably known in business connections as president of the Berryman Plumbing Company at Billings, has exemplified in his career the value of a useful trade and the rewards accruing through diligent application to a given line of effort and the following out of a policy of integrity and honorable dealing. Within the space of a few short years he has bridged the distance between an apprenticeship to the presidency of a large and constantly growing business, from obscurity to a position of prominence among the substantial business men of his chosen community.

Mr. Steele was born on a farm in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, January 1, 1881, a son of Joseph and Martha (Furgeson) Steele. The Steele family originated in Ireland, from whence immigrated the grandfather of Lawrence W. Steele, the original immigrant. He located in Westmoreland County, where he followed farming throughout the remainder of his life, and where in 1833 was born his son Joseph. The latter followed in his father's footsteps, also adopting farming as a vocation, an occupation which he followed with a measure of success throughout a long and active career, his death occurring on his homestead in 1902. He was a stanch republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church in which he served as an elder for forty years. His widow, who was born in Westmoreland County in 1840, still makes her home there in hale old age. They were the parents of the following children: Jennie, who is unmarried and makes her home with her mother; Emma, the wife of D. H. Sloan, a farmer of Ashland, Ohio; Jackson, who is engaged in the hardware and implement business at Latrobe, Pennsylvania; Anna, who married J. J. Larier and resides on a ranch twelve miles east of Billings; Thomas, who is an agriculturist of Derry, Pennsylvania; Lizzie, the wife of J. H. Hazlett, employed in the pottery works at Latrobe, Pennsylvania; Amanda, the wife of E. C. Hazlett, a merchant of Noblestown, Pennsylvania; Martha, who married the Rev. O. E. Barker, a Methodist Episcopal minister with a charge in Colorado; J. M., who resides with his mother at Latrobe, Pennsylvania, a stenographer and bookkeeper and the owner of stock in a brick yard; P. H., bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Latrobe, Pennsylvania; Lawrence W., of this notice; and George E., employed in the office of the Latrobe Steel Company, at Latrobe.

Lawrence W. Steele was educated in the rural schools of the vicinity of his father's farm in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, where he spent his boyhood, and subsequently attended the high school at Latrobe for two years. At the age of eighteen years he left his school books and began work for a heating firm, subsequently becoming a fitter, and in this way gradually mastered the plumber's trade. He followed that vocation at Latrobe for a period of eight years, and during that time was in the service of the same employer, and when he resigned entered the steel mills, where he remained two years. Deciding that there was a better field for the display of his abilities in the West, in 1908 Mr. Steele came to Billings, where he secured employment in a plumbing shop as a journeyman and continued to be thus employed for six years. In January, 1914, in partnership with F. L. Golding, he purchased the Berryman Plumbing Company, and after the death of Mr. Golding entered into partnership with F. F. Kuschke, who bought into the business and became secretary and treasurer of the concern, the other officials being Mr. Steele, who occupies the position of president; and Mrs. Leah Steele, who is vice president of the concern. The plant and office are located at No. 3015 Montana Avenue, and the operations of the concern in the way of plumbing and heating contracting have developed and increased to large proportions and now include the entire Billings and outlying communities. Mr. Steele lives at 3015 Fourth Avenue, North, and owns other dwelling houses, and has a number of important business connections. He is well and favorably known in business circles as a man of integrity and commercial soundness, and his associates rely absolutely upon his ability and judgment. Politically he is a republican, but during his career he has found little time to engage in political matters. He is a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he is serving as a member of the board of trustees, and holds membership in the Billings Rotary Club, the Billings Midland Club, Billings Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Billings Consistory, Thirty-second Degree, Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and Billings Tent, Knights of the Maccabees.

In 1909, at Billings, Mr. Steele was united in marriage with Miss Leah Stine, daughter of F. A. and Henrietta J. (Heisz) Stine, residents of Billings, where Mr. Stine is engaged in business as a carpenter and contractor. There are no children.

JUDGE CLOYDE E. COMER. To Judge Cloyde E. Comer belongs the honor of serving as the first judge of the newly organized Twentieth District, to which office he was appointed in April, 1919, but he has been prominently identified with the professional and civic life of Montana since 1909.

Judge Comer was born near Walnut, Illinois, September 27, 1882, and he early became familiar with the work of the farm and continued as a farmer boy until the age of twenty years, in the meantime attending the country school, the high school at Eagle Grove, Iowa, for two years, and later the high school in Worthington, Minnesota. His literary training was completed by a course of study in Mankato. His father, Stephen Comer, is one of the recent settlers in the State of Minnesota, where he is engaged in agricultural pursuits near Worthington. He was born at Newark, New Jersey, a son of a Civil war soldier who gave up his life in that struggle. This patriot ancestor was a farmer and was descended from early New Jersey settlers of English and Irish extraction. He was born in New Jersey, about 1802.

Stephen A. Comer was reared as a farmer lad, and while the education he received was not thorough, it was yet a liberal training for his day, and he became a well read man. About the time he attained his majority he left his native State of New Jersey for Illinois, where he farmed for a time near Walnut. Mr. Comer was married in that locality to Mary Bodine, whose father was one of the pioneer farmers of that region, but Mrs. Comer was born in Michigan. The young couple soon moved farther west, to Iowa, while in 1903 they again took up the westward march and established their home at Worthington, Minnesota. Their first children were born in Illinois, and in time four sons and two daughters were born into their home, namely: Cloyde E., the Montana lawyer and judge; Mabel, the wife of Severt Sorum, of Worthington, Minnesota; Walter, who also resides at Worthington; Irvin, whose home is in Minneapolis; Edna, who died at Worthington; and Merl, the youngest child of the family. Mr. Comer, the father, has always been a republican voter, but exercises his right of franchise merely as a patriotic and progressive citizen.

Cloyde E. Comer came to Montana from Minnesota, in which latter state he spent about six years, chiefly as a student. Before taking up his preparation for the law he pursued the literary course in the University of Minnesota, and before completing his law course in that institution his funds became exhausted and he came to Montana to earn the means to complete his professional studies. Arriving at Culbertson, Montana, in April, 1909, he served as a law clerk until the following fall, when he took the bar examination in Helena, but continued his law work in Culbertson until October, 1910, when he opened a law office at Medicine Lake and followed a general law practice there until his appointment by Governor Stewart as the first judge of the Twentieth District.

As a Sheridan County citizen Judge Comer has borne his full share in the civil and military burdens of the community. In September, 1918, he volunteered for military service as a member of Company K, Central Officers Training Corps, at Camp McArthur, Texas, where he remained throughout the war and was discharged there about the 1st of December, 1918. He was also chairman of the Sheridan County Council of Defense. The work of the democratic party has also claimed a share of his time and attention, and in 1916, three years before he was elevated to the bench, he was the democratic candidate for district judge of the Seventeenth District, but was defeated. In his fraternal affiliations he is an Odd Fellow and a Master Mason, and a layman of the order.

After coming to Montana, Judge Comer exercised his homestead right near Colridge, in Sheridan County, where he built for himself what was considered a good country home for a pioneer, and there he began his married life. He had married at Medicine Lake, May 15, 1913, Miss Hilda Peterson, who was born in Sweden in 1890, but was educated in Minnesota and became a teacher, following her profession in country schools in Minnesota and in the Medicine Lake schools. Her father was a Swedish settler of Hinkley, Minnesota. The marriage of Judge and Mrs. Comer has been without issue.
